153. Where a bridge was "good and sufficient except in the matter of its springing when driven upon on a trot," and it was one of that class of bridges which the statute makes it unlawful to drive upon at a rate faster than a walk, and the plaintiff received an injury by reason of the springing motion of the bridge while driving across the bridge upon a trot;—Held, that the town was under no obligation to provide a bridge sufficient for such use; and whether the springing of the bridge was occasioned by the plaintiff's own driving, or by the driving of one who just preceded him on a trot, the plaintiff could not recover. Abbott v. Wolcott, 38 Vt. 666.

154. G. S. c. 25, s. 73, provides that it shall not be lawful to drive over certain bridges at a rate faster than a walk, and that any person guilty of such offense shall forfeit and pay a certain penalty, &c. The next section provides that no person shall be liable to such penalty, unless a board with directions to that effect shall have been posted up, &c. Held—such board not being posted up—that the statute made such driving unlawful, nevertheless, although, in such case, the penalty would not be incurred. Id.

155. Sunday travel. A person traveling upon Sunday, in violation of G. S. c. 93, s. 8, which prohibits, under a penalty, traveling on that day except from necessity or charity, cannot recover of a town for an injury sustained, while so traveling, through the insufficiency of a highway. Johnson v. Irasburgh, 47 Vt. 28; and see McClary v. Lowell, 44 Vt. 116.

156. —repairs. In an action against a town alleging the insufficiency of a highway suddenly become impaired, where there was no conflict in the evidence, the court ruled, as matter of law, that, as the case was presented, neither the officers nor inhabitants of the town were obliged to turn out and repair the road upon the Sabbath. Held correct,—and quare as to such obligation in any case, merely to facilitate travel. Spear v. Lowell, 47 Vt. 692.

157. Coasting. Coasting on sleds in a highway is not an insufficiency of the highway. Where a traveler was injured by being run against by a boy coasting in the highway;—Held, that the town was not liable, although the selectmen, having the authority to prohibit coasting, had neglected to do so. Hutchinson v. Concord, 41 Vt. 271.

158. Insufficiency of bridge. On a case stated, it was held that a certain turnpike bridge, elevated and long, required for reasonable safety of travelers something more than certain side timbers; and that, for want a railing, the bridge was insufficient. Holley v. Winooksi T. Co., 1 Aik. 74. 15 Vt. 715. See 6 Vt. 247.

159. Held, that in a cattle-raising state, like Vermont, a turnpike (or highway) bridge should be sufficient to sustain a drove of cattle, if passed over with common care and prudence. Richardson v. Royalton, &c., T. Co., 6 Vt. 496.

160. The declaration alleged the injury to have been caused by the insufficiency of a bridge. The proof was of a defect in the abutment. Held, no variance; for that the abutment was part of the bridge, in the sense in which the term is ordinarily used. Bardwell v. Jamaica, 15 Vt. 498.

161. The word "supports," as used in G. S. c. 25, s. 73, refers to that upon which the bridge stands or rests, and which supports it from beneath—such as the abutments or piers, or trestles. Abbott v. Wolcott, 38 Vt. 666.

162. —of highway. A referee found and reported that the highway was insufficient and out of repair, from the fact that the main path had been blocked up with drifts of snow from four to six weeks, which had crowded the travel into the ditch, &c. Held, that these facts, so far from showing the road sufficient, showed the most gross neglect on the part of the town, and that there was no error in fact or law apparent in the report. Green v. Danby, 12 Vt. 338.

163. Heavy snow ridges, formed across a highway by the passing of railroad trains crossing it, were cut through, but too narrowly for safety of travel upon the highway. A fresh drift formed within this cut, in passing over which, the plaintiff, a traveler, was overturned and injured. The referees reported that if the cut had been sufficiently wide for the reasonable safety and accommodation of ordinary travel the accident would not have happened, notwithstanding the fresh drift of that day. Held, a sufficient finding that the efficient cause of the accident was the defect from lack of reasonable and sufficient width of the road way. Barton v. Montpelier, 30 Vt. 650.

164. Sufficiency, a question of fact. In an action against a town for an injury caused by the insufficiency of a highway, where the plaintiff's horse was driven over the left bank, the court charged the jury that if the road, at the time and place in question, was well beaten to such a width that the horse might as conveniently have been driven in a line 18 inches or more from the left extremity of former travel, as in any other part of the road, they ought to find for the defendant. Held erroneous, and that the questions involved in the ruling were questions of fact for the jury. Sessions v. Newport, 23 Vt. 9.

165. Whether a highway is sufficient, or not, is a question of fact for the jury. Ib. Leicester v. Pittsford, 6 Vt. 245. Green v. Danby, 12 Vt. 338. Kelsey v. Glover, 15 Vt. 708. Cassedy v. Stockbridge, 21 Vt. 391. Willard v. Newbury, 22 Vt. 458. Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 510.

166. Many attempts have been made to turn the question into one of law for the court to decide, but they have been uniformly unsuccessful. Poland, C. J., in Hill v. New Haven.

167. In actions against towns to recover for an injury occasioned by the insufficiency of a highway, it has long been the practical and received doctrine, that whether the road was out of repair under circumstances to place the town in fault; whether the injury happened from that cause; and whether the party injured conducted with due care and skill, are questions of fact, or mixed questions of law and fact, to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court. The evidence may, indeed, disclose facts of so decisive a character as to justify the court in directing a verdict upon the mere finding of those facts. But in ordinary cases, viz: those which admit of doubt as to the just liability of the town, such a variety of facts and circumstances will usually require to be weighed, that the jury must be left, upon due consideration of the whole matter, to draw the ultimate conclusion. Royce, J., in Kelsey v. Glover, 15 Vt. 714. Davis, J., in Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 474. Leicester v. Pittsford, 6 Vt. 245.

168. Whether a good substantial railing was necessary, is a question of fact for the jury. (This consistent with Holley v. Winoski Turnpike Co., 1 Aik. 74, which was decided as an issue of fact on a case stated.) Leicester v. Pittsford, 6 Vt. 245, 247.

169. Sufficiency of a highway is a question of fact. Green v. Danby, 12 Vt. 338. Cassedy v. Stockbridge, 21 Vt. 391. Willard v. Newbury, 22 Vt. 458. Bagley v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 425.

170. The question whether a legal highway exists; the liability of towns for injuries received by those voluntarily leaving the traveled track and going upon the margin; their liability for latent defects, &c., may present questions of law for the court warranting the direction of a verdict. Young v. Wheelock, 18 Vt. 493. Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 470. Whitney v. Essex, 38 Vt. 270. Prindle v. Fletcher, 39 Vt. 255. Morse v. Richmond, 41 Vt. 435.

171. Under the events and circumstances that constituted and characterized the accident in question upon a highway;—Held, that no rigorous rule of law could be formulated by which it could be determined that a given width of traveled track in a certain depth of snow, and bounded by banks of a given height and slope, would constitute a highway in good and sufficient repair. Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95.

172. Night travel. The public have the right to travel the highways in the night as well as in the day time, and are often compelled to; and it is the duty of towns to keep their roads in a reasonable state of repair for travel both by night and day, and the public have a right to presume that they are so. Pierpoint, C. J., in Bagley v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 434—"in their surface, margin and muniments." So held in Glidden v. Reading, 38 Vt. 52.

173. In an action against a town to recover for an injury received by the plaintiff upon a highway by driving his team against a log in the highway, in a night "so dark that he could not see his horse," the court charged the jury, that the proper criterion of determining the sufficiency of the highway was not for the jury to place themselves in contemplation of the place and the log, in the afternoon previous to the accident, and say whether or not it was careless to permit the log to lie where it did, but to place themselves in contemplation of the place and the log, with reference to the circumstances as developed by the case,—such as the darkness, the turning round of the team, the manner in which the accident occurred, and the accident itself. Held correct. Bagley v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 425.

174. The court cannot say, as matter of law, that "attempting to cross a bridge in a totally dark night, without a light," was want of proper care and diligence on the part of a traveler. This is exclusively a question of fact. Swift v. Newbury, 36 Vt. 355; and see Barber v. Essex, 27 Vt. 62.

175. Passing teams. Towns are under the statutory duty to provide for the safety of travelers passing teams going in the same direction, by keeping places, which naturally invite the attempt to pass, in good and sufficient repair. This duty is not confined to cases of absolute necessity, but, in this case, was extended to one who attempted to pass a team for the purpose of keeping in company with a companion who had driven past and gone ahead. Mochler v. Shaftsbury, 46 Vt. 580.

176. Accident combining. Towns are bound to construct their highways reasonably sufficient with reference to such accidents as should be expected to occur. Lindsey v. Danville, 45 Vt. 72.

177. Where a traveler upon a highway, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, receives an injury which is the combined result of accident and of the insufficiency of the highway, and the injury is attributable to such insufficiency conspiring with such accidental cause, the town is liable;—as, where a nut, fastening the tongue of a wagon to the axle-tree, came off, and the wagon was thereby run off a bank not guarded by a sufficient railing,—the traveler having exercised ordinary care and prudence in ascertaining the sufficiency of the nut and its fastening, and in other respects. Hunt v. Pownal, 9 Vt. 411; and see Holley v. W. Turnpike Co., 1 Aik. 74.

178. Towns are bound to maintain their highways in such manner that they may be reasonably safe for the amount and kind of travel which may be fairly expected on them, and for such horses and carriages as are commonly used and as people may be expected to use on them (Hodge v. Bennington, 43 Vt. 450);—and so as to enable travelers to be reasonably safe from the consequences of such accidents as may be justly expected, occasionally, to occur on such roads;—as where a runaway horse was turned upon the plaintiff's team, by the projection of a tree-top into the highway. Kelsey v. Glover, 15 Vt. 708.

179. This principle applied to the case of a carriage insufficient in its construction. Fletcher v. Barnett, 43 Vt. 192.

180. Also, to the case of the breaking of an axle nearly severed by an old crack, and clearly unsafe for use upon the road,—the plaintiff having exercised "the care of a prudent man in respect to the soundness and sufficiency of the wagon." The rule in Massachusetts, which throws upon the traveler the risk of the sufficiency of the horse, carriage, harness, &c. (Murdock v. Warwick, 4 Gray 178), has never been followed in this State; and the refusal to charge that the town was not bound to furnish a road sufficient for the safe passage of a wagon with an axle broken as above stated, was sustained in Hodge v. Bennington, 43 Vt. 450; and see Fletcher v. Barnett.

181. Applied, also, to the case of a horse slipping by reason of being smooth shod, and thus unable to hold back the load, whereby the team was thrust over an unguarded bank. Allen v. Hancock, 16 Vt. 230.

182. While the plaintiff was descending a steep hill in a highway with a wagon drawn by two horses, and loaded, his team was thrown out of the road and injured; and his testimony tended to prove that the highway was insufficient for want of some muniment on the lower side to prevent teams from going off in case of accident, and that the injury was occasioned thereby. The defendant's evidence tended to prove that the plaintiff was in fault in attempting to descend the hill without chaining or confining his wheel, with his horses so smooth-shod behind that they could not hold back the load; and that, by reason of this, one of the horses slipped, which occasioned the going off the road, and the damage. The court charged the jury, that if the plaintiff was wanting in prudence and ordinary care in attempting to go down the hill at the time he did, with his horses shod as they were, and his wheel not confined, he could not recover although the road was insufficient; but that if he was not wanting in ordinary care and prudence in placing himself in that situation, under the circumstances, and the road was insufficient, he was entitled to recover, notwithstanding the slipping of the horse conspired with the insufficiency of the road in producing the result. Held correct. Ib.

183. Measure of liability. The duty of towns in the matter of keeping their highways in good and sufficient repair, as affecting their liability to pay damages for an injury caused by a defect in such highways, is not to be measured by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence. Nor, on the other hand, is a town liable in all cases and absolutely for damages resulting from such defect, as an insurer. The statute prescribes the duty to keep the highways in good and sufficient repair. If the town is chargeable with any fault in respect to this duty, then the liability attaches; and it is liable as an insurer against accidents and injuries caused by defects existing through any such fault of the town. Barrett, J., in Prindle v. Fletcher, 39 Vt. 255.

184. Latent defect. The plaintiff was traveling upon a highway, when the ground gave way under his horse, through some latent defect under the ground which was not known and was not discoverable, and which the authorities of the town could not have learned about, and thereby the horse was injured. Held, that the town was not liable. Id.

185. Notice of defect. The liability of a town for defects in a highway does not depend upon the town's having notice of such defect. Bardwell v. Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438; that is, where the defect is such as that it might or ought to have been known, and the defect made good. 39 Vt. 259.

186. Defect suddenly happening. When a sudden and unforeseen defect occurs in a highway, without fault on the part of the town, the town is not chargeable for the damage resulting from such defect, unless it has been in default in respect to getting seasonable knowledge of the defect; or, unless, having such knowledge, it was reasonably practicable to repair the defect, or to put up a warning or barrier to avoid it, before the happening of the accident. Ozier v. Hinesburgh, 44 Vt. 220.

187. Damage special. The "special damage" recoverable of a town under the statute (G. S. c. 25, s. 41), for injuries received through the insufficiency of a highway, includes every actionable injury. Under it, a father may recover in his own name for loss of service and expense of cure of his minor daughter. Bailey v. Fairfield, Brayt. 126.

188. And a husband for that of his wife. Whitecomb v. Barre, 37 Vt. 148.

189. — direct. In order to such recovery, the damage must not only be special, in the language of the statute, but direct, either to the person of the traveler, to his team, carriage, or other property, while he, or the property, was in a state of transition over the road or bridge; and held, that where the damages were only general, as where, by reason of the general badness and insufficiency of the road, the plaintiff did not attempt to travel the road, or, traveling it, could not do so as expeditiously and carry as large loads as he otherwise might and would have done, no action lay against the town therefor. Baxter v. Winooski T. Co., 22 Vt. 114. 27 Vt. 457.

190. A town is liable for special damage occasioned by the insufficiency of a highway, only in those cases where the injury is direct to the person or property of the traveler, and where such insufficiency is the proximate or immediate and not the remote cause of it. Id. Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 443.

191. While the plaintiff was driving his horse over a highway bridge, the horse broke through the bridge by reason of a defect in it, and became so fastened that he could not extricate himself without assistance. While the plaintiff was properly rendering such assistance, he was injured by the horse in his efforts to extricate himself. Held, that the insufficiency of the bridge was the direct and proximate cause of the injury to the person of the plaintiff, and that the town was liable therefor. Stickney v. Maidstone, 30 Vt. 738.

192. Plaintiff's negligence contributory. In an action against a town to recover for an injury received through the insufficiency of a highway, the court charged that if the injury was occasioned in any degree, either in whole or in part, by the insufficiency of the highway, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Held erroneous. Noyes v. Morristown, 1 Vt. 353.

193. If the injury in whole or in part was owing to the plaintiff's want of ordinary care or prudence, he cannot recover. Briggs v. Guilford, 8 Vt. 264. 24 Vt. 496. 27 Vt. 466.

194. In such action, when the question of contributory negligence is raised, a charge without qualification, that "if the accident would have happened the same if such want of care of the plaintiff had not existed, then such want of care is of no consequence in the case," would be erroneous. The test is not whether the accident would have occurred independently of such want of care and prudence, but whether such want of care and prudence contributed, in any degree, in point of fact, to the happening of the accident. If it did so contribute, the plaintiff cannot recover. If it did not, the right of recovery is not affected by it. Walker v. Westfield, 39 Vt. 246; and see Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 507.

195. A bridge, which it was the duty of the defendant town to maintain, having been carried away by a flood, and the town having neglected for an unreasonable time to rebuild it, an old fordway was repaired by the highway surveyor and several others who were interested in having the stream passable while they were without a bridge. The plaintiff's intestate, a physician, undertook to pass from W to T over the highway connected with the fordway, knowing that he would be obliged on this route to ford the stream, instead of taking another road to T, of greater length, which was then in very bad condition, but passable. On arriving at the stream, which had been rising through the day and was then rapidly rising, the intestate, after observing the stream, attempted its passage along the fordway, sitting in his wagon drawn by one horse, and was drowned in the attempt. It was found and reported by the referee, that a person of ordinary prudence, merely desiring to make progress in his journey but actuated by no particular motives for haste, would not have so ventured to cross the stream at that time and place; but that if it was allowable, in determining the question of ordinary prudence, to take into consideration the situation and circumstances of the individual, and the motives which influenced him to desire to proceed rapidly in his journey, and the sufficiency of those motives, then the referee found that a person of ordinary prudence, situated in every respect as the intestate there was, would have so attempted to cross the stream. Held, that the motive of the intestate in risking the passage, did not affect the question of ordinary prudence; and that the plaintiff could not recover upon the facts reported. Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 448. Redfield, C. J., dissenting.

196. Action and its incidents. Action against two towns jointly, to recover damages caused by the insufficiency of a bridge between the two;—Held correct. Peckham v. Burlington et al., Brayt. 184.

197. Transitory. An action against a town for an injury caused by the insufficiency of a highway is not local, so as that the action must be brought in the county where the injury happened. The statute has made no other actions strictly local, except ejectment and trespass on the freehold. Hunt v. Pownal, 9 Vt. 411.

198. Declaration. In such action, the injury cannot be alleged with a continuando, or on divers days and times. The injury sustained at any one time cannot be continued or repeated, and the injuries sustained on different days must, from their very nature, be distinct and independent. It is the per quod which is the gravamen of the action, not the insufficiency of the road. Baxter v. Winooski T. Co., 22 Vt. 114.

199. In such action the declaration averred that the highway was "greatly insufficient and out of repair, and was then and there full of deep holes, excavations and pits," and that the plaintiff was injured "by reason of said insufficiency and want of repair." Held, that the general allegations of insufficiency, &c., were not confined to the specific defects enumerated, and that proof could be made that the real defect was the want of a proper barrier to prevent the traveler from driving or falling into an excavation. Barber v. Essex, 27 Vt. 62.

200. Evidence. The opinions of witnesses as to the sufficiency of a highway, are not admissible evidence. Lester v. Pittsford, 7 Vt. 158.

201. The dirt covering the plank of a culvert got washed off by a heavy rain and flood. The plaintiff's horse broke through the plank and broke his leg. In an action against the town, a witness, who was present and witnessed the accident and examined the culvert, testified that if the dirt had not been washed from the plank the injury would not have happened. Held inadmissible. Crane v. Northfield, 38 Vt. 124.

202. In an action against a town for an injury received by being thrown from a wagon in crossing a water bar upon a highway;—Held, that, as tending to prove the condition of the highway, evidence was admissible as to the effect upon other carriages by crossing the bar, though not the same kind of carriage, nor driven at the same rate of speed, nor at a reasonable speed. Such effects are in the nature of experiments showing the condition of the road. Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591. 41 Vt. 434. 39 Vt. 252.

203. Burden of proof. In such an action, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff. He must make out a prima facie case, before the defendants can be put upon their defense. Proving merely that the road was out of repair does not entitle him to recover; but it is necessary further to show that he was injured thereby. It is not incumbent on him to negative the charge of negligence or imprudence on his part, such proof being properly matter of defense; but this proof is not necessary until a prima facie case is made out. It is also true, that if the proof be deficient the consequences fall where the onus probandi rests. Phelps, J., in Lester v. Pittsford, 7 Vt. 158.

204. The exercise of ordinary care is not to be presumed, but must be proved as an affirmative fact, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff. Bennett, J., in Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 465.

205. It is undoubtedly true, that the plaintiff is bound to make out a prima facie case of the exercise of proper care on his part, the burden of proof being upon him on this point, as well as others. But this is rather a negative than an affirmative proposition. The requisite is, rather, that he was not guilty of negligence than that he should prove any positive diligence; and after such negative evidence of the alleged fact as may be presumed to be in the power of the party, is shown, the burden of proof is changed upon the other side. Redfield, C. J., in Barber v. Essex, 27 Vt. 62.

206. In order for the plaintiff to make a case upon which he can safely rest, it is necessary that he should submit a state and character of evidence upon which the jury would be authorized to find affirmatively, both that the defect in the road operated to produce the accident, and that no want of care on his part contributed to it. This is what he assumes, and this burden goes with him throughout the case, and in the end, he must be able to have the jury, upon the whole evidence, find affirmatively the same that was necessary to be established by his opening evidence, at the time he rested upon making his prima facie case. Barrett, J., in Walker v. Westfield, 39 Vt. 258.

207. The plaintiff, in such case, is not bound to establish as a distinct affirmative point in the outset, that he was not guilty of carelessness or negligence. The defect in the highway being conceded or proved, he is bound to give sufficient evidence to establish prima facie that he sustained an injury by reason of such defect; and this, necessarily, to a certain extent, shows negatively that it was not caused by any thing else. But if his evidence discloses nothing but that his conduct was proper and prudent, he is not bound to go further, until this has been impugned by some evidence on the other side. The true rule on this subject was laid down by Phelps, J., in Lester v. Pittsford (supra, 203). Poland, C. J., in Hill v. New Haven, 87 Vt. 507; and see Powers v. Woodstock, 38 Vt. 44.

208. That a bridge was out of repair and a traveler's horse was found dead near it, &c., affords no legal presumption, though in lack of evidence to the contrary, that he was killed by reason of the insufficiency of the bridge. Judgment reversed for such ruling,—the question being one of fact for the jury. Turan v. Randolph, 6 Vt. 369.

209. Damages. In an action against a town for injuries to a wagon caused by a defect in a highway, loss of the use of the wagon, for so long a time as it necessarily took to repair it, is recoverable as damages. Wheeler v. Townshend, 42 Vt. 15.

210. In such action to recover for personal injuries the town is not entitled to have allowed, towards the damages, the sum received by the plaintiff of an insurance company for the same injury. Harding v. Townshend, 43 Vt. 536.

211. Notice of the injury. It is not necessary to aver in the declaration that the plaintiff within 30 days gave the notice required by G. S. c. 25, s. 42; but this is an essential part of the plaintiff's proof to perfect his right of action. Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591. Matthie v. Barton, 40 Vt. 286; and see Doyon v. School District, 35 Vt. 520.

212. The defendant, under the general issue, may give evidence that such notice was not given; for this is but a denial of what the plaintiff is bound to prove to make out his right of action; and the case does not fall under G. S. c. 33, s. 15, requiring a special plea in cases where the special matter of defense operates to extinguish a right of action which once existed. Matthie v. Barton.

213. Where a married woman received a personal injury by reason of the insufficiency of a highway, a notice to the town of the claim of damages, signed by her alone, was held sufficient under the statute of 1870, No. 49. Church v. Westminster, 45 Vt. 380.

214. The written notice of injury upon a highway wholly omitted to state the place where the injury was received. Held, that such omission could not be supplied by an oral notice; and, quære, whether the selectmen could waive such requirement of the statute. Underhill v. Washington, 46 Vt. 767.

215. Notice of the plaintiff's injury upon a highway and claim of damage indicated "the place where such injury was received," only as "on the road leading from Fairfield Center to East Fairfield." The distance between these points was four and a half miles. Held, that the place where, &c., was not sufficiently stated under Stat. 1870, No. 49, and that the notice was insufficient. Law v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 425.

216. Notice of an injury as sustained on "the Green River road," was held not sufficient to indicate the place where the injury was received,—it appearing that the road so denominated was about twenty miles long, extending some five miles through the defendant town. Babcock v. Guilford, 47 Vt. 519.

217. In actions for damages caused by the insufficiency, &c., of a bridge erected and maintained at the expense of two or more towns, notice must be given to each, and the action and judgment must be against all, or neither. Brown v. Fairhaven, 47 Vt. 386.

218. Notice of an injury received upon a highway, under the statutes of 1870 and 1874, should point as directly and plainly to the place where the injury was received as is reasonably practicable, having regard to its character and surroundings. In this case it was held not sufficient. Reed v. Calais, 48 Vt. 7. Bean v. Concord, Id., 30.

219. In such action, the plaintiff offered to prove that he complained to one of the selectmen who told him to bring no suit and make no trouble;—that he had heard the road was bad, and that when the plaintiff had ascertained the extent of his injury the town would pay him;—that because of this, he gave no further notice. Held, not admissible, as tending to show the road out of repair, nor as a waiver of notice. Wheelock v. Hardwick, 48 Vt. 19.

220. Bereft of reason. There can be no arbitrary rule of law as to the length of time one shall be "bereft of his reason," to bring him within the proviso of the statute excusing him from giving notice of his injury upon a highway (G. S. c. 25, s. 42). If the injured person, after the primary effects of the injury have passed, and the physical system has had the time and opportunity to resume its normal condition, is still left in a state of insanity, insensibility, or otherwise deprived of his reason, and that condition is in its character fixed, then whether never, or in a shorter or longer time, and though within the statutory period for giving notice, his reason may return to him, the fact is established that by the injury he was "bereft of his reason," and he is excused by the statute from giving the notice. Gonyeau v. Milton, 48 Vt. 172.

VII. RIGHTS OF LAND-OWNER, AND OF THE PUBLIC.

221. Adjoining land. The owner of land has no fee or right of soil in a highway or public common adjoining, unless the same is included within the boundaries of his grant; and when not so included, he cannot maintain trespass for a private appropriation thereof. Ferre v. Doty, 2 Vt. 378.

222. Where a highway passes between the land of A and B, the presumption, prima facie, is that each owns to the center of the road; yet this is only a presumption of fact, and not of law so as to become a rule of property, and may at all times be rebutted. It is, doubtless, founded upon the supposition that they originally owned the land taken for the highway equally. Bennett, J., in Richardson v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 472.

223. The occupation of lands on the line of a highway for twenty years or more, without paper title shown, affords no legal presumption that the occupant's title extends to the center of the highway, or beyond the limits of his actual possession. Hatch v. Vt. Central R. Co., 28 Vt. 142.

224. Land covered by highway. Dictum. The conveyance of land covered by a public road does not extinguish the grantor's right to share in the public easement. Wilson v. Wilson, 2 Vt. 68.

225. The owner of land through which a highway is established retains the fee of the soil embraced within its limits, with the full and exclusive right to its enjoyment in any manner not inconsistent with the enjoyment of the easement by the public for the purposes of a highway. Holden v. Shattuck, 34 Vt. 336. Cole v. Drew, 44 Vt. 49.

226. Thus, he may lawfully depasture his cattle upon it, or otherwise enjoy it, unless he is guilty of some fault through which the enjoyment of the public easement is impaired. Ib.

227. Where the owner of land over which a highway passes allows his cattle to feed or be in such highway, he is not liable for any accidental injury or damage they may do there, unless it appear that the circumstances and occasion of their being there, or that the character and habits of the animals, were such as to show carelessness on the part of the owner in reference to the convenience and safety of travelers on the highway. Holden v. Shattuck.

228. The defendant cut the grass growing in a highway crossing the plaintiff's land, by direction of the highway surveyor, because it wet the children's feet and clothes in passing to and from school. He then fed the grass to his horse. In trespass qua. clau.,—Held, that the grass belonged to the plaintiff; that the defendant had the right to cut it, but by feeding it to his horse he became a trespasser ab initio. Cole v. Drew, 44 Vt. 49.

229. Right of town in building and repairing. As incident to the easement, or right of way, acquired by a town by the laying out of a highway, the town has the right of digging the soil and using the timber and other materials found within the limits of the high way, in a reasonable manner, for the purpose of making and repairing the road, or bridges upon it. Felch v. Gilman, 22 Vt. 38. Baxter v. Winoski T. Co., 22 Vt. 114.

230. The damages are, or should be, assessed to the land holders with the expectation that the public may take materials from the highway for the purpose of building or repairing the road; and ruled, that the earth so dug may be lawfully carried beyond the land-owner's line, to be used on other contiguous parts of the highway. Baxter v. Winoski T. Co. Cheever v. City of Burlington, U. S. C. C. Dist. Vt. (1876.)

231. The owner of the fee of the land of a highway cannot maintain trespass against the proper town or village authorities, for the digging of a reservoir in the highway for water to be used in sprinkling the streets. By Pierpoint, J.: The power of the public over highways is not confined to their use for the sole purpose of travel, but embraces many things for the public convenience and health, such as laying water pipes, constructing drains, sewers, reservoirs, &c. West v. Bancroft, 32 Vt. 367.

232. Prescription against the public. On the laying out of a highway, it was so fenced as to leave part of the survey within the inclosure of the plaintiff over whose land the road was laid out, and he had continued in possession and occupied to the fence for more than 20 years thereafter. It was held, in 1850, while a statute corresponding to G. S. c. 24, s. 17, was in force, and while the statute of limitations, as in C. S. c. 61, was running as against the State, that the non user of the inclosed land by the public, and the constant use of it by the plaintiff under a claim of right, established in him a prescriptive right; and that the defendant, a selectman, was liable in trespass qua. clau. for proceeding, under a statute corresponding to G. S. c. 25, s. 66, to remove the fence back upon the line of the original survey. Knight v. Heaton, 22 Vt. 480.

233. Action for disturbance, &c. For the interruption of an easement merely, the action must be case. For an injury to the right of soil in a highway, the action may be trespass, though the same act may impede the use of the easement. Wilson v. Wilson, 2 Vt. 68.

234. Law of the road. It is ordinarily the duty of a person on horseback to give the traveled path to one who is traveling in a wagon, or other vehicle, sanctioned by common consent and immemorial usage. Washburn v. Tracy, 2 D. Chip. 128.

HOMESTEAD.

1. As connected with the dwelling. Under the homestead act, (C. S. c. 65 s. 1,) the homestead does not include a distinct and separate parcel of land, not adjoining or contiguous to the house lot, although used as tillage and woodland in connection with the house lot; but applies only to the house and the land connected with the house. Mills v. Grant, 36 Vt. 269. True v. Morrill, 28 Vt. 672.

2. A blacksmith shop, not used as such, and an unused water privilege, both on the opposite side of the highway from the dwelling house and barn, but possessed and occupied in connection with the whole premises, and the whole worth less than $500, were held to be part of the homestead; and, semble, if the housekeeper had been a blacksmith by trade and had used the shop in his business, the decision would be the same. West River Bank v. Gale, 42 Vt. 27.

3. —with residence. As the homestead act stood in 1857, nothing short of actual residence upon premises intended for a homestead gave them the character of a homestead, so as to cut off the right of the owner to alienate or mortgage them without his wife joining in the deed. Spaulding v. Crane, 46 Vt. 292.

4. The language of the earlier homestead acts (occupied by such person as a homestead; C. S. c. 65, s. 1) implies a personal occupancy by the housekeeper, and that he should live and have his home there. True v. Morrill, 28 Vt. 672. Davis v. Andrews, 30 Vt. 678.

5. Under this act, a piece of land upon which the party never resided, though he had a house upon it occupied by a tenant, cannot be treated as such homestead, although he had no other dwelling house, and was intending to move upon the premises at some future time. True v. Morrill.

6. So, where the owner of a homestead moved from it with his family in October, 1856, leasing it for 5 years from the next April, and the lessee took immediate possession, and the owner resided a mile and a half distant;—Held, that in January, 1857, there was no such homestead right as required the wife to join in a deed with the husband in order to pass the title. Davis v. Andrews, 30 Vt. 678.

7. By G. S. c. 68, s. 1, the words are—used or kept, instead of occupied. This distinction taken in West River Bank v. Gale, 42 Vt. 27.

8. Where a housekeeper, in the fall of 1865, removed from his homestead for a temporary purpose, not intending to abandon the premises as his homestead, but intending to return and resume his living there as soon as such temporary purpose was served, and he preserved that intent during his absence, and, by an accidental injury, was further detained from returning until April 1, 1867, and the premises in the interim had been attached;—Held, that the premises were “used or kept as a homestead” during all this time, and remained exempt from attachment. Id.

9. Liberal construction. The homestead exemption is humane in its character, and the statute should receive a liberal construction in view of the objects aimed at by it. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 218. True v. Morrill, 28 Vt. 674. McClary v. Bizby, 36 Vt. 254.

10. Tenancy in common. The widow and minor children of a deceased householder and head of a family are entitled to a full homestead right of $500, in his share of lands held as tenant in common. McClary v. Bizby. Danforth v. Beattie, 43 Vt. 138.

11. Equitable estates. The homestead act applies to an equitable as well as to a legal ownership; to an incumbered as well as to an unincumbered estate. Morgan v. Stearns, 41 Vt. 398. Doane v. Doane, 46 Vt. 485.

12. For what debts holden. Under the homestead act of 1849 (C. S. c. 65), the homestead of a deceased person is holden for the same debts as before his decease—that is, for debts contracted before Dec. 1, 1850, or before the purchase of the homestead. Simonds v. Powers, 28 Vt. 354. Perrin v. Sargeant, 33 Vt. 84.

13. Under this act, a homestead is exempt from attachment for a debt which accrued after the purchase and after the record of the deed, although it accrued before the housekeeper had taken the occupancy, where he was in the occupancy when the attachment was made. West River Bank v. Gale, 42 Vt. 27. Lamb v. Mason, 45 Vt. 500. 46 Vt. 298.

14. Yearly products. Held, that the yearly products of the homestead remain exempt from attachment and execution, although the debtor has received an equal or greater amount from other portions of his possessions. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 209.

15. In determining the question between an execution creditor and the purchaser of certain hay, whether the hay was the product of the vendor's homestead which had not been set out;—Held, that it was to be determined on the same principles as if the question were between the execution creditor and the debtor, on the appointment of commissioners under the statute. Id.

16. Wife's right. Under the earlier homestead acts;—Held, that the wife had but an inchoate lien, contingent on her surviving her husband, and not a de facto title in the homestead premises; and that the sole deed of the husband passed the title for his lifetime, and conveyed the land and the homestead right as to all persons, except the wife in case she should happen to survive him. Hove v. Adams, 28 Vt. 541. Davis v. Andrews, 30 Vt. 678. Jewett v. Brock, 32 Vt. 65. 36 Vt. 260.

17. The sole deed by a married man of the homestead, or any interest therein, is, under the statute of 1860 (G. S. c. 68, s. 10), absolutely void to convey it—both as to himself, and as to his wife and children. Abell v. Lothrop, 47 Vt. 375. (1875.) Day v. Adams, 42 Vt. 516.

18. The spirit of the homestead act and all its provisions indicate that the husband should not have the power by will to devise it away from his wife and minor children. Meech v. Meech, 37 Vt. 414.

19. A mortgage by husband and wife of land of which a part is occupied as a homestead, though not set out, is valid as to the homestead, although, as to the residue, void as to creditors. Danforth v. Beattie, 43 Vt. 188.

20. Under the original homestead act (C. S. c. 65);—Held, that the children of the deceased housekeeper, not of the family of the widow, could not, as against her while occupying the homestead as her family home, assert their respective several rights, and thus share with her in the joint use and in the rents received, nor have partition, nor compel the tenant in possession to hold of them in respect to their several proportionate shares in the estate. Keyes v. Hill, 30 Vt. 759.

21. Probate court. An appeal lies from the decision of the probate court setting out a homestead to the widow. True v. Morrill, 28 Vt. 672.

22. The stat. 1855, No. 14, requiring dower to be first set out and then the homestead, was directory merely as to the order of time, but imperative that the value of the widow's share of the homestead should be deducted from the dower. Where one full third of the estate was set out as dower, and afterwards the widow's homestead was set out in the same dower lands;—Held, that this was a substantial compliance with the statute. Doane v. Doane, 33 Vt. 649. (G. S. c. 68, s. 6, Stat. 1866, No. 33.)

23. Under the act of 1856, No. 23, providing that there shall be no homestead right in an estate, the assets of which shall exceed $500 after paying all debts and charges of administration;—Held, that the sum assigned to the widow, and her dower, should not be reckoned as part of such assets. Chaplin v. Sawyer, 35 Vt. 286.

24. In an appeal from the probate court for setting out a homestead without making it subject to debts claimed to be chargeable upon it;—Held, that the time when such debts were contracted may be shown by other evidence than the report of the commissioners. Their duty is merely to allow all legal claims presented. Perrin v. Sargeant, 33 Vt. 84. See University of Vt. v. Baxter, 43 Vt. 645.

25. Chancery. The act of 1857, No. 28, authorizing proceedings in chancery in respect to homesteads, applies as well to homesteads left by deceased persons, as to those of persons in life; and the power of the court of chancery does not depend upon an adjudication of the probate court that such homestead right exists. (G. S. c. 68, s. 18.) Chaplin v. Sawyer, 35 Vt. 286.

26. In a bill to arrest proceedings of a creditor of the husband to get the occupancy of the homestead, the wife and minor children are proper parties to join with the husband as complainants. Abell v. Lothrop, 47 Vt. 375.

27. Levy of execution. Where an execution is levied upon land in which there is a homestead, the levy is irregular unless the homestead is first set out. Fairbanks v. Deveraux, 48 Vt. 550.

HOUSE (CASTLE).

Maxim. The idea embodied in the expression, "a man's house is his castle," is not that, as his property, he has the right to defend and protect it by other and more extreme means than he might lawfully use to defend and protect his shop, his office, or his barn. The sense in which the house has a peculiar immunity is, that it is sacred for the protection of his person, and of his family. An assault on the house can be regarded as an assault on the person, only in case the purpose of such assault be injury to the person of the occupant or members of his family, and, in order to accomplish this, the assailant attacks the castle in order to reach the inmates. In this view it is, that it is said and settled that, in such case, the inmate need not flee from his house in order to escape being injured by the assailant, but may meet him at the threshold and prevent him from breaking in, by any means rendered necessary by the exigency; and upon the same ground and reason as one may defend himself from peril of life, or great bodily harm, by means fatal to the assailant, if rendered necessary by the exigency of the assault. State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

I. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF HUSBAND.

1. As to wife's property.
2. To act for her.

II. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF HUSBAND.

III. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF WIFE.

1. As agent of her husband.
2. As to her own property.
3. Disabilities.

IV. DEALINGS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.

V. CONVEYANCES BY OR TO THEM.

VI. SUITS BY, AGAINST, OR BETWEEN THEM.

VII. WITNESSES AND EVIDENCE.

I. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF HUSBAND.

1. As to wife's property.

1. Personal chattels. The wife's personal property in possession vests absolutely in the husband upon the marriage; and both the property and possession of that earned by her after marriage become those of the husband. For an injury done to such property, after marriage, the wife cannot join. Such joinder is cause of demurrer, motion in arrest, or of error. Rawlins v. Rounds, 27 Vt. 17.

2. Trespass by husband and wife for the taking of a horse.—"the proper goods and chattels of the said L R." (the wife). Declaration held ill on general demurrer. Ib. See post, 103.

3. Distributive share. The distributive share of a feme covert in an estate consisting of specific personal chattels, after a decree of distribution, vests absolutely in the husband, and may be reached by his creditors by trustee process. Parks v. Cushman, 9 Vt. 320. 10 Vt. 451. 11 Vt. 363. 32 Vt. 775. (Changed by Stat. 1867, No. 21.)

4. An administrator cannot be held as trustee of a husband, for a distributive share of the estate belonging to the wife, before a decree of distribution. Probate Court v. Niles, 33 Vt. 775;—nor after. Short v. Moore, 10 Vt. 446.

5. Lands. Where lands descend to a married woman, her husband, on and at the death of her ancestor, acquires an interest therein, either during coverture, or for his own life as tenant by the curtesy, as the case may be, which is immediately subject to attachment and levy of execution for his debts. Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280. Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326. (Now changed by statute. G. S. c. 71, s. 18.)

6. Where real estate was conveyed to one in trust for a man and his wife, and her heirs;—Held, that, upon her death, the husband took the benefit of the trust by survivorship, and that the rents and profits in the hands of the trustee, received after the death of the wife, were subject to attachment by trustee process for the husband's debts. Davis v. Davis, 30 Vt. 440.

7. Rents from the wife's real estate during coverture belong to the husband, and do not survive to the wife; but on his decease are assets in the hands of his administrator, and must be collected by him. Shaw v. Partridge, 17 Vt. 626. (Now changed by statute.)

8. The possession of land belonging to a married woman, upon which she and her husband reside, is the possession of the husband alone; and, therefore, where her title depends upon a continuous possession, his acts and declarations, while in possession, showing the character and extent thereof and limiting the claim of the wife, are admissible against such title;—as, that a piece of land, fenced in and occupied with that of his wife, did not belong to him, but to an adjoining proprietor. Holton v. Whitney, 28 Vt. 448.

9. Where a husband possessed and claimed land in right of his wife only, and after his death she continued the possession in the same manner, and claimed the land as her own;—Held, that she, or her grantee, was entitled to claim that such possession of the husband enured to her benefit, and to add it to her own possession to make up the period of 15 years' adverse possession. Holton v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 405.

10. The husband is entitled to the possession and occupancy of his wife's real estate, and while in possession in the exercise of such his marital rights, though they live together on the land, it is the sole and exclusive possession of the husband; and so, also, as to the personal property on the farm in use by him. Bowen v. Amaden, 47 Vt. 569.

11. Choses in action. The husband must do some positive act to reduce the wife's choses in action to possession, before they become his property; his custody and possession are not of themselves a reduction to possession. Barber v. Slade, 30 Vt. 191. Holmes v. Holmes, 28 Vt. 765.

12. The facts that certain promissory notes were all the property that a woman had; that she so informed her husband before marriage; that he, at her desire, procured her wedding dress and other wedding preparations, and was at the whole expense of furnishing the house; that after their marriage she handed him the notes, requesting him to keep them, and that he did keep them with his other papers until after her death; and that he was at great expense for her during her last sickness,—were held to constitute no reduction of the notes to possession by the husband, nor to give any lien upon them, but that they passed to her administrator. Holmes v. Holmes, 28 Vt. 765. 30 Vt. 194. Ib., 215. 34 Vt. 260. 40 Vt. 602.

13. If the husband appoints an attorney to collect the money upon his wife's chose, and the attorney receives the money, her right of survivorship is gone, and she cannot join in a suit to recover the money of the attorney. The husband alone can sue for it. Hill v. Royce, 17 Vt. 190. 27 Vt. 567.

14. Before the statute of Nov. 22, 1870, No. 31, the choses in action of a married woman, dying intestate and without issue, and not reduced to possession by the husband, were distributable wholly to her heirs, as in case of real estate, and in no part to her surviving husband. Holmes v. Holmes, 28 Vt. 765. 30 Vt. 215. 40 Vt. 602. (Davis v. Burnham, 27 Vt. 562.)

15. So long as any act remains to be done by the husband to bring the avails of his wife's choses in action to his beneficial use, the wife's right of survivorship remains. Roberts v. Lund, 45 Vt. 82.

16. An equitable title to lands, under a contract of purchase by a single woman, is not a mere chose in action which, upon her marriage, her husband can control. Gould v. Gould, 29 Vt. 504.

2. To act for her.

17. A deed of gift to a wife, if delivered to her husband and accepted by him, is a delivery to and acceptance by her, and her refusal apart from her husband can be of no consequence. Brackett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411.

18. The notice required, by G. S. c. 25, s. 42, to be given to the selectmen of an injury upon a highway and claim of satisfaction therefor, before bringing suit, when given by a husband alone for an injury to his wife, is sufficient for such case. Barton v. Montpelier, 30 Vt. 650. Babcock v. Guilford, 47 Vt. 519.

19. In an action by husband and wife against a town for an injury to the wife on a highway while riding with her husband;—Held, that the negligence of the husband which contributed to the injury was attributable to the wife, the same as if she had been wholly acting for herself. Carlisle v. Sheldon, 38 Vt. 440.

20. A gave a mortgage, signed by himself and wife, of their homestead, to secure A's note of $500 towards a contract for the purchase by A of a farm, under which contract A took and held possession for one year, when the bargain was mutually given up, upon A's agreeing to pay $200 for the past use of the farm and that the mortgage should stand as a security for that sum. On a bill against A and his wife to foreclose for the $200;—Held, that A had authority, as to his wife, to make this agreement, and a decree of foreclosure passed against both. Wood v. Adams, 35 Vt. 300.

II. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF HUSBAND.

21. Necessaries. A husband is liable for articles procured by and for his wife, while living with him, which are suitable to his circumstances and station in life—as, a plate of mineral teeth—if he permits her to keep the articles after knowledge that she had so procured them. Gilman v. Andrus, 28 Vt. 241.

22. A husband is liable for necessities furnished, on his credit, to his wife, while they live apart as well as when they cohabit, and especially in a case when they live apart by his consent. His assent in such cases will be presumed, unless the contrary appear. Frost v. Willis, 13 Vt. 202.

23. A wife voluntarily left her husband, but for what cause did not appear, and for two years had worked at different places, taking care of herself, when she engaged for the defendant who settled with and paid her for her services—her earnings being needed for and applied to her personal necessities, and the husband at no time interfering, or dissenting. In an action by the husband to recover for such services;—Held, that he must be taken to have assented to such course of dealing, and that he could not recover. Norcross v. Rodgers, 30 Vt. 588.

24. Wife deserting. Where a wife refuses to live with her husband and deserts him in violation of her duty, and without reasonable or just cause, she cannot bind him to pay for necessities furnished her by a party who knows they live separate and apart. Brown v. Mudgett, 40 Vt. 68.

25. On whose credit. A wife, living with her husband, purchased necessities of the plaintiff, but desired the plaintiff not to call on her husband, as she wished to pay for the goods herself. The goods were charged to the husband. Held, that no fraud, or collusion, or desire of concealment is fairly inferable from this, nor that the goods were furnished on the credit of the wife. Day v. Burnham, 36 Vt. 37; and held, that a subsequent promise by the husband to pay was a ratification of the purchase, though made before he knew of such request of the wife. Id.

26. The plaintiff furnished necessary medical service to the defendant's wife, by her procurement and upon her credit alone, he knowing the relations of the parties and all other facts bearing upon the question, and nothing happening subsequently to authorize a transfer of such credit to the defendant. Held, that the plaintiff had chosen his debtor by the credit given to the wife, and that the defendant was not liable for the services. Carter v. Howard, 39 Vt. 106. Bugbee v. Blood, 48 Vt. 497.

27. Credit unauthorized. The defendant's wife, while separated and living apart from him, purchased at the plaintiffs' store a bill of goods on the defendant's credit, but without his knowledge, she saying he was sick and would call on a day named and pay for them. She was before unknown to the plaintiffs, and had never traded with them before, and the plaintiffs were ignorant of the separation. They knew the defendant, and had previously sold him goods on credit. The goods were such as are usually purchased for family use, and the amount was reasonable with reference to the defendant's circumstances; but he was in no immediate want of the goods, and they were not taken to his house, and it did not appear what disposition she made of them, nor that they were necessary for her reasonable comfort and support. Held, that it was not necessary for the defendant to have forbidden the plaintiffs from trading with the wife on his credit; that it was a clear case of unauthorized credit, and that defendant was not liable to pay for the goods. Stevens v. Story, 43 Vt. 327.

28. Prohibition. In order to recover against a husband for goods sold to his wife on his credit, after a prohibition by the husband to the plaintiff, against such trading, unless the trade has been ratified by the articles going to the husband's use with his knowledge that they were procured on his credit, the plaintiff must show affirmatively, not only that the articles were suitable to the husband's circumstances in life and were needed for present use, but that the husband had so neglected his duty in the matter of supplying them, that it was necessary for some one else to furnish them in order to supply the then wants of the wife, or wife and children. Of the wife's power to this extent, as his agent ex necessitate, the husband's prohibition cannot divest her. Woodard v. Barnes, 43 Vt. 330. 46 Vt. 335.

29. Attorney's fees. A husband is not liable to an attorney for professional services rendered his wife in defending against the husband's petition for a divorce, nor in procuring a divorce on her petition. Wing v. Hurlburt. 15 Vt. 607.

III. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF WIFE.

1. As agent of her husband.

30. The power of a wife to bind her husband by her contracts is founded upon the sole ground of agency, she having, as wife, no original and inherent power to bind him by any contract made by her. Sawyer v. Cutting, 23 Vt. 486.

31. The wife, whether the husband is absent or at home, sick or in health, is not to be presumed his agent generally, nor to be intrusted with any authority in relation to his affairs, other than that which it is usual and customary to confer upon a wife. Ib.

32. A wife is not, prima facie, her husband's agent for leasing his lands, or lending his horses, or watches, because this does not come within the ordinary scope of her business. Green v. Sperry, 16 Vt. 390.

33. A husband left home for an absence of some months, leaving his stock of cattle, &c., in the charge of his wife,—the minor sons to assist her. During his absence, and after he had been away two months, his hay and cattle were attached, and, by consent of the wife, the officer fed the hay to the cattle while under such attachment. The husband sued the officer in trover for the hay so fed out. Held, that, under the circumstances, the wife was so far the agent of her husband in that business, that her consent bound him. Felker v. Emerson, 16 Vt. 653. 23 Vt. 491.

34. An arrangement between a wife and the debtor of her husband, that such debtor's payment of a certain debt of the husband shall operate as a payment of his promissory note to the husband, is not within the ordinary powers of a wife in the management of the domestic affairs of her husband, and does not bind him unless assented to; and this, although the husband was sick at the time and wholly incapable of transacting business, and so continued till his death, and had no other person to transact his business. Sawyer v. Cutting, 23 Vt. 486.

35. The plaintiff, entitled to receive and control the rents and profits of land held by his wife in dower, gave to the defendant, her son, in the occupation of the land, a writing, saying: "Your mother thinks it is time for her to receive the rents and profits of her thirds, and I have no objection to her doing so. You will therefore make your payments to her as you and she can agree, and her receipt to you shall be as good and safe for you as though signed by me." Held, that this created not merely an agency in the wife to receive the rents in behalf of the plaintiff, but was the yielding of his marital right of control, and conferred upon the wife a power coupled with an interest to be exercised at her will until revoked, and to her use, not to his; and authorized the defendant to make arrangements with the wife for the payment of rents, in repairs which were to some extent beneficial to the life estate. Cheney v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 515.

36. Where the defendant, in his absence from the State, left his wife to keep house and manage for him at home what might be necessary to be done—it was held, on the facts stated, that her agency, apparent and in fact, extended to the borrowing of money to pay a debt contracted by the defendant for a set of grave-stones for a child, although the defendant had sent her money to pay that debt, but she had prudently expended the money in the purchase of necessaries for the family; and that the defendant was liable to pay for the money so borrowed. Meador v. Page, 89 Vt. 306.

37. Wife's admissions. The admissions of a wife do not bind her husband, unless made in the execution of an agency created by him. Thus, her admission that she had received payment of a debt due her husband is not admissible, without proving that the husband had made her his agent to receive payment. Gilson v. Gilson, 16 Vt. 464.

38. Wife's gift. Where a wife, without asking leave of her husband, gave to her old and needy brother a frock, claimed to be worth $5;—Held, that, by the common law and common custom of Vermont, a wife has the legal right to give such a reasonable charity as this, without asking leave; it being a reasonable and moderate gift, and fully within the means of the husband and the reasonable rights of the wife; and that the husband could not annul the gift. Spencer v. Storrs, 38 Vt. 156.

2. As to her own property.

39. Where a wife contracted a debt before her marriage, and, after her marriage, paid it out of what was her own funds before marriage, and such payment was not disaffirmed by her husband in reasonable time;—Held, that he could not recover it back,—least of all, in the action of book account. Hall v. Eaton, 12 Vt. 510.

40. An agreement of the defendant with a married woman to convey to her a parcel of land, upon her paying him a note due from her husband, was, after tender of performance on her part, decreed to be specifically executed; and held, that it was no excuse or defense for the defendant, that the husband had contracted for the purchase of the residue of the same tract of land, and had become insolvent and unable to perform his contract; nor that the conveyance of this parcel alone would work a detriment to the residue; nor that the orators had a remedy at law for damages. Washburn v. Dewey, 17 Vt. 92.

41. Husband's equity. The oratrix, while unmarried, had contracted to purchase a parcel of land, and had paid the larger part of the price, and had gone into possession, the vendor retaining the title as security for the unpaid purchase money. While so in possession she married the defendant, and he, without her knowledge or consent, paid the balance of the price, and induced the vendor to convey directly to him. On a bill in equity, the chancellor decreed that the defendant convey the premises to a trustee "for the sole use and benefit" of the oratrix—thus depriving the defendant of his interest as husband in the estate. On appeal, this decree was modified by directing a conveyance to the oratrix, through the intervention of a trustee, upon her paying the defendant that part of the purchase money paid by him. Gould v. Gould, 29 Vt. 504.

42. Wife's pledge. A wife living apart from her husband, he not providing for her, may pledge her own estate for payment for necessities furnished her upon her credit. Frary v. Booth, 37 Vt. 78.

43. Sole trader. Where a wife, with the consent of her husband, carries on business in her own name as sole trader, or otherwise, the property and proceeds of the business may, in equity, be held by the wife's creditors for her debts contracted in that business, against any claim or right of the husband, and, in most cases, against his creditors; and she may charge the same for such debts. Partridge v. Stocker, 36 Vt. 108. Frary v. Booth.

44. Will. A married woman, with the express consent of her husband, may dispose of her estate by will; and, quære, whether since the statute expressly excepts from the right of making wills persons not of full age and sound mind, married women are not included—the language of the statute of 1821 being, "every person, infants, idiots, and persons of non-sane memory only, excepted," &c. Fisher v. Kimball, 17 Vt. 323. See Morton v. Onion, 45 Vt. 145. (By G. S. c. 71, s. 17, express power is given to married women to devise their lands; and by stat. 1870, No. 31, to bequeath their personalty.)

45. Note. A promissory note to husband and wife, upon a consideration moving from the wife, as where given on purchase of her property, survives to the wife, and does not pass to his administrator. Richardson v. Daggett, 4 Vt. 336.

46. Execution. The lands of a married woman can be legally set off on execution in satisfaction of her debts contracted before marriage;—as where the judgment and execution were against the husband and wife. Fox v. Hatch, 14 Vt. 340.

47. Bond. A bond was given to husband and wife, for a consideration moving from the husband, conditioned for the delivery of certain specific articles to them yearly during their natural lives for their support, the one-half to be discontinued on the death of either obligee. Held, that after the death of the husband, the wife had at least an equitable interest in the bond, and had power to control and cancel it. Briggs v. Beach, 18 Vt. 115.

48 Statutory exemption. Under C. S. c. 58, s. 15, exempting from attachment and execution the "rents, issues and profits" of the wife's land for the husband's debts;—Held, that the yearly products, such as hay, &c., were not exempt. Bruce v. Thompson, 26 Vt. 741. (By G. S. c. 71, s. 18, the word "profits" is changed to products.)

49. Wife's equity. The property acquired by a wife, whether by gift, devise or inheritance, and whether before or during coverture, is regarded in equity as her's and not her husband's; and if that right has not been expressly and formally waived, or forfeited by misconduct, it will be protected in equity against the husband, his assignees and creditors, to the extent of a suitable provision for her, the amount resting in the discretion of the court. Barron v. Barron, 24 Vt. 375.

50. Note, &c. Where the consideration of a promissory note executed to a married woman consists of her property, or proceeds from her as the meritorious cause, it becomes her chose in action which survives to her on the death of her husband, or passes to her administrator on her death, unless reduced to actual possession by the husband before her death. Stearns v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 213. Bartlett v. Boyd, 34 Vt. 260; and see Richardson v. Daggett, 4 Vt. 336. Driggs v. Abbott, 27 Vt. 580. Holmes v. Holmes, 28 Vt. 765.

51. The same is true of any express promise to the wife, upon like consideration. Driggs v. Abbott.

52. A promissory note made payable to a married woman "for value received," imports, prima facie, that the consideration proceeded from her, or her real or personal estate, and is her chose in action. Stearns v. Stearns. Bartlett v. Boyd.

53. Separate estate. The right of the wife to her separate property is recognized, both at law and in equity, whether such property was acquired before or during coverture, and, in the latter case, whether the acquisition is the result of gift, or inheritance, or is the product of her own personal earnings. In every such case she will hold against the husband and his heirs, and generally against his creditors, so long as the husband allows the wife to keep the property separate from the general mass of his own estate, although his own name may be used in the formal conduct of the business, unless, in the case of creditors, this may lead to a false credit on the part of the husband. Redfield. C. J., in Richardson v. Merrill, 32 Vt. 27. Richardson v. Wait, 39 Vt. 585. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410. Caldwell v. Renfrew, 33 Vt. 213. Cardell v. Ryder, 35 Vt. 47. Albee v. Cole, 39 Vt. 319. Child v. Pearl, 43 Vt. 224. Curtis v. Hapgood, Id., 228.

54. — under settlement. Where the funds of a married woman were in the hands of a trustee under a settlement, to be retained and managed by him for her sole and separate use and free of all claim or right of control or disposition by her husband;—Held, that payments to the husband, unless by her express authority or consent, or unless such payments came to her use, could not be charged against her by the trustee. Tucker v. Bradley, 33 Vt. 324.

55. Mortgage to wife. The husband's covenant in a warranty deed cannot be set up as against the separate right of his wife in a mortgage of the same premises, previously executed to her. Bartlett v. Boyd, 34 Vt. 256.

56. — by wife. A mortgage, given by a married woman to secure the payment of money borrowed to pay towards the purchase of the mortgaged property, was held valid against the husband and the children, after her decease. Buchanan v. Chamberlin, cited in Frary v. Booth, 37 Vt. 84.

57. Power of management. The English rule in equity, that a feme covert has the same power of charging or appropriating her separate estate as if she were a feme sole, unless there be some restriction in the instrument by which she is invested with the estate, is adopted, to the extent, at least, that she may so charge it for her own benefit. Frary v. Booth, 37 Vt. 78.

58. A wife left her husband in Canada in 1847, and returned to her former home in Vermont and resided there ever after. In 1853 a farm was devised to her, but not expressed in the will to be for her separate use, which she controlled and managed without any interposition or claim by her husband, and without any contribution or offer of aid by him towards the support of the wife and children. Upon her sole credit, she purchased of the orator necessities for the support of herself and children, he relying on her right and interest in the property given her by the will, and, in 1857, she gave her notes for the amount and a mortgage upon the farm to secure them. In 1858 she obtained a divorce from her husband, and afterwards executed a mortgage of the same property to another party. On a bill by the first mortgagee to foreclose;—Held, that the conduct of the husband was a practical and continuing negation of any right or interest in the property by virtue of his marital rights, and an effectual appropriation of it to the sole and separate use of the wife, and gave her the right to make the mortgage;—and it was sustained as against the wife and the subsequent mortgagee. Ib.

59. In property held by a married woman to her sole and separate use, the husband has neither the equitable nor the legal right, as against the wife. Child v. Pearl, 43 Vt. 224.

60. The administrator of the wife can maintain any proper action at law against the husband for the enforcement of her rights of property. Roberts v. Lund, 45 Vt. 82. Caldwell v. Renfrew, 33 Vt. 213. Albee v. Cole, 39 Vt. 319.

61. The right to reduce to possession the wife's property that comes to the husband by virtue of the marital relation, does not attach to property set apart to her sole and separate use,—as, that which comes to her during coverture by inheritance, or distribution. (Act of 1867, No. 21.) White v. Waite, 47 Vt. 502.

62. A feme covert leased a cow, which was her separate property, and, during the running of the lease, sold the cow with her husband's consent,—the purchaser to take the cow from the lessee at the end of the lease, of which sale the lessee had no notice. The defendant attached the cow, while in the lessee's possession, upon a writ against the husband, and, in an action of trover by the purchaser, was held liable therefor. Richardson v. Wait, 39 Vt. 535.

63. Deposit in bank. A gift to a married woman, the niece of the donor, by a deposit made in a savings bank in the name of the donee, was held to be to the sole and separate use of the donee, and that it did not vest in the husband. Howard v. Savings Bank, 40 Vt. 597.

3. Disabilities.

64. At law. A promissory note given by a married woman is absolutely void at law. If chargeable upon her separate estate, this is only in equity, and commissioners upon her estate have no jurisdiction to allow it. Brown v. Sumner, 31 Vt. 671.

65. A married woman cannot authorize her husband to make a contract which will bind her at law; nor can she, though with her husband's consent, make a contract binding her at law, although the effect of the contract be to increase her estate after her death. Davis v. Burnham, 27 Vt. 562. Ingram v. Nedd, 44 Vt. 462.

66. The plaintiff agreed with the intestate and her then husband, to apply for a pension for her, on account of the services of her father in the American Revolution, and, if he succeeded, to receive a specified portion of it for his services. The pension was obtained and paid to her administrator soon after her death. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover at law against her estate, either the compensation agreed, nor upon a quantum meruit. Davis v. Burnham.

IV. DEALINGS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.

67. Ante-nuptial agreement. In case of a parol agreement between husband and wife before marriage, that her then personal property should remain to her sole and separate use, it will belong to her upon the husband's death, although it may have come into his possession during coverture, and been again put out on securities taken in the wife's name. Flowers v. Kent, Brayt. 238.

68. An ante-nuptial agreement, made between the parties without the intervention of trustees, was held to be incomplete and to constitute, at law, only an agreement to make a suitable marriage settlement, and that it was inoperative as to creditors of the husband. Bruce v. Thompson, 26 Vt. 741.

69. An ante-nuptial contract by which the wife is to retain the entire interest and control of her property, the husband to have no interest in or control over it, and the husband's subsequent receipt of such property, as agent of his wife, to be held for her use and benefit, operate as an abandonment and surrender to his wife of all such marital rights, as to the property, as he would otherwise have had; and, hence, the right of the wife to this property, as her sole and separate property, is perfect and absolute as against the husband. Albee v. Cole, 39 Vt. 319.

70. In such case, if he appropriate such property to himself, for the purpose of depriving his wife and children of it, it is a conversion in law and in fact. Id.

71. An agreement made by the husband, before marriage, that the property of his intended wife shall remain hers after marriage, prevents the vesting of the property in him by the subsequent marriage, and such agreement need not be in writing;—so held, and that the woman, after a divorce, could recover in trover for such property sold by her husband, during coverture, to the defendant, though without notice of her title. Child v. Pearl, 43 Vt. 224.

72. Post-nuptial dealings. The husband may surrender to the wife the right to her personal property, which the law gives him by reason of the marriage. This he may do by an ante-nuptial contract to that effect; also by allowing her to claim and control, for a long time, property given her, during coverture, as her separate property, and refraining to exercise the right which the law gives him to take from her such property and use it as his own, and by making gifts himself to the wife. Bent v. Bent, 44 Vt. 555.

73. A promissory note executed by a husband to his wife during coverture is void, and cannot be enforced even for the benefit and in the name of a third person, as bearer, to whom the husband has afterwards promised to pay it. Sweat v. Hall, 8 Vt. 187.

74. A woman seized in fee of several parcels of land, married, and then joined with her husband in a mortgage of a part of them to secure his debt. They afterwards sold the whole of the lands subject to this mortgage, which their grantee agreed to pay; and the balance of the purchase money, not exceeding the value of her reversionary interest in the lands, was secured to a trustee for her separate use. Held, that this was lawful and proper to be done, and furnished no ground for the allegation of a fraudulent intent. Burns v. Brown, 15 Vt. 174.

75. Upon the receipt of property by the husband from the wife, after marriage, if he shall, for sufficient reasons, contract with the wife that she may possess and enjoy separately such property bequeathed to, or inherited by her, or such as she may be the meritorious cause of acquiring, equity will uphold such post-nuptial agreement, where the claims of creditors will not be prejudiced by so doing. Pinney v. Fellows, 15 Vt. 525.

76. An agreement between husband and wife made during coverture, even in case of a gift from the husband, may be enforced by her in equity, if so far carried into effect as to separate the property from the residue of the husband's estate, and place it in the name or exclusive control of the wife. Cardell v. Ryder, 35 Vt. 47; and see Richardson v. Merrill, 32 Vt. 28.

77. Courts of equity, for many purposes, treat husband and wife as distinct persons, capable of contracting with each other and of having separate estates, debts and interests; and, as a general rule, whenever a contract would be good at law if made with trustees for the wife, such contract, when made with each other without the intervention of trustees, will be sustained in equity; and the husband may be held as trustee of the wife, and the wife be entitled to the privileges of a creditor of the husband. Barron v. Barron, 24 Vt. 375.

78. A post-nuptial agreement between husband and wife, without trustees, was sustained in equity in behalf of the wife against the husband and all others claiming under him, not creditors at the time of the agreement. Ib. 37 Vt. 89.

79. The husband is competent to act as trustee of his wife's property, as well as any other person, if duly appointed; and he will be sometimes regarded as such, with a view to the protection of her separate property against his creditors, without any appointment whatever. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410. 24 Vt. 392.

80. The intervention of a trustee is not necessary to the validity of a trust to the separate use of a married woman. Such estate may exist without the fact or fiction of a trustee, and be directly reached by execution out of the court of chancery. Barrett, J., in Frary v. Booth, 37 Vt. 88. Porter v. Bank of Rutland.

81. The legal title of a wife was recognized in a court of law, as existing against the effect of coverture, by reason of an understanding between husband and wife after marriage, rather implied than expressed, that certain property, which would otherwise belong to the husband, should remain and be the sole and separate property of the wife. Child v. Pearl, 49 Vt. 229; and see Bent v. Bent, 44 Vt. 555. Cald- well v. Renfrew, 33 Vt. 213. Richardson v. Wait, 39 Vt. 535. Curtis v. Hapgood, 48 Vt. 228.

82. Such legal title was allowed to prevail against the husband's creditors in Richardson v. Wait and Curtis v. Hapgood.

83. The expenditure of money and labor by a husband in the repairs and improvement of his wife's real estate during coverture, creates no debt against her or her estate; and dubitat, whether any equitable claim can arise in such case, which a court of equity would enforce. Pierce v. Pierce, 25 Vt. 511. White v. Hildreth, 32 Vt. 265. Webster v. Hildreth, 33 Vt. 457.

84. If a husband improve his wife's land without any agreement with her, through trustees or otherwise, that his money and labor expended thereon shall vest in him any interest in the land, or entitle him to any claim against or compensation from her property, he acquires thereby no right or claim to the land or to compensation which his creditors can reach by attachment, or by the aid of a court of equity. Webster v. Hildreth.

85. Nor can the lessee of the premises, in such case, who covenants to pay the rent to the wife, be held as trustee of the husband, although he joins with his wife in making the lease. White v. Hildreth, 32 Vt. 265.

86. Where a husband had suffered his wife to set up and carry on a millinery business in her own name, and at her own discretion, and not at his expense, and she made the purchases on her own credit;—Held, that he could not assign the goods to a creditor of his own who had knowledge of the manner in which the business was conducted, so as to create a lien thereon against the equitable creditors of the wife, who had supplied her with goods in said business. Partridge v. Stocker, 36 Vt. 108.

V. CONVEYANCES BY OR TO THEM.

87. Acknowledgment. A deed by husband and wife of the wife's lands, though not acknowledged by the wife separate from her husband, is good to convey the right of the husband, and furnishes a consideration for a note given therefor. Knappen v. Wooster, Brayt. 50.

88. Where the deed of a feme covert, executed in another state, of lands in this state, was not acknowledged by her according to the laws of this state, the court refused to receive the deed in evidence in an action of covenant brought against her after the death of her husband. Sumner v. Wentworth, 1 Tyl. 42.

89. Under former statutes, unless the acknowledgment by a wife of the deed of her lands was certified to have been "separately from her husband," that is, away from his actual presence, the deed was "utterly void," as to her. Pratt v. Battelle, 28 Vt. 685.

90. Covenants. A married woman is not liable upon her covenants in a deed. Sawyer v. Little, 4 Vt. 414.

91. Power of attorney. A married woman cannot, either separately, or jointly with her husband, execute a valid power of attorney to convey her lands. Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9.

92. Statute. Any conveyance by a husband of his interest, as husband, in the real estate of his wife—as, a mortgage—is invalid, unless made by deed executed by the wife jointly with the husband, as required by G. S. c. 71, s. 18; and this objection may be made by the husband himself. Peck v. Walton, 26 Vt. 82.

93. The statute prescribing that “a husband and wife may, by their joint deed, convey the real estate of the wife, &c.” (G. S. c. 65, s. 2), and other statutes authorizing, in special cases, a conveyance by the sole deed of the wife (G. S. c. 71), are enabling and not disabling or restrictive acts, and do not trench upon the scope of equitable jurisdiction and interposition, in reference to the rights, liabilities and duties of married women in respect to their property and contracts, which before existed. Frary v. Booth, 37 Vt. 78.

94. Peculiar estate. A conveyance to husband and wife vests in them a peculiar estate, not corresponding with a tenancy in common, nor fully with a joint tenancy, but approaching much nearer the latter than the former. They have but one seisin and title and each owns the whole, being accounted but one person in law; and, as in joint tenancy, the whole estate, upon the death of either, goes to the survivor. Brownson v. Hull, 16 Vt. 309. 38 Vt. 550. Davis v. Davis, 30 Vt. 440.

95. The statute of 1797, providing that a conveyance to two or more shall be construed to create a tenancy in common, and not a joint tenancy, unless, &c., does not affect conveyances to husband and wife. Brownson v. Hull.

96. Where a conveyance of lands was to husband and wife, and the same were set off on execution during the husband's life for his debts;—Held, that the wife, surviving him, could recover the lands in ejectment. Ib.

VI. SUITS BY, AGAINST, OR BETWEEN THEM.

97. Wife cannot sue alone. A married woman cannot bring a bill alone, nor by any person but her husband, as next friend, unless he is civiliter mortuus, or where she claims adverse to him;—in which case, he should be made defendant. Plea in abatement sustained for non-joinder of husband as orator. Bradley v. Emerson, 7 Vt. 369.

98. Her distributive share. An action at law does not lie to recover the distributive share of a married woman in an intestate estate. Howard v. Brown, 11 Vt. 361.

99. Joinder of wife as plaintiff. If the property or service of a wife be the meritorious cause of action, and an express promise of payment be made to her, she may be joined with her husband in an action to enforce payment; but, in such case, the joint action must be founded on the promise;—book account, or indebitatus assumpsit, in the name of both, will not lie. At the same time, the husband may, if he so elect, sue alone. Gay v. Rogers, 18 Vt. 342. 24 Vt. 91. 27 Vt. 19. 27 Vt. 582.

100. Where a woman before her marriage became surety for the defendant, and the plaintiff, after his marriage with her, paid the debt;—Held, that a suit for reimbursement was properly brought in the name of the husband alone. Little v. Keyes, 24 Vt. 118. In no case must the wife be joined, except where the cause of action would survive to her. Isham, J. Ib.

101. Under a deed to husband and wife for their lives and the life of the survivor of them, the husband may, without joining the wife, recover in ejectment for himself and wife to the extent of the interest of both. Park v. Pratt, 38 Vt. 545.

102. Husband and wife may join in an action for injury to a close which they own jointly, and a description of the premises as “the plaintiffs' close” is an allegation, in effect, that the close was theirs jointly. In such case, the allegation of matter of aggravation merely, although of injuries to the husband alone, does not make the declaration bad on motion in arrest. Armstrong v. Colby, 47 Vt. 359.

103. Husband and wife may sue jointly at law for the conversion of the wife's sole and separate chattels. White v. Waite, 47 Vt. 502.

104. Against wife as sole. In 1812, a husband, being a citizen of the United States, left this State and ever afterwards resided in Canada, leaving his wife here, for whom he had furnished no support, and she, in his absence, had transacted business as a feme sole, and, as such, upon her own credit, purchased of the plaintiff, in 1816, certain goods. Held, that she was not subject to a suit therefor, as a feme sole. Robinson v. Reynolds, 1 Aik. 174.

105. Limitations. A promise by a husband to pay a debt of the wife contracted before marriage, or part payment by him of such debt, does not, in a suit against the husband and wife, remove the bar of the statute of limitations. Powers v. Southgate, 15 Vt. 471.

106. To an action of book account against husband and wife, on an account against the wife before her marriage, the defense was the statute of limitations. Within the six years the wife, after marriage, had rendered services for the plaintiff for which he had given credit on the account, the same having been received, by express consent of both defendants, to apply in part payment of the account. Held, that no new promise could be thereby implied as against the wife, because she was incapable of contracting; and that no promise of the husband could be implied which would affect the rights of the wife; and that this action, based on the continuing liability of the wife, was barred. Farrar v. Bessey, 24 Vt. 89.

107. Ante-nuptial debt. A parol agreement of a husband to pay the ante-nuptial debt of his wife, cannot be enforced after her death. Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311.

108. His liability as husband for such debt could be enforced only by a joint action against the two during coverture, and ceases at her death. Ib.

109. This liability, as husband, to pay in that right, affords no consideration for a special promise to pay, but the debt and the parties remain as they were before, and the existing liability is not affected by the special promise. Ib. Russell v. Buck, 11 Vt. 166.

110. Wife's tort. Husband and wife are not jointly liable for the torts or frauds of the wife, where the substantive basis of the tort is the contract of the wife;—as, where by the false and fraudulent representations of the wife the plaintiffs were induced to sell and deliver goods to her. Woodward v. Barnes, 46 Vt. 332.

111. The mere wrongful detention of property by a wife is not her tort, but her husband's; but where she destroys the property, or consumes it, independently of her husband, this is a conversion by her, and an action lies therefor against both. Shaw v. Hallihan, 46 Vt. 389.

112. — crime. Under an indictment against a husband and wife charging them jointly with having in their possession certain burglar's tools with intent to use them for burglarious purposes, under G. S. c. 118, s. 8;—Held, that the possession had by the wife while her husband was with her was prima facie innocent, as under the coercion of her husband; but that she was responsible for her possession during her husband's absence, though such possession was by his command given before he left. State v. Potter, 42 Vt. 495.

113. Held, that such possession of the wife was also the possession of the husband during his absence, and such as to warrant a joint conviction, if he with her planned the burglary in which the tools were to be used, and he passed them to her for the purpose of committing the burglary, and she kept them and attempted to use them for that purpose, though in his absence. Ib.

114. Suits between them. In chancery, whenever the interests of husband and wife are conflicting, they may sue each other as if they were sole and unmarried. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

115. Partition of lands under the statute cannot be had between husband and wife; and a judgment of partition in such case, although upon their joint petition, is void. Howe v. Blanden, 21 Vt. 315.

VII. WITNESSES AND EVIDENCE.

116. On the trial of an appeal from an order of removal of a husband and wife, the man testified that he was lawfully married to the woman. Held, that the woman could not be admitted to testify that she had a former husband living, nor could that be proved by reputation. Poultney v. Fairhaven, Brayt. 185.

117. During coverture, the wife cannot be a witness where the husband has an interest; nor, after his death, can she testify to conversations which passed between them during coverture, which are to be kept inviolable as family confidential conversations,—as, to contradict the testimony which he gave on a former trial. Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 584.

118. A private conversation between husband and wife tending to prove the admission of a crime, but overheard by a witness in another room, is not a protected confidential communication. State v. Center, 35 Vt. 378.

119. The admissions of a wife, made after her marriage, in reference to business transacted by her before her marriage, are not admissible in evidence for the defendant in a suit brought by her husband. Churchill v. Smith, 16 Vt. 560.

120. Book account. The statute which authorizes each party to testify in the action of book account, does not make the wife of either party competent, not being herself a party. Carr v. Cornell, 4 Vt. 116. 18 Vt. 344.

121. Under the statute providing for the examination on oath of "all the parties" in an action of book account;—Held, that in such action, where husband and wife are both parties, the wife, as well as the husband, is a competent witness before the auditor. Gay v. Rogers, 18 Vt. 342. Andrus v. Foster, 17 Vt. 556.

122. In an action of book account by husband and wife to recover for services of the wife before marriage, the husband is a witness, as well as the wife; and in case of her decease after one trial, he may testify to what she testified to on that trial. Perry v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 390.

123. Former testimony. Where an action by husband and wife survived on the wife's death to, and was prosecuted by, her administrator;—Held, that her testimony given on a former trial could be proved. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

124. Probate appeal—Wife a party. Where a wife appealed from the probate of a will and her husband was joined with her in the appeal, she being an heir-at-law of the estate, but he being neither an heir, nor a legatee or devisee;—Held, that she was a competent witness on the trial of the appeal. Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 443; and see Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Lincoln, 29 Vt. 206.

125. Stat. 1852. (G. S. c. 36, s. 24.) "No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil suit or proceeding, at law or in equity, by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise." This statute does not remove the incompetency arising from a rule of policy, which forbids the husband and wife testifying for or against each other; and where the husband is living and a party to the suit, and the wife is not a party, she is not a competent witness. Peck, J., in Carpenter v. Moore, 43 Vt. 394; and see Sargeant v. Seward, 81 Vt. 509.

126. Thus, on a trial of a petition for a divorce, neither party can testify. Manchester v. Manchester, 24 Vt. 649. (Changed, in part, by Stat. 1870, No. 27. Stat. 1876, No. 77.)

127. Nor is the wife a witness for the husband in a common law suit, where he is a party. Sargeant v. Seward, 31 Vt. 509;—though he may be prosecuting as an administrator, having no other interest. Cram v. Cram, 33 Vt. 15. Davis v. Davis, 48 Vt. 502.

128. Nor is the wife a witness on the probate of a will where her husband is an heir to the estate, though he is not a party of record to the suit. Carpenter v. Moore, 43 Vt. 392.

129. Nor is the husband a witness, though not a party to the record, where the wife is directly interested in the event of the suit, though she is not a party to the record. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 47 Vt. 637.

130. But where the husband is not a party to the suit, either real or nominal, but interested only collaterally in the event of the suit, as by being bail for costs, or in like manner, the wife, though not a party, is not incompetent by reason of the marital relation. Peck, J., in Carpenter v. Moore, 43 Vt. 394.

131. Thus, a wife is a competent witness in a suit against an estate of which she is an heir, though her husband had signed the appeal bond with the administrator, and had given a bond to the administrator to indemnify him against any liability on account of the suit, the administrator having abandoned the defense which was made by the heirs in his name,—it not appearing that her testimony would violate any confidence between her and her husband. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Lincoln, 29 Vt. 206.

132. In a suit in favor of an infant, brought by his father and natural guardian, the wife of such guardian is a competent witness. The real party, in such case, is the infant, and the guardian, or prochein ami, is merely a manager or conductor of the suit for the infant. Bonett v. Stowell, 37 Vt. 258. See Brown v. Hull, 16 Vt. 673.

133. The widow of one who, when living, was either a party to or interested in the suit, is a competent witness, if her testimony does not involve the disclosure of matters of confidence between her and her deceased husband, nor affect his character. Smith v. Potter, 27 Vt. 304. Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 584.

134. The wife of the principal debtor, after his default and on a hearing before a commissioner upon a disclosure of the trustee, was held not to be a competent witness against the trustee. Brown v. Burrington, 36 Vt. 40.

135. A suit was discontinued by death of the defendant after he had fully testified, and the same claim was presented to commissioners of his estate, and an appeal taken. On trial of the appeal;—Held, that the testimony so given was proper evidence for the administrator, although by the death of such defendant his widow had become a competent witness, and testified. Mathewson v. Sargeant, 36 Vt. 142.

136. Where wife is agent. Under G. S. c. 36, s. 27, allowing a wife to testify in cases where her husband is a party when "the transaction was had and conducted by her as agent for her husband;"—Held, that she could not testify to a contract made by her for the hiring out of their minor son, without proof of authority from the husband. In what cases she may be treated as such agent, without proof of express authority, discussed. Orcutt v. Cook, 37 Vt. 515. See Town v. Lamphire, 37 Vt. 52.

137. Where a wife kept and made entries on her husband's books from memoranda kept by him;—Held, that she was not such "agent," as to be a witness for him to prove the state of the accounts and the loss of the book. Estabrooks v. Prentiss, 34 Vt. 457.

138. Under this statute, a wife is a witness for her husband in a business transaction conducted by her solely, and as his agent, although he "was generally at home and might have known in relation to it." Lunay v. Vantyne, 40 Vt. 501.

139. Where a man leaves his wife at home during his temporary absence, as for a day, without any special charge, or any other charge or agency than any married woman living and keeping house with her husband would have in such case, she is not such an agent of her husband as to be a witness for him, under the statute, as to matters transpiring during his absence. Bates v. Cilley, 47 Vt. 1.

INFANT.

- I. AGE;—DISABILITIES IN GENERAL.
- II. HIS CONTRACTS.
- III. HIS TORTS.
- IV. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.

I. AGE;—DISABILITIES IN GENERAL.

1. Age of majority. The age of majority of females in this State, fixed by the constitution as uniformly construed, and for every purpose, is eighteen years. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41. Young v. Davis, Brayt. 124.

2. Emancipation. The emancipation of an infant by his father, does not enlarge or affect the infant's capacity to make a contract; it only releases him from his father's control. Person v. Chase, 37 Vt. 647.

3. Confessions. The confessions of a minor are evidence against him, but should be weighed by the jury in reference to his age and understanding, and capacity to judge of his rights. Mather v. Clark, 2 Aik. 209.

4. Serving writ. An infant cannot be specially authorized to serve a writ, by the magistrate signing it. Harvey v. Hall, 22 Vt. 211.

5. But he may be specially deputed by the sheriff to serve a particular writ, under G. S. c. 12, s. 8. Barrett v. Seward, 22 Vt. 176. Poland, J., dissenting.

6. Defending suit. An infant is legally incapable of appearing for himself and defending his suit, or of appointing any attorney for such purpose. Starbird v. Moore, 21 Vt. 529. Somers v. Rogers, 26 Vt. 585.

7. Making will. An infant cannot, under Vermont statutes, make a will,—not even a soldier's will. Goodell v. Pike, 40 Vt. 319.

II. HIS CONTRACTS.

8. Void. A promise of marriage made by an infant is void. Pool v. Pratt, 1 D. Chip. 253.

9. Voidable. The tendency of modern decisions is, to hold the acts, deeds and contracts of an infant as voidable merely. Kellogg, J., in Person v. Chase, 37 Vt. 648. Bigelow v. Kinney, 3 Vt. 358.

10. A recognizance entered into by an infant is not void, but voidable only. Patchin v. Cromack, 13 Vt. 380.

11. A judgment against an infant is not void, but voidable. Barber v. Graves, 18 Vt. 290.

12. All contracts of an infant, except for necessities, whether executed or not executed, may be avoided by him, unless he has ratified them after arriving at full age. Abell v. Warren, 4 Vt. 149. Price v. Furman, 27 Vt. 268. Person v. Chase, 37 Vt. 647.

13. An absolute gift of chattels by an infant can be revoked or avoided by him, or by his administrator. Person v. Chase.

14. The plaintiff, an infant, agreed to work for the defendant one month for $15,—$5 to be paid in cash and $10 in fulled cloth of one F, for which the defendant was to give an order on F. The plaintiff performed the service, and the defendant afterwards paid him the $5 and gave him the order on F, which was not collected. Held, that the plaintiff could avoid the contract as to the order, and recover for his services on a quantum meruit, deducting the $5 received. Abell v. Warren, 4 Vt. 149.

15. An infant having executed a release to a proposed witness; but upon a secret agreement which left the witness still interested;—Held, that though the transaction was an attempted fraud upon the court, yet the infant was not bound by the release. Walker v. Ferrin, 4 Vt. 523.

16. An accord with satisfaction being but a contract, an infant is not bound thereby beyond the amount received. Bromley v. School District, 47 Vt. 381.

17. Conditions of avoidance. An infant may avoid an executory contract, although he has received the consideration; but if he has executed the contract on his part by the payment of money, or the delivery of property, or the rendering of services, he cannot disaffirm the contract and recover back what he has paid, without restoring to the other party what he has received from him. Farr v. Sumner, 12 Vt. 28. Taft v. Pike, 14 Vt. 405.

18. If an infant receive a deed of land and execute notes and a mortgage for the purchase money, he cannot avoid the notes, or mortgage, and yet claim under the deed. Weed v. Beebe, 21 Vt. 495. Bigelow v. Kinney, 3 Vt. 353. Richardson v. Boright, 9 Vt. 368.

19. Where a contract is avoided by an infant, he may recover back whatever he has paid or delivered on it. Price v. Furman, 27 Vt. 268.

20. In order to the avoidance and rescission of a contract by reason of infancy, the infant must offer to restore the consideration received, if it be in his possession and control; but if he cannot restore it, as, if he has disposed of it during his minority, he may still avoid the contract. Nor can it be objected to the offer to return the consideration received, that it has been injured, or depreciated in value. Ib. Wiser v. Lockwood, 42 Vt. 720.

21. Where an infant contracts to serve for a certain term, and quits before he has performed the whole service, he may, in the action of book account or general assumpsit, recover what, under all the circumstances, his services were worth, taking into consideration any disappointment, amounting to an injury, which the other party sustains by the avoiding of the contract; and if the other party was injured more than the services were worth, the infant can recover nothing. Thomas v. Dike, 11 Vt. 273. 27 Vt. 761. 31 Vt. 642. Hoxie v. Lincoln, 25 Vt. 206.

22. The plaintiff, an infant, agreed to work for the defendant until she should become of age, the defendant agreeing to clothe her, school her, and pay a certain sum at her majority. The defendant failed to clothe and school her, according to his contract, and by mutual consent she quit the defendant's service before her majority. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover what her services were worth, without any deduction for damage to the defendant for so leaving his service. Meeker v. Hurd, 31 Vt. 639.

23. The plaintiff, an infant, procured the defendant to sign a note for him, and, to induce the defendant to do so, turned out a stove, with leave to the defendant to take it when he pleased. Before any act of revocation, the defendant took the stove away. Held, in trespass therefor, that the defendant could justify by license, notwithstanding the plaintiff's infancy. Hoyt v. Chapin, 6 Vt. 42.

24. Becoming of age—Effect on contract. Every act of an infant, which is merely voidable, he must disaffirm in a reasonable time on becoming of full age, or he will be bound by it. Bigelow v. Kinney, 3 Vt. 353. Richardson v. Boright, 9 Vt. 368.

25. A person on becoming of age cannot affirm in part, and at the same time avoid in part, an entire contract made by him during his infancy. By affirming it in part he affirms it wholly. Morrill v. Aden, 19 Vt. 505.

26. Where an infant received a deed of land, paid part of the purchase money and gave an obligation to pay the balance, but no mortgage, and on being sued for the balance defeated the action by pleading his infancy, but still retained the land, and after full age conveyed the same to a third person who had knowledge of the facts;—Held, that the vendor had a lien upon the land, distinct from the ordinary vendor's lien, which he could enforce in equity for payment of such balance, without repaying or offering to repay what he had received. Weed v. Beebe, 21 Vt. 495.

27. The plaintiff, while a minor, contracted to labor for the defendant for one year, but left his service, without cause, before the expiration of the year but about a month after he became of age. Held, that such continuance in service after full age was a ratification of the entire contract, and that he could not recover for his services. Forsyth v. Hastings, 27 Vt. 646.

28. An infant lessee, becoming of age before the expiration of his term, continued to occupy the premises to the end of the term. Held, that this was a ratification of the tenancy, and bound him to the provisions of the lease. Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 465.

29. An infant widow, entitled to dower in an estate, conveyed all her interest in the estate by a quit-claim deed to an heir of the estate, and received $100 as consideration therefor. After she became of age, she neither affirmed nor revoked said deed, but prosecuted her suit for her share in the estate, and never offered, nor had the ability, to return the consideration received for the deed. Held, that her right to recover was not affected by the deed. Wiser v. Lockwood, 42 Vt. 720.

30. Infant husband. A husband, although an infant, is equally liable with his wife for her debts contracted before marriage. Cole v. Seeley, 25 Vt. 220.

31. Necessaries. Whether articles furnished to an infant are of a name and quality coming within the denomination of necessaries, is exclusively a question of law; but the jury are to judge to what extent the articles of that denomination were necessary in the particular case. Bent v. Manning, 10 Vt. 225.

32. It is indeed questionable, whether our courts might not now consider money, to a certain extent, necessary to be furnished to an infant, under certain circumstances. Redfield, J. Ib.

33. Under ordinary circumstances, a course of collegiate education is not necessaries, for which an infant is chargeable; otherwise, as to a good common school education. Middlebury College v. Chandler, 16 Vt. 683.

34. The promissory note of an infant, given for necessaries, will bind him, if the circumstances be such that the consideration may be inquired into; as, if suit upon it be brought by the original payee. Bradley v. Pratt, 23 Vt. 378.

35. The defendant, an infant, being indebted to A for necessaries, gave his note therefor, by A's request, to the plaintiff, to whom A was indebted. To an action on the note the defendant pleaded his infancy;—replication, that the note was given for necessaries;—judgment for the plaintiff, upon the above facts, for the amount of the note and interest. Ib.

36. There is no general rule exempting infants from the payment of interest on their overdue debts; and interest was so allowed. Id., overruling dictum contra in Taft v. Pike, 14 Vt. 405.

37. In an action against an infant to recover for services and disbursements, as his attorney, in a suit brought by him;—Held, that although a lawsuit might be necessary for an infant, prima facie it was not; and that in this, as in all cases, the infancy being a prima facie defense, the burden is on the plaintiff to rebut the defense by proof that the contract was for necessities. Thrall v. Wright, 38 Vt. 494.

38. An infant is liable, as trustee, for an indebtedness to the principal debtor for necessities. Wilder v. Eldridge, 17 Vt. 226. Scotfield v. White, 29 Vt. 330.

39. An infant, being a single woman, contracted a debt for necessities, and afterwards married an infant. Both were sued and service was made upon the husband only, there being a non est return as to the wife. Held, that the husband was liable in the action. Cole v. Seeley, 25 Vt. 230.

III. HIS TORTS.

40. An infant is liable in an action ex delicto for an actual and willful fraud, only in cases in which the form of action does not suppose that a contract has existed; but where the gravamen of the fraud consists in a transaction which really originated in contract, the plea of infancy is a good defense. Kellogg, J., in Gilson v. Spear, 38 Vt. 315.

41. Held, that to an action on the case for deceit in the sale of a horse, by fraudulently concealing the unsoundness of the horse and falsely affirming that the horse was sound, a plea of infancy was a good defense, though the plaintiff offered to return the horse. Id., 311.

42. So, for a false and deceitful warranty, infancy is a defense, whatever be the form of action. West v. Moore, 14 Vt. 447. Morrill v. Aden, 19 Vt. 505.

43. The defendant, an infant, hired the plaintiff's horse to go to B (23 miles), and back the same day. He returned by a circuitous route, nearly doubling the distance, stopping on the way from 8 o'clock in the evening until 4 o'clock the next morning, and leaving the horse exposed during the whole night without shelter or covering, and returned the morning following the hiring. From the overdriving and exposure the horse died. Held, that this was a departure from the object of the bailment and amounted to a conversion of the property, and that the defendant was liable in trover therefor, as much as if he had taken the horse in the first instance without permission. But (by Redfield, J.), if the defendant had kept within the terms of the bailment, his infancy would have protected him, whether he neglected to take proper care of the horse, or to drive him moderately. Towne v. Wiley, 23 Vt. 355.

44. Where property is bailed to a minor, and he uses it for a different purpose from that for which it was bailed, the bailment is thereby determined, and he is liable in trover. Green v. Sperry, 16 Vt. 390; and see Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 465.

45. An infant is answerable, civiliter, for injuries committed by him—as a trespass—although done by command of his father. Humphrey v. Douglass, 10 Vt. 71.

46. An action of assumpsit for money had and received lies against an infant for money taken by him tortiously—as where he embezzles or steals it; and in such action, a debt due the infant may be attached by trustee process. Elwell v. Martin, 32 Vt. 217.

47. Breach of trust. A breach of his trust by an executor is not protected by his infancy. Loop v. Loop, 1 Vt. 177.

48. Trustee. An infant may be held chargeable as trustee for specific goods and chattels of the principal debtor in his hands. Wilder v. Eldridge, 17 Vt. 226. Scotfield v. White, 29 Vt. 330.

See NEGLIGENCE, 19-21.

IV. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.

49. Suit by infant—Next friend. An infant may, in this State, sue by prochein ami, although he has a guardian. Thomas v. Dike, 11 Vt. 273.

50. In a bastardy prosecution by a minor, commenced not by guardian or next friend, the county court, after a motion to dismiss for this cause, allowed a prochein ami to enter and prosecute. Held correct. Coomes v. Knapp, 11 Vt. 543.

51. A prochein ami, or guardian by whom a suit in behalf of an infant is prosecuted, is merely a manager or conductor of the suit, and is not a party for any purpose. The infant is the real party. Thus, a petition to vacate a judgment in such case need not be served on the next friend or guardian, nor need he be named in it. Brown v. Hull, 16 Vt. 678.

52. So, the wife of the next friend or guardian may be a witness for the infant plaintiff. Bonett v. Stowell, 37 Vt. 258.

53. So, under the statute requiring a recognition for costs "by some person other than the plaintiff," the prochein ami may recognize. Duffy v. Pinard, 41 Vt. 297.

54. Suit against—Guardian. If an infant be sued without notice to his guardian, the writ will not for this cause abate, but the court will order the guardian to be cited in. Potter v. Wright, Brayt. 21. 11 Vt. 547.

55. It is as necessary that an infant summoned as trustee should defend by guardian, as in other cases. Wilder v. Eldridge 17 Vt. 226.

56. An infant was summoned as trustee, but no guardian was cited in, nor was any appointed. He made disclosure after he became of age, by which it appeared that after service of the process, but during his minority, he had restored to the principal debtor the property which he held in trust. Held, that he was not chargeable as trustee. Ib.

57. Where an infant becomes party to a trustee process as claimant, it seems that he should be regarded as a party defending rather than a party suing, or prosecuting, and should appear by guardian, and not by prochein ami. Keeler v. Fassett, 21 Vt. 539.

58. Attorney—Error. An infant is legally incapable of appearing for himself and defending his suit in court, or of appointing an attorney to appear and defend for him. Any such appearance, or defense, amounts to nothing in contemplation of law. A judgment against him in such case, in the higher courts, will be corrected by writ of error; if before a justice, it will be set aside on audita querela. Starbird v. Moore, 21 Vt. 529.

59. A rule of court was, that "all dilatory pleas shall be filed on or before the third day of the term at which the action is entered." As applied to the case of an infant defendant, the time prescribed by the rule dates from the appointment of a guardian ad litem to defend; for an infant is incapable of appearing by himself, or of appointing an attorney. Fall River Foundry Co. v. Doty, 42 Vt. 412.

60. An infant cannot appear and defend by attorney, and a judgment rendered against him, in such case, will be reversed on writ of error. If there are several defendants, all should join in the writ of error, and the judgment will be reversed as to all, the judgment being entire. Somers v. Rogers, 26 Vt. 585. 14 Vt. 77.

61. A judgment rendered against an infant who appears by attorney, is not void, but voidable. On an appeal from such a judgment by the infant defendant, the county court refused to dismiss the appeal on the motion of his guardian ad litem. Held correct. Barber v. Graves, 18 Vt. 290.

62. On a writ of error to reverse a judgment for the cause of infancy, the court only vacates the judgment. It does not set aside the proceedings altogether, but remands the cause for further proceedings. Ib.

63. Audita querela. An infant, sued before a justice, appeared and defended by an attorney and appealed from the judgment against him, but became of age while the cause was pending in the county court. The attorney withdrew his appearance, and judgment was rendered against the defendant by default. Held, that such judgment could not be set aside on audita querela, because the party, after becoming of age, had suitable opportunity to appear and make defense. Blackmer v. Dow, 18 Vt. 298.

64. A justice judgment against an infant will not be set aside, on audita querela, on account of his infancy, where his father and natural guardian was sued jointly with him, and appeared and defended the suit. Wrisley v. Kenyon, 28 Vt. 5. Priest v. Hamilton, 2 Tyl. 50.

65. Notice to guardian. An infant is bound by the decree of the probate court in the distribution of an estate, where his guardian was notified and defended. Robinson v. Swift, 3 Vt. 288. 28 Vt. 7.

66. Joinder of infant defendant. In an action upon a joint contract of two or more, where one is an infant, the infant need not be joined. But if joined, and his infancy be urged in defense, the jury may find a verdict for the infant and against the others, or the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to him, and proceed as to the others. Allen v. Butler, 9 Vt. 122.

67. Pleading and evidence. Infancy may be given in evidence under the general issue in assumpsit. Kimball v. Lamson, 2 Vt. 188. This rule is not changed by G. S. c. 83, s. 15. Thrall v. Wright, 38 Vt. 494.

INJUNCTION.

1. Granting injunction. Parties within the jurisdiction of the court of chancery may be enjoined from doing those acts, in another State, which would subject them to an injunction if done in this State. Vt. & Canada R. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., before Royce, Chancellor. 46 Vt. 792.

2. In a proper case, it is entirely competent for a court of chancery to restrain a party within the jurisdiction of this State, from pursuing an action commenced in a court of law in a sister State; but, from courtesy and policy, this power should not be exercised where such court of law has a concurrent jurisdiction which it first assumed and exercised over the subject matter, unless there be some peculiar equitable ground for so doing. The mere preference of the orator to have the matter determined by his own domestic tribunal, is not a sufficient ground for such interference. Bank of Bellows Falls v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 28 Vt. 470.

3. The inability of the court to enforce an injunction, is a good reason for not granting it; as, where the defendant resides out of the State and has no property within it subject to sequestration. Ib.

4. The ground on which courts of equity intervene, either by injunction or by the appointment of a receiver, in cases where there are conflicting claims as to the right and possession of property, is, that it seems necessary in order to the preservation of the property which is the subject matter of the litigation, pending the controversy. Cheever v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 39 Vt. 653, before Barrett, Chancellor.

5. Where the right of possession is in litigation, a court of equity will not, by preliminary injunction, transfer possession from one party to the other. Ib.

6. Injunction damages. If, upon granting an injunction, the chancellor makes no order as to the damages occasioned thereby, and requires no bond to secure them, no damages are recoverable. Sturges v. Knapp, 38 Vt. 486.

7. If, upon granting an injunction, the chancellor makes an order for the payment of the damages occasioned thereby, the court of chancery, in the absence of all statutory provisions or rules on the subject, has full power to ascertain the damages by a reference, though an injunction bond be given. The proceedings are based upon the order, and not upon the bond. Ib.

8. Where an injunction bond was given, and there was no evidence of the character and extent of the order as to securing the damages, outside the terms of the bond;—Held (Poland and Pierpoint, J. J., dissenting), that the court of chancery could not, upon dissolution of the injunction, award damages in excess of the penalty of the bond. Ib.

9. The appointment of a receiver, on the granting of an injunction, does not deprive a party of his damages occasioned by the injunction during the continuance of the receivership, but the net receipts of the receiver should be applied in reduction of the damages. Ib.

10. The trustees of the bondholders of a railroad company leased the road. Certain bondholders, for themselves and others who might join, brought a bill against the trustees and lessee to set aside the lease, and procured an injunction and the appointment of a receiver. The injunction was afterwards dissolved and possession restored. On the assessment of injunction damages;—Held, that the lessee was thereby released from all obligation to pay rents during the receivership, and, therefore, the orators should be charged with the loss thereof, to be accounted for by the trustees to those bondholders who did not participate in the suit. Ib.

11. Sundry items claimed as damages occasioned by an injunction of a railroad company, considered. Ib.

12. Counsel fees in resisting an application for an injunction, and like fees for defending the suit upon its merits, are not allowable as damages on the dissolution of the injunction. Ib.

13. On a former appeal from chancery, the amount of the liability of the orators for certain injunction damages was fixed by the decision at $30,000, being the penalty of the injunction bond, and a mandate was issued to the court of chancery to enter a decree accordingly. The mandate not having ordered any interest to be computed in the meantime on such damages;—Held, that the decree afterwards rendered for that sum, with interest from the date of that decree, was according to the mandate, and it was affirmed. Sturges v. Knapp, 36 Vt. 439.

14. Where a decree in chancery ordered the payment to the defendants of a certain sum as injunction damages, with interest from the date of the decree, and the defendants appealed for the refusal of the court to allow interest prior to that date;—Held, on an affirmance of the decree, that the payment of the decree had been prevented by the act of the defendants in appealing, and that interest should be computed only from the time that the cause should thereafter reach the court of chancery. Ib.; and that it reached the court of chancery at the next regular term after the mandate had been received by the clerk of the court. S. C., 38 Vt. 540.

15. Injunction must be obeyed. Although an injunction be irregularly obtained, it is still an order of the court, and must be discharged before it can be disobeyed; and mere impropriety in using the injunction, or a delay beyond the next term of the court to have the subpoena served, does not operate as a dissolution or discharge of the injunction. Hove v. Willard, 40 Vt. 654.

16. A writ of injunction, until dissolved, must be obeyed, no matter how unreasonable in its terms or unjust in its operation. Stimpson v. Putnam, 41 Vt. 288, in chancery. Steele, Chancellor.

17. Process to enforce. A proceeding for contempt in the violation of an injunction is not only to punish the guilty party, but also, and perhaps chiefly, to cause restitution to the party injured. Ib.

18. In this case, the injunction was against the removal of certain machinery intended and understood to have been embraced in a mortgage; and the chancellor held, that it was not necessary, in this proceeding for a contempt, that the mortgage should be reformed; and ordered the payment of damages to the petitioner, and a fine to the State, to be enforced by imprisonment. Ib.

19. Also, upon an affidavit that the petitioner had good reason to believe and did believe that the defendant was about to abscond and remove from the State—in which case the petitioner would be remediless—the process to show cause was issued as an attachment against the body. Ib.

20. Sundry orders and processes set out in haec verba. Ib.

21. Notice to the defendant's solicitor, of which the defendant has no knowledge, that an injunction will be applied for, on a day named, to restrain the defendant from doing a certain act, will not subject the defendant to process of contempt for doing the act before the day named, though the injunction be granted according to such notice; and quære, whether one can be guilty of violating an injunction in anticipation. Greenleaf v. Leach, 20 Vt. 281.

22. Appeal. No appeal lies from a final order of the court of chancery, declaring a party in contempt for disobeying an injunction. Vilas v. Burton, 27 Vt. 56.

23. Court protects its officers. Where the regularity or validity of the processes of the court of chancery is brought in question, the court always interferes to vindicate its officers from suits in other courts, and exercises its discretion, in such cases, where its officers are charged with irregularity or excess of their own, in executing the process of the court. A resort to a law court, in such cases, may be treated as a contempt. Peck v. Crane, 25 Vt. 146.

24. Pending a cause in chancery, a writ of sequestration was issued, as an attachment under the statute (G. S. c. 29, s. 24), and was served by the sheriff, who was sued for alleged misconduct in executing the writ; whereupon an injunction was issued in the main suit, to restrain the suit at law against the sheriff, and from the granting of such injunction an appeal was taken. Held, (1), that an appeal lay in such case; (2), that, in order to granting the injunction, it was not necessary that a bill should have been first filed for that purpose; (3), that the writ, although given by statute, should be treated like other writs of sequestration issued under the general powers of the court, and to aid the court in carrying into effect its final decrees; (4), that the validity of the writ, and the regularity of its execution, were to be judged of by the court of chancery, and all redress at law must be under the permission of the court of chancery; (5), that the sheriff, while serving the process of the court, became its officer and was entitled to its protection, as if specially appointed; and the supreme court refused to vacate the preliminary injunction, and remanded the case. Ib.

25. Receivers. Whenever the court of chancery has appointed a receiver or manager, his possession is the possession of the court for the benefit of the parties to the suit, and may not be disturbed without leave of the court. Whoever disturbs such possession is held guilty of a contempt, and liable to be imprisoned for such contempt. If any person claims a right paramount to that of the receiver, or manager, he must, before he presumes to take any steps of his own motion, apply to the court of chancery for leave to assert his right against the receiver or manager. Vt. & Canada R. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., before Royce, Chancellor, 46 Vt. 792.

26. The petitioner, the Central Vermont Railroad Company, a corporation, was, by appointment of the court of chancery, receiver and manager of the Vt. Central R. Co. and of the Vt. & Canada R. Co. In the course of business, large amounts due the petitioner from the earnings of these two roads had accumulated in the hands of corporations and parties in other States. The Vt. & Canada R. Co. brought suit in Massachusetts against the trustees of the Vt. Central R. Co., and attached such funds by trustee process. The petitioner prayed for an order enjoining the Vt. & Canada R. Co. from prosecuting said suit and for a release of such attachment. The order was granted. Ib.

INNKEEPER.

1. Definition. Keeping a house openly for the entertainment and accommodation of travelers and others for a reward, is keeping an inn, whether licensed or not, and whether or not liquors or wines are sold there. State v. Stone, 6 Vt. 295.

2. Statutes. Under former statutes, now repealed, no person could keep an inn or house of entertainment, unless nominated by the town authorities and licensed by the court. He was otherwise subject to indictment, if he kept a house of entertainment for travelers, though he kept no spirits or wine, and though he had license to keep a victualing house, and though the town authorities had refused to approbate a sufficient number of innkeepers to accommodate the public. Ib.

3. Under former statutes, now repealed, limiting the amount of recovery, in an action on book or verbal contract, to $1.50 for liquors sold by an innkeeper;—Held, that any excess beyond that sum was not recoverable by application upon the account of the other party, though such was the mutual expectation of the parties in their dealings. Wood v. Barney, 2 Vt. 369. Peters v. Slack, 18 Vt. 590.

4. Relation of guest and innkeeper, and measure of innkeeper's liability. The liability of an innkeeper for the safe keeping of the goods of his guest, is more severe than that of any other bailee, with the single exception of common carriers. He is not responsible to the same extent as common carriers, but the loss of goods, while at the inn, will be presumptive evidence of negligence on the part of the innkeeper or his domestics. He may, if he can, repel such presumption, and show that there was no negligence whatever, and that the loss was occasioned by inevitable casualty or superior force. McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316. Merritt v. Claghorn, 23 Vt. 177.

5. While the plaintiff was a guest at the defendant's inn, his horses were destroyed by the burning of the barn where they were stabled—the fire being the work of an incendiary, as supposed. It was conceded, that "there was no negligence, in point of fact, in the defendant or his servants in the care of the barn and property." Held, that the plaintiff could not recover. Merritt v. Claghorn.

6. An innkeeper may, by special contract, increase or restrict his general responsibility for the goods of his guest. McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316.

7. A traveler who puts up his horse with its equipage, as carriage, harness, &c., at an inn, becomes a guest quoad the horse and its equipage, and the innkeeper is responsible therefor as innkeeper, although the traveler may take his meals and lodge elsewhere; and, quære, whether this responsibility in such case extends to the traveler's luggage, or other property, left with the innkeeper at the same time. Ib. (8. C., 28 Vt. 387.)

8. Where one becomes a guest at an inn by leaving his horse for keep, and takes a room in the inn and a part of his meals and lodgings there, the relation continues during the personal absence of the guest while taking his meals and lodging elsewhere, but retaining his room and intending to return to the inn. In such case;—Held, that the innkeeper would be responsible, as such, for the safe keeping of a bag of gold delivered to him at the inn by the guest, at evening, when starting out to lodge elsewhere, but intending to return to the inn the next morning. Ib.

9. Although an innkeeper may, under peculiar circumstances, be excused for the loss of the goods of his guest, when stolen "by a burglarious entry from without," yet this can be only by proof of some of the circumstances ordinarily attending the breaking of a house securely fastened, and that it was without any fault or negligence on his part. Ib.

10. The plaintiff put up at the defendant's inn, with his horse, wagon, &c. After some days' stay as a guest, the plaintiff left with the defendant a bag of gold for safe keeping over night, and immediately left the inn, then intending to terminate his personal stay at the inn, and not to return as a personal guest, but did not take away the horse, wagon, and their appendages. Held, that, as to the bag of gold, the relation of innkeeper and guest did not exist, and that the defendant was not liable, as innkeeper, for the loss thereof, the jury having found that the delivery of the bag of gold was a distinct transaction, disconnected in consideration, and in fact, from the delivery and keeping of the horse. McDaniels v. Robinson, 28 Vt. 387.

11. The plaintiff, a minor, went with his father, with his father's horse and wagon, to the defendant's inn to attend the trial there of a suit brought by the defendant against the father. On their arrival, the horse and wagon were delivered to the defendant's servant to be put up and taken care of, and the plaintiff and his father entered the inn where the defendant was in charge, and took off their overcoats in the presence of the defendant. In due time, the father called for dinner for himself and the plaintiff, which was had, and they remained until evening, when the bill for the entertainment and feed of themselves and horse was paid by the father, and they left. Held, that the relation of guest and innkeeper was thereby created between the plaintiff and defendant. Read v. Amidon, 41 Vt. 15.

12. Such guest, on entering the inn, took off his overcoat and gloves, not delivering them to the innkeeper, nor to any of his servants, nor calling his attention to them; but the guest folded up his coat and laid it on a bench in the room, with his gloves under the coat. In an action against the innkeeper for the loss of the gloves;—Held, that it was a question for the jury, whether the plaintiff was so careless in his disposition of the gloves, as to exonerate the innkeeper. Ib.

A guest at an inn is bound to use reasonable care and prudence in respect to the safety of his goods, so as not to expose them to unnecessary danger of loss. Ib.

INSANE PERSON.

1. His torts. A lunatic is liable, civilly, for his tort. In trover against the defendant for killing an ox which the plaintiff had bailed to him;—Held, that it was no defense that the defendant was insane when he killed the ox, and that the plaintiff knew him to be insane when he bailed the ox to him. Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 499.

NEGLIGENCE, 19-21.

2. Divorce. Insanity is a full defense for all acts which by the statute are grounds of granting a divorce; as, adultery. Nichols v. Nichols, 31 Vt. 338.

3. Contracts. An administrator may show the insanity of his intestate, in avoidance of his contract. Lazell v. Pinnick, 1 Tyl. 247.

4. If one make a contract with a lunatic and under it furnish him money and render services, which, however, prove of no benefit to him, no recovery can be had of him therefor, although the party acted in good faith, supposing him to be sane, provided the party was put upon inquiry and acted negligently. Lincoln v. Buckmaster, 32 Vt. 652.

5. The defendant, being under guardianship as an insane person, on account of some mismanagement of his property, hired the plaintiff to do his housework, and she did it for a year. The defendant managed his farm, property and household affairs without interference of his guardian, who recognized this contract. After the guardian's death, the plaintiff brought suit for her labor. Held, that the defendant was liable. Blairdell v. Holmes, 48 Vt. 492.

6. Insurance. The insured took his own life by shooting himself. His policy of life insurance had a proviso that it should "be void and of no effect" if he "shall commit suicide." In an action by his administrator upon the policy, the supreme court declared the law as follows: "To warrant a recovery, it is not enough for the jury to find that the mind of the deceased was so impaired that he was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, but they must be satisfied that his mind was so overthrown that he had no power to resist the insane impulse to take his life, so that the act was the direct and immediate consequence and result of his insanity; in short, that the taking of his life was an insane act, in respect to which his reason was powerless." Hathaway v. National Life Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335. INSURANCE, 18.

7. Marriage. Marriages of lunatics and idiots, and other marriages not declared to be absolutely void by statute, were intended to be valid unless avoided by the process provided by the statute, although, when so avoided, they would be void from the beginning. (G. S. c. 70, ss. 1-2-3.) Wiser v. Lockwood, 42 Vt. 720.

8. A female infant was married to a man who was at the time insane, and ever remained so until his death, leaving her surviving. They had cohabited as husband and wife. Held, that she was entitled to a share in his estate as his widow. Ib.

9. Domicile. The guardian of an insane person may appoint the place of his ward's residence, and change and determine his domicile. Anderson v. Anderson, 42 Vt. 350.

10. By G. S. c. 48, s. 17, administration of the estate of an inhabitant of this State shall be granted, and his estate settled, "in the probate district in which he shall have resided at the time of his death." A resided with his family and did business in Woodstock, and was there taken insane, and was sent to the insane asylum at Brattleboro, in June, 1866, when a guardian was appointed, who proceeded to settle up the ward's affairs at Woodstock, and at the request of the ward's wife, removed the family to Montpelier, in another probate district, to reside for an indefinite time, or until the ward should die or recover, taking with the family the ward's furniture and effects, and the family resided in Montpelier until the death of the ward in August 1868,—the guardian in the meantime supporting the ward in the asylum. Administration of the ward's estate was granted in the probate district embracing Montpelier, and, on appeal to the county court, the decree of the probate court was affirmed. Held, that the personal presence of the ward at Montpelier was not necessary to constitute his domicile there, under the circumstances, and the judgment of the county court was affirmed. Ib.

11. Inquisition—Guardianship. An inquisition and adjudication of lunacy is only presumptive evidence of the fact, and, on an appeal, the fact may be traversed and tried by a jury. Shumway v. Shumway, 2 Vt. 339.

12. It is not a bar to the allowance of a will, that it was made after the testator had been adjudged insane upon an inquisition, and while he was under guardianship, as such. Robinson v. Robinson, 39 Vt. 267.

13. Where a resident of this State was taken to an inebriate asylum in Massachusetts, and a citizen of that State was there appointed his guardian;—Held, that that did not of itself put an end to an agency in behalf of such person, before existing, as respects property in this State not given into the custody of the guardian; since it does not follow from an adjudication of insanity, that the insanity is necessarily of that character which disqualifies the person from entering into a valid contract. Motley v. Head, 43 Vt. 633.

14. One under guardianship as an insane person, applied for a discharge, and an examination was had, but the report of the examining justices was not made until after the death of the ward. Upon the filing of the report, the probate court decreed that the guardianship be discharged. Held, that the whole proceedings after the death were void. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

15. Exceptions do not lie to the decision of the county court in proceedings under the act of 1870, No. 33, entitled "An act for the relief of the families of insane persons." Stiles v. Windsor, 45 Vt. 520.

16. Action. Plea in abatement, that the plaintiff was insane and was under guardianship;—Held sufficient. Collard v. Crane, Brayt. 18.

17. A suit in behalf of an insane person, under guardianship, must be brought by the guardian in behalf of his ward. Holden v. Scanlin, 30 Vt. 177. Lincoln v. Thrall, 34 Vt. 110.

INSOLVENCY.

1. Effect of foreign insolvent laws. A discharge, under the insolvent acts of another State, is no bar to an action in this State upon the same contract, though such acts were in existence when the contract was made, and both parties were then, and at the time of such discharge, and are now, citizens of such other State—such acts being unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of contracts. Herring v. Selding, 2 Aik. 12. Perdy v. Walker, Brayt. 37.

2. The plaintiff, resident in Vermont, through his factors in New York sold goods there to the defendant, resident in Massachusetts, and took the defendant's note therefor payable in New York. Held, that the plaintiff was not affected by insolvent proceedings against the defendant in Massachusetts to which the plaintiff had not assented—as, by the presentation of his claim to the commissioners for allowance. Blackman v. Green, 24 Vt. 17.

3. A promissory note was executed in Canada, the maker and payee being both residents of Canada, and was made payable generally. The maker went into bankruptcy in Canada, and the note was there presented and allowed in bankruptcy. Afterwards, but before the bankrupt's discharge, and after maturity of the note, it was indorsed in this State for value to the plaintiff, a resident of this State, who was ignorant of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and of any defense to the note. Held, that the final discharge of the bankrupt was a defense to the note in the hands of the plaintiff. Peck v. Hibbard, 26 Vt. 698.

4. The defendant became indebted to the plaintiff on a contract made in Vermont and to be there performed, both being then residents of Vermont. Afterwards both became and remained resident citizens of Massachusetts, and there the plaintiff obtained a judgment for his debt. Afterwards he brought suit in Vermont on said judgment by attachment of the defendant's property therein, pending which, proceedings in insolvency were instituted in Massachusetts, under which the defendant got his discharge,—the insolvent act providing for the discharge of all provable debts “due to any person resident in Massachusetts at the time of the first publication of notice,” &c. Held, that whether the debt be treated as the original indebtedness, or the judgment, it was discharged by the insolvency proceedings in Massachusetts, and that they were a bar to this action. Hall v. Winchell, 88 Vt. 588.

5. The assignee of an insolvent under the insolvent laws of another State, cannot, in this State, maintain an action in his own name to recover a non-negotiable debt due the insolvent, although the statutes of that State expressly provide that he may do so, and although all the parties reside there. Fisk v. Brackett, 32 Vt. 798; and see Pickering v. Fisk, 6 Vt. 102.

INSURANCE.

I. FIRE INSURANCE.

II. LIFE INSURANCE.

I. FIRE INSURANCE.

1. The representation. Where a fact material to the risk is suppressed in the application for a policy of fire insurance, the receipt of subsequent premiums, without knowledge of the suppressed fact, does not validate the policy. Held, that such knowledge is not necessarily proved by the fact that an agent of the insurance company visited the premises, under a resolution appointing him “to go and examine the factories as to their safety and internal construction.” Allen v. Vt. Mutual Ins. Co., 12 Vt. 366.

2. In contracts of insurance, parol representations or concealments, materially affecting the risk, may avoid the policy, when in other contracts like representations would not have a like effect. But in regard to other incidents of a contract of insurance, the same rules of construction apply as to other contracts. Farmers' M. F. Ins. Co. v. Marshall, 29 Vt. 23.

3. By the charter of the Vt. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. it was provided, that when the insured had any less interest than a fee simple in the buildings, &c., insured, the policy should be void unless the true title was expressed in the application. In this case, the insured had an equitable fee simple in the property, but by a deed defective as a formal conveyance of legal title. In his application he represented the property generally as “his.” Held (1), that such equitable title was as much an insurable interest as a strictly legal title; (2), that it was truly represented in the application as “his,” meaning a fee simple; (3), that the “less estate,” as expressed in the charter, meant an estate of less duration than a fee simple,—as, an estate for life, for years, &c. Swift v. Vt. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 18 Vt. 305.

4. A policy of insurance provided that, “if the interest or property insured be leasehold, or that of mortgage, or any other interest not in fee simple in case of real estate, or absolute as to personal property, such must be made known to this company and expressed in the policy." In an insurance by two, whose interests combined made up the whole interest;—Held, that it was not necessary that the interest of each in the property should be defined. Rankin v. Andes Ins. Co., 47 Vt. 144.

5. Alienation. Where a policy of fire insurance was, by its terms, made void if the property should be "alienated by sale or otherwise," and the insured executed a conveyance and took a reconveyance of the title simultaneously, leaving, by a construction of both instruments as one, a mere contingent interest in the first grantee, or naked right to purchase and appropriate the property on payment of a certain sum at a certain time, unaccompanied by possession or right of possession in the meantime;—Held, that this was not such an alienation as avoided the policy. Tittlemore v. Vt. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 20 Vt. 546.

6. Where a policy of fire insurance was issued to a mercantile firm upon goods, &c., in their store, and one of the partners died, after which the survivor (the plaintiff) according to a provision in the partnership articles, but of which the insurance company (the defendant) had no knowledge, took the goods at a price stipulated, as his own, and added to the stock and continued the business in his own name, and the goods were then burned;—Held, that under the policy he could recover for all the goods in the store at the death of his partner, but could not recover for the goods added to the stock after such death. Wood v. Rutland & Addison Ins. Co., 31 Vt. 552.

7. But where, in such case, the plaintiff, after the death of his partner, informed the agent of the defendant of the facts, and was informed by the agent that no change in the policy nor further action by the plaintiff in respect thereto was necessary, and the agent then verbally agreed that the policy should apply to cover all the goods, and the defendant, being informed of such understanding and agreement with the agent, assented thereto, and collected the assessments thereafter laid until the loss;—Held, that upon a declaration setting forth all such facts, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the entire loss,—there being nothing in the defendant's charter, by-laws, or the policy, as to the alienation of goods, nor any provisions as to how the policy should be confirmed to a vendee, or that it should be in writing. Id.

8. Ratification. A fire insurance policy upon buildings was issued running to the insured, his heirs and assigns, upon the payment of a premium covering the whole term of the insurance. The charter and by-laws of the insurance company, incorporated into the policy, provided that the policy should become void upon an alienation of the property; but that the alienee, having the policy assigned to him, might have it ratified and confirmed to him upon application to the directors with their consent within 90 days after such alienation, &c.; and that it should be void until such confirmation. The buildings were conveyed and the policy assigned Nov. 11, and the buildings burned Nov. 19, and on the 20th the assignee applied to have the policy ratified and confirmed to him, which the directors refused. Upon a bill in chancery by the assignee against the company;—Held, that the right to refuse a confirmation was not arbitrary, and as there was no cause to refuse to ratify the assignment, beyond the fact of the loss which was insured against, the assignee was entitled to have the same ratified, and a decree was directed to be entered in his favor for the amount of the loss. Boynnton v. Farmers', &c., Ins. Co., 43 Vt. 256.

9. Agent. One P, assuming to act as agent of an insurance company, procured from the defendant an application for insurance and forwarded it to the company, upon which the company issued a policy. P was then in treaty for an appointment as agent, and such agency was soon after conferred by the company and a bond taken from him, bearing date previous to the date of the policy, reciting that P "is appointed agent," &c., and binding him, with surety, to faithful performance of his duty as such agent. Held, that these acts of the company were a ratification of P's agency in procuring the application. Farmers' M. F. Ins. Co., v. Marshall, 29 Vt. 28.

10. As to the authority of a soliciting insurance agent to bind his principal by particular representations, this is said to depend upon the fact whether a given representation was really calculated to impose upon a careful and prudent man as to his authority. Id.

11. Right to sue. A person who has acquired title, by levy of execution, to premises insured by the execution debtor against fire, is not entitled to the proceeds of the policy, in case of a loss. The contract of insurance is in general confined to the parties to it. Pimpton v. Farmers', &c., Ins. Co., 43 Vt. 497.

12. Service of writ. G. S. c. 87, ss. 5—9, providing for the appointment of attorneys in this State by foreign insurance companies to receive service of process, apply only to such companies as make contracts of insurance within this State. Their purpose was to provide, by service of process on such attorney, a method for obtaining jurisdiction over the company, in cases where the court already had jurisdiction of the cause of action, and not to provide means for obtaining jurisdiction of a cause of action, where no such jurisdiction before existed. Sawyer v. North American Life Ins. Co., 46 Vt. 697.

13. Limitation of suit. A stipulation in a policy of insurance that no action shall be sustainable upon it unless commenced within twelve months after the loss, is binding, and bars a suit commenced after that time, although a prior suit was commenced within that time and failed without the plaintiff's fault. Wilson v. Aetna Ins. Co., 27 Vt. 99.

14. A cause of action upon a policy of insurance, which has become barred by suffering the time to expire which is fixed, in the charter of the company, as a limitation for the commencement of an action for a loss, is not revived by an acknowledgment, or a new promise. Williams v. Vt. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 20 Vt. 222.

15. Section 7 of the act incorporating the Vt. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., limiting the time for the bringing of an action after a loss, applies as well to the case where the directors wholly disallow the claim, as where they disallow it only in part. Dutton v. Vt. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 17 Vt. 369.

16. Jurisdiction—Premium note. An insurance premium note, payable in such proportions and at such times as the directors may require, is a promissory note for the full sum payable by instalments, and the jurisdiction of the court, in a suit upon it, is determined by the amount of the note, and not by the assessments made and due upon it—they not being "indorsements" to be "deducted." Washington Co. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 26 Vt. 77. Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Marshall, 20 Vt. 23. Windham Co. Ins. Co. v. Pierce, 36 Vt. 16.

II. LIFE INSURANCE.

17. Construction of policy. An entry upon the margin of a life insurance policy, issued as a "paid up policy" in exchange for an endowment policy upon which two annual premiums had been paid, partly by two notes, was as follows: "This policy is conditional on the interest on the two notes given in part payment for two premiums paid on No. 10,608 being paid in advance." Held, (1), that this marginal entry was part of the policy, the same as though inserted in the body of it; (2), that the interest on the two notes became practically a premium upon the policy, payable according to the terms of the notes, viz.: annually in advance; (3), that the non-payment, in advance, of the second year's interest worked a forfeiture of the policy from that date. Patch v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 44 Vt. 481.

18. Suicide clause. A policy of life insurance contained a provision to become void, if the insured "shall die by suicide." He did die by shooting himself, but it was claimed that this was the result of his insanity. As to the degree of insanity which would excuse the act and save the policy, the court said: "It does not follow, because we can see that an insane man knows that if he blows his brains out it will kill him, and that he does that act for that purpose, that therefore the act was that of a sane mind, voluntarily and deliberately done"; and adopted the language of Hunt, J., in Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wallace's R. 580;—and said further: "It is not enough for the jury to find that the mind of the deceased was so impaired that he was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, but they must be satisfied that his mind was so overthrown that he had no power to resist the insane impulse to take his life, so that the act was the direct and immediate consequence and result of his insanity; in short, that the taking of his life was an insane act, in respect to which his reason was powerless." Hathaway v. National Life Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335. INSANE PERSON, 6.

19. Evidence. Suicide, like any other extraordinary and unnatural act, has a tendency to show insanity. Ib.

INTEREST.

1. When, and when not, recoverable. Interest is allowed, whenever there is a contract to pay it, either express or implied; or where the party is legally in default. In the latter case, compensation in damages, equal to the interest, may be allowed. Hauzhurst v. Hovey, 26 Vt. 544, 547. Evarts v. Nason, 11 Vt. 122. Pawlet v. Sandgate, 19 Vt. 621.

2. Except where there is an express contract for interest, it is only recoverable as damages for the detention of the money which the party ought to pay. Abbott v. Wilmot, 22 Vt. 437.

3. Where there is no express contract to pay interest, no implied contract to pay it arises, and it is not recoverable, except where the party has neglected to make payment after it was his duty to do so. Evans v. Beckwith, 37 Vt. 385. Brainerd v. Champlain Tr. Co., 29 Vt. 154. Sprague v. Sprague, 30 Vt. 483.

4. It is well settled in this State, that if the contract is silent on the subject of interest, but does not by implication exclude it, the law implies that interest is to be paid on money due and payable under the contract, from the time the money becomes payable and should be paid. Barrett, J., in Vt. & Can. R. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 34 Vt. 65.

5. In this State, the general rule is that interest is given after the debt is due, without any special contract to pay. The cases where interest is not given must appear to stand upon some special reason for withholding it. Poland,

C. J., in Sumner v. Beebe, 87 Vt. 562. LIMITATIONS, 35.

6. The law will always imply a contract to pay interest upon a debt payable on demand, after demand made, by way of damages for the delay. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135.

7. In an action for goods sold by a merchant in London to a merchant in Montreal, where there was a running account, and no stipulation as to time of payment or as to interest, nor demand of payment was proved, interest was allowed to be cast only from the service of the writ. Houghton v. Hagar, Brayt. 183. 19 Vt. 631.

8. According to general usage and the course of decisions in this State, interest is allowed upon a merchant's accounts after the expiration of the understood or usual time of credit. Raymond v. Isham, 8 Vt. 258. 2 Vt. 536.

9. Where a party agrees to pay money after his return from A, he is entitled to a reasonable time, after his return, to make the payment, before being chargeable with interest. Abbott v. Wilmot, 22 Vt. 437.

10. In a case where a party is not entitled to interest by any contract, and he receives his money without making any claim for interest, it is very difficult to see upon what ground he can afterwards make a claim for it. Long silence without claim, after payment of the principal, is ample evidence of a waiver of such claim. Ib.

11. A mutual attempt at settlement of accounts may fairly enough, perhaps, be regarded as a demand or claim of payment, upon both sides, for what should happen to be due, so as to warrant the allowance of interest from that date. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135.

12. Interest was refused to an administrator upon his account, under special circumstances, and where sufficient funds of the estate might have been subject to his control. Everts v. Nason, 11 Vt. 122.

13. So, where all presumption of any understanding that interest should be paid was rebutted—as, where services were rendered from time to time for many years, without time of payment agreed upon, and not charged nor presented until after the death of the debtor, interest was refused, except from and after such death. Newell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214.

14. The decree upon a creditor's bill was, that certain property of the intestate debtor in the hands of the defendant should be brought into a course of administration, as assets of his estate. Held, that the defendant should not be charged with interest upon the value, the property not having been disposed of by him. Morse v. Stason, 16 Vt. 319.

15. A mere depository of money, like a trustee, receiver, bailee, or stake-holder, is not chargeable with interest unless upon contract to pay it, or as damages for a wrongful neglect to pay over when demanded. Haswell v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 26 Vt. 100.

16. An agent receiving money for his principal, or an attorney for his client, is not liable for interest thereon, unless he has received special instructions to remit as fast as collected, or is in default by neglecting to render an account. Hauzhurst v. Hovey, 26 Vt. 544.

17. The plaintiffs had for several years sold to the defendant large quantities of wood, which, it was understood, would be and which were settled and paid for in the winters following the several deliveries, neither party expecting interest to be paid to the time of such annual settlements. At two or three of these annual settlements, the plaintiffs had omitted to present an account of a certain lot of wood previously delivered, and, in consequence thereof, it remained unpaid for,—the defendant supposing at each settlement that he had paid for all the wood previously delivered. Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest upon their claim during the time they so omitted to present it. Brainerd v. Champlain Tr. Co., 29 Vt. 154. 30 Vt. 295.

18. A bond to pay a certain sum on the death of a third person, draws interest from the death, without demand—the event being equally ascertainable by both parties. Sumner v. Beebe, 87 Vt. 562.

19. On running accounts. It is settled in Vermont, in cases of ordinary running book accounts not controlled by special contract, express or implied, and unaffected by any special circumstances requiring the case to be made an exception to the rule, as being clearly inequitable, that the rule of computing the interest is by making annual rests, and allowing simple interest thereafter on the balance in favor of the party to whom it may be due. Langdon v. Castleton, 30 Vt. 285. Spencer v. Woodbridge, 38 Vt. 492. Bates v. Starr, 2 Vt. 536. Wood v. Smith, 23 Vt. 706. Birchard v. Knapp, 31 Vt. 679. Goodnow v. Parsons, 36 Vt. 46. Davis v. Smith, 48 Vt. 52.

20. Any custom in one's business to compute interest otherwise, as semi-annually (Wood v. Smith), or by adding interest to the principal at the end of each year (Birchard v. Knapp), will not vary this rule, unless known to the other party and in some way assented to. Ib. Goodnow v. Parsons.

21. A neglect to present a bill and to demand payment forms no exception to this rule. Langdon v. Castleton. Spencer v. Woodbridge. Williams v. Finney, 16 Vt. 297.

22. In computing interest upon accounts, with annual rests, the first rest, in the absence of evidence of a different understanding, is to be made at the end of one year from the commencement of the account, and so from year to year. Carpenter v. Welch, 40 Vt. 251.

23. No custom of merchants, however uniform or long standing, will justify a court, in this State, in allowing interest upon interest on a running account. Wheelock v. Moultons, 18 Vt. 490.

24. Annual interest. Parties cannot stipulate in advance for compound, or annual, interest, to be reckoned for a succession of years,—that is, where the contract postpones the payment of both principal and interest for several years. This, if not usurious, would be oppressive and illegal. But the interest may be made payable at any time short of the time fixed for payment of the principal. Catlin v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 44.

25. A promissory note payable in (say) ten years from date "with annual interest," imposes the same legal obligation as where payable with interest annually. When such interest falls due, suit may be brought for it immediately, and a recovery be had for that, with interest thereon from the day it fell due, as damages for the delay. Id.

26. Interest upon a contract for the payment of interest annually, or with annual interest, is to be cast upon that interest after the same falls due, down to the time when the contract is actually paid. Rule, 1 Aik. 410. Austin v. Imus, 23 Vt. 286.

LIMITATIONS, 34.

27. Rate. The courts of this State are governed by our own law in construing and enforcing contracts made in other States and countries, unless it be shown that the lex loci requires a different rule;—as, in the allowance of interest according to our own law after the expiration of an agreed credit. Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191. 34 Vt. 65.

28. The rate of interest, whether interest is stipulated in the contract or is given by way of damages for the non-performance, is the interest of the place of payment. Pecks v. Mayo, 14 Vt. 38.

29. Where a promissory note was made in Canada and indorsed in Vermont (in both which places the rate of interest was six per cent), and was payable at a day certain in New York (where the rate of interest was seven per cent), and was not paid when due;—Held, in an action against the indorser, that he was liable to the same extent as the maker; and that seven per cent interest was recoverable, as damages, from the maturity of the note. Id.

30. Advance payment. The reception of interest in advance, upon a note past due, is prima facie evidence of a valid contract to give time of payment, since, as a general proposition, a party receiving the consideration is bound to perform the thing for which the consideration was paid and received. People's Bank v. Pearsons, 30 Vt. 711.

INTERPLEADER.

1. When the bill lies. In order to justify a bill of interpleader, there should be either some specific chattel, or some definite sum of money, to which different parties in the same right, or in privity of estate, make claim, and the person bringing the bill should be a mere stakeholder, having no interest in the matter, so that, when the court decrees an interpleader, he may step out of the case altogether. It is requisite, too, that the party should otherwise be in danger of paying the money, or the value of the chattel, more than once. Lincoln v. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., 24 Vt. 639.

2. Instances. Where a claim was allowed by commissioners of an estate, and the creditor had brought an action on the administrator's bond for the allowance, and the heirs of the estate claimed that the allowance was obtained by fraud, and were instituting proceedings to set it aside and for a distribution of the sum among the heirs;—Held, that these facts furnished no ground for a bill of interpleader by the administrator, and, on demurrer, such a bill was dismissed. Id.

3. The orator, maker of a negotiable promissory note, had been adjudged trustee of the payee upon his own disclosure, and was afterwards sued upon the note by one claiming it as indorsee, who was not a party to the trustee proceedings. The orator thereupon brought his bill of interpleader against the plaintiff in that judgment, and such indorsee. Held, that as the right to the fund had been determined against him by the judgment, he did not occupy such position, as a stakeholder, as to maintain the bill; and on demurrer it was dismissed. Holmes v. Clark, 46 Vt. 22.

4. A railroad company had deposited in a bank, according to the statute, the amount of an award of commissioners for land damages. The company, before having done much upon the land, was enjoined by other parties from further work upon it. The company thereupon forbade the bank to pay the deposit to the landowner. The landowner demanded it of the bank. Held, a proper case for a bill of interpleader in behalf of the bank. National Bank v. West River R. Co., 46 Vt. 633.

5. Procedure. To a bill of interpleader one of the defendants demurred. The other appeared, but, without demurrer or answer, confessed the allegations of the bill. The court overruled the demurrer, and thereupon, without other decree, ordered and decreed that the fund belonged to the demurrant and that the same be paid to him. From this decree the orator and the other defendant appealed. Held irregular and erroneous every way; that upon sustaining the bill, the court should have ordered the fund paid into court, and have dismissed the orator as a party further, with his costs to be paid out of the fund, and then have proceeded to hear the case, as between the defendants, upon the issues formed, or to be formed, as ordered. Ib.

6. The defendants in a bill of interpleader stand before the court, as hostile claimants, to litigate the questions of right pending between them, to the same intents as if the one had brought a bill against the other predicated upon the same matter and for the same purposes. Hence, they may settle the controversy as between themselves, without regard to the orator. Horton v. Baptist Church, &c., 34 Vt. 309.

7. Parties. C bought of H, after the death of the wife of H, a promissory note payable to such wife, or bearer, which was her separate property, and by law passed to the heirs. C bought the note under circumstances (as set forth in the case) calculated to excite suspicion as to the ownership of H. In a bill of interpleader brought by the maker of the note against C and the administrator of the wife of H;—Held, that H was not a necessary party. Gill v. Cook, 42 Vt. 140.

1. As to town officers.
2. As to other persons.

I. CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

1. Act dependent on popular vote.

1. The liquor licensing act of Oct. 31, 1844, was held not to be unconstitutional by reason of requiring a license to sell to be obtained from commissioners elected by the people of the several counties, otherwise such sale to be unlawful. Bancroft v. Dumas, 21 Vt. 456.

2. Held, that the act of Nov. 3, 1848, for the licensing of innkeepers, &c., was not unconstitutional by reason of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors unless licensed by the assistant judges of the county court, and making their power to license depend upon an approving vote of the voters of the several counties. Ib. 22 Vt. 74. 26 Vt. 861.

3. By the liquor act of 1852, it was provided that the act should come in force on the 2nd Tuesday of March, 1853,—with a proviso, that meetings of the freemen of the State should be holden on the 2nd Tuesday of February, 1853, to vote upon “their judgment and choice in regard to this act,” and “if a majority of the ballots shall be No, then this act shall take effect in December, 1853.” Held, that the act was constitutional, and by its terms came in force on the 2nd Tuesday of March, 1853,—the only thing conditional or contingent being, that, in the event of an adverse vote, the operation of the act should be suspended until the day last named. State v. Parker, 26 Vt. 357.

4. The popular vote upon this act having been “Yes,”—Held, that the respondent was properly convicted of an offence under it, committed before December, 1853. Ib.

2. General powers of legislature.

5. The legislature has constitutional power to pass a law prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquor for the purposes of drinking, and subjecting it to seizure, forfeiture and destruction. The seizure clause of the act of 1852, sections 12 and 18 (G. S. c. 94, s. 22), is valid. Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328. Gill v. Parker, 31 Vt. 610.

6. The laws relating to the sale, &c., of intoxicating liquors come fairly within the regulation of the internal police of the State, which, by the constitution, is expressly given to the legislature. State v. Conlin, 27 Vt. 318. In re Dougherty, 27 Vt. 325. Lincoln v. Smith.

3. Instances.

7. G. S. c. 94, s. 33, authorizing the arrest, without warrant, of a person found intoxicated, &c., his detention in custody, examination, &c., discussed, and held constitutional. In re Powers, 25 Vt. 261.

8. A warrant issued upon the disclosure of a person arrested for intoxication, under G. S. c. 94, s. 33, and a trial and conviction of the party charged, were held constitutional and valid. State v. Conlin, 27 Vt. 318. In re Dougherty, 27 Vt. 325.

9. The provision of the liquor act of 1852, that it shall not be necessary to aver a former conviction in order to an increase of the penalty, extends to all modes of prosecution under the act, in all courts; and is constitutional. State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523.

10. There is no constitutional objection to the passage of a law, that the presumption of innocence may be overcome by a contrary presumption founded upon the experience of human conduct, and of enacting what evidence shall be sufficient to overcome such presumption of innocence;—as, that the possession of intoxicating liquor shall furnish probable cause for seizure, and, unexplained, of condemnation, as intended for unlawful sale. Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328.

11. A complaint in the form prescribed in the liquor act, that the respondent "became a dealer in intoxicating liquors without having license therefor," &c., was held to sufficiently inform the accused of "the cause and nature of his accusation," as required by section 10 of the Declaration of Rights. State v. Comstock, 27 Vt. 553.

12. The legislature may prescribe the form of an indictment in a given case, provided they violate no constitutional provision. (Applied to forms given in the liquor acts.) Ib.

13. The liquor act of 1852, No. 24, s. 3, is unconstitutional, so far as it authorizes the agent appointed by the county commissioner to purchase liquors at the expense of the town for which he is appointed, without its assent, express or implied, and where he gives no indemnity to the town for the faithful execution of his agency. Atkins v. Randolph, 31 Vt. 226. Bennett, J., dissenting.

14. The manufacture of cider-brandy within this State, although for one's own use, or for sale in accordance with law, is prohibited by G. S. c. 94; and such prohibition is not in conflict with any provision of the constitution. State v. Lovell, 47 Vt. 493.

15. Stat. 1869, No. 4, authorizing suit against a person illegally selling liquors for an injury done by a person becoming intoxicated thereby, is constitutional. It is a civil suit, requiring only the same measure of proof as in other civil cases. Stanton v. Simpson, 48 Vt. 628.

II. DEFINITIONS.

16. The words rum, brandy, gin, in and of themselves, import them to be spiritous liquors. State v. Munger, 15 Vt. 290.

17. Whether ale is intoxicating or not, is not a question of law, but of fact. It may be submitted to the jury without evidence, since everybody understands that it is intoxicating, and comes within the provisions of the statute prohibiting the sale of all intoxicating liquor, as it is understood that brandy is intoxicating, or that gunpowder is explosive. The jury may act upon such common knowledge. It is possible that ale may be manufactured with so small a proportion of intoxicating properties, as not to come within the class denominated intoxicating liquors. If so, this must form an exception to the general rule, and if a respondent would avail himself of such a fact, it is incumbent upon him to prove it. State v. Barron, 37 Vt. 57.

18. The words "same offense," as used in section 18 of the liquor act of 1852—"former conviction of the same offense"—mean a similar offense. In re Dougherty, 27 Vt. 325.

19. "Place of public resort," as used in G. S. c. 94, s. 1—what is, and evidence of same. State v. Pratt, 34 Vt. 323.

20. An "habitual drunkard," as used in G. S. c. 94, s. 1, is one who is in the habit of getting drunk, or one who commonly, or frequently, is drunk; not that he is constantly or universally drunk. Ib.

21. The word "intoxicated," as used in G. S. c. 94, s. 10, has its ordinary signification and means intoxicated or drunk by the drinking of intoxicating spirituous liquors; and held, that a complaint charging, in the words of the act, that the respondent "became and was found intoxicated" was sufficient, without alleging upon what he became intoxicated. State v. Kelley, 47 Vt. 294.

22. The offense of "dealing in the sale of spirituous liquors," under R. S. c. 83, s. 23, and under the license law of 1846, is accomplished by a single sale. State v. Chandler, 15 Vt. 425. State v. Clark, 23 Vt. 293. State v. Bugbee, 22 Vt. 32. State v. Paddock, 24 Vt. 312.

23. In order to constitute one a dealer in spirituous liquors under the act of 1846, it is not necessary that he should do the business in person, nor that it be done in his presence, or by his express command. If the liquor is kept for sale and sold with his consent, it is sufficient. And this applies to a general agent, who has such superintendence and control over the clerks and servants as the owner would have had, if present or superintending. State v. Dow, 21 Vt. 484.

24. "Selling, furnishing, or giving away" intoxicating liquors are all equally violations of the liquor act, and but different forms of committing the same legal offense; and a conviction for violating the statute in one form is available to double the penalty on a second conviction for a violation in another form. State v. Haynes, and State v. Remilee, 36 Vt. 667.

25. Under a count for furnishing intoxicating liquors, a conviction may be had for giving it away—giving being one mode of furnishing; and, quære, whether selling is not also a mode of furnishing; but where an indictment contains distinct counts for selling, and like counts for giving away, there can be no conviction for giving away under the count for selling, nor vice versa. State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523.

III. LICENSE ACTS.

26. Indictment. In an indictment for selling liquors by small measure, without license, the negation of license must be broad enough to cover all the sources from which a license might have been lawfully obtained. State v. Sommers, 3 Vt. 156. (1830.) Where the averment was, "not having a license to sell said liquors as aforesaid," this was held to refer to the time of the sale, and was sufficient. State v. Munger, 15 Vt. 290. State v. Whitney, 15 Vt. 298. (1843.)

27. In an indictment for selling spirituous liquors by the small measure, without license, it is sufficient to allege that they were sold to "divers persons," without naming them, or averring that they were unknown. State v. Munger.

28. It is not necessary to charge the offense as vi et armis. This would be absurd. Id. State v. Whitney, 15 Vt. 298.

29. On trial of an indictment for violation of the license act of 1846;—Held, that it was not error to allow the prosecutor to introduce evidence of more offenses than there were counts in the indictment. The putting of the prosecutor to his election is matter of practice, resting in the sound discretion of the court; and all that the prisoner can claim is, that the election should be made before he is called on for his defense. State v. Smith, 22 Vt. 74. 28 Vt. 14.

30. Under the same act;—Held, that one who, as the mere servant and gratuitous assistant of another, sold intoxicating liquors, neither having a license therefor, was subject to indictment for selling. State v. Bugbee, 22 Vt. 32.

31. Sufficiency of an indictment for selling or furnishing intoxicating liquors without a license, under C. S. c. 87, s. 7. See State v. Woodward, 25 Vt. 616.

32. In a prosecution for selling liquor without license, it is not a bar to the prosecution that the respondent has been indicted and convicted for a like offense since the date of the offense now proved, unless it appear to have been for the same act of selling. State v. Ainsworth, 11 Vt. 91.

33. Upon a general conviction for being a dealer in intoxicating liquor without having license therefor;—Held, that the penalty must be for a single sale. State v. Comstock, 27 Vt. 553.

34. Sale of liquors in Massachusetts by a licensed manufacturer—construction given to the Massachusetts act. Barnard v. Houghton, 34 Vt. 264.

IV. PROHIBITORY ACTS.

1. Particular offenses.

35. The respondent, a citizen of New Hampshire, where was his only place of business, there sold to a resident of Vermont part of a cask of brandy, then at a railroad depot in Vermont, and then in transitu from New York to the respondent in New Hampshire; and it was also agreed that the purchaser should take the cask from the depot and take from it what he might wish, and then return the cask and the residue of the brandy to the respondent in New Hampshire, and the quantity taken should then be ascertained and paid for. The purchaser did accordingly. Held, that the respondent, having made the delivery in Vermont, was guilty of an offense against the liquor act of 1852. State v. Comings, 28 Vt. 508.

36. A sale of intoxicating liquors in this State, without delivery, would be no sufficient ground of conviction for an offense; but it would be so far illegal as to render the contract void. Redfield, C. J. Id., 512.

37. The keeping or transporting of intoxicating liquors in this State, with the intent of selling them in another State contrary to the laws of that State, is not a violation of any law of this State. Harrison v. Nichols, 31 Vt. 709.

38. The sale of liquors imported in accordance with the laws of the U. S., while remaining in the original packages in which they were imported, is not prohibited by the laws of this State. Jones v. Hard, 32 Vt. 481.

39. The act prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors does not apply to medicinal preparations composed in part of alcohol, such as bitters and tinctures, which are made and sold in good faith for their true and legitimate use, to prevent or cure disease, although, if used in sufficient quantities, they will produce intoxication. But aliter with intoxicating drinks intended to be sold and used as a beverage, but disguised by some tincture or preparation so as to have, to some extent, the taste, flavor or appearance of medicines or bitters. Russell v. Sloan, 33 Vt. 656.

40. The owner of intoxicating liquors, not intended to be disposed of in this State contrary to law, may maintain trespass for the unauthorized taking thereof by a stranger; whether so, in case they were intended for sale contrary to law, was not decided. Harrison v. Nichols, 31 Vt. 709. (G. S. c. 94, s. 32.)

41. Inn-keeper. An inn-keeper, equally with any other head of a family, may furnish his own family or household with such food and beverage as he judges fit and proper for their sustenance and refreshment, including intoxicating liquor. State v. Jones, 39 Vt. 370.

42. Where the respondent, an inn-keeper, employed W four days as a hostler, who took care of the stables, was up nights, and to whom, on three several occasions after so sitting up, the respondent furnished whiskey at the bar, which W there drank;—Held, that W was to be treated as a domestic servant or employee of the respondent, and for the time being as constituting a part of the respondent's family or household; and, upon the hypothesis that the respondent furnished the liquor in consideration that W was in his employ, and that he furnished it gratuitously, as he did, or would, W's meals and lodgings, this was not a violation of the liquor law. Id.

43. The respondent, an inn-keeper, had a dancing party at his tavern and hired and furnished musicians for the occasion, and, at intervals, furnished them with whiskey at his tavern bar, without pay, which was drunk by them at the bar. Held, that this was an act of furnishing in violation of the liquor act. Id.

44. A hotel keeper has no right to furnish his mere boarders with intoxicating liquor. State v. Intox. Liquor, 44 Vt. 208.

45. Town agent. The sale of intoxicating liquors to a town agent authorized to sell, and impliedly to buy for the purposes of his agency, is not a violation of the liquor act of 1852. The seller is not responsible for the uses to which the agent put the liquors, or the intent with which he purchased them. Street v. Hall, 29 Vt. 165.

46. A town agent for selling intoxicating liquors for medicinal, chemical and mechanical purposes only, is subject to indictment for selling or giving away such liquors for general purposes of drinking, notwithstanding he has given the bond provided by the statute for the faithful discharge of his duties. State v. Parks, 29 Vt. 70.

47. It is incumbent on a town liquor agent, under G. S. c. 94, to sell no liquor unless upon an application for an authorized purpose, and upon a representation reasonably inducing the belief that it is wanted for such purpose only; and if he sells without such application and representation, and without inquiry, and the liquor is in fact wanted and used for drink, and not for a lawful purpose, he is guilty of a violation of the law—as much so, as if he were not agent. State v. Fisher, 35 Vt. 584.

48. In an action against a town liquor agent where the question was whether a particular sale was illegal;—Held, that the book of sales which he kept, showing other sales to the same party, was evidence against him, as tending to show his acquaintance with the party, the frequency of his calls, and the extent of his purchases, &c. Stanton v. Simpson, 48 Vt. 628.

49. Intoxicating liquor held by town officers in contravention of the statute, is as liable to seizure and forfeiture as that held by other persons for like purposes. Plainfield v. Batchelder, 44 Vt. 9.

50. Single call. Where liquor is furnished in answer to a single call, at the same time, and by a single act, it constitutes but one act of furnishing and the party incurs but one penalty, notwithstanding the person to whom it is furnished allows another to partake of it with him, and it may be drunk by more than one person. But where the liquor is furnished on a single call, or more, if it be done at different times and by separate acts, no matter how closely these several acts may follow each other in point of time, each act of furnishing constitutes a separate offense, and subjects the party to a separate penalty, whether the liquor be drunk by the same person, or by different persons. State v. Barron, 37 Vt. 57.

51. Cider. The sale of cider at a grocery, or other place of public resort, is prohibited by G. S. c. 94, s. 18, although not made to an habitual drunkard. State v. Preston, 48 Vt. 12.

2. Complaint and prosecution.

52. Complaint. Under the liquor act of 1852 (as under G. S. c. 94), upon a single count in an indictment, information, or complaint, for selling, furnishing, or giving away intoxicating liquor without authority, a conviction can be had for any number of offenses proved. State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 528.

53. In a prosecution under G. S. c. 94 containing a single count for selling, omitting the words "at divers times" contained in the form (s. 28), a conviction may be had for one offense, but for one only. State v. Jones, 39 Vt. 370.

54. An information under G. S. c. 94, s. 9, charging that the respondent "did, at divers times, sell, furnish and give away intoxicating liquor," &c., was held not objectionable for duplicity, but good on demurrer. State v. Brown, 36 Vt. 560.

55. In prosecutions under this section, following the prescribed form of complaint, it is the rule in this State, that the accused is entitled, on his request, to a specification of the offenses for which the government claims a conviction. Redfield, C. J., in State v. Conklin, 27 Vt. 323, and in State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 525. Prout, J., in State v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 582. Wilson, J., in State v. Rowe, 43 Vt. 267.

56. Such specification, as to its specific character, is a matter of discretion with the court, to be exercised with reference to the circumstances of the case; and where it was not shown that the prosecutor could be more specific, or that the accused was misled or prejudiced by the form or generality of the specification;—Held, that there was no error of the court in refusing to order a more minute specification, according to the request of the accused, and in trying the case upon the specification furnished. State v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 526.

57. A complaint alleging that the respondent "was found in such a state of intoxication by the use of intoxicating liquor as to break and disturb the public peace," was held sufficient as a complaint that he was "found intoxicated," under G. S. c. 94, s. 10. State v. Devitt, 47 Vt. 287.

58. A complaint under G. S. c. 94, s. 13, for keeping "intoxicating liquors" with intent to sell, &c., was held sufficient without naming the particular kinds of liquor. State v. Reynolds, 47 Vt. 297.

59. The form of complaint prescribed by G. S. c. 94, s. 28, against one as a manufacturer of intoxicating liquor, was held sufficient. State v. Lovell, 47 Vt. 493.

60. Further, as to sufficiency of complaints in liquor prosecutions, see CRIMES, 199, 200, 206, 207, 209.

61. Amendment. The supreme court refused, as matter of discretion and to establish a reasonable precedent in like cases, to allow an amendment in a complaint for liquor selling, under G. S. c. 94, s. 30, not moved for in the county court. State v. Kennedy, 36 Vt. 563.

62. Mittimus. Where one is convicted for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, it is not important whether, in the record and the mittimus, this is called a crime, or an offense, or neither. Howard, ex parte, 26 Vt. 205.

63. Disclosure. A prosecution under G. S. c. 94, s. 33, upon a warrant issued upon the disclosure of a person found intoxicated, may be tried before the same justice and in the town where such intoxicated person was arrested and made his disclosure, although the respondent resides in another town, and the offense of furnishing the intoxicating liquor was committed in such other town. State v. Hoffman, 46 Vt. 176.

64. In such prosecution, the offenses provable do not extend beyond what the person found intoxicated is bound to disclose; that is, not beyond the sale, or sales, &c., of the liquor which produced the intoxication. Id.

65. One who is convicted of being found intoxicated, in a prosecution under G. S. c. 94, s. 10, cannot be compelled to disclose in that prosecution of whom he purchased the liquor which produced the intoxication. It is only where an arrest is made, under section 33, of a person then in a state of intoxication, that such disclosure can be compelled. In re Pierce, 46 Vt. 374.

3. Search and seizure.

66. Complaint. A complaint for search and seizure of intoxicating liquors under G. S. c. 94, should be in writing, but need not be signed by the complainants,—the form given being followed. Gill v. Parker, 31 Vt. 610.

67. In a liquor seizure complaint, the names of the complainants were not inserted in the body of the complaint—the allegation being, "come legal voters," &c.—but the signatures of three persons were subscribed thereto. Held sufficient. State v. Intoxicating Liquor, 44 Vt. 208.

68. In the jurat to such complaint, following the signatures of three persons, the affiants were described as the persons "above named." Held sufficient, although the full names were given in one place and the initials of the given names in the other. Id.

69. In a liquor seizure case, the State's attorney, without the consent or knowledge of the persons who had signed and sworn to the complaint, but in the presence of the justice and before warrant given to the officer for service, erased in the complaint the word "occupied," and interlined, instead, the word "owned"; but immediately after, erased the word "owned" and retraced with his pen the word "occupied," intending to restore it. Held, that this did not alter the complaint in fact, or effect. Id.

70. The form of the complaint and warrant for seizure of intoxicating liquors is adapted as well to sec. 1 as to sec. 22 of G. S. c. 94, and applies alike to liquors intended for illegal sale, and for illegal distribution. State v. Drew, 38 Vt. 387.

71. — as to place. A search warrant which so described the place to be searched as to leave no discretion to the officer in respect to what place he would search, but directed him in that respect and did not leave him to direct himself, was held sufficient. State v. Intox. Liquor, 44 Vt. 208.

72. A complaint and warrant for the search and seizure of intoxicating liquors were held sufficient, which described the place as "the dwelling house of Russel H. Lincoln of Shrewsbury, in the county of Rutland," and the thing as "intoxicating liquor"; and held, that it was not necessary to give the name of the owner or keeper, or of the person intending to sell, the statute only acting upon the place to be searched, and the thing to be searched for. Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328.

73. The words "building or place," as used in G. S. c. 94, s. 22, authorizing a search and seizure of intoxicating liquors, must receive a reasonable interpretation; not so broad as to encourage a looseness of procedure, nor so narrow as to prevent the search of the entire premises occupied and used by a person in the ordinary course of his business. State v. Drew, 38 Vt. 387.

74. "The American Hotel, and the barns, sheds and other outbuildings adjacent thereto, in Burlington, and forming a part of the premises of said hotel," was held to be a sufficient description of the place to be searched. Ib.

75. A complaint for search and seizure alleged that "intoxicating liquor is by S. J. Loop kept or deposited in his shop, store or office on the corner of Evelyn and Freight streets in the village of Rutland, in the town of Rutland, and the cellar connected therewith, and in the store, rooms and cellar occupied by Landon & Huntoon, in the same building, and by S. J. Loop then and there intended for sale"; and the warrant accompanying the complaint commanded the search of "the premises above described, to wit,"—and then described them as in the complaint. Held, that the warrant was good as against Loop, and warranted the seizure of any liquors kept by him in either apartment specified. Loop v. Williams, 47 Vt. 407.

76. Warrant — Deputation. A justice may authorize any suitable person to serve a warrant for search and seizure of intoxicating liquors. (G. S. c. 31, s. 35.) Perkins v. Gibbs, 29 Vt. 843.

77. Power and duty of officer. The officer serving such warrant may, of necessity, take the cask containing the liquor. Ib.

Note.—By later Act of 1869, No. 4, such casks or vessels are subject to forfeiture.

78. The officer seizing the liquor is bound, in keeping it, to use (as in the case of property attached) "the utmost care and diligence of prudent men in the case of their own goods"; and that is sufficiently alleged in this case by the averment that the defendant kept the liquor "in a safe, suitable and proper place, to wit, the store of A. B." Ib.

79. An officer serving a warrant for the seizure of intoxicating liquor, may seize for either of the alternative causes named in his precept and the complaint it follows,—sale, furnishing, gift or distribution—as the case may present itself to him upon appearance; but the court is not confined by the return, to a trial of the case under this limitation, and may condemn for the same, or for either of the other alternative causes, as the case presents itself upon proof. State v. Drew, 38 Vt. 387.

80. Notice. Under the search and seizure provisions of G. S. c. 94, notice to the keeper of the liquors is all the statute requires, and, if so given, the owner is bound by the proceedings, whether he has actual notice or not. Johnson v. Williams, 48 Vt. 565.

81. Claimant. In a liquor seizure case claimants appeared, and, after objecting to the sufficiency of the service of notice, remained before the court and made claim. Held, that the proceedings thereafter were well founded upon the voluntary stay of the claimants. State v. Intox. Liquor, 44 Vt. 208.

82. The taxation of costs against a claimant, in such case, was held to be proper, either under the general laws as to costs, or under the Act of 1870, which, as relating to the remedy, applied to cases then pending. Ib.

83. By the Act of 1868, No. 88, no jury trial was allowed in the city court of Burlington, "except in civil actions." Held, that a claimant of liquor seized under G. S. c. 94, s. 22, was not entitled in that court to a jury, it not being a civil action. State v. Liquor, Ray, claimant. 43 Vt. 297.

84. Effect of adjudication. Proceedings for the forfeiture of intoxicating liquors under the provisions of G. S. c. 94, are in the nature of proceedings in rem, and, if regular and the justice has jurisdiction of the subject matter, they fix the status of the property as to all the world, and are conclusive upon the owner. Johnson v. Williams, 48 Vt. 565.

85. A regular adjudication of forfeiture of the liquors terminates the owner's legal interest therein; and any subsequent misfeasance in relation thereto works him no injury of which he can complain. Johnson v. Perkins, 48 Vt. 572.

4. Replevin of liquors seized.

86. The replevin of intoxicating liquor under G. S. c. 94, ss. 40, 41, is of the 3d class under G. S. c. 35, s. 13, and requires the giving of the bond prescribed in c. 35, s. 2. Thurber v. Richmond, 46 Vt. 395.

87. Where, in such case, the action was dismissed for want of a proper replevin bond;—Held, that the defendant was entitled to judgment for a return, and damages for the taking by the replevin, and an order on the replevying officer that he return the liquor to the defendant at the place whence he removed it. Ib. (G. S. c. 35, ss. 16-26.)

88. In replevin of intoxicating liquor seized under G. S. c. 94, the plea of not guilty is the general issue as in other cases by G. S. c. 35, s. 14, and puts in issue every material fact, as well the property in the liquors as the taking and detention. Plainfield v. Batchelder, 44 Vt. 9. Loop v. Williams, 47 Vt. 407.

89. Where the liquors so seized are replevied, and the same have been condemned in the seizure proceedings, the seizing officer, defendant in the replevin, though but a deputized officer, is entitled to judgment for damages and costs, and a return of the liquors to him, or to such officer as shall have warrant or authority to hold or destroy the same under the seizure proceedings. Loop v. Williams.

90. In replevin of intoxicating liquors;—Held, that the record of confiscation in a seizure proceeding was the proper and only legitimate evidence of that adjudication. Plainfield v. Batchelder, 44 Vt. 9.

91. In the record of a seizure case, the liquor was described as gin. Held, in a subsequent replevin suit for 2 bbls. of whiskey, that the identity of the article in the two cases could be proved by parol. Ib.

5. Trial, evidence, etc.

92. The facts that R, the claimant of liquor seized, kept the "Stanton House," which was supplied with conveniences for selling liquors, and that a former seizure had been made at the same house while R kept it, were held proper evidence in a seizure case for condemnation of the liquor. State v. Intox. Liquor, 44 Vt. 206.

93. Assessment rolls made by assessors under U. S. laws, and entries of collectors under the same laws, showing that R had paid the special tax as a retail liquor dealer, were held proper evidence to prove that the liquors in his possession were intended for sale. Ib.

94. The marking of liquors to C, "Plattsburgh via Burlington", while C lived at Burlington and kept a grocery there, in connection with the quantity of the liquors, and the fact that they were found at Burlington when seized, were held to tend to prove that they were got for an unlawful purpose, and were subject to seizure and condemnation. Ib.

95. It cannot be presumed, without proof, that the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited by the laws of another State, such sales being good at common law. Tuttle v. Holland, 48 Vt. 542.

96. In a prosecution under G. S. c. 94, against a manufacturer of intoxicating liquor, a witness was held not privileged from answering the question whether he had purchased liquors of the respondent. State v. Peterson, 41 Vt. 504.

97. The conviction for being a common seller of intoxicating liquor, is a merger of all distinct acts of sale down to the filing of the complaint, and a bar to a further prosecution therefor. State v. Nutt, 28 Vt. 598.

98. In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors, a former conviction of the same offense may be given in evidence under the plea of not guilty; but if pleaded in bar, it may be replied that the conviction was for another offense than the one charged. State v. Conklin, 27 Vt. 818.

99. Records of former convictions under the Liquor Act need not be offered to the jury, but only to the court to affect the sentence. But these should be offered in the county court, and ought not to be received in the supreme court, for the fact of identity may be in question, and this would be for the jury. State v. Haynes, 35 Vt. 570. S. C., 36 Vt. 667. See State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523.

100. The respondent pleaded guilty to sundry offenses of liquor selling, without specifying the times when committed, and was convicted. On a second prosecution for like offenses laid at an earlier date;—Held, that G. S. c. 94, ss. 87, 88, made that record conclusive that the offenses charged in that case were committed on the day set forth in the complaint in that case; and that the respondent could not prove by parol that the offenses charged in the second case were intended to be and were embraced in his former plea. State v. Haynes, 35 Vt. 565.

101. In a prosecution against the keeper of a public house for furnishing intoxicating liquors contrary to G. S. c. 94, the government had proved by several witnesses that they had drunk liquor in rooms in the respondent's house, on public occasions, when invited by persons occupying such rooms, but did not know who provided the liquor. The respondent offered to ask, on cross-examination, if it was not the habit of gentlemen, in traveling about the country, to carry spirituous liquors in bottles with them. Held, that the evidence offered was inadmissible, as being too remote and indefinite; if it had been confined to guests of this house, it might have been otherwise, as tending to rebut the inference that it was obtained of the proprietor in the house. State v. Barron, 37 Vt. 57.

102. In such prosecution, the government offered to prove that the respondent had got his two clerks out of the way, so that they could not be subpoenaed. The officer having the subpoena for these witnesses testified "that he heard that the clerks were not there, and he did not look for them—understood they had gone to Boston." Held, that the offer was proper, but that the evidence given was inadmissible, and that the jury should have been instructed to lay it entirely out of the case. Ib.

103. The question, "Is strong beer reputed to be intoxicating?"—was held inadmissible. State v. Peterson, 41 Vt. 504.

Corpus delicti. CRIMES, 228.

104. Appeal. On an appeal from the judgment of a justice upon a complaint for selling, &c., intoxicating liquor, a trial and conviction may be had for distinct offences not attempted to be proved on the trial before the justice, to the extent of the original jurisdiction of the justice under that complaint. State v. Remelee, 35 Vt. 562.

105. A specification filed in the city court of Burlington in a liquor prosecution under G. S. c. 94, s. 9, having passed with the record of the appeal, as part thereof, to the county court, and no amendment thereof or new specification having been filed in the county court;—Held, on trial in the county court, that the proof of offenses was limited by the specification filed in the city court. State v. Rowe, 48 Vt. 265.

106. Recognizance The recognizance required by G. S. c. 94, s. 16, to be given on an appeal, "conditioned that the respondent will prosecute his appeal to effect, and pay all costs, fines and forfeitures, and undergo all penalties that may be awarded against him," is not a recognizance for the personal appearance of the respondent in the appellate court. Hence, the justice before whom the recognizance was taken, has no authority, by G. S. c. 124, s. 16, to issue a warrant to apprehend the respondent and commit him to jail in discharge of his surety. Morrill v. Thurston, 46 Vt. 732.

107. Such recognizance is forfeited by the default of appearance in the county court on calling the party and his surety. This is a failure to prosecute the appeal, and it is not necessary, in order to hold the surety, that the State should obtain a judgment in that proceeding against the principal, which he had failed to pay. State v. Nichols, 48 Vt. 91.

V. EFFECT ON CONTRACTS.

1. As to towns and town officers.

108. Town agency. The agent for selling liquor under G. S. c. 94, is not an instrument of the town but is an officer of the law. Plainfield v. Batchelder, 44 Vt. 9.

109. Since the act of 1868, No. 15, imposing the duty of purchasing liquors for the town agency upon the selectmen, the agent cannot bind the town by his purchases of liquors as agent, but the selectmen may make him their special agent for that purpose, or might ratify his unauthorized purchases. Barton v. Pittsford, 44 Vt. 371. Erwin v. Richmond, 42 Vt. 557.

110. Although it is declared unlawful for a town liquor agent to purchase intoxicating liquors at the expense or on the credit of the town, yet the selectmen may make him their special agent to buy the liquors for them and in the name of the town. So, too, they have a right to adopt and ratify the transaction afterwards. Topsham v. Rogers, 42 Vt. 189.

111. A settlement made by the selectmen with the town liquor agent, was held not to be a ratification of unauthorized purchases of liquors made by the agent, where the selectmen had no knowledge thereof, and the town did not receive the profits arising therefrom. Barton v. Pittsford, 44 Vt. 371.

112. The authority given by the selectmen to the town agent to buy liquors on the credit of the town, cannot extend beyond their own official year. Id. Erwin v. Richmond, 42 Vt. 557.

113. Where selectmen in purchasing liquors for their town, acted for the town, the fact that they gave their personal obligation to pay for the liquors, does not affect the question of ownership by the town. Lemington v. Blodgett, 87 Vt. 210.

114. Assumpsit in the general counts lies in favor of a town against its agent to recover money withheld, arising from the sales of liquors. The presumption is, that such money belongs to the town. Lemington v. Blodgett, 87 Vt. 215.

115. A town liquor agent, having purchased liquors in the name of the town in addition to what the selectmen had furnished, and paid for them in money received in the sale of liquors, and sold them as such agent, but without the knowledge or consent of the selectmen, cannot shield himself from responsibility to pay over to the town the proceeds of the sales, by the fact that his sales were made in violation of the provisions of the law under which he sold. Topsham v. Rogers, 42 Vt. 189.

116. In an indictment against selectmen for neglecting and refusing liquors to the town liquor agent, it is not sufficient to aver that it was the duty of the respondents to furnish the liquors, but those matters of fact must be averred from which the duty arises; among others, the giving of a bond by the agent to the town, as provided by G. S. c. 94, s. 4, and the contract for compensation. State v. Bartlett, 43 Vt. 86.

117. A contract between a county commissioner under G. S. c. 94, and a town agent of his appointment, that the commissioner shall furnish the agent such liquors as may be needed to supply the town, and that the agent shall pay him for the same, is against public policy and void, and such commissioner cannot recover for liquors so furnished. Baldwin v. Coburn, 39 Vt. 441.

2. As to other persons.

118. Action. Under the statutes of 1844 and 1846, no recovery can be had by action, nor by way of set-off, for intoxicating liquors sold in this State by a person not licensed to sell. Bancroft v. Dumas, 21 Vt. 456. Boutwell v. Foster, 24 Vt. 485; nor upon a promissory note given therefor. Briggs v. Campbell, 25 Vt. 704.

119. Under G. S. c. 94, s. 82, and on common principles, the seller of intoxicating liquors in violation of law cannot maintain an action based upon any right of stoppage in transitu, nor ask the aid of the law in reclaiming possession of the liquors. Howe v. Stewart, 40 Vt. 145.

120. If one participates in an illegal sale, any portion of which is transacted within this State, he becomes through such participation a partaker in the illegality, and the law will not aid him in the recovery of the stipulated price. But if the vendor does nothing, either by himself or agent, to forward the illegal contract within the State, he may recover, notwithstanding he may know the illegal purpose to which the article is to be put in another jurisdiction. Backman v. Wright, 27 Vt. 187. Territt v. Bartlett, 21 Vt. 184. Backman v. Mussey, 31 Vt. 547. McConihe v. McMann, 27 Vt. 95.

121. Where intoxicating liquors were sold in this State by an agent of the vendor's residing in another State, and he knew they were intended for sale in this State in violation of law, the contract was held to be illegal, although the liquors were delivered in such other State where the sale would have been lawful; and that a note given therefor was void in the hands of a party having notice of the consideration, although executed in such other State. Converse v. Foster, 32 Vt. 828; and see Territt v. Bartlett, 21 Vt. 184. Smith v. Allen, 23 Vt. 298. Howe v. Stewart, 40 Vt. 145.

122. If the seller of intoxicating liquor, in New York, to a person in Vermont, knows that the purchaser intends it for sale in violation of the laws of Vermont, and, as part of the contract of purchase, or in the execution of the contract in the mode of delivery afterwards directed, intentionally aids the purchaser to evade and violate the laws of Vermont, by doing some positive act, though slight, in furtherance of such design of the purchaser, such as sending the liquor in some concealed or disguised form;—Held, that the contract of sale is thereby rendered invalid, and no recovery can be had upon it. Gaylord v. Soragen, 32 Vt. 110. Aiken v. Blaisdell, 41 Vt. 655.

123. Where an order for intoxicating liquor was drawn in this State by the defendant, residing here, and was forwarded by mail to the plaintiffs at their place of business in Connecticut, and the liquors were there delivered to a common carrier in the usual course of business and thus transported to the defendant in this State;—Held, that the situs of the contract was in Connecticut, and was not void as contravening the Vermont liquor law, although the plaintiffs knew that the defendant intended to sell the liquor in violation of our law,—he having done nothing, in the mode of packing or forwarding the liquor, or otherwise, to aid the defendant in the evasion or violation of the law. Tuttle v. Holland, 43 Vt. 542.

124. The owner of intoxicating liquor put it in the hands of the defendant for illegal sale, under an arrangement between them and the plaintiff that the defendant should so sell the liquor and pay the proceeds to the plaintiff, to apply upon the defendant's debt to him. Held, that the plaintiff was so far a party to the illegal contract and sale, that he could not recover the proceeds. Buck v. Albee, 26 Vt. 184.

125. A quantity of intoxicating liquor was put in the hands of the defendant, who had a license to sell for medicinal purposes, under an arrangement between him, the owner, and the plaintiff, that he should sell and pay the proceeds to the plaintiff. Held, that although the defendant sold the liquors for other purposes and in violation of law, and this by an understanding and arrangement with the owner, yet, if the plaintiff was not privy thereto, he could recover the proceeds of the sale. Buck v. Albee, 27 Vt. 190.

126. The purchaser of intoxicating liquors, though in violation of law, acquires the property therein, and such liquors are subject to attachment by his creditors. Howe v. Stewart, 40 Vt. 145.

127. One is liable as trustee for the proceeds of intoxicating liquor sold by him, though in violation of law, as agent of the principal defendant; also for the value of such liquor on hand at the time of service of the trustee process, but disposed of afterwards, though consigned to him by the principal defendant for illegal sale. Thayer v. Partridge, 47 Vt. 423.

128. A trustee cannot deduct from the credits in his hands, a claim for money paid the principal defendant upon the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors. The only remedy to recover for such payments is the action given by G. S. c. 94, s. 32. Id.

129. Before the passage of the liquor act of 1852 (G. S. c. 94);—Held, that a promissory note given for the price of liquors illegally sold, though void as to the payee, was valid and collectible in the hands of a bona fide holder for value without notice. Pindar v. Barlow, 31 Vt. 529. Converse v. Foster, 32 Vt. 828.

130. But under G. S. c. 94, s. 32, which provides that "no action of any kind shall be had or maintained in any court in this State, for the recovery or possession of intoxicating liquor, or the value thereof, except such as is sold or purchased in accordance with the provisions of this chapter";—Held, that such note was absolutely void, even in the hands of such bona fide holder. Streit v. Sanborn, 47 Vt. 702.

INTOXICATION.

1. Where one enters into a contract while in such a state of intoxication as to render him incapable of the exercise of his understanding, he may avoid it, although his intoxication was not procured by the other party, but was purely voluntary. Barrett v. Buxton, 2 Aik. 167. 24 Vt. 425. Conant v. Jackson, 16 Vt. 335.

2. In order to avoid a contract by reason of intoxication, it must be of that degree which prevents the party from knowing the consequences of his contract. Foot v. Tencksbury, 2 Vt. 97.

3. Intoxication, such as to charge a party with negligence, must be of such degree as to render him incapable of acting with ordinary care and prudence. Cassedy v. Stockbridge, 21 Vt. 391.

4. Whenever a man becomes deprived of his memory and understanding, he is entitled to legal protection as an insane person, although he has become such by his own imprudence or misconduct; as, by excessive and continued intoxication. It is the state and condition of the mind itself which the law notices, and not the causes that produced them. Bliss v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 24 Vt. 424. Conant v. Jackson, 16 Vt. 335.

5. Equity will not lend its aid to enforce a contract obtained from a man when intoxicated, though his intoxication was purely voluntary; and in relation to persons whose minds are prostrated or have become stupefied from a course of previous intoxication, so as to be incapable of judging upon the propriety of what they do, the court will make a strict examination, as to whether the contract does not contain evidence that advantage was taken of those habits. Conant v. Jackson.

JAIL.

(Prisoner; Jail bond.)

- I. JAIL; COMMITMENT.
- II. DISCHARGE OF POOR DEBTORS.
- III. JAIL BOND.

- 1. Validity; Breach.
- 2. Release.
- 3. Assignment.
- 4. Action on jail bond.
- 5. Action against sheriff.

- I. JAIL; COMMITMENT.

1. Repairing jail. Under the authority given to the judges of the county court to order necessary repairs and improvements of the county property, they may, by a committee, repair the county jail and out-buildings and build a woodhouse for the jail-house, and draw orders therefor. Campbell v. Franklin County, 27 Vt. 178.

2. Breaking jail. It is an offense under G. S. c. 115, s. 11, for a prisoner confined in jail, though alone, to break it open in order to escape. State v. Fletcher, 32 Vt. 427.

3. Commitment. Where a tax-collector commits a delinquent to jail, he must then leave with the jailer an attested copy of his warrant with a certificate of his doings thereon,—not necessarily simultaneously, but as soon after the commitment as a man of ordinary business capacity, exercising due diligence and dispatch, can perform the labor required to do the act. Boardman v. Goldsmith, 48 Vt. 408.

4. Where the plaintiff was arrested upon a warrant by a deputy sheriff and was lodged in jail, not as a commitment, but for temporary custody, and no copy of the warrant was left with the jailer, who was the sheriff, nor any return made upon the warrant;—Held, that the jailer was not liable for the penalty under G. S. c. 48, s. 23, for neglect to furnish the plaintiff a copy of the warrant. McMahon v. Edger-ton, 34 Vt. 77.

5. Where a party was arrested on a capias issued upon affidavit under G. S. c. 33, ss. 76–79, and appeared before the authority signing the writ for examination and discharge;—Held, that the magistrate had authority in his discretion to adjourn the hearing to a future day, and that in the interim the officer having the writ might commit the party to jail upon the writ, and that during such time, at least, the party was not entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus. In re Foot, 31 Vt. 505.

6. If one be committed to jail on a sufficient process, that is a full defense to an action by him for false imprisonment, though he be at the same time committed on an irregular or void process, unless it is made to appear that he was put to some additional inconvenience or loss by reason of the void process. Lewis v. Avery, 8 Vt. 287.

7. —in wrong county. An execution, issued from the county court of B county and regular on its face, commanded the imprisonment of the debtor in the jail of the county of B. The defendant, an officer, arrested the debtor in the county of W and, although there was a legal jail in that county, committed him to the jail of the county of B according to the terms of the precept. Held, that he was liable in an action for false imprisonment. (G. S. c. 38, ss. 59, 60.) Clayton v. Scott, 45 Vt. 386.

8. Effect to discharge lien. All former liens upon goods or lands, created by an attachment but not perfected, are abandoned and lost by the commitment of the body of the debtor. But this does not operate as a release of collateral remedies, so far perfected as not to depend upon any proceedings under the execution for their support. If the creditor release the body, and, under the statute, take a new execution against the property of the debtor, this is a new and independent remedy, and cannot be connected with any previous attachment lien. Willard v. Lull, 20 Vt. 373.

9. Close jail. The only difference between prisoners in jail and those in close jail under a certified execution, is, that the former may be admitted to the jail liberties, while the latter cannot. There is no difference in the mode of their confinement, nor as to what would constitute an escape. Vt. Life Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 48 Vt. 156.

10. Copy of process. A jailer is not liable for an escape for not detaining a prisoner, where, from the copy of the process left with him on commitment, it appears that the process was void, or did not authorize the commitment—as, where the copy shows the process to be a summons. He is not bound to look beyond the copy—that being indispensable to a legal commitment. Kidder v. Barker, 18 Vt. 454.

11. Upon the copy of a mittimus left with the jailer, with a return thereon, there was no certificate that it was a true copy of the original mittimus and return; but the return upon the original showed that the copy had been left, and that it was true and attested. Held, on habeas corpus, that it sufficiently appeared upon the face of the copy left, that the signature of the officer to the return on the copy was intended to authenticate the paper as a copy of the precept and return, and that this mere informality did not render the commitment and detention illegal. Tracy, ex parte, 25 Vt. 98.

12. Fine. Where a mittimus only requires the jailer to keep the convict until he pay the fine, costs of commitment and jailer's fees (omitting the costs of prosecution), the prisoner will not be discharged on habeas corpus, where he has not paid or tendered the fine and charges named. The mittimus is good as far as it goes. Howard, ex parte, 26 Vt. 205.

13. Where a sheriff, being jailer, took of a prisoner in jail his note for a fine and costs, legally imposed, and discharged the prisoner;—Held, that this was equivalent to the receipt of so much money, and that the sheriff became debtor for the fine and costs; that this was not against public policy, and that the note was upon good consideration and the maker liable thereon. St. Albans Bank v. Dillon, 30 Vt. 122.

14. Jailer's charges. The negligent escape of a prisoner confined in jail for debt, with his voluntary return to jail, does not absolve the town chargeable for his support, in an action by the jailer for support of the prisoner thereafter furnished. Sanderson v. Rutland, 43 Vt. 385.

15. A jailer's account for keeping a person committed to jail under the vagrant act of 1864, is not chargeable to the State and should not be audited as such by the court auditor. Mandamus refused. Drew v. Russell, 47 Vt. 250.

II. DISCHARGE OF POOR DEBTORS.

16. Who entitled. A prisoner in jail upon an execution issued by the court of chancery for the payment of money, is entitled, as in cases at law, to the benefit of the poor debtor's oath. Cannon v. Norton, 16 Vt. 334. 32 Vt. 387.

17. Jail commissioners. The board that acts in the process of discharging a poor debtor from jail being of special and limited jurisdiction, their jurisdiction must be shown, in order to sustain their decision, by proof of the prior proceedings, and that they were regular,—as, that due notice was given to the creditor, or that he was before them; otherwise, their certificate of discharge is void and affords no protection to the sheriff, if sued for an escape, nor to the surety upon the jail-bond. Paine v. Ely, 1 D. Chip. 37. S. C., N. Chip. 14. 1 Vt. 257. 25 Vt. 350.

18. A plea setting up a discharge by jail commissioners must contain such averments of special facts as show that the acting commissioners had jurisdiction, and had the parties before them. Hubbell v. Dimick, 1 Vt. 253.

19. The discharge of a poor debtor by jail commissioners, without notice to the creditor, in a case where the statute requires such notice, is void, and does not justify the sheriff in permitting the prisoner to depart. Dean v. Lowry, 4 Vt. 481.

20. On the admission of a prisoner to the poor debtor's oath, his departure from jail, or the jail limits, is an escape and breach of the jail-bond, unless the jail commissioners shall have first delivered to the jailer the proper certificate of discharge. Staniford v. Barry, Brayt. 200. Haight v. Richards, 3 Vt. 77. 15 Vt. 617.

21. A certificate of discharge of jail commissioners which misdescribes the execution upon which the debtor is committed, as to the sums therein, does not authorize his discharge, although the proper oath may have been administered. Holbrook v. Pearce, 15 Vt. 616.

22. The proceedings of jail commissioners may be proved by parole, they not being a court of record. Richardson v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 757.

23. Notice to creditor. The citation issued by jail commissioners must be directed to and be served upon the creditor in the execution, though but a trustee for the real creditor. Hubbell v. Dimick, 1 Vt. 253.

24. The indorsement of the name of the attorney of record upon an execution, is a sufficient appointment of him as agent, under the statute of 1820, for the purpose of service of notice of an application to take the poor debtor's oath. Dean v. Lowry, 4 Vt. 481. Bennett v. Morrill, 3 Vt. 322.

25. Where notice is attempted to be given to the creditor of the debtor's application to be admitted to the poor debtor's oath, the jail commissioners are to determine on the sufficiency of the notice and certify accordingly, and their decision is conclusive and cannot be re-examined. Allen v. Hall, 8 Vt. 34. Raymond v. Southerland, 3 Vt. 494. 12 Vt. 514. 40 Vt. 162. Childs v. Morse, 2 Tyl. 221. Brush v. Robinson, 2 Tyl. 358. Adams v. Mattocks, Brayt. 199. Thornton v. Robinson, Brayt. 199. Smith v. Quinton, Brayt. 200.

26. The certificate of jail commissioners discharging a poor debtor, when made and delivered as the law directs, is a sufficient bar to a recovery against the sheriff for an escape, and to a recovery on the jail-bond. Id. Haight v. Richards, 3 Vt. 77, 80.

27. Where the certificates of jail commissioners, given to the jailer, and to the debtor, after having administered to him the poor debtor's oath, show that the creditor was notified, this is sufficient to warrant the discharge of the debtor from jail, whether the creditor appeared or not; and a contradiction of the two certificates in this last respect is not material. Carter v. Miller, 12 Vt. 513.

28. Pleading. In an action for an escape, a plea in bar alleging a discharge by jail commissioners, was held sufficient, where the declaration did not aver an indorsement on the execution of a certificate, that the cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act of the defendant. (Stat. 1823.) Barber v. Chase, 3 Vt. 340.

III. JAIL-BOND.

1. Validity; Breach.

29. Validity. If a sheriff admit a prisoner to the jail liberties in a case not authorized by statute, he is guilty of an escape; and a jail-bond taken in such case is void. Lowrey v. Barney, 2 D. Chip. 11. Leonard v. Hoyt, Brayt. 73.

30. A jail-bond taken to the sheriff from a prisoner committed under process from the United States court, was held void. Warren v. Russel, 1 D. Chip. 193. But see Randolph v. Donaldson, 9 Cranch. 76.

31. The illegality of the imprisonment is a defense to an action upon a jail-bond,—as, where no such judgment was rendered, or no such execution issued as is described in the jail-bond; or that the execution was illegal, as having been issued against the express provisions of a statute, &c. Witt v. Marsh, 14 Vt. 303.

32. In an action on a jail-bond, it cannot be objected that the execution did not issue regularly in pursuance of a rule. Gibson v. Scott, 7 Vt. 147.

33. On a process and judgment in favor of A, of R, the execution issued in favor of A, of F, on which the debtor was committed and gave a jail-bond. It appearing from the pleadings that there was such a person as A, of R;—Held, that the jail-bond was void. Sheldon v. Kelsey, Brayt. 86.

34. A misdescription, in a jail-bond, of the execution as regards the sums recovered and to be collected, avoids the bond. Sherwin v. Bliss, 4 Vt. 96. 16 Vt. 651. Avery v. Lewis, 10 Vt. 332. 15 Vt. 617.

35. A judgment was rendered at an adjourned term of court holden on the 22nd day of June, and the execution thereon so recited it. The jail-bond recited the judgment as rendered on the first Monday of June. In an action upon the bond;—Held, that this misdescription was fatal, and the plaintiff could not recover. Sherwin v. Bliss.

36. A jail-bond executed after the commitment, although ante-dated, is none the less valid. Clark v. Kidder, 12 Vt. 689.

37. Effect. The surety upon a jail-bond engages against the default of his principal, and is liable to the same extent as his principal. Paine v. Ely, 1 D. Chip. 87. S. C., N. Chip. 14.

38. Breach—Escape. Where the jail limits existing at the time of the admission of a prisoner to the liberties were afterwards enlarged, and again contracted, and the prisoner failed to return and remain within the limits last fixed, this was held to be an escape. Willard v. Hathaway, Brayt. 75.

39. An escape of a debtor from the liberties of the jail is a breach of the jail-bond, and his return to the liberties before action brought does not cure the breach, or escape; nor can he by such return become again a prisoner, but the sheriff must look to the bond alone for his security. Jameson v. Isaacs, 12 Vt. 611. 43 Vt. 390.

40. Meane process. Held, not a bar to an action for breach of a jail-bond given on commitment on meane process, that the debtor remained within the precinct of the sheriff and so that he might have been taken on the execution; but the bail was allowed to surrender the debtor on payment of the costs, and the penalty of the bond was chancered to one cent. Warner v. Eames, 3 Tyl. 121.

41. The surety in a jail-bond given on commitment on meane process, is exonerated by the same matters that would exonerate him if he had become bail by indorsing the original writ,—as, the death of his principal—although the statute (G. S. c. 121, s. 26) does not in terms so provide. Graves v. Dyer, 23 Vt. 614.

42. An action cannot be maintained against a sheriff for the escape of a debtor, who gave a jail-bond on his commitment to jail on meane process, until after the sheriff's refusal to assign the bond on demand made. The statute contains no exceptions, and the court cannot make them—certainly not, unless in the most obvious cases of necessity. Spear v. Holmes, 24 Vt. 547.

2. Release.

43. Release by creditor. The least inducement, or even countenance, given by a creditor to the departure of his debtor from the jail liberties, is a good defense to an action on the jail-bond for an escape. Hobbs v. Whitney, 2 Tyl. 409. 7 Vt. 164.

44. A license by the creditor to his debtor to leave the jail liberties will not release the surety on the jail-bond, if revoked before the escape and before any act done injurious to the surety. Hooker v. Daniels, Brayt. 32.

45. A written proposition by a creditor to his debtor, in the jail liberties, of terms of settlement and discharge of the jail bond, was held not to authorize a departure from the liberties before compliance with such terms. Harvey v. Richardson, 13 Vt. 549.

46. If the plaintiff, assignee of a bail bond, agrees to have a suit thereon reviewed on nominal bail, whereby the debt is lost, the sheriff is exonerated. Wait v. Dana, Brayt. 37.

47. Effect as to the debt. The escape of a debtor in prison on execution, with consent of the creditor, discharges the debt; and this result cannot be saved by stipulation. Enos v. Fenno, Brayt. 36. Hyde v. Long, 4 Vt. 581.

48. If the creditor consents to the escape of his debtor from prison, and the debtor in consequence of such consent goes at large, it is a discharge of the debt. So, if he makes a contract with his debtor which induces or causes him to depart from the liberties, this is a discharge of the jail-bond. Conant v. Patterson, 7 Vt. 163. Carter v. Talcott, 10 Vt. 471.

49. The discharge of a jail-bond discharges the debt, not only as to the party in prison but as to all others liable for the same original debt, though not sued; on the principle, that a discharge of one of two joint obligors is a discharge of both. Hyde v. Long, 4 Vt. 581.

50. Where the creditor discharged from imprisonment one of two joint debtors, although after the escape of the other;—Held, that this discharged the debt as to both, and barred an action on the jail-bond. Bailey v. Kimbal, 1 D. Chip. 151.

51. Where the creditor discharges the body of his debtor committed to jail on execution, he is entitled under the Act of 1808 (G. S. c. 121, s. 60), as matter of right and without notice to the debtor, to an alias execution against his property; and upon such execution interest is collectible, as in other cases. Martin v. Kilbourne, 11 Vt. 93. See Dennison v. Slason, 39 Vt. 606.

52. — as to interest. A debtor upon the jail liberties by commitment on execution, may discharge himself by payment of the judgment, execution and fees of commitment without interest upon the judgment. Allen v. Adams, 15 Vt. 16.

53. So, where the creditor voluntarily discharges his debtor from imprisonment on execution, he cannot recover, in an action of debt upon the judgment, interest upon the judgment for the time that the debtor was imprisoned; and quære, whether the action of debt will lie in such case. Dennison v. Slason, 39 Vt. 606.

3. Assignment.

54. The high bailiff, on the commitment of the sheriff to jail, has authority to take from him a jail-bond and to assign it to the creditor. Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40.

55. The assignment of a jail-bond must be by the sheriff who took it, whether in office, or not, when assigned. Kendall v. Dodge, 3 Vt. 360.

56. Where a sheriff put his name and seal on a jail bond, and delivered it to the creditor's attorney with parol authority to write an assignment over the signature, which the attorney afterwards did;—Held, that this was a valid assignment,—the statute of frauds not applying. Id.

57. Under the provision of the statute making a jail bond "assignable to the creditor";—Held, that an action on the case lies against the sheriff for refusing to assign. Vilas v. Barker, 20 Vt. 603.

58. In an action against a sheriff for refusing to assign a jail-bond taken on meane process, and for suffering the debtor to escape, it is not a defense that the plaintiff had added a new count to his declaration for a different cause of action, after the taking of the bond and after the escape. Id.

4. Action on jail-bond.

59. A sheriff may maintain an action upon a jail-bond given to himself by a debtor committed upon execution in favor of such sheriff. Lourey v. Hine, 2 D. Chip. 59.

60. In case of the death of a sheriff, the right of action upon a jail bond, not assigned, passes to his personal representative, who may recover thereon for the benefit of the creditor. Lyman v. Mower, 2 Vt. 517.

61. The sheriff has a right of action on a jail bond immediately on the escape of the debtor, whether he has paid anything to the creditor or not, and may recover the amount of the judgment and interest. Ib.

62. A jail-bond is taken principally for the indemnity of the sheriff, and belongs to him until assigned, and he may prosecute it for his own protection, or even compromise and discharge it, if not done to defraud the creditor. Weeks v. Stevens, 7 Vt. 73. 21 Vt. 402.

63. Defense. In an action by a sheriff upon a jail-bond, no defense can avail the defendant that would not be allowed if the bond had been formally assigned to the creditor, and the action had been brought in his name. Lyman v. Mower, 2 Vt. 517. Weeks v. Hunt, 6 Vt. 15. 6 Vt. 686.

64. It is no defense to such action, that the debtor escaped more than six years before the suit, and that this was known to the sheriff and the creditor. Keith v. Ware, 6 Vt. 680.

65. The statute of limitations does not commence to run upon a jail bond from the time of the escape, but only from the time of a demand by the creditor upon the sheriff for an assignment of the bond, and a refusal. Keith v. Ware, 2 Vt. 174. Kendall v. Dodge, 3 Vt. 360.

66. Pleadings—Declaration. A declaration on a jail bond taken and assigned by the high bailiff need not allege the cause of his acting as sheriff. Buck v. Marsh, Brayt. 125.

67. In declaring upon a jail bond, it is sufficient to state the process and that the debtor was imprisoned in jail thereon, without further matter of inducement. U. S. Bank v. Tucker, 7 Vt. 184.

68. A declaration upon a jail bond was held ill on demurrer, because it did not aver an imprisonment in jail at the time of giving the bond. Gregory v. Thrall, 28 Vt. 805. See Bank v. Tucker, 7 Vt. 187.

69. Plea. Non damnificatus is not a good plea to an action on a jail bond. Keith v. Ware, 2 Vt. 174. S. C., 6 Vt. 690.

70. To an action on a jail bond nothing can be pleaded which might have been pleaded to the original action, or which existed previous to the rendition of the judgment. Allen v. Fisher, 1 D. Chip. 277.

71. In such action, the recital of the judgment in the bond does not estop the defendant from pleading nul tiel record of such judgment. Stillman v. Barney, 4 Vt. 187. 9 Vt. 178.

72. Where a sheriff promised a debtor within the liberties, that "if he escaped he would not sue him until he had first prosecuted the bail";—Held, that such agreement could not be pleaded as a defeasance of the jail bond, though the principal was joined with the bail in the action upon the bond. Rice v. Pollard, 1 Tyl. 230.

73. Rule of damages. The rule of damages in a recovery upon a jail bond is the amount of the creditor's judgment, with interest from its date. Lyman v. Mower, 2 Vt. 517. Keith v. Ware, Ib. 174.

74. In an action against a surety on a jail bond;—Held, that interest, as damages, should not be allowed upon, and so as to exceed, the penalty. Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463.

75. In an action on the case by bail in a jail bond, for forcing the principal out of the limits, the penalty of the bond does not furnish the rule of damages, but the amount of the debt specified in the bond, and this determines the jurisdiction. Barker v. Willard, Brayt. 148.

5. Action against sheriff.

76. The nominal plaintiff in ejectment cannot maintain an action against the sheriff, for the escape of a defendant committed on an execution in his own name, issued on the judgment in the ejectment suit. Chipman v. Sawyer, 1 Tyl. 83. S. C., 2 Tyl. 61.

77. Where a debtor, admitted to the liberties of the jail upon jail bond, escaped in 1841, and the creditor brought his action against the sheriff in 1846;—Held, nothing else appearing, that the court could not presume that the plaintiff had lost his remedy by unreasonable delay. Wheeler v. Pettes, 21 Vt. 398.

78. The statute does not require the creditor to carry a jail bond into another State to be enforced; and if no sufficient means of enforcing collection are to be had within our own jurisdiction, the poverty of the signers is sufficiently established to sustain an action against the sheriff. Ib.

79. The sheriff guaranties the actual sufficiency of the jail bond taken by him when the debtor is in execution; and though the form of the action against the sheriff is case as for an escape of the debtor, yet the rule of damages is the amount of the debt. Ib. Udall v. Rice, 1 Tyl. 218.

80. In an action against a sheriff for the escape of a former sheriff committed to jail upon an extent for non-collection of taxes;—Held, that the defendant might show, upon the question of damages, the poverty of such former sheriff at the time of his escape, although he could not have been discharged by taking the poor debtor's oath. State's Treasurer v. Weeks, 4 Vt. 215; and see Middlebury v. Haight, 1 Vt. 428.

JUDGMENT.

- I. IN GENERAL; DIFFERENT KINDS.
- II. VALIDITY.
- III. CONCLUSIVENESS AND EFFECT.
- IV. JUDGMENT OF ANOTHER STATE.
- V. DECREES IN CHANCERY.
- VI. ACTION ON JUDGMENT.

I. IN GENERAL; DIFFERENT KINDS.

1. When rendered. A judgment is considered as rendered on the last day of the term of court. Hoar v. Jail Com'rs., 2 Vt. 402. Day v. Lamb, 7 Vt. 426. Bradish v. State, 35 Vt. 452.

2. When it takes effect. A judgment takes effect from the time it is rendered, and not from the time it is recorded. Huntington v. Charlotte, 15 Vt. 46.

3. On the merits. A judgment that the plaintiff is barred, and that the defendant recover his costs, is a judgment on the merits,—ends the case, puts the parties out of court, and is a bar to a further action for the same cause. Dixon v. Sinclair, 4 Vt. 354.

4. Default. The mere entry of a default does not amount to the rendering of a final judgment. The default is an incident which entitles the plaintiff to a judgment, but does not determine either the kind, or amount of such judgment. Further proceedings are required,—as the assessment of damages, &c.,—until which time, the action must be regarded as still pending. Sheldon v. Sheldon, 37 Vt. 152; and see Webb v. Webb, 16 Vt. 636.

5. Nunc pro tunc under a rule. In an action of trespass qua. clau., the defendant justified under a right of way pleaded. After the close of the evidence, the court ruled that the evidence did not support the plea to the extent of the right claimed. The defendant then got leave to amend his plea upon payment of costs, and the case was continued under a rule that unless the costs should be paid in 30 days, judgment should be entered for the plaintiff, as of that term, for nominal damages and costs. The costs were not paid and judgment was entered according to the rule. In a second action for a subsequent trespass, in which the same right of way was set up in defense;—Held, that the first judgment was conclusive against the right pleaded, like a judgment by confession or consent, as if rendered by default or nil dicit; and that the proceedings and evidence in the first case were important only as enabling the plaintiff more readily to show the identity of the questions litigated. Atwood v. Robbins, 35 Vt. 530.

Judgments under special rules, see RULES.

6. Pro forma. Where the county court upon the report of an auditor rendered a pro forma judgment, it cannot be claimed that the county court drew any inferences of fact beyond the facts expressly found by the auditor. Brown v. Mudgett, 40 Vt. 68.

7. Retraxit. In ejectment, verdict was rendered for the defendant, exceptions by the plaintiff were allowed and execution stayed, but without a formal entry of judgment on the verdict. Without entry in the supreme court, the plaintiff paid the defendant's costs and the case was no further prosecuted. Beyond the docket minutes, no record was made up. Held, that such payment of costs was a renunciation of the plaintiff's claim in the action, and in effect equal to a judgment against him. Armstrong v. Colby, 47 Vt. 359.

8. Judgment a "contract." An action on a judgment is founded on a "contract, express or implied," within G. S. c. 33, s. 76, and process against the body cannot issue therein, except on affidavit, &c. Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43.

9. The same, as to scire facias against bail backing a writ. Stoughton v. Barrett, 20 Vt. 385.

II. VALIDITY.

10. An entry of judgment for the right sum, but inaccurately named damages, instead of debt, or so much debt and so much damages, is well enough. Carver v. Adams, 40 Vt. 552. Sinclair v. Gadoomb, 1 Vt. 32.

11. Judgment for a sum exceeding the ad damnum of the writ is erroneous. Anon., Brayt. 72.

12. A judgment rendered by default, at the first term, against a non-resident who has had no notice of the suit, is void. Rider v. Alexander, 1 D. Chip. 267. Sed quare, 25 Vt. 350. 27 Vt. 26.

13. A judgment against a defendant who was out of the State and had no notice, cannot be overhauled by plea in an action upon such judgment. The only remedy against it is by writ of review under the statute. Jones v. Ames, Brayt. 189.

14. Want of actual notice to the defendant of the pendency of a suit does not render the judgment void; as, in that case, his rights are otherwise protected by statutory enactments. Ellsworth v. Learned, 31 Vt. 535. 30 Vt. 202. Beach v. Abbott, 6 Vt. 586.

15. A judgment rendered by default, without notice in fact, and without the appearance of any one in the defendant's behalf, is not necessarily a nullity. Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26.

16. The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is not void for error or irregularity of process, or other previous proceedings. Kellogg, ex parte, 6 Vt. 509. Allen v. Huntington, 2 Aik. 249. Peck v. Smith, 8 Vt. 265. Kelley v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261. Gilman v. Thompson, 11 Vt. 643. 4 Vt. 444. Ross v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 265. 32 Vt. 626.

17. There is no case in which the judgment of a court of record of general jurisdiction has been held void, unless for a defect of jurisdiction. Redfield, C. J., in Hammond v. Wilder, 25 Vt. 342.

18. Where a writ of attachment, returnable before a justice, was served in another county by attaching property less than twelve days before the return day, and the defendant made no appearance and judgment was given by default;—Held, that the judgment was valid. Nor should the officer be regarded as a trespasser. Such defect of service is matter of abatement only. Id.

19. In case of a judgment rendered against an absent defendant, upon service by attachment of property without personal notice, the omission to give a recognizance for a writ of review does not affect the regularity of the judgment, but merely makes it irregular to issue an execution thereon. Stearns v. Wrisley, 30 Vt. 661.

20. A judgment is not to be held void, as matter of law, because the writ, being against a non resident, was served by the attachment of property of but a nominal value; nor because the return of service was defective; nor because the defendant had no actual notice of the suit; nor because the justice continued the suit for only one day before judgment; nor for all these causes combined. Stevens v. Fisher, 30 Vt. 200; and see Collins v. Merriam, 31 Vt. 622. Hamilton v. Wilder, 31 Vt. 695.

21. The adjudication by the court of proof of notice to an absent defendant, is conclusive, and cannot be re-examined on a writ of error. Olcott v. Hutchins, 4 Vt. 17.

III. CONCLUSIVENESS AND EFFECT.

22. A judgment cannot be impeached collaterally;—as, by proof that the original writ was not served on all the defendants. Tappan v. Nutting, Brayt. 137; or by proof of facts which would have been a defense to the original action. Nason v. Sewall, Brayt. 119.

23. Judgment of reversal at one term is conclusive upon the court at a subsequent term, when called upon to render such judgment as the county court ought to have rendered. Slade v. Day, Brayt. 72.

24. Every regular judgment, while in force, is conclusive as to everything which might have been pleaded or given in evidence in defense, or to lessen the damages, except matters of offset; and this applies as well to judgments rendered on confession, as to those in adversary suits. Barney v. Goff, 1 D. Chip. 304. 41 Vt. 117.

25. The judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties, while it remains in force, is conclusive upon the parties and their privies as to all matters involved in the suit; and cannot be impeached by the parties or their privies collaterally, nor except by some proper proceeding bearing directly upon the judgment itself to vacate and set it aside. Porter v. Gile, 47 Vt. 620.

26. A verdict and judgment are conclusive evidence between the same parties in a subsequent suit, of whatever it was necessary for the jury to find in order to warrant the verdict in the former action, but no further. Town v. Lamphere, 34 Vt. 365.

27. Parol evidence. Where the record of a former judgment does not show the precise point litigated, parol evidence is admissible to show it; and, when shown, the judgment is as conclusive as if shown by the record. Atwood v. Robbins, 35 Vt. 530. Isaac v. Clark, 12 Vt. 692. Gray v. Pingry, 17 Vt. 419. Perkins v. Walker, 19 Vt. 144.

28. Presumption. Where there is a general verdict upon a declaration containing several counts, the legal presumption, prima facie, is that everything which might be presented on such a declaration, was presented and adjudicated. Hutchinson, J., in Squires v. Whipple, 2 Vt. 114.

29. Where a case is submitted to a jury involving two or more issues, with evidence to sustain them all, and a general verdict is rendered, such verdict is prima facie evidence that all the issues were found for the party for whom the verdict is; and when a judgment thereon is presented as a bar in a subsequent suit, the burden is upon the opposite party to rebut such prima facie presumption. White v. Simonds, 33 Vt. 178. See Squires v. Whipple, 2 Vt. 111. Dixon v. Sinclear, 4 Vt. 354.

30. The decision of a question tried by a judicial tribunal, having jurisdiction of the matter, is presumed to have been upon the merits of the controversy, and to be a final settlement of it. The contrary, if claimed, must be proved. Stearns v. Stearns, 32 Vt. 678.

31. The defendant had recovered judgment by default against the plaintiffs for the use of his horse while it was being kept by them. The plaintiffs subsequent to this action sought to recover of the defendant for the keeping of the horse. Held, that the defendant's just claim in his suit against the plaintiffs was for the use of the horse, they keeping it; and that, nothing appearing to the contrary, the presumption was that the damages in that suit were assessed upon that basis; consequently, that that adjudication included and merged the plaintiffs' claim for keeping the horse. Bemis v. Jennings, 46 Vt. 45.

32. Previous payments. The plaintiff sold the defendant a gun to be paid for in sawing at the defendant's mill. The defendant sawed all the logs furnished, and afterwards sued the plaintiff and recovered judgment therefor, the plaintiff not having presented his claim for the gun. Held, that this did not entitle the plaintiff to maintain an action for the gun sold, without furnishing other logs to be sawed; that he should have resisted the recovery when sued by the defendant; and that he was concluded thereby. Downer v. Frizzle, 10 Vt. 541.

33. Where money was paid and received as part payment upon a note, and the note was afterwards sued and judgment rendered upon it for the full amount, although by default;—Held, by a majority, that no action lay to recover the money so paid, though evidenced by a receipt to be so applied on the note. Corey v. Gale, 18 Vt. 639. 10 Vt. 231. 28 Vt. 657. 31 Vt. 372.

34. A party sued upon a note claimed to have made certain payments thereon, but the jury found against the claim, and judgment passed against him for the amount of the note. Held, that such judgment was a bar to an action to recover for the items so before claimed as payments;—that the party could not, by shifting his claim, take another chance to substantiate it. Peach v. Mills, 14 Vt. 371.

35. In an action of book account, the defendant declared upon certain notes in set-off, to which the plaintiff pleaded payment, and an issue was formed. Upon the auditing of the accounts, the plaintiff submitted to the auditor the same matters which he claimed as payments on the notes, and they were adjudicated upon their merits by the auditor. Held, that the plaintiff was concluded thereby, upon a trial of the plea in set-off. Stearns v. Stearns, 32 Vt. 678.

36. Items credited to the defendant on the plaintiff's book were allowed to the defendant in a judgment against him before a justice, although he refused to present any claim in offset, or to submit any question to the determination of the justice except the question of a settlement. No appeal was taken. In a subsequent suit by that defendant against that plaintiff;—Held, that he must be regarded as having acquiesced in the adjudication, and that those items were barred by the judgment. Gilbert v. Earl, 47 Vt. 9.

37. Other matters. In an action against A and B, partners, final judgment was rendered against A, and in favor of B. In a subsequent suit in chancery brought by B against those other parties;—Held, that the judgment was conclusive that the debt sued for was the separate debt of A. Miner v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 610.

38. A judgment recovered by the vendor for the price of an article manufactured to order under a special contract, is a bar to a suit by the vendee for a breach of the contract. Gilson v. Bingham, 43 Vt. 410. But see 46 Vt. 209.

39. The defendant contracted to dig a cellar and lay the cellar wall for the plaintiff by a certain time, at a certain price. He completed the job, but not by the time fixed. The defendant brought suit against the plaintiff to recover a balance due upon the job, and recovered judgment by default for the full amount of the contract price, deducting payments, and collected the judgment. Afterwards the plaintiff brought this suit to recover damages for the non-completion of the job by the time fixed in the contract. Held, that said judgment and the payment thereof were not a bar to the plaintiff's recovery. Davenport v. Hubbard, 46 Vt. 200.

40. There cannot be a succession of actions to recover damages resulting from one and the same injury; fresh damage does not give a new cause of action. Thus, where a father brought suit to recover damages to himself occasioned by a personal injury to his minor son, and recovered;—Held, that such recovery was a bar to a second action to recover further damages resulting from the same injury, although in the first suit the court restricted his recovery to such damages as he had sustained from loss of his son's services and expenses incurred down to the time of bringing that suit. Whitney v. Clarendon, 18 Vt. 252. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

41. The judgment of a justice of the peace, not appealed from, in trespass qua. clau. where the title of land is involved, is conclusive of the title. Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 209.

As to the effect of a judgment in ejectment, see EJECTMENT.

42. When not a bar. A judgment for the defendant in an action upon a bond given as an arbitration bond, where the transaction was in fact converted into a reference under an order of the probate court, according to the statute, with a report of the referees accepted by the court, was held to be no bar to an action on the award of the referees for the plaintiff, as so approved by said court. Bashelder v. Hanson, 2 Aik. 319.

43. The defendant made a formal attachment of goods of the plaintiff upon a writ against a third person, but without removing them, for which the plaintiff sued him in trespass de bonis, and afterwards, but before trial, the defendant removed the goods under the attachment. On trial upon the general issue, judgment was rendered for the defendant.

Afterwards the plaintiff brought a second action of trespass for the same property. Held, that the first judgment was not a bar. Clark v. Harrington, 4 Vt. 69. Williams, J., dissenting.

44. A recovery (as in trespass) for a wrongful taking of property, where damages are given for the taking only, is not a bar to an action of trover for a subsequent conversion, to recover the value. Stewart v. Martin, 16 Vt. 397. Gates v. Goreham, 5 Vt. 317.

45. Husband and wife were both injured at the same time by reason of a defect in a highway, which was occasioned by one and the same default of the defendant, a railroad corporation. The husband had sued the town and recovered for his injury, and the town, having paid that judgment, sued the defendant for indemnity, and recovered judgment. The husband and wife also brought suit against the town for her personal injury and recovered judgment, which the town paid. In a second action by the town to recover a further indemnity;—Held that the first judgment was not a bar. Newbury v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 25 Vt. 377.

46. The plaintiff was allowed to recover in assumpsit for an item of account, by casualty and mistake omitted in the adjustment of accounts by the auditor in the defendant's action of book account against the plaintiff, notwithstanding the judgment therein—but without costs. Post v. Smike, 48 Vt. 185.

47. In a penal action, a former judgment in a civil suit between the same parties, although the same point was there litigated, is not conclusive, nor admissible, the measure of proof being different. Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457.

48. Privies—Strangers. A judgment, not in rem, is never conclusive except upon the very matter in judgment, and between the very same parties, or their privies either in blood or estate. As to all others, the judgment may be impeached and contradicted by collateral evidence. Nason v. Blaisdell, 12 Vt. 165.

49. The rule that a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive, and cannot be attacked collaterally by showing that it was irregularly or improperly obtained, applies only to parties and privies to the judgment, and in no sense extends to strangers. Atkinson v. Allen, 12 Vt. 619. Ingals v. Brooks, 29 Vt. 401.

50. A record of a judgment is conclusive as to all persons to prove the fact that such a judgment was rendered; but when used to prove matters of fact recited in the judgment, it is conclusive only as to parties and privies. Knapp v. Marlboro, 31 Vt. 674.

51. The conclusiveness of a judgment extends only to collateral attacks. When process is brought directly upon it, to impeach it or set it aside, the whole subject is necessarily open to inquiry, as a mere matter in pais. Redfield, J., in Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 585.

52. The rejection of a claim by commissioners on the estate of a deceased person, is no bar to an action against the survivor. Parmelee v. Woodbridge, Brayt. 132.

53. A judgment in trespass or trover, without satisfaction, is no bar to another action against a different person for the same tort. Sanderson v. Caldwell, 2 Aik. 195.

54. A judgment against one signer of a joint and several promissory note extinguishes the note as to him, but does not affect the liability of the other signers. Sawyer v. White, 19 Vt. 40; and see Tremont Bank v. Paine, 28 Vt. 24.

55. The plaintiff brought trespass against several, including one H, for cutting certain pine and other trees. H had cut the pine trees and sold them to the other defendants. On a former trial of the case in the county court, the plaintiff recovered against all the defendants, except H, for the other timber, but failed to recover against either for the pine trees, on the ground of want of title in the plaintiff. This verdict as to H was final, and was affirmed in the supreme court, and thus he became separated from the other defendants. They reviewed, and at the next trial, put in defense, as to the pine trees, the judgment in favor of H. Held, that such judgment was conclusive in favor of H, and consequently in favor of the defendants who derived their title under him, and were his privies in estate. Morgan v. Barker, 26 Vt. 602.

56. Where a bill was brought by an administrator to set aside a deed executed by his intestate, on the ground that it was made with intent to avoid the payment of a particular debt, or, if not that, that it was a deed of gift supported by no pecuniary consideration, and there was not other estate sufficient to satisfy said debt;—Held, that the defendant, claiming under the deed and not through the estate, was in no manner bound by the judgment of the commissioners allowing the debt claimed. Sprague v. Waldo, 38 Vt. 139.

57. Sureties—Bail. Where sureties, by the express terms of their agreement, or by reasonable implication from the very nature and intent of their obligation, have stipulated to pay the damages and costs which may be recovered against their principal, or otherwise to abide the decree or judgment of a court against the principal, they are bound by the judgment, though they have no notice of the suit,—as, sureties upon a deputy sheriff's bond. Chamberlain v. Godfrey, 36 Vt. 380;—bail in pending suits, who are sureties for costs, &c., and special bail. Parkhurst v. Sumner, 23 Vt. 538.

58. In an action against the sureties upon the bond of a deputy sheriff given to the sheriff, conditioned "to save and keep harmless and indemnify the said sheriff from all actions, suits, troubles, costs, charges, damages and expenses whatsoever, on account or by reason of any malfeasance, misfeasance, or non-feasance of said deputy";—Held, that the sureties were concluded by a judgment rendered against the sheriff for a default of the deputy, of which suit the deputy had notice and defended, although such sureties had no notice of it. Chamberlain v. Godfrey.

59. That a judgment was entered up by collusion between the parties, for the purpose of defrauding the bail, is a matter not concluded by the judgment, but is a good defense to an action on the recognizance. Parkhurst v. Sumner, 28 Vt. 588. Mott v. Hazen, 27 Vt. 208.

60. Obligation to indemnify, &c. An attaching creditor is not concluded by a judgment against the officer for having attached the property, unless he had notice of the suit and opportunity to defend. Peaslee v. Staniford, Brayt. 140. S. C., 1 D. Chip. 170.

61. Where one transfers to another a note and warrants it valid and given upon good consideration, or to be due, and in a suit upon the note in this State, a recovery is had against the title so warranted, such judgment, if obtained without fraud or collusion, will be conclusive evidence against the warrantor as to every fact established by it, if the warrantor, upon reasonable notice and with a fair opportunity to maintain his rights, neglected or refused to do so. Carpenter v. Pier, 30 Vt. 81. Warner v. McGary, 4 Vt. 507. Walker v. Ferrin, 4 Vt. 523.

62. This doctrine is claimed to extend to all cases where a party has, by express agreement or operation of law, a right of recovery over against another, and notifies such other to appear and defend the suit. 30 Vt. 87. GUARANTEE, 50-52.

63. So held, in the case of a justice judgment rendered in the State of New York, where the warrantor of the validity of the note had notice of the suit by his assignee, and actually attended and got the case continued. Carpenter v. Pier, 30 Vt. 81.

64. Where a covenantor is vouched in to defend a suit against his covenantee for the recovery of premises to which his covenant is applicable, he becomes a privy to the action, and the judgment is conclusive upon both, of every fact litigated upon the trial which was necessary to the upholding of the judgment. Knapp v. Marlboro, 34 Vt. 235. S. C., 31 Vt. 674.

65. In trespass, A v. B, the defendant pleaded in bar a judgment recovered in a former suit of B & C v. D, averred to be the servant and agent of A, as an adjudication of the right now in question. Held, that A's connection with the former suit was not sufficiently shown by an averment that, in the acts of trespass therein complained of, D was the servant and agent of A, and that A and D "appeared in said court and the respective parties in said action were then and there impleaded, &c." It does not show that A defended that suit, or took upon himself that burden. Goodrich v. Judevine, 40 Vt. 190.

Note. The plea in this case was held bad, also, for not showing with sufficient distinctness and certainty, that the identical right in question was adjudicated in the former suit.

66. Judgment on plea of payment. In an action by the indorsee of a promissory note against the makers, they put in the defense of payment, and that issue was found for them in part, and judgment against them for the balance, which judgment they paid. In an action brought by the same plaintiff upon the same note against an accommodation indorser of the note;—Held, that the plaintiff was concluded by the former trial and judgment, although the present defendant was not a party to that suit, and that the plaintiff could not recover. Austin v. Hall, 43 Vt. 110.

67. A valid award of arbitrators between the payee of a joint and several promissory note and one of the signers (a surety), finding and awarding that such note has been paid, is conclusive upon the payee in favor of the other signer (the principal) that such note has been paid, although the principal was not a party to the arbitration. Spencer v. Dearth, 43 Vt. 98. 46 Vt. 149.

IV. JUDGMENT OF ANOTHER STATE.

68. Effect. In an action of debt on judgment rendered in Connecticut on default; the defendant was allowed, on plea of nil debet, to impeach the judgment, so far as to show that more was recovered than was in fact due. Stoddard v. Allen, N. Chip. 44. (Overruled.)

69. In an action of debt on judgment rendered in another State;—Held (doubtfully), that a plea in bar, averring facts affecting the validity of the judgment, must aver that the judgment was obtained against the law of the State where rendered. Waddams v. Burnham, 1 Tyl. 283.

70. A judgment rendered in any State of the U. S. is treated in this State as a domestic judgment; and it has the same validity and effect, under the constitution and laws of the U. S., in every other State as in the State where rendered. Hence, an action of assumpsit will not lie in this State upon a judgment rendered in another State, it being matter of record. Boston India Rubber Co. v. Holt, 14 Vt. 92.

71. In an action on such judgment, nil debet cannot be pleaded. Blodgett v. Jordan, 6 Vt. 580. Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 302. 14 Vt. 97.

72. Such judgment merges the original cause of action, and the record is conclusive as to the matters included therein. Hoxie v. Wright, 2 Vt. 263. Bellows v. Ingham, 2 Vt. 575. Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26. McGileray v. Avery, 30 Vt. 588. White v. Simonds, 33 Vt. 178. Low v. Mussey, 41 Vt. 898. Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 569.

73. To escape the effect of a judgment rendered in another State, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, the defect must appear upon the face of the record, the same as in case of a domestic judgment. Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26. 30 Vt. 541.

74. Matters in pais cannot be pleaded as against the record in such case. Newcomb v. Peck. Dimick v. Brooks, 27 Vt. 84.

75. The law is the same as to judgments in the circuit court of the U. S. St. Albans v. Bush, 4 Vt. 56.

76. The judgment of a justice of the peace of another State, where the law requires him to keep records, and where he acts within his jurisdiction, is conclusive in this State upon the parties thereto and their privies, as to all the facts adjudicated. Carpenter v. Pier, 30 Vt. 81. Starkweather v. Loomis, 2 Vt. 573 (overruling King v. Van Gilder, contra 1 D. Chp. 59.) Blodgett v. Jordan, 6 Vt. 580.

77. The defendant, a citizen of New Hampshire, was sued by the plaintiffs, simultaneously, in N. H. and Vt., upon the same cause of action. Property was attached in each case, but that in N. H. was subject to prior attachments. Judgment was obtained in N. H., but the judgment was unsatisfied. Held, that such judgment merged the cause of action and was a bar to the further prosecution of the suit in this State. McGileray v. Avery, 30 Vt. 588.

78. Jurisdiction. In debt on judgment rendered in another State, on default, the record set up the defendant as then a resident of that State, an attachment of land there, and a copy of the process left at his last and usual place of abode there. Held, that this was sufficient prima facie evidence of the court's jurisdiction of the cause and of the defendant. Fullerton v. Horton, 11 Vt. 425.

79. Held, in Pierson v. Mudgett, in 1831, that a judgment rendered in another State against a citizen of this State who was not within the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment, and had no notice of the suit, and did not appear, could not be enforced in this State by action of debt on the judgment. 17 Vt. 308.

80. It is competent for every country, in pursuance of its own laws, to seize the property, real and personal, of an absent debtor, whether citizen or foreigner, or debts due to such absent debtor from persons residing within its jurisdiction, and, through the medium of a judgment, to appropriate them to the payment of debts due from such absent debtor to its own citizens, or to others, even without service of process upon the judgment debtor within its territorial limits. The situs of the property, in such case, gives jurisdiction to the extent of the property seized, and the judgment has the force of a proceeding in rem. But such presence and attachment of the property gives no jurisdiction over the person, nor validity to the judgment when sought to be enforced by action in another State, either upon general principles, or under the constitution and laws of the United States. Nor does the fact that process was served upon, or notice given to the defendant, out of the State in which the judgment was rendered, add anything to the force or validity of the judgment—such service and notice being regarded as a nullity. Price v. Hickok, 39 Vt. 292. See Starkweather v. Loomis, 2 Vt. 573.

81. An action was brought in Massachusetts against a citizen and resident of Vermont, by attachment of real estate in Massachusetts, and judgment was rendered on default. The defendant was never a resident or citizen of Massachusetts, and no process was served upon him nor notice given him in that State, but the court's order of notice of the proceedings was served upon him in Vermont, before judgment. Held, that such judgment could not be enforced by action upon it in Vermont. Price v. Hickok.

82. A former adjudication in a New Hampshire court, dismissing a petition for divorce for want of sufficient proof of the allegations of the petitioner, viz: "extreme cruelty and drunkenness," was held not a bar to granting a divorce, on the petition of the same party in this State, for acts of intolerable severity committed in the State of New York while the parties were domiciled there, where it was not made to appear that the New Hampshire court had jurisdiction to annul a marriage for causes that accrued out of the State, nor that that court took jurisdiction of, or made inquiry into such causes. Blain v. Blain, 45 Vt. 538.

83. Collateral remedies. It seems, that the courts of one State cannot give effect to the judgments of the courts of another State, by enforcing any of the collateral remedies provided in the State where the judgment was rendered. Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 569, 579; and see Pickering v. Fisk, 6 Vt. 102. Judge of Probate v. Hibbard, 44 Vt. 597.

84. In an action brought in New Hampshire on a bond conditioned for the payment of certain notes, judgment was rendered for the penalty and execution issued for the sum then due. The remedy for enforcing such bonds was prescribed by the statute of New Hampshire, and by such statute the judgment stood as security for any damages resulting from future breaches of the condition, to be liquidated upon a scire facias. Held, that an action of debt on such judgment could not be sustained in this State, either by declaring upon it directly and simply as a judgment, nor by setting forth all the facts in the case and averring further breaches of the condition. Dimick v. Brooks.

85. Such judgment only merges the damages then accrued, and is not a bar in this State to a direct action for further breaches. Ib.

86. Canadian judgment. Upon a judgment obtained in Canada and execution thereon against A, the property of the plaintiff, a resident citizen of this State, was seized and sold as the property of A, and the proceeds deposited in court according to the law of Canada, and under the same law other creditors of A appeared and made claim to a portion of such proceeds, and by judgment of the court, the same were so divided and wholly appropriated. By the same law, any person having claim to such property might enter an appearance in court, and, on neglect so to do and to make and prosecute his claim, the judgment and the judgment of distribution were declared conclusive as to the title to the property, and a bar to any claim therefor. The plaintiff had no notice of those proceedings. Held, that such proceedings and judgment, the plaintiff not being a party thereto, were not a bar to an action of trespass in this State to recover for the property. (Judgments in rem, and in personam, discussed.) Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65.

87. The same is the law although the plaintiff, a resident of this State, did have notice, but did not appear. Putnam v. McDougall, 47 Vt. 478.

V. DECREES IN CHANCERY.

88. Effect at law. The final determination of a question by the decision of the court of chancery, is conclusive of that question in a suit at law between the real parties to the chancery suit, although in the chancery suit another party was joined for conformity. Pierson v. Catlin, 18 Vt. 77.

89. Where a bill in chancery is regularly dismissed upon its merits, the decree is conclusive, as to the matters therein litigated, upon the parties thereto; and this whether so dismissed in pursuance of an agreement of the parties, or upon hearing. Pelton v. Mott, 11 148.

90. The law is the same, as to a like decree rendered in another State. Low v. Mussey, 41 Vt. 398.

91. A bill in chancery charged that certain claims of the defendant were fictitious and without consideration, and this question was put in issue, and the bill upon hearing was dismissed, in general terms, upon its merits. Held, that such decree estopped the plaintiff from afterwards contesting that question at law. Eaton v. Cooper, 29 Vt. 444.

92. A decree of foreclosure of a mortgage does not affect the title of a defendant against whom the decree passed, pro confesso, who claims by title earlier than that of the mortgagor, and independent of it. Bowne v. Page, 2 Tyl. 392.

93. Conditional decree. A decree conferring an authority upon the performance of a condition precedent, as, the giving of certain security, is wholly inoperative unless the condition be complied with. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

94. Action at law on decree. An action of debt will lie upon an absolute decree of the court of chancery for a fixed, liquidated and absolute debt decreed to be paid in money; as, for a balance of account between partners. Thrall v. Waller, 18 Vt. 281.

95. But not, where the decree is not in personam, but only establishes and fixes the amount as a lien upon lands, and provides, in default of payment, for a foreclosure, or for an application of the lands towards the sum chargeable. Manly v. Slason, 28 Vt. 346.

96. An action cannot be sustained upon an order of the supreme court that a bill in chancery be dismissed with costs. In such case, the cause is remanded to the court of chancery, and the costs must be there taxed and the final decree be there rendered. G. S. c. 29, s. 86. Downer v. Dana, 22 Vt. 387.

VI. ACTION ON JUDGMENT.

97. The mode of enforcing a judgment refers solely to the remedy, and depends upon the lex fori. Adams v. Wait, 42 Vt. 16.

98. Regularly, debt cannot be sustained upon a judgment upon which execution has issued, without showing a return of the execution unsatisfied, in whole or in part. Dewey v. Bradbury, 2 Tyl. 201. 29 Vt. 338.

99. Whenever a party becomes entitled by law to take execution, although it be by special leave of the court granted during a term, the judgment is final for all purposes, and an action on such judgment may be at once brought. White River Bank v. Downer, 29 Vt. 332.

100. A declaration in debt on a judgment, which omits to aver that the judgment is unsatisfied, is bad on demurrer. Dewey v. Bradbury, 2 Tyl. 201.

101. A declaration in debt upon judgment was held ill on special demurrer, for lack of the debit and detinet. Adams v. Campbell, 4 Vt. 447.

102. It is of the very essence of debt upon judgment, or upon any matter of record, that the obligation should result from the record itself. The record imports absolute and complete verity. It is neither to be increased, nor diminished, by any averment out of or beyond the record; and must show a still subsisting obligation, perfect in its inception, and still unsatisfied. Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 569.

103. Enough of the previous proceedings should be recited, or stated, to show that the parties were properly in court, and that the general nature of the subject matter came within the cognizance of the court; as, that the defendant being summoned, or attached, taliter processum est, &c. Downer v. Dana, 22 Vt. 387.

104. In a declaration of debt upon a judgment, the usual ad damnum clause is a sufficient allegation of damages to entitle the plaintiff to recover interest. Allen v. Lyman, 27 Vt. 20.

105. A less sum than is demanded may be recovered in debt on judgments and specialties, as well as in debt on simple contracts; though a variance between the description of the instrument declared upon, and that offered in evidence, would be fatal. Keyes v. Throop, 2 Aik. 276.

106. In an action upon a judgment, with an averment that four executions had issued thereon, issue was joined upon the plea of nullius record. Held, that the plea only denied and put in issue the judgment, and that the plaintiff was not bound, under this issue, to produce or prove the executions. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

107. Payment—Satisfaction. To an action on judgment, the defendant pleaded that in consideration that the defendant would make and deliver at his shop, by a time named, certain winnowing mills, the plaintiff promised to receive the same in full payment and discharge of the judgment; and averred that relying on such promise the defendant did make said mills by the time named, and had them ready at his shop for delivery to the plaintiff. Held a good plea in bar of the action. Downer v. Sinclair, 15 Vt. 495.

108. Where there was a judgment against two, and one was committed on the execution, gave a jail-bond, and escaped, and the creditor received from the sheriff an assignment of the bond;—Held, that he could not maintain debt on that judgment against both. Dewey v. Bradbury, 2 Tyl. 201. 29 Vt. 342. But see 1 D. Chip. 297. 22 Vt. 628.

109. To an action of debt on judgment, a plea that execution issued and the defendant was committed to jail thereon, was held good, without averring that he remained in prison until after the commencement of the suit. Kinsman v. Page, 22 Vt. 628. (Dictum contra in Farnsworth v. Tilton, 1 D. Chip. 297, disapproved); and see Day v. Abbott, 15 Vt. 632.

As to judgments and decrees in other tribunals see CHANCERY; PROBATE COURT; MILITIA.

JURISDICTION.

1. How acquired. A party upon whom no service of the writ is made is not bound to appear by having notice, merely, of the suit, nor is he bound by the proceedings had. Clark v. Freeman, 5 Vt. 122.

2. If neither the person nor property of a citizen of another State can be found in this State whereon to serve process, the courts of this State can acquire no jurisdiction over him by notice, and any judgment against him, without voluntary appearance, is wholly void. Skinner v. McDaniel, 4 Vt. 418. Ib. 488. 25 Vt. 350; and see Starkweather v. Loomis, 2 Vt. 573. Pierson v. Mudgett, 17 Vt. 308. Price v. Hickok, 39 Vt. 292.

3. Where a writ is served by attaching the property of the defendant within this State, though without notice to him, and judgment is rendered against him by default, such judgment is not void;—the property gives the court jurisdiction. Buck v. Abbott, 6 Vt. 586.

4. Courts obtain jurisdiction over the persons of defendants by service of process either on their bodies, or property, within the jurisdiction of the court. If an attachment of property is made, this gives jurisdiction of the party, and the after proceedings and judgment are not void, though the officer, making the attachment, failed to give the proper notice thereof,—for the attachment is one thing; the notice, another. Gilman v. Thompson, 11 Vt. 643. 4 Vt. 444.

5. Assumpsit upon a policy of life insurance issued to the plaintiff and her husband jointly, and payable to the survivor upon the death of either.—The defendant was a corporation, established under the laws of New York and there located and doing business. The plaintiff was a resident of Minnesota. The contract was not made in this State, nor was it to be performed here. The plaintiff's husband died in this State, but it did not appear that either he or the plaintiff was a resident or citizen of this State at the time of his death. The writ was not served by attaching the defendant's property, but only by leaving a copy thereof with one F, in this State, described in the writ as "general agent and attorney of the defendant." F did not appear in the suit. On a plea to the jurisdiction;—Held, that the court acquired no jurisdiction of the defendant, nor of the cause of action. Sawyer v. North American Life Ins. Co., 46 Vt. 697. JUDGMENT, 78–82.

6. Retained. Where a court has once acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, it retains that jurisdiction, although the party may have removed from the State, as to all proceedings which are in continuation of that suit; as, a scire facias upon the judgment. Burns v. Belknap, 22 Vt. 419; or petition to correct the record, so as to vacate the levy of the execution. Tudor v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 444.

7. How affected by jurisdiction or proceedings of U. S. courts. The United States can maintain an action upon a contract, in the courts of this State. United States v. Dacy, Brayt. 146.

8. The jurisdiction of the U. S. courts under the acts of Congress, and that of the courts of this State under the statutes of the State, over the crime of counterfeiting, are concurrent within the State. State v. Randall, 2 Aik. 89.

9. Where property has been seized under authority of the U. S., as forfeited, an action for the seizure or detention, of a character which necessarily goes to divest the possession—as replevin—cannot be sustained in a State court; but if the action is an ordinary one, seeking merely to recover damages, there would seem to be nothing in principle to forbid the pendency of such suit, and a proceeding in rem for a forfeiture, at the same time. Stoughton v. Mott, 13 Vt. 175.

10. Where an officer of the U. S., under the neutrality act of congress of March 10, 1838, seized a vessel carrying arms, &c., and about to pass the frontier, and neglected to procure, as required by the act, a warrant from the U. S. district court, within ten days, to justify the detention;—Held, that the detention thereafter was unlawful, and that the state court had jurisdiction of an action to recover therefor. Id.

11. The jurisdiction of a state court is not defeated because the subject matter of the action concerns the use of an exclusive patent right, where the action does not necessarily involve the validity of the patent, and the question as to its validity arises only incidentally and by way of defense. Sherman v. Champlain Transportation Co., 81 Vt. 162.

12. The unexercised jurisdiction of the U. S. district court over a question—as bankruptcy—does not oust the state court of jurisdiction, where the question arises collaterally by way of defense to an action in which the state court has jurisdiction of the parties, and the subject matter. Wilkinson v. Wait, 44 Vt. 506.

13. Concurrent jurisdictions. In all cases of concurrent jurisdiction, the court that has first assumed jurisdiction and control of the subject matter, should be entitled to retain it for a final hearing, unless there exists some peculiar equitable ground for withdrawing a controversy from a court of law to a court of chancery. Bank of B. Falls v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 28 Vt. 470. See Glastenbury v. McDonald, 44 Vt. 450.

14. Election of party by limitation of his claim. In actions of tort, the plaintiff may set his own estimate upon his cause of action, whether for general or final jurisdiction, and the defendant cannot complain; and we see no more objection to allowing the plaintiff, in other actions, to reduce his claim within the final jurisdiction of a justice by his writ, declaration, and exhibit or specification, by reducing the price of his charges, or by abandoning some,—the abandonment, in this mode, being conclusive upon all after claims; and thus, in some sense, to make a jurisdiction, or to make one final, at his election. Warren v. Newfane, 25 Vt. 250; and see Stevens v. Pearson, 5 Vt. 508. Parkhurst v. Spalding, 17 Vt. 527. Herren v. Campbell, 19 Vt. 28. Danforth v. Streeter, 28 Vt. 490. Carpenter v. Pier, 30 Vt. 81. 35 Vt. 576.

15. In an action of trespass on the freehold, where the ad damnum of the writ exceeds $20, and the plaintiff is put upon proof of his title, the county court has original jurisdiction; and the action cannot be dismissed because the plaintiff's evidence does not tend to prove damages to that amount. The ad damnum, in such case, is conclusive as to the jurisdiction, which does not, in this action, in any way depend upon the belief of the plaintiff as to the amount of damages to which he may be entitled,—differing from the rule applied to actions of trespass de bonis in Kittridge v. Rollins, 12 Vt. 541; it being against the policy of the law to give to justices of the peace power to settle the title to land. Doubleday v. Martin, 27 Vt. 488.

16. In actions of trespass on the freehold, actions of assault and battery, and the like, the ad damnum in the writ is the “sum in demand,” determining the jurisdiction. Montgomery v. Edwards, 45 Vt. 75.

17. Irregularity of process—Waiver. Want of jurisdiction growing out of irregularity of process, is waived by pleading to the merits; while want of jurisdiction of the subject matter cannot be so waived. Eaton v. Houghton, 1 Aik. 380 25 Vt. 349.

18. That a suit is brought in the wrong town, or county, does not present the case of a want of jurisdiction, but is only an objection to the particular process—matter of abatement which is waived by not being seasonably pleaded. University v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52. Colomer v. Page, 35 Vt. 887.

19. Effect of want of jurisdiction of subject matter. The court will dismiss an action at any stage of it, whether moved by a party or not, when it is discovered that they have no jurisdiction, and an objection to the jurisdiction over the subject matter is never out of time. Chittenden v. Hurlbut, 1 D. Chip. 384. Glidden v. Elkins, 2 Tyl. 218. Southwick v. Merrill, 3 Vt. 320. Stoughton v. Mott, 13 Vt. 175. Shepherd v. Beede, 24 Vt. 40. Thayer v. Montgomery, 26 Vt. 491.

20. Consent cannot confer a jurisdiction where it is not given by law; and where the want of jurisdiction appears upon the face of the proceedings, the judgment is void. Glidden v. Elkins. Thayer v. Montgomery.

21. Where a court has no jurisdiction over the subject matter, the process gives no protection to the officer executing it. Driscoll v. Place, 44 Vt. 252.

22. Special tribunals. According to the general principle which governs the exercise of special and extraordinary powers under a statute, the proceeding is deemed to be authorized in the particular case contemplated and described by the statute, but unauthorized, and therefore void, in all other cases. Emerson v. Reading, 14 Vt. 279.

23. Where an inferior court of limited jurisdiction exceeds its powers, having no jurisdiction of the subject matter, or of the person of the defendant, the whole proceedings are coram non iudice and void, and can furnish no justification to the court, or to the party who procured them to be had, or to the officer who attempts to execute its process. Barrett v. Crane, 16 Vt. 246. Walbridge v. Hall, 3 Vt. 114. Darling v. Bowen, 10 Vt. 148.

24. The plaintiff, an alien, and so not subject to military duty, was amerced by court martial for non-performance of militia duty. Held, that the defendant, an officer, was liable in trespass, for serving an execution for such amercement, though regular upon its face. Barrett v. Crane.

25. He who justifies under a court or tribunal of limited jurisdiction, must show every fact necessary to give such court jurisdiction. Nothing is to be presumed in favor of the jurisdiction of courts of limited and special powers, but whoever seeks to derive advantage from their proceedings must show affirmatively their jurisdiction. Barrett v. Crane. Bates v. Haseltine, 1 Vt. 81.

26. In sessions matters, the facts which are indispensable to the jurisdiction of the court must appear upon the face of the proceedings; as, in a petition for laying a highway, that the petitioners are freeholders, &c. Hewes v. Andover, 16 Vt. 510.

As to the jurisdiction of particular Courts see CHANCERY; COUNTY COURT; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE; JAIL COMMISSIONERS, &c.

JURY.

- I. GRAND JURY.
- II. TOWN GRAND JUROR.
- III. PETIT JURY.

I. GRAND JURY.

1. It was held no cause for arrest of judgment, that the grand jury were impaneled and charged by one judge in the absence of the others, though those absent were not disqualified. State v. Jenkins, 2 Tyl. 384.

2. The court has no power to order a grand juror to withdraw himself from the panel in any particular case, even though the complaint be against himself. Baldwin's case, 2 Tyl. 478.

3. An indictment against a town for not building a road will not be quashed because one of the grand jurors presenting the bill was, at the time, a ratable inhabitant of the town. State v. Newfane, 12 Vt. 422.

4. It is the duty of the jurors, the attorney for the State, and witnesses, not to divulge what passes in the grand jury room, unless required so to do in a court of justice. They cannot then be excused. By Redfield, J.: I apprehend that the true doctrine in regard to requiring a witness to disclose state secrets is, that the court will exercise its discretion in each particular case. Clark v. Field, 12 Vt. 485.

II. TOWN GRAND JUROR.

5. Before the act of Oct. 27, 1801 (Slade's Stat. 421), town grand jurors were not general informing officers. Before that, they had no authority, as such, to prefer a complaint to a justice for theft. Brackett v. State, 2 Tyl. 152. 11 Vt. 344.

6. A town grand juror has authority to employ counsel, at the charge of the town, to aid in criminal prosecutions where the fines and costs go to the town, and where the prosecution is conducted at the expense of the town. Barrett, J., dissenting. Burton v. Norwich, 34 Vt. 845.

III. PETIT JURY.

7. Qualifications—Freeholder. See Orcutt v. Carpenter, 1 Tyl. 250. Briggs v. Georgia, 15 Vt. 61. G. S. c. 15, s. 13.

8. Interest. It is good cause of challenge to a petit juror, that he has been recognized for costs in the suit, though he has been discharged from his recognizance. Phelps v. Hall, 2 Tyl. 401.

9. A juror, like a justice, is not disqualified to try a criminal case because the fine on conviction is payable to the treasurer of the town of which he is a rated inhabitant. Middletown v. Ames, 7 Vt. 166.

10. Relationship. The relationship to one of the parties which by the statute disqualifies a judge or justice, viz: the fourth degree reckoned by the civil law, disqualifies a juror,—as, also, an auditor. Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661. 34 Vt. 583.

11. Opinion. A juror who has expressed an opinion is disqualified. State v. Godfrey, Brayt. 170. State v. Clark, 42 Vt. 629.

12. But that he has formed an opinion merely, does not disqualify him. Boardman v. Wood, 3 Vt. 570;—although he sat in the case on a former trial, when the court ordered a verdict, without consultation of the jurors. Atkinson v. Allen, 12 Vt. 619. State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 366.

13. Where peremptory challenges are allowed, it is proper to ask a juror if he has formed an opinion, in order to enable a party to decide upon his peremptory challenges. State v. Godfrey, Brayt. 170.

14. A juror, being called, stated, in answer to questions put by the respondent's counsel, that he had expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the respondent on reading a newspaper account of the examination before the magistrate, published a month or six weeks before; but that he had no opinion and had formed none, and could try the case impartially upon the evidence. Held, that the juror was disqualified, and his admission, against the objection of the respondent, was error;—the court holding this statement to amount to an admission that the juror had both formed and expressed an opinion—the expression necessarily involving the formation of an opinion. State v. Clark, 42 Vt. 629.

15. One called as a juror in a trial for murder, stated that he had read an account of the matter in the newspapers; had heard the matter talked of considerably, and formed an opinion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the respondent, but had no bias or prejudice in the matter, and did not know that he had ever expressed an opinion, but might have done so. Held, that he was "impartial" within the meaning of Art 10 of the Constitution, and was a competent juror. State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 366.

16. Scruples. In a capital case, the declaration, sincerely made, of one called as a juror, that he had conscientious scruples against rendering a verdict of guilty in a case where the punishment is death, is good cause for excluding him as juror. The "impartial jury," provided for in Art 10 of the State Constitution, implies that the juror be impartial in respect to the State as well as to the accused. State v. Ward, 39 Vt. 225.

17. Question of discretion. Where, as to the fitness of a juror called, the question was resolved into one of fact upon the statements of the juror and the evidence, and required the exercise of judgment and discretion in the decision;—Held, that the decision excluding the juror presented no question of law, and was not revisable on exceptions. Id.

18. A juror called in a criminal cause, claimed to be excused on the ground that he was a member of an organized fire company in the city of Burlington, where the trial was held. The court below, in view of the facts, but against the objection of the respondent, excused the juror. Held, that this involved no question of law, and was not matter of exception. Id.

19. Challenges—Objections. A respondent is not obliged to exhaust his peremptory challenges before challenging for cause. G. S. c. 120, s. 4, has not changed the law and practice in this respect. State v. Fuller, 39 Vt. 74.

20. The fact that the court suffered a juror to sit in the trial who was legally incompetent, is no reason for arresting the judgment. That is not the remedy. Atkinson v. Allen, 12 Vt. 619.

21. A verdict will not be set aside, because one of the jurors had a cause pending to be tried by jury at the same term, no motion having been made to discharge him. (Acts 1864, No. 36.) Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590.

22. Juror as witness. A petit juror may properly be sworn and may testify as a witness in the cause in which he is a juror; but no question should be allowed to be put, the answer to which would indicate his opinion of the merits of the cause. Dunbar v. Parks, 2 Tyl. 217.

23. Privilege. A petit juror is not liable in an action of slander for what he says in the jury room concerning the cause. His privilege is absolute, like that of judges, magistrates, grand jurors, and members of legislative bodies. Dunham v. Powers, 42 Vt. 1.

24. Right to jury trial. The immemorial practice of proceeding to trial without a jury, in a certain class of cases, in the common law courts of England and of this country, has been held conclusive to show that they are not "proper for the cognizance of a jury, within the terms of the constitution," and were not intended to be therein included. Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 288, 291. 44 Vt. 654.

25. The county court may lawfully make and enforce a rule of court, requiring the defendant in an action apparently for the recovery of a mere debt, to furnish his affidavit, at least of his own belief, that the claim is disputable; and that, otherwise, he shall not be entitled to a jury trial. Jones v. Spear, 21 Vt. 426; and see Bradley v. Chamberlain, 31 Vt. 468. Briggs v. Gleason, 32 Vt. 472. Chamberlain v. Murphy, 41 Vt. 110.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, II.

26. Judges of the law in criminal cases. Held, that in all criminal trials the jury, at common law and in Vermont, are rightful judges of the law as well as of the facts; that the power which a jury may in such cases exercise, by rendering a general verdict, is a legitimate and legal power, which, they, acting under their oath and governed by a sense of duty, may rightfully and properly exercise, although it may be in contradiction to the law stated to them by the court. (Question largely discussed. Bennett, J., dissenting.) State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14. See State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 488. State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491. State v. Woodward, 28 Vt. 92.

27. In a criminal case, the exceptions stated that the court "directed the jury to return a verdict of guilty for each act of selling" proved. In the absence of any request for an instruction that the jury were judges of the law, or any question made on that point, this was held to be but an expression of opinion, and not as controverting the ultimate right of the jury to determine the law against the opinion of the court, and so was not positive error. State v. Paddock, 24 Vt. 312.

28. In a criminal trial, where the respondent claims the benefit of the rule that the jury are judges of the law, it is not error for the judge to state to the jury, in his own way, that this rule is not intended for ordinary criminal cases; that it is matter of favor to the defendant, and should not be acted upon by the jury except after the most thorough conviction of its necessity and propriety; that any departure by the jury from the law laid down by the court must be taken solely upon their own responsibility; and that the safer, and better, and fairer way, in ordinary criminal cases, is to take the law from the court, and that they are always justified in so doing. State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491.

29. Not witnesses as to their own misconduct. A juror cannot testify to his own misconduct, nor to that of his fellows, to impeach the verdict. Cheney v. Holgate, Brayt. 171.

30. The affidavit of a juror cannot be admitted to show what passed in the jury-room, during the investigation of the cause. Robbins v. Windover, 2 Tyl. 11. Harris v. Huntington, Id., 129. Newton v. Booth, 13 Vt. 320.

31. It has long been settled in this State, that affidavits of jurors will not be received to show any impropriety in the conduct of the jury, or improper mode of arriving at the verdict, in order to set it aside. Poland, C. J., in Sheldon v. Perkins, 37 Vt. 557. See Newton v. Booth. Cutler v. Cutler, 48 Vt. 660.

32. It would be productive of great mischief to receive ex parte affidavits of jurors, after they have separated, to show upon what ground the verdict was rendered. Held, that such affidavits were properly excluded. Sheldon v. Perkins.

33. Affidavits of jurors may be read to exculpate themselves, and sustain their verdict, but not to impeach it. Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

- I. APPOINTMENT AND QUALIFICATIONS.
- II. HIS JURISDICTION AS A COURT.
- III. PROCEDURE.
- IV. RECORDS.
- V. ACTION AGAINST JUSTICE.

I. APPOINTMENT AND QUALIFICATIONS.

1. Appointment. An objection was taken, in a collateral proceeding, that the person acting and signing as justice of the peace was not a justice. Held, that his commission as justice from the Governor, under the seal of the State, was conclusive, and cut off further inquiry whether he had been duly elected by the General Assembly. Norwich v. Yarrington, 20 Vt. 473.

2. Oath of office. In an action against a justice of the peace for an arrest under a warrant issued by him, he cannot justify if he had not, before the arrest and during that particular term for which he had been elected, taken the oath of office as prescribed by the Constitution, Part 2, s. 29. Courser v. Powers, 34 Vt. 517. Dictum contra in Taylor v. Nichols, 29 Vt. 110, denied. Id.

3. Qualification as affected by interest. A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to render judgment, though on confession, in a case where he is interested in the demand; and such proceeding is void. Bates v. Thompson, 2 D. Chip. 96. 5 Vt. 127.

4. In criminal causes, a justice has jurisdiction, though the penalty or fine may go into the treasury of the town of which he is a rated inhabitant; but in civil causes, if any part of the debt or penalty is for such town, he is "interested in such cause or matter," and is disqualified. (G. S. c. 81, s. 22.) State v. Batchelder, 6 Vt. 479. Waters v. Day, 10 Vt. 487.

5. A plea in abatement, in a suit in which a town was interested, averred that the justice before whom the proceedings were instituted was "a lawful inhabitant and citizen of said town." Held, that the plea did not disclose any interest in the justice, it not averring that he was liable to pay taxes in the town. Pierce v. Butler, 16 Vt. 101.

6. — by relationship. A justice of the peace cannot take a confession of judgment where he is related to either of the parties within the fourth degree. Such judgment is void. Hill v. Wait, 5 Vt. 124.

7. In a suit by a corporation, the jurisdiction of the justice is not affected by the fact of his relationship to a corporator and stockholder Searsburgh T. Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 315.

8. — by being counsel, &c. Under the statute prohibiting a justice from acting as counsel in a cause in which he had acted as justice;—Held, by construing it with other statutes in pari materia, that he could not act as justice in a civil cause growing out of a criminal transaction, where he had acted as grand juror in the prosecution of the defendant. Free-love v. Smith, 9 Vt. 180.

9. The appointment by a justice to serve a process is a "judicial act." Kellogg, ex parte, 6 Vt. 509. Kelley v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261. Ingraham v. Leland, 19 Vt. 304. Ib., 388. So is the taking of a recognizance for costs. Ingraham v. Leland; and neither of these can be done by a justice who is attorney, or of counsel for the plaintiff. Ib.

10. In a bastardy prosecution instituted by the overseers of the poor of the town, a plea to the jurisdiction averred, that the justice before whom the primary proceedings were had, was the agent of the town to prosecute and defend suits in which the town was interested. Held, on demurrer, that this averment fell short of an averment that the justice acted therein in his capacity as agent, or that he was or had been "of counsel in the case," and that the plea was insufficient. Pierce v. Butler, 16 Vt. 101.

11. — by having expressed an opinion. A justice of the peace is not legally disqualified from trying a case, as justice, by the fact that he had heard the same claim as an arbitrator, and had formed and expressed an opinion to his associate arbitrator, favorable to the plaintiff—the statute which specifies his disqualifications not naming such cause as one. Batchelder v. Nourse, 35 Vt. 642.

II. HIS JURISDICTION AS A COURT.

12. In account. A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the action of account. Chadwick v. Dool, 12 Vt. 499.

13. As controlled by the amount of the debt, &c. Note.—By Stat. 1797, the jurisdiction of justices in pleas and actions of a civil nature, with certain exceptions, extended to where the debt or other matter in demand did not exceed the sum of $33. By Stat. 1811, this was extended to the sum of $53; by Stat. 1821, to $100; and by G. S. (Dec. 2, 1862), to $200.

14. In an action before a justice upon a recognizance, where the damages were uncertain, his jurisdiction was held determinable by the amount of the recognizance. Clark v. Campbell, N. Chip. 57.

15. In an action of debt upon a recognizance taken to the defendant in a writ, to recover his costs taxed in the original suit, the matter in demand, as respects the jurisdiction of the court, is the amount of such costs, and not the amount of the recognizance. Edgerton v. Smith, 35 Vt. 578.

16. In a general action for money had and received, the plaintiff may limit the jurisdiction by the ad damnum of his writ. Stevens v. Pearson, 5 Vt. 508. 17 Vt. 529.

17. A justice of the peace has jurisdiction in an action of assumpsit where neither the ad damnum in the writ, nor the amount claimed, exceeds $100, although this is the balance of an account, the debtor side of which exceeds $100. Bank of Rutland v. Crampton, 28 Vt. 380. Stevens v. Howe, 6 Vt. 572.

18. The plaintiff sued before a justice on a contract of service for the defendant for one year at $180, averring that he had performed part of the service when the defendant refused further to employ him, and concluding, to his damage $100. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction. Hair v. Bell, 6 Vt. 35. 35 Vt. 576.

19. Where the declaration in a justice suit contains several counts which may be for the same subject matter, they will be so intended, where, to suppose the contrary, they would exceed the justice's jurisdiction as limited by the ad damnum. The ad damnum usually determines the jurisdiction, unless from the declaration it certainly appears that the matter in demand exceeds the jurisdiction. Richardson v. Denison, 1 Aik. 210. 6 Vt. 98. Bell v. Mason, 10 Vt. 509. Wightman v. Carlisle, 14 Vt. 296. 20 Vt. 172.

20. Where the plaintiff upon his whole declaration demands but $100, a justice court has jurisdiction, though the declaration is in several counts, upon either of which, if duly sustained by proof, he might legally have claimed to recover even more than $100. It is not the amount of injury sustained, but the amount in demand and actually sought to be recovered, which forms the test of apparent jurisdiction, except in certain specified cases,—as promissory notes, &c. The plaintiff may demand less than in justice he is entitled to recover, and thus, by his ad damnum, confer a jurisdiction upon a justice court. Wightman v. Carlisle.

21. The ad damnum will not give jurisdiction where the declaration shows the case without the jurisdiction. Thompson v. Colony, 6 Vt. 91.

22. In an action upon judgment before a justice, his jurisdiction must be determined by the amount appearing by the record and proceedings under the judgment to be due; and, for this purpose, no payment, the evidence of which is extrinsic, can be considered. Brush v. Torrey, Brayt. 141.

23. It is only in cases where the declaration does not otherwise limit the extent of the plaintiff's claim, that the ad damnum is taken as the proper evidence of it, or as a test of apparent jurisdiction. In an action of debt on judgment before a justice:—Held, that the demand being defined with certainty in the declaration, was by law limited by the amount of the judgment there described, and interest upon it, and that, although the ad damnum exceeded the jurisdiction, the excess should be treated as unmeaning for any purpose affecting jurisdiction. Bishop v. Warner, 23 Vt. 591. 35 Vt. 576.

24. In a justice suit declaring upon a judgment rendered for a sum less than $100, but which, by adding interest upon it, exceeded $100, the writ concluded with the ad damnum of $100. Held, that the plaintiff might waive the interest, and that the justice had jurisdiction. Parkhurst v. Spalding, 17 Vt. 527. 85 Vt. 576.

25. In an action before a justice upon a promissory note, where his jurisdiction depends upon the amount of the note "deducting indorsements," a motion to dismiss, founded upon the declaration alone, is premature. The defendant must wait until the note is presented in the course of the trial. Perkins v. Rich, 12 Vt. 595. See INSURANCE, 16.

26. An indorsement of part payment upon a note, if made in good faith, though erroneous, may be allowed to bring the case within a justice's jurisdiction. Boutwell v. Mason, 12 Vt. 608.

27. A party having a claim in assumpsit, exceeding in amount the jurisdiction of a justice to try, may bring it within such jurisdiction by abandoning a part of it, and so reducing the claim to a sum within the jurisdiction; as, by an indorsement upon a promissory note, though without payment. Herren v. Campbell, 19 Vt. 28. Danforth v. Streeter, 28 Vt. 490. Carpenter v. Pier, 30 Vt. 81.

28. A suit which, when commenced by the issuing of the writ, is within the jurisdiction of a justice, does not pass out of his jurisdiction by the accumulation of interest before the trial so as to make a sum larger than the jurisdictional limit,—the ad damnum being within that limit. McDaniels v. Johnson, 36 Vt. 687. Phelps v. Wood, 9 Vt. 399.

29. Set-off. The amount of the plaintiff's set-off, pleaded to the defendant's set-off, is not to be reckoned as part of the plaintiff's "matter in demand," so as to exceed the jurisdiction of the justice, unless it appears to be connected with the matter originally sued for, and a portion of that account. Talbot v. Robinson, 42 Vt. 698.

30. Amount of judgment. Dictum. In case of mutual off-sets, a justice may render judgment for the balance, though exceeding $100. Hatch, ex parte, 2 Aik. 28.

31. The judgment of a justice against the principal debtor was for $100 damages and $35 costs, and against the trustee for $185. Held correct, and within the justice's jurisdiction. Harmon v. Harwood, 35 Vt. 211.

32. Trespass to the freehold. A justice has no jurisdiction of an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's "close and barn," and taking and carrying away his horse, "to his damage $100." Prindle v. Cogswell, 9 Vt. 183.

33. Nor, where the declaration is in two counts,—one for trespass qua. clau., and the other de bonis,—where the ad damnum exceeds $20. The court must have jurisdiction of the whole case as it stands on the face of the declaration, to render judgment on the whole, or any part of it, to the full amount of the plaintiff's demand. Chadwick v. Batchelder, 46 Vt. 724.

34. Title to land concerned. Under the statute excepting from a justice's jurisdiction actions "where the title to land is concerned," if from the nature of the suit, as shown by the declaration, the title of land must directly and necessarily be concerned, the justice has no jurisdiction. Hall, J., in Haven v. Needham, 20 Vt. 184.

35. The jurisdiction depends upon the nature of the action; and wherever the declaration is of such a character that, under the general issue or any other plea which merely puts the plaintiff to the necessity of proving his declaration, he is bound either to prove or to disprove a title to land, the justice has no jurisdiction. Poland, C. J., in Jakeway v. Barrett, 38 Vt. 326.

36. As, in an action on the covenants of seisin, &c., in a deed,—the declaration averring that the defendant was not seized, &c. Hastings v. Webber, 2 Vt. 407.

37. So, in an action on the case for a nuisance by erecting a fence so near the plaintiff's dwelling house, as to obstruct his lights. Whitney v. Bowen, 11 Vt. 250.

38. So, in an action for the obstruction of a water course, occasioning injury to the plaintiff's land. Haven v. Needham, 20 Vt. 183.

39. So, in an action of account between tenants in common of lands. Thayer v. Montgomery, 26 Vt. 491.

40. So, in an action to recover under R. S. c. 89, s. 13 (G. S. c. 102, ss. 11, 12), the expense of building a division fence between the lands of the plaintiff and defendant. Shaw v. Gilfillan, 22 Vt. 565. Foster v. Bennett, 33 Vt. 66.

41. But where the declaration is such as not to require proof of title to land to sustain it, and such question only comes into the case by reason of some special line of defense, or incidentally, the justice is not ousted of his jurisdiction. Poland, C. J., in Jakeway v. Barrett, 38 Vt. 326. Held, contrary to the dictum of Davis, J., in Whitman v. Pownal, 19 Vt. 229, that it is not left to be determined by the pleadings subsequent to the declaration, whether the justice has jurisdiction. Ib., 325.

42. In assumpsit before a justice, declaring in common form for use and occupation, a plea of title in the defendant does not oust the jurisdiction. This is not a case where "the title of land is concerned." Clough v. Horton, 42 Vt. 10.

43. The title of land may incidentally come in question in various forms of action; as, for instance, in assault and battery, where the defendant justifies the assault in defence of his freehold. In such case, the justice should proceed to hear and determine the title, so far as it affects the rights of the parties in the suit, in the same manner that the matter would be heard and determined in the superior court. Hall, J., in Haven v. Needham, 20 Vt. 184.

44. A justice has jurisdiction of an action against a town, to recover for injuries caused by an insufficiency of a highway. Whitman v. Pownal, 19 Vt. 228. Yuran v. Randolph, 6 Vt. 369.

45. So, against an individual for obstructing a pent road, though described in the declaration as running through the defendant's land. Bell v. Prouty, 43 Vt. 279.

46. In an action of trover for a quantity of manure, claimed to have passed under a deed of the farm from which it was removed;—Held, that the title of land was not in question so as to oust a justice of jurisdiction. French v. Freeman, 43 Vt. 93.

47. In an action on the covenants of a deed of lands, the justice is not ousted of jurisdiction unless, upon a traverse of all the material facts alleged in the declaration, the title of land is involved in the issue and the proof of the breach. (This applied, and the jurisdiction sustained, in an action on the covenant of warranty against all lawful claims and demands, where the only breach assigned was the non-payment of certain taxes chargeable on the land, which the plaintiff was forced to pay in order to save the land from sale.) Flannery v. Hinkson, 40 Vt. 485.

48. In an action of covenant, before a justice, upon a covenant to pay taxes upon lands conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant by quit-claim deed, the consideration for which covenant was such conveyance;—Held, that the title to land was not so concerned as to oust the justice of jurisdiction; and, by Barrett, J., the giving of a quit-claim deed does not import title to land in either party to it. Judevine v. Holton, 41 Vt. 351.

49. Division fence. Stat. 1867, No. 9, gives a justice jurisdiction of an action to recover the expenses of building a division fence under G. S. c. 103, s. 6, whether or not the title to land may be involved in it. Hall v. Niles, 44 Vt. 489.

50. Confession of judgment. Under G. S. c. 81, s. 21, providing that "a justice may accept and record a confession of any debt to a creditor, made personally," &c., it seems, that he has no jurisdiction to take a judgment by confession unless the party appears in person to make such confession. Farr v. Ladd, 37 Vt. 159. Shedd v. Bank of Brattleboro, 32 Vt. 716.

51. Final jurisdiction. To give a justice final jurisdiction of a cause, the ad damnum in the writ must not be laid above $10, nor must the sum in demand appear from the declaration, the plaintiff's specification, or exhibits, to be more than $10. Hill v. Wait, 5 Vt. 124. (Limited to $20 by Stat. 1876, No. 64.)

52. Criminal jurisdiction. A town grand juror preferred his complaint to a justice in two counts, the one charging an assault with intent to ravish, and the other a common assault. The justice, after examining the testimony in the case, held that the same was in his jurisdiction to try, and tried and convicted the respondent upon the second count. Held, that it was to be presumed that the justice, after making a preliminary inquiry, determined that there was not sufficient evidence to justify him in requiring the respondent to recognize for a trial upon the first count, and that he tried the case only on the second count; and that being so, his jurisdiction was fully made out. State v. Hall, 25 Vt. 247.

III. PROCEDURE.

53. Entry of suit. A justice suit is duly entered, if the justice is present at the place appointed for trial within two hours after the hour set, for the purpose of discharging his duty as a magistrate in regard to the suit, either presently or in a convenient time, and has knowledge of the writ, then at the place and within his power, although he does not take the writ in his hands, nor call the parties; and he may hold the case open for a reasonable time without any special order, and need not, for this purpose, remain at the place of trial until the defendant appears, or until the expiration of the two hours. Peach v. Mills, 13 Vt. 501. Hall v. Safford, 25 Vt. 87. Underwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 120.

54. Default. The entry of a default upon a justice writ has no legal effect until after the expiration of the two hours given for appearance of the defendant. Hall v. Safford.

55. Sec. 5 of the act of 1803, requiring justices not to default a party until two hours after the time set for trial, applies exclusively to the return day of the writ, and not to a case continued. Steel v. Bates, 2 Vt. 320. 9 Vt. 406. 13 Vt. 241. 20 Vt. 52. (Changed by G. S. c. 81, s. 88.)

56. It is the duty of a justice, to see that the defendant in a suit before him has his day in court and an opportunity to make his defense. A justice writ was made returnable at one o'clock P. M. and the justice was present, and within the two hours entered a default upon the writ and left the place for a time, with the understanding that the case should stand open for trial, and if the defendant should appear before three o'clock, or within a reasonable time thereafter, and want a trial, he should have one. The defendant afterwards, within the two hours, appeared and was told by the plaintiff's attorney what had been done, and that the case was still open for trial. At four o'clock, the justice returned and informed the defendant that the suit was then open for trial, but he refused to appear, when the justice made up his judgment as by default. Held, that the judgment was regular, and that the justice had fully complied with his duty. Hall v. Safford, 25 Vt. 87.

57. Discontinuance. A judgment rendered by a justice after the suit has in any manner been discontinued, will be set aside on audita querela. The non-attendance of the justice at the place set for trial, and within the two hours given by statute for appearance after the hour set, operates as such discontinuance. Brown v. Stacy, 9 Vt. 118. Phelps v. Birge, 11 Vt. 161. Crawford v. Cheney, 12 Vt. 567. So, the absence of the parties. Pike v. Hill, 15 Vt. 183. Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529;—and all subsequent proceedings, as an entry of a continuance, or entry of judgment, without consent of parties, are void. Ib.

58. By Bennett, J. To constitute an entry of an action in a justice's court, within the purview of the statute, it is at least necessary for the magistrate to be at the place of holding the court within the two hours after the time set for trial, having in his possession the writ, and being ready on his part to proceed with the cause. If the action is not entered within the two hours, it operates as a discontinuance, and the jurisdiction of the magistrate is lapsed, and cannot be restored but by consent of the defendant entered on the records of the justice. So held in this case, although the justice was purposely detained by the defendant from appearing within the two hours, and though, after the two hours, the defendant appeared and was offered a hearing by the justice. Phelps v. Birge.

59. By Redfield, J. A case formally continued, without the appearance of the defendant, and without his consent, and with no statutory or other legal ground for such continuance, is, in strictness, discontinued, and no legal judgment can thereafter be taken in the case, without the consent of the defendant. Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 536.

60. A justice suit was made returnable at the plaintiff's inn. After service of the writ and before the trial day, the defendant made a tender which the plaintiff took. Next day, the defendant went on summoning his witnesses, hearing of which the plaintiff gave the defendant notice that the suit was discontinued. On receiving the notice, the defendant claimed his costs made since the tender. The plaintiff refused to pay, insisting that the suit was settled by his acceptance of the tender, and notified the justice not to appear. The defendant notified him to be present. The justice did appear with the defendant at the time and place appointed, having the writ, and called the case, and told the plaintiff that the defendant claimed costs. The plaintiff told the justice the case was settled, and he would have no court in his bar-room that day. The justice then publicly adjourned the court to another place, and there, in the absence of the plaintiff, rendered judgment for the defendant for his costs. On an audita querela brought to set aside that judgment;—Held, that the plaintiff could not in this way effectuate a discontinuance that would oust the justice of his authority to pass upon the question of the defendant's right to costs; and that the justice had proceeded properly, and that the judgment was valid. Remick v. Sanborn, 42 Vt. 477.

61. Adjournment. A justice has power, at any stage of a cause, to adjourn the court to any place in the town where the writ was made returnable. Griffin v. Spaulding, 6 Vt. 60.

62. A justice has a discretionary power to continue a case for a week or more, and to require the jury already summoned to appear again; although the better course might be to summon a new jury. Tracy, ex parte, 25 Vt. 93.

63. Where the parties to a justice suit agreed to a continuance out of court, and the continuance was entered on the files without either party or the justice being present at the time set for trial, an audita querela to set aside the judgment, afterwards rendered, was denied. Scott v. Larkin, 13 Vt. 112.

64. A justice decided, on the defendant's motion, to continue a cause pending before him, and then, at the same sitting, allowed the plaintiff to discontinue the suit. Held correct. Flint v. Whitton, 28 Vt. 557.

65. The limitation of three months to the adjournment of a justice court (G. S. c. 31, s. 41) applies to a single adjournment, and is not a limitation of the aggregate time of all of several adjournments. Bryant v. Pember, 48 Vt. 599.

66. An adjournment of a justice court beyond the time allowed by the statute, is a continuance out of court, and the defendant is not obliged further to appear in the cause; and a judgment thereafter taken, without his presence or consent, would be voidable, if not void. But a subsequent appearance and pleading to the merits, and a trial thereon, is a waiver of the irregularity. Id.

67. Date of judgment. A justice's judgment was set forth in pleadings as rendered September 24. The record produced described the judgment as rendered on that day for the plaintiff to recover of the defendant "$4 damages and his costs," and then added: "Said cause was continued for taxation of cost to September 25, at which time said cost was taxed at $8.92 and allowed at $5.95." Held, that the judgment was properly described as rendered on the 24th, and that the delay in the taxation of the costs was improperly described as a continuance. Starbird v. Moore, 21 Vt. 529.

68. Where a trial before a justice is commenced on the return day, or on a continuance day, and is pursued to judgment without adjournment, all the proceedings must, in law, be treated as done and perfected on that day, although, in fact, not completed until a subsequent day. So held in an audita querela to set aside an execution which described the judgment as rendered May 7th, whereas the record was of a judgment rendered May 8th; but the record also showed that the trial was commenced on the 7th, and lasted into the 8th, when the verdict and judgment were in fact rendered; and held, that the execution rightly described the judgment as rendered on the 7th. Oakes v. School District, 33 Vt. 155.

69. Continuance by another justice. Under the statute of 1882, No. 1, authorizing one justice to continue a suit returnable before another when the latter is "unable to attend by reason of sickness or other cause," and directing that the justice making the continuance should enter on the files "the reasons therefor," an entry on the files in this form: "The signing magistrate being absent, I continue this cause," &c.—was held sufficient. Holland v. Osgood, 8 Vt. 276.

70. In order for one justice regularly to continue a suit in place of the justice who signed the writ, he must be present at the place of return within the two hours from the time of return, and there, having the writ in his possession, continue the case. If not so done, the suit is discontinued, and a judgment thereafter rendered on default will be set aside on audita querela. Crawford v. Cheney, 13 Vt. 567. Hinman v. Swift, 18 Vt. 315.

71. Where a justice, authorized to continue a suit in the absence of the justice signing the writ, went to the door of the office where the writ was made returnable and within two hours after the hour set in the writ for trial, and found the door locked, and there, having the writ in his possession, decided to continue the suit;—Held, that it was legally entered and continued, although the door remained locked during the two hours, and although the case was not actually called at the door, and although the entry of the continuance was not made on the writ until after the two hours, and then at another office. Knight v. Berry, 22 Vt. 246.

72. Under R. S. c. 26, s. 19, providing that "whenever at the time and place of trial of any civil suit before a justice, such justice shall be unable to attend, any other justice may continue the cause," &c.;—Held, that such other justice could not continue the cause after it had been once continued by the justice signing the writ; that his power to continue the cause was limited to the return day. Whitcomb v. Rood, 20 Vt. 49. (Changed by G. S. c. 31, s. 42.)

73. But if, in such case, the defendant appears at the time to which the cause is finally continued, and does not object to the irregularity of the continuance, or waives it by going to trial upon the merits, the judgment rendered is regular; and this, although the justice who continued the cause was interested in the cause, or was related to one of the parties within the fourth degree. Hove v. Hoaford, 8 Vt. 220. 25 Vt. 224. Austin v. Smith, 23 Vt. 704; and see Bryant v. Pember, 43 Vt. 599.

74. But if the defendant appears and makes and insists upon the objection, the suit will be dismissed, and he will recover judgment for his costs. Whitcomb v. Rood, 20 Vt. 49. Ames v. Hilliard, 25 Vt. 222.

75. Though one justice can continue a case on account of the necessary absence of the justice who signed the writ, he cannot make an order continuing the case for notice to a defendant out of the State. Such order is inoperative. Braynard v. Burpee, 27 Vt. 616.

76. Jury trial. In a justice suit, after a judgment by default and a continuance for the assessment of damages, the defendant cannot claim a jury for the assessment. It is doubtful whether the justice is authorized, in such case, to award a venire; if so, it is discretionary with him. Brown v. Irwin, 21 Vt. 68.

77. Surrender by bail. Upon the surrender of the principal by his bail on mesne process in a justice court, the justice may order him, for the time being, into the custody of a proper officer. If none such be present, he may appoint some suitable person to fill the place, and to detain the principal, and this without written precept, but such verbal order can operate only while his court is in session. After the adjournment of the court, whether with or without day, it is only by a mittimus that the detention can be justified. Abells v. Chipman, 1 Tyl. 377.

78. Execution. Under the Statute of 1831, increasing a justice's jurisdiction from $53 to $100;—Held, that the execution should be made returnable in 60 days, unless the debt or damages recovered, exclusive of the costs, exceeded $53. Allen v. Warren, 9 Vt. 208.

IV. RECORDS.

79. The forms of proceedings of justices in making up their records should not be too strictly or severely examined, but should be most favorably construed. Story v. Kimball, 6 Vt. 541. McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 562.

80. The record of a justice showed a conviction, and a penalty imposed, but did not show any costs taxed; but in the recital of the judgment in the mittimus, the costs were stated as taxed at a sum named. Held, on habeas corpus, that this was not a fatal defect, since the mittimus showed sufficient matter by which the justice could amend his record. Howard, ex parte, 26 Vt. 205.

81. A justice should certify in his record the fact that a demand pleaded in set-off was so pleaded, although he did not regard it as bona fide. Hall v. Crossman, 27 Vt. 297.

82. A justice's record of a judgment which shows no appearance by either party, nor adjudication by the justice, and contains no allusion to any writ, process, or declaration, and shows no award of execution, is not such evidence of the judgment as the record contemplated by the statute should furnish, and, if the justice is alive, is not admissible. Nye v. Kellam, 18 Vt. 594;—though the justice may live without the State. Wright v. Fletcher, 12 Vt. 431.

83. The original minutes of a justice, made upon and in connection with the original files, and showing a judgment rendered, are sufficient evidence of the judgment, when no other can be had,—as, where the justice has deceased and has made no other, or formal record. Story v. Kimball, 6 Vt. 541.

84. In such case, also, a certified copy of the original files and entries thereon, made by the county clerk, may be sufficient as evidence of the record. Ellsworth v. Learned, 21 Vt. 535.

85. But where the justice is alive, such original entries and files are not admissible to make out a record. Strong v. Bradley, 13 Vt. 9. Nye v. Kellam, 18 Vt. 594. 21 Vt. 532.

86. A justice being required by law to record his proceedings, copies of his records, by him certified, are as valid evidence as those of the higher courts. He sends up no originals on appeal, but certifies copies of his record, including the recognizances taken. Hubbard v. Davis, 1 Aik. 296.

87. As evidence of a justice's judgment the plaintiff offered a copy of the original writ and of the officer's return and of the entries on the writ:—"Continued to September 24, 1845, at eight o'clock forenoon, at which time judgment on verdict of jury for plf. to recover of dft. four dollars damages and his costs"—certified by the justice to be "a true copy." Held to be a sufficient copy of the record of a judgment. Starbird v. Moore, 21 Vt. 529.

88. The mode of authenticating the record of a justice of the peace to be used in another State is, for the justice to certify his record, and then certify that he has no seal or clerk, but acts as clerk of his own court, and that the foregoing attestation is in due form; and such record is as conclusive to all intents, as a record of the highest court in the State. Redfield, J. in Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 448. Starkweather v. Loomis, 2 Vt. 574. Blodget v. Jordan, 6 Vt. 590.

89. A justice of the peace, although out of office but residing in the county for which he was appointed, is the proper one to certify his own records, and not the county clerk. Carruth v. Tighe, 32 Vt. 626.

V. ACTION AGAINST JUSTICE.

90. Held, that an indictment did not lie against a justice of the peace for doing an act, as justice, after his commission had expired; but, arguendo, that a civil action would lie by a party injured. State v. Campbell, 2 Tyl. 177.

91. Under a statute authorizing a suit by writ of capias against a non-resident of the State, but not against a resident;—Held, that a justice who signed such writ against a resident was not liable for an arrest and imprisonment thereon, where the party was described in the writ as a non-resident, and the justice supposed such to be the fact. It is not a case where the justice is required, at his peril, to know in advance, the facts limiting his jurisdiction; and sound policy requires us to extend the same rule of construction in favor of the jurisdiction of justices, which obtains as to courts of general jurisdiction. Wright v. Hasen, 24 Vt. 143.

92. A justice has the same right to the custody of papers or exhibits filed as evidence in a case before him, that any other court of record has. He can retain them so long as they are necessary for his consideration in determining the issues upon which they are evidence. If he refuses to surrender them after such determination, where they were used simply as evidence, he is liable in trover. Yates v. Pelton, 48 Vt. 314.

93. A justice is liable in trespass for an arrest upon a warrant issued by him before taking the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution. Courser v. Powers, 34 Vt. 517.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN.

1. Boundary. Lands bounded on Lake Champlain extend to the edge of the water at low water mark; and the same rule applies to lands near the lake bounded on a creek emptying into it, the waters of which ordinarily maintain the same level and rise and fall with the waters of the lake. Fletcher v. Phelps, 28 Vt. 257. Jakeway v. Barrett, 38 Vt. 316. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

2. Wharfing. The owner of land bounded by Lake Champlain has no common law right in Vermont, to appropriate, as his own, the bed of the lake beyond low water mark. His right to build wharves, &c., into the lake beyond low water mark, is not appurtenant to his ownership of his land so bounded, but is only the right given him by statute. (G. S. c. 64, ss. 5, 6, 7.) Hence, where the defendant filled into the lake in front of the plaintiff's land, and built wharves and docks upon the made land;—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain ejectment therefor. Austin v. Rutland R. Co.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

- I. CHARACTER OF TENANCY.
- II. DISPUTING LANDLORD'S TITLE.
- III. TERMINATING TENANCY.
- IV. RENT.
- V. TENANT'S RIGHT.
- VI. LETTING ON SHARES.
- VII. INJURY TO REVERSION.

I. CHARACTER OF TENANCY.

1. At will, or for years. A parol lease, with a stipulation to pay an annual rent, though "an estate at will only," under the statute, may become an estate from year to year by subsequent events;—as, by an entry into possession and paying the rent according to the stipulation, and continuing in possession beyond the first year. Barlow v. Wainwright, 22 Vt. 88. Hall v. Wadsworth, 28 Vt. 410. Silsby v. Allen, 43 Vt. 172. 46 Vt. 88.

2. Continuing in possession of a farm for several years under a parol agreement to support the owner, was treated as a tenancy from year to year, in Hanohett v. Whitney, 2 Aik. 240. S. C., 1 Vt. 311.

3. An agreement to pay rent is an essential element of a tenancy from year to year. Cham- berlin v. Donahue, 45 Vt. 50. Rich v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 84.

4. Leases for uncertain times are, prima facie, leases at will; it is the reservation of annual rent that turns them into leases from year to year. Rich v. Bolton.

5. Where a tenancy at will has run into a tenancy from year to year, the landlord cannot maintain trespass qua. clau. against the tenant. Catlin v. Hayden, 1 Vt. 375.

II. DISPUTING LANDLORD'S TITLE.

6. In ejectment for non-payment of rent, the tenant cannot set up a defense adverse to the title of his landlord, nor deny his title. Robinson v. Hathaway, Brayt. 150.

7. One who holds under another cannot set up an adverse claim, until he has first surrendered up the possession to him; and all who in any way obtain this possession of the tenant are tenants in his place, and are subject to the same rule, whether informed of that relationship, or not. Reed v. Shepley, 6 Vt. 602.

8. Where one goes into possession of land under another, or acknowledging the title of another, whether such possession is that of a tenant proper, a mortgagor, a trustee, or is under a contract of purchase, neither he nor his grantee can set up an adverse title or possession, nor does such possession become adverse, until and unless distinct knowledge or notice of such adverse claim is brought home to the party under whom the possession was taken, and is held. Greene v. Munson, 9 Vt. 37. Bowker v. Walker, 1 Vt. 18. Tuttle v. Reynolds, 1 Vt. 80. Reed v. Shepley. Hall v. Dewey, 10 Vt. 593. Ripley v. Yale, 18 Vt. 220. Wires v. Nelson, 26 Vt. 13. Robinson v. Sherwin, 36 Vt. 69.

9. A tenant cannot dispute the title of his landlord, nor acquire a title by adverse possession, until he has first, bona fide, surrendered his possession, or has by some unequivocal act repudiated the tenancy, and this was distinctly known to the landlord; and this extends to mortgagor and mortgagee, trustee and cestui que trust, vendor and vendee, and to all cases where one goes into possession of the land of another, acknowledging his title. Greene v. Munson. Stacy v. Bostwick, 48 Vt. 192.

10. A tenant may repudiate his tenancy and set up an adverse claim in his own right, and, by making this known to his landlord, but in no other way, the statute of limitations begins to run in his favor from that time. Greene v.

Munson. North v. Barnum, 10 Vt. 220. Hall v. Dewey, 10 Vt. 598. 16 Vt. 124. 19 Vt. 168. 22 Vt. 623. 24 Vt. 174. 28 Vt. 618. 31 Vt. 177.

11. Though a tenant may, by claiming in his own right and apprising his landlord thereof, so far throw off his tenancy as to commence an adverse possession, which may ripen into a title, yet for all other purposes the original relation has its legal effect as to the landlord's rights. The tenant is still restrained from disputing the title under which he entered. Hall v. Dewey.

12. In an action for use and occupation, the defendant cannot dispute the title of his landlord, nor that of the assignee of the landlord; and while he occupied, he is bound to pay the rent, and cannot object that the assignment of the lease to the plaintiff was fraudulent and void as to the creditors of the lessor. Steen v. Wadsworth, 17 Vt. 297.

13. No case has been found where this principle of repudiating a tenancy, without surrendering the possession, has been extended to an action for the rent, so as to excuse the tenant from paying rent, or for use and occupation for the full term of the occupation, under the contract by which he made his entry. Redfield, C. J., in Sherman v. Champlain Tr. Co., 31 Vt. 178.

14. A tenant in possession under the right owner was held not concluded by his acknowledgement of tenancy to the plaintiff, made under a mutual misapprehension, or misrepresentation of the plaintiff's title. Swift v. Dean, 11 Vt. 323.

15. One who receives possession of land from another may set up an adverse claim of title to it, if that is consistent with the contract under which he obtained possession; otherwise, not. Ripley v. Yale, 19 Vt. 156.

16. Though a tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title, yet he may show that it has expired by matter ex post facto; and this will be a defense to an action of covenant for non-payment of rent, or of ejectment predicated upon a forfeiture. Orleans Co. Grammar School v. Parker, 25 Vt. 696.

17. A tenant in possession cannot surrender his possession to a third person, without consent of his landlord, so as to defeat the possession of the landlord. Swift v. Gage, 26 Vt. 224.

18. Where the plaintiff, a tenant of the defendant, a mortgagor, took a deed of assignment of the mortgage from the mortgagee after condition broken, and exhibited the mortgage deed and assignment to the defendant, notifying him that he held the premises under that mortgage;—Held, that this was a repudiation of the tenancy and a dissolution of that relation; that his possession thereafter was adverse, and that by force of such possession and title he could maintain trespass against the defendant for any after entry upon the premises. Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165.

19. In ejectment by a corporation against one who entered as their tenant, the defendant cannot, under the general issue, deny or compel the plaintiffs to prove their corporate capacity, nor object to the formality of the lease under which he held. Grammar School v. Burt, 11 Vt. 632.

20. A religious society leased to the defendant the first settled minister's right in the town, and afterwards brought ejectment founded upon a provision of forfeiture. The plaintiffs produced on trial no evidence of title except the lease. Held, that this was sufficient, and that the defendant could not object that the care and management of such lands were given by statute to the selectmen of the town. Congregational Soc'y. of Newport v. Walker, 18 Vt. 600.

III. TERMINATING TENANCY.

21. Notice to quit. In order to terminate a tenancy from year to year, so as to entitle the lessor to possession, or the lessee to exemption from the payment of rent, six months' notice of the termination of the tenancy, and looking to the end of the year, is necessary. Hanohett v. Whitney, 2 Aik. 241. S. C., 1 Vt. 311. Barlow v. Wainwright, 22 Vt. 88. Hall v. Wadsworth, 28 Vt. 410. Silaby v. Allen, 43 Vt. 172.

22. A tenancy at will, which is such in fact, may always be determined by any act or declaration inconsistent with the continued voluntary relation of landlord and tenant, any assertion of title to the possession—as, notice to quit; threat of legal means to recover possession; anything which amounts to a demand of possession, although not expressed in precise and formal language; the bringing of an action to obtain possession, which fails, &c. Chamberlin v. Donahue, 45 Vt. 50. Rich v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 84.

23. A tenant at will, though he may have occupied for several years, is not entitled to six months' notice to quit, but only to reasonable notice, and such as determines the will of the landlord; and, where emblements are in question, such as will protect the tenant in his rights. Rich v. Bolton.

24. One took a lease of a slate quarry for a term of years and occupied the quarry, paying as rent the price per square, stipulated in the lease, for the slate quarried. He afterwards, without consent of the owner, took possession of and worked a part of the quarry outside the limits fixed in the lease, and for several years accounted to the owner for the slate quarried, in the same manner as for that embraced in the lease. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the occupation and use of this additional parcel had not expanded into a tenancy from year to year, so as to require a six months' notice to quit, but only such notice as was reasonable to enable him to quarry the slate he had uncovered. Sheldon v. Davey, 42 Vt. 687.

25. The plaintiff and defendant, adjoining land owners, by written agreement established a division line between them, subject to be changed on the establishment of the true line "on proper and lawful authority and manner," and, if the line should be so changed, each should pay to the other a specified yearly rent per acre for the land of the other occupied by him, as it should prove. In ejectment, wherein the true line was found and it appeared that the defendant had been occupying the plaintiff's land;—Held, that as both parties claimed title to the land, the defendant was not tenant of the plaintiff so as to be entitled to six months' notice to quit, but that his occupation was under a license, and he was entitled to reasonable notice of the plaintiff's intention to institute a suit to settle the disputed line; and that, for want of this, the plaintiff could not recover. Bishop v. Babcock, 22 Vt. 295.

26. —when not necessary. A disclaimer of tenancy, or denial of the owner's title, dispenses with the necessity of notice to quit. Tuttle v. Reynolds, 1 Vt. 80. Clapp v. Beardsley, Id., 151.

27. Where a defendant in ejectment denies on trial the plaintiff's title and his own tenancy, or requires proof thereof, he cannot insist on want of notice to quit, as a defense. Catlin v. Washburn, 8 Vt. 25.

28. Notice to quit is never necessary, unless the relation of landlord and tenant subsists; nor, where the party in possession repudiates such relation, is notice to quit, or demand of possession, necessary. Chamberlin v. Donahue, 45 Vt. 50.

29. The defendant went into possession of the plaintiff's land with the plaintiff's consent, but with no agreement as to paying rent, and so occupied for near 14 years. He built a barn on the premises and repaired the house. He declined and refused to settle and pay rent. Held, that after such refusal, he could not claim that he was holding under an implied liability to pay reasonable annual rent; that if the repairs were made in compensation for the use, they were not a payment of a yearly rent, but rather payments in gross for the whole occupancy; and that the defendant was a mere tenant at will, and so not entitled to six months' notice to quit. Rich v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 84.

IV. RENT.

30. In ejectment for non-payment of rent under a lease;—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to time to redeem, i. e., to pay the rent, &c., under Sec. 76 of the judiciary act of 1797. Rockingham v. Hunt, Brayt. 66.

31. That the receiving of rent, eo nomine, accruing after a forfeiture, is a waiver of the forfeiture, applies only to cases where the forfeiture was known at the time; and, in ejectment for rent under G. S. c. 40, s. 14, can only apply to the receipt of such rent after suit brought. Maidstone v. Stevens, 7 Vt. 487.

32. The right to re-enter for non-payment of rent is not incident to the estate of the lessor, at common law, but must be reserved by deed; and all the conditions, or stipulations, annexed thereto must be complied with. Smith v. Blaisdell, 17 Vt. 199.

33. Where there was a parol lease for one year, and an express promise by parol to pay therefor a certain sum, and most of the premises were, during the year, consumed by fire, but the lessee continued to occupy the rest through the year;—Held, that he was liable, in assumpsit for use and occupation, for the full rent agreed. Voluntine v. Godfrey, 9 Vt. 186.

34. A conveyance by a lessor to a lessee of the leased premises, is not a release of a claim for the rent already accrued. Johnson v. Mussey, 42 Vt. 708.

35. The fact that a tenant of leased premises is also a mortgagee of the same, with condition broken, and has obtained a decree of foreclosure, but where the time given for redemption has not yet expired, does not of itself, without other notice of an intention to terminate the relation of tenant, absolve him from payment of the stipulated rent. Id.

36. An under-tenant, who has paid his rent to the lessee, is not liable for rent to the lessor, unless he attorned to the lessor during his occupancy. Way v. Holton, 46 Vt. 184.

37. Surrender. If a tenant discontinues his possession, this should be treated as a surrender to his landlord. Warner v. Page, 4 Vt. 291.

38. The lease of premises at a certain quarterly rent provided that, on failure to pay the rent at the day, the lessor should have full right and liberty to take immediate possession without "law" or hindrance. The lessor demanded payment of a quarter's rent, which the lessee claimed (and so the fact was) he had already paid; whereupon the lessor told him to quit, unless he paid the rent; and thereupon the lessee did quit the premises, which remained thereafter unoccupied. Held, that this constituted a surrender and acceptance of the possession and terminated the lease, and that the lessee was not liable for rents thereafter. Patchin v. Dickerman, 81 Vt. 666.

39. If a lease gives the lessee a right to enter and possess the premises, it is, I think, his business to get into possession; and it is not incumbent on the lessor to put him in. The lessee has as perfect and effectual a remedy to dispossess the wrong-doer, after the execution of the lease, as the lessor had before that time. Bennett, J., in University of Vt. v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52. So held in Underwood v. Birchard, 47 Vt. 305.

V. TENANT'S RIGHT.

40. Unless under special circumstances, a tenant cannot make necessary repairs at the expense of the landlord, without his express consent and authority. Brown v. Burrington, 36 Vt. 40.

41. Erections made by a tenant which he has a right to remove; must be removed before the expiration of his term—or, perhaps, in a reasonable time thereafter. Preston v. Briggs, 16 Vt. 124.

42. A tenant has no right to remove from a farm manure made from the crops which grew upon it, and which good husbandry requires should be expended upon it, although he was the owner of the crops. Wetherbee v. Ellison, 19 Vt. 379.

43. The court cannot assume that it was necessarily bad husbandry, for a tenant to carry off the greater portion of the hay, for a single year, from the farm where grown. This is a question of fact for the jury. Wing v. Gray, 36 Vt. 261.

44. The particular contract. Since a lease is good against the lessor without acknowledgment, if the lessee goes into possession under it and conforms to its terms, the rights of the parties are to be regulated by it as a written contract. Lemington v. Stevens, 48 Vt. 38.

45. The plaintiff was in possession of premises under a written lease from the defendant, not acknowledged, when the defendant conveyed the premises to another party, not reserving the plaintiff's right, and claiming that he had forfeited it. In an action of assumpsit for breach of the contract;—Held, that it was no defense to the action, that the grantee of the land had notice of the plaintiff's title, and might be compelled to confirm it in equity. Staples v. Flint, 28 Vt. 794.

46. The defendant took a lease of land, on which there was a growing hay crop, for five years from July 18, 1863, and gathered that crop, and, before the 18th of July, 1868, gathered and removed the hay crop of that year, making six hay crops during the term. The county court having found that it was good husbandry to gather the last crop at the time it was gathered, and no custom being shown to control the terms of the lease;—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the last crop. Wiley v. Conner, 44 Vt. 68.

47. Where the lessee of land agreed, by way of rent, to "deliver" to the lessor a certain share of the products at a time and place named;—Held, that he was bound to sever such share from the mass and to deliver it as agreed;—that until after delivery the lessor had no interest in severalty in the crops. Manwell v. Manwell, 14 Vt. 14.

48. H leased his farm and stock to D for the term of two years, for which D agreed, among other things, to "deliver" to H one-half of all the crops, except that fed to the stock, the produce to be divided by weight and measure. After gathering the hay and crops, D, together with A, drew them away and consumed them. Held, that under this contract, the title to the hay and crops did not become vested in H without delivery, and that he had no such title as enabled him to sustain trover, or an action on the case for an injury to any reversionary interest, against D and A. Hurd v. Darling, 14 Vt. 214. 16 Vt. 377. But see 28 Vt. 4. 21 Vt. 181. 23 Vt. 311-12.

VI. LETTING ON SHARES.

49. An agreement between the owner of land and the occupier, that the latter shall raise a single crop upon shares, does not amount to a lease of the land, but the parties have a joint interest in the crop before a severance of the shares. Bishop v. Doty, 1 Vt. 37.

50. A contract in writing, not sealed, agreeing to let a farm for five years, or so long as the parties should agree and be satisfied; and terminable upon one month's notice by either party, and taken after the usual custom of farmers, that is, the produce of the farm to be equally divided by weight and measure between the parties, was held not to be a lease, but that it gave the parties a common interest in the growing crops, as in case of a letting for a single crop. Aiken v. Smith, 21 Vt. 172.

51. In the ordinary case of letting a farm by the owner to one who performs the labor and receives a share of the products of the farm and the stock, the general result of such a contract is to make the parties joint owners or tenants in common of the increment. But the parties may, by their contract, vest the property in the increment, either in the one, or in the other. Frost v. Kellogg, 23 Vt. 303.

52. The taking of a field to plant, cultivate and harvest on shares does not amount to a lease of the land, nor divest the owner of his legal possession, nor create any estate in the land, but gives the taker a right and authority to enter upon the land for the purpose of carrying out his contract. Warner v. Hoisington, 43 Vt. 94.

53. In trespass, q. c. f., by the owner of the field, in such case, the defendant's right to enter should be specially pleaded. Ib.

54. Title to crop, &c.—Particular provisions. The tenant of a farm and stock upon shares, where by the contract he is to have one-half the growth of the cattle and half the wool of the sheep, has but an inchoate interest in such property, which rests merely in contract, and does not become perfect until his part of the contract is performed; and such interest, before the expiration of the tenancy, cannot be taken and sold on execution, so as to convey a title to the purchaser. Smith v. Meech, 26 Vt. 288.

55. Where it was provided by a contract for raising a crop of grain upon shares, that the grain when harvested should be secured in the barn of the land-owner and be there threshed by the occupier, and be then divided between the parties;—Held, that an attachment of one-half of the harvested grain in the field, as the property of the occupier, worked no severance, and that the land-owner was not liable to the attaching officer for removing the grain to his barn. Bishop v. Doty, 1 Vt. 87.

56. Where, in the letting of a farm and stock, it is provided, expressly or impliedly, that certain growth and increase of the original stock shall be kept and divided at the end of the term, the title of the tenant, as an owner in common therein, becomes perfected only at the end of the term, and then only by having performed the conditions of the lease. A sale by him of the entire interest, before that time, is a conversion, and the lessor can maintain trover therefor. Turner v. Waldo, 40 Vt. 51;—or replevin. Briggs v. Oaks, 26 Vt. 188.

57. A provision in the lease of a farm upon shares, that the produce shall be "at the control of the lessor until sold," leaves the entire ownership in the lessor, and gives to the lessee only the right to his share of the money, after the produce has been sold. In such case, the produce is not subject to attachment for the debt of the lessee. Edson v. Colburn, 28 Vt. 681.

58. Where the owner leased land for one year at a specified money rent, and "to have a hold or lien on the crops raised on said premises until the rent is paid";—Held, that this provision was merely an executory contract, and that the lessor acquired no general or qualified property in the crops before they were raised and delivered to him. Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97. (Overruled by Paris v. Vail, 18 Vt. 277. Smith v. Atkins, Ib. 464. Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 469, &c., infra.)

59. The sale of a thing not in existence is, upon general principles, inoperative, being merely executory. But where the thing thereafter to be produced is the produce of land, or other thing, the owner of the principal thing may retain the general property of the thing produced, unless there be fraud in the contract as to creditors. Smith v. Atkins, 18 Vt. 461.

60. The lessor of land may stipulate in the lease that the crops grown on the premises by the lessee, or the stock put by the lessor upon the land, with its increase, farming tools, &c., shall remain the property of the lessor until the rent shall be paid, or other condition performed, and such a provision is valid, not only between the parties, but as to third persons also. Paris v. Vail, 18 Vt. 277. Smith v. Atkins, Ib. 461. Briggs v. Oaks, 26 Vt. 188. Briggs v. Bennett, Ib. 146. Gray v. Stevens, 28 Vt. 1. Edson v. Colburn, Ib. 681. Leland v. Sprague, Ib. 746. Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 465. Bellows v. Wells, 36 Vt. 599. Cooper v. Cole, 38 Vt. 191.

61. But these decisions all proceed upon the ground, that the lessor is the absolute owner of the premises leased, so far as respects the right to the crops as between the lessor and third persons, and do not apply to the case where a mortgagor is in possession, though under a lease in form, and has raised crops which are attached by his creditors. Cooper v. Cole, 38 Vt. 185. See Leland v. Sprague, 28 Vt. 746.

62. The plaintiff hired of the defendant a piece of land, at a certain price per acre, to raise a crop of corn, the defendant to have the stocks. The plaintiff planted and cultivated the crop, and the defendant harvested and retained it, claiming to have a lien upon it. Held, there being no express contract to that effect, that the defendant had no such lien, and was liable in trover for the corn, and without demand. Loomis v. Lincoln, 24 Vt. 158.

63. Where a lessor retained, by the agreement, a "lien" upon all the crops and produce of the farm leased, as security for payment of the rent;—Held, that this lien was not affected by the lessor's taking at the same time the note of the lessee, with surety, for the rent, and that he had brought suit on the note. Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 465.

64. B moved on to A's farm in the spring, under an arrangement that A should furnish means to carry on the farm and have a lien upon the crops for his security for advances, and that B should cut and put up the hay, either upon shares or for reasonable pay, as A should elect. A did furnish the means and B cut and put up the hay. In the winter following, A elected to have the hay divided as upon shares, and it was agreed that A should have a lien upon B's share, enough to pay the advances then in arrear. The plaintiff, an officer, then attached the hay as the property of B. Subsequently, the hay was divided and the share so holden to pay advances was set apart, by mutual arrangement between A, B, and the defendant, and was sold to the defendant to pay A's debt to him, contracted for such advances. The defendant removed the hay, and executed his receipt to the plaintiff upon his attachment. In an action of trover upon the receipt;—Held, that B had no property in the hay; that the property was in A until the sale to the defendant, and the defendant acquired a good title by his purchase, and was the lawful owner when he executed the receipt, and that the plaintiff could not recover. Tinker v. Cobb, 39 Vt. 438.

65. Where a lessee of land conveyed, by deed recorded, to his lessor (who then had a right of re-entry under the lease for non-payment of past due rent), the crops then growing, which required annual planting or sowing and cultivation;—Held, that this was equivalent to a reservation of the crops in the original lease;—and held, that no change of possession was necessary in order to protect them, when gathered, from attachment as the property of the lessee,—they not being subject to attachment when sold, and then having no real existence as property at all. Bellows v. Wells, 36 Vt. 599.

66. Under the provisions of a lease of a farm upon shares, that the lessor shall receive one-half of the gross proceeds of the farm and shall "have as much property and value in hay, seed, teams, stock and tools returned to him at the expiration of said contract as he puts on to said farm and delivers to said lessee";—Held, that the lessee was bound, under the contract, to return the property specified, or its equivalent in value; and he was held liable to make up all losses by death and depreciation in value by age or otherwise, though without his fault, except as to such property as was disposed of by mutual consent during the lease. Smalley v. Corliss, 37 Vt. 486.

67. The defendant leased to the plaintiff a farm to be cultivated on shares for one year, by the terms of which lease the defendant was to furnish the plaintiff a horse to be used in carrying on the farm. He did furnish the horse, which the plaintiff accepted and used, but later in the season the defendant, against the will of the plaintiff, took away and sold the horse, without furnishing any other in its place. In an action of trover for the horse;—Held, that the plaintiff had acquired by the bailment a special property in the horse, and was entitled to recover in this action against the defendant, the general owner, just damages for the loss of the use of the horse upon the farm for the remainder of the term. Hickok v. Buck, 22 Vt. 149. 32 Vt. 650.

68. Where one took a farm at the halves, the landlord to put upon it a yoke of oxen to do the farm work, the tenant furnishing half the keeping and taking care of them;—Held, that the value of the use of the oxen upon the farm for the exclusive benefit of the landlord, also the earnings of the oxen when worked by the tenant off the farm, should be equally divided. Brown v. Burrington, 36 Vt. 40.

69. In such case, where the oxen were sold, during the year, by the consent and for the benefit of both, but without any agreement as to how the team work should be done in future, and who should furnish it;—Held, that this should not be deemed a waiver of the original stipulation, that the landlord should furnish the team. Id.

VII. INJURY TO REVERSION.

70. A declaration for obstructing a way and right of way in the plaintiff's possession, is not sustained by proof of such obstruction while in possession of his tenant for years. In such case, the action should be for an injury, if any, to his reversionary interest. Higgins v. Farnsworth, 48 Vt. 512.

See FORCIBLE ENTRY.

LEGAL TENDER ACT.

1. The law of Congress making treasury notes a legal tender, was held (without much discussion) to be constitutional; and held, that the tender of such notes by a State bank, in payment of its own bank bills, was a good tender, notwithstanding a statute enacting that if a bank should refuse payment in gold or silver of any bill presented for payment, the bank should be liable to pay the holder damages at the rate of twelve per cent, a year &c. Carpenter v. Northfield Bank, 39 Vt. 46.

2. The judgment of the U. S. supreme court in May, 1871, that all debts, whether created before or after the passage of the "Legal Tender Act," were payable in the paper issues authorized by Congress, determined and fixed the rule of legal duty binding upon all other courts; and held, that the Vermont State bonds, issued before the passage of that Act and falling due June 1, 1871, were legally payable in legal tender notes. Kellogg v. State Treasurer, 44 Vt. 356.

3. There is no law in this State that authorizes the court to make an order, on the rendition of a judgment upon a promissory note dated before the passage of the U. S. Legal Tender Act, that such judgment be paid in specie currency, or its equivalent in legal tender notes. Davis v. Field, 43 Vt. 221.

4. In actions upon debts due in coin, the value in currency of the amount of the debts in coin, when due, is not the true rule of damages. Townsend v. Jennison, 44 Vt. 315.

LICENSE.

1. The plaintiff's written agreement, made at the time of his sale of a farm, that the notes given for the price might be satisfied by paying a certain mortgage on the farm, where this was made known to the mortgagee and relied upon, was held not revocable by the plaintiff. Joy v. Hull, 4 Vt. 455; and see Lewis v. Holly, Brayt. 204.

2. Where one erects a building upon the land of another by his license, such license cannot be revoked so as to make the owner of the building a trespasser for entering upon the land, within a reasonable time after the revocation, to remove the building. Barnes v. Barnes, 6 Vt. 388. 16 Vt. 129.

3. A building erected on the plaintiff's land, but owned by another, was sold at sheriff's sale, at which the plaintiff announced that whoever bid off the building might take it away at any time. Held, that such license could not thereafter be revoked, so as to make the purchaser a trespasser by entering upon the land to remove the building. Id.

4. A lessee of land who erects a building thereon by license of the owner of the fee, with the right to move off the building at the expiration of the lease, has an interest in real estate which he may convey by mortgage, or which may be set off on execution. Hagar v. Brainerd, 44 Vt. 294.

5. Whether a parol license to enjoy an easement in lands, when once executed, becomes irrevocable at law, and the right thus acquired permanent—quære. But if expense be incurred upon the faith of it, so that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo, equity may grant relief, as in any other case of part performance of a parol contract for the sale of lands, or any interest therein,—i. e., to prevent fraud. Redfield, J., in Hall v. Chaffee, 18 Vt. 150, note.

6. Held, that a license given to lay an aqueduct to the licensor's spring and to take water therefrom, under which the licensee lays an aqueduct, may be revoked after the licensee has had the full benefit of that expenditure; and does not give the right to lay a new aqueduct, after the first has become decayed and useless. Allen v. Flake, 42 Vt. 462.

7. The plaintiff and his wife had difficulties, and had separated, when, upon a conference between them about their difficulties, he said to her, that "if she was not going to live with him again she might have a part of the household furniture, and might come and get it." Held, that this did not amount to a license to the wife to go to the plaintiff's house, in his absence, and take away, without his knowledge, such articles of furniture as she might choose. Crumb v. Oaks, 38 Vt. 566.

8. An instrument defectively executed as a lease, may be good as a license to enter. White v. Fuller, 88 Vt. 198.

LIEN.

1. Particular lien of mechanic. Where a party has, in the way of his trade or occupation, bestowed his money, labor, or skill upon a chattel in the alteration and improvement of its properties, or for the purpose of imparting an additional value to it, he has a lien upon it for a fair and reasonable remuneration, or for the contract price,—e. g., a manufacture of starch. Ruggles v. Walker, 34 Vt. 468;—a dresser of skins. Burdick v. Murray, 8 Vt. 302.

2. An agreement to pay in advance for the manufacturing an article will not, of itself, exclude the manufacturer's lien for the price of manufacturing—such agreement not being inconsistent with the lien. Id.

3. The accepting of a promissory note in payment of an account for labor on any article, amounts to a waiver of any lien upon the article, for such labor, whether the note is payable on demand, or at a future time. Hutchins v. Olcott, 4 Vt. 549. 14 Vt. 489.

4. A particular lien—as, of a manufacturer—as distinguished from a pawn or pledge, is merely a right to retain or keep possession of the property until payment, without power of sale. It is a personal privilege which cannot be sold or transferred, and, if possession be parted with, the property becomes free from the lien. Ruggles v. Walker, 34 Vt. 468. Kitteridge v. Freeman, 48 Vt. 62.

5. Where the general owner of boards sued a stranger in trover for a conversion of them;—Held, that the defendant could not set up in defense a lien of the sawyer for the price of the sawing, where the sawyer had not exercised his right of lien, but had voluntarily parted with the possession or control of the boards before the trespass. Such lien must be considered as waived. Bailey v. Quint, 22 Vt. 474.

6. Mechanic's lien by statute. The mechanic's lien, as applicable to buildings under the statutes before 1863, is given only to those who contract with the owner of the building, or have a claim against him for their labor, and not to laborers employed by the contractors, and between whom and the owner there is no privity of contract. Greenough v. Nichols, 30 Vt. 768.

7. A mortgage lien, acquired by perfecting a mechanic's lien under the statute, stands upon the same ground as to existing rights, whether legal or equitable, as a mortgage executed at the time of the filing of the claim. Kenny v. Gage, 33 Vt. 302.

8. On a bill of foreclosure of a mechanic's lien;—Held, that the lien rested only upon the building upon which the work was done, but this carried with it such right to the land on which the building stood, and which was appurtenant to it, as should be necessary to enable the orator to hold, appropriate, and use the building for all the legitimate purposes to which such building might be put, in order to render it available as property in its full value and usefulness. Roby v. University of Vt. 36 Vt. 564.

9. Agistment. The agister of cattle has no lien upon them for their keeping, unless so agreed. Cummings v. Harris, 3 Vt. 244. Wills v. Barrister, 36 Vt. 220.

10. Advancements by wrong doer. Where one wrongfully takes property, though under a bona fide claim of right, he acquires no lien thereon, as against the owner replevying it, by paying the charges for freight and giving bonds to the U. S. for the payment of duties, though the bonds have become forfeited by reason of the replevin and subsequent sale by the owner; and the owner in such case may replevy the property without the tender of such charges, or an indemnity. Guilford v. Smith, 30 Vt. 49.

11. Assignment subject to lien. Where the plaintiff attached certain sheep of his debtor, and the debtor then assigned them to the defendant, but subject to the plaintiff's attachment and the payment of his debt, and the defendant afterwards disposed of the sheep without accounting to the plaintiff;—Held, that the defendant was liable in trover to the extent of the plaintiff's debt. Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554.

As to particular liens, see the appropriate titles; such as ATTORNEYS; CARRIERS; FACTORS, &c.; also, ATTACHMENT; EXECUTION; BANKRUPTCY; SALES, B.

V. PLEADING.

I. CASES TO WHICH THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS APPLIES.

1. At law.

1. College lands. The provision in the statute of limitations, that it shall not extend to lands granted, sequestered or appropriated to public, pious, or charitable uses, applies to lands reserved or granted in a town charter for the use of a seminary or college. University of Vt. v. Reynolds, 3 Vt. 542.

2. Covenant of seisin. Under the statute of limitations of 1797, s. 8, an action upon the covenant of seisin was held barred in eight years. Pierce v. Johnson, 4 Vt. 247.

3. The State. The statute of limitations barring civil actions does not apply to the State, not being named. State Treasurer v. Weeks, 4 Vt. 215.

4. Probate bond. No statute of limitations applies, where the non-payment of a debt allowed by commissioners is assigned as a breach of the administrator's bond. Probate Court v. Chandler, 7 Vt. 111. 9 Vt. 75.

5. In scire facias, by a professed creditor of a distracted person under guardianship, against the guardian, after judgment for the penalty of the probate bond;—Held, that any plea denying the indebtedness of the ward is good,—as, the statute of limitations. Aldrich v. Williams, 12 Vt. 418.

6. Insane person. The putting of a distracted person under guardianship, or the fact that he is under guardianship, does not prevent the bringing of suits against him, and therefore does not prevent the running of the statute of limitations upon a claim against him. Id.

7. Sheriff's recognizance. The official recognizance of a sheriff and his sureties is not a judgment, nor a specialty; and in an action brought thereon, whether debt or scire facias, the period of limitation is six years from the accruing of the cause of action (G. S. c. 63, ss. 5, 11.) Brainerd v. Stewart, 33 Vt. 402.

8. Debtor in jail. The statute of limitations will not run on a judgment while the debtor is in prison thereon, for his imprisonment repels any presumption of payment, while it continues; but the statute will begin to run on his discharge. Ferries v. Barlow, 8 Vt. 90. 13 Vt. 294.

9. Informal levy of execution. Nor will it run upon a judgment apparently satisfied of record by the levy of an execution, during the continuance of such levy, so as to bar a scire facias to revive the judgment, where the levy was made upon property not the debtor's. Baxter v. Tucker, 1 D. Chip. 353. Hall v. Hall, 8 Vt. 156. 13 Vt. 294.

10. Undiscovered fraud. In an action on the case for a deceit, it is no answer to the statute of limitations that the plaintiff was ignorant of his cause of action until within six years, although that ignorance resulted from the character of the original fraud, or the manner in which it was perpetrated. Smith v. Bishop, 9 Vt. 110.

11. Several remedies. If a party have two remedies, distinct and independent, although for the same debt, as a promissory note or bond, and a mortgage to secure it, the statute bar as to one remedy does not bar the other,—the statute operating upon the remedy, and not the debt. Reed v. Shepley, 6 Vt. 602. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

12. Joint contractors. One of two joint contractors, having paid the whole debt, may maintain his action for contribution, although such payment was made after the statute of limitations had run upon the debt. Mills v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 59. (But see G. S. c. 63, ss. 23, 28.)

13. Certain penalties. The limitation of six months, named in G. S. c. 25, s. 86, to a suit for penalties for obstructing, &c., a highway, does not require that the suit be brought within six months from the time the first penalty was incurred. It only bars a recovery for all such penalties as have not been incurred within six months before suit. Londonderry v. Arnold, 30 Vt. 401.

14. The limitation in G. S. c. 100, s. 24, of the prosecution for a fine under that act, does not apply to the forfeitures continuous in their character [so much for each day] provided for in sec. 10. Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457.

15. As barring title. Fifteen years' adverse possession of lands has the effect of a conveyance from the right owner, divesting the former owner of all which the new owner acquires. The statute (G. S. c. 63, ss. 1, 2,) is not a mere bar to the owner's right against the person only who occupied adversely, but relates to his rights to the land, divesting him of his title thereto. Hughes v. Graves, 39 Vt. 359.

16. The title to personal property may be lost, or gained, by six years' adverse possession. Preston v. Briggs, 16 Vt. 124.

17. Presumption. No term less than twenty years, unless aided by extrinsic evidence, is sufficient to raise a presumption of payment, in a case not coming within any of the statutes of limitations. Matlocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 468. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41, 75.

2. In chancery.

18. Trust—Fraud. The statute of limitations does not run, in chancery, against a subsisting trust; nor against an equity, where the grounds of it have been kept out of sight by the fraud of the party pleading the statute. Payne v. Hathaway, 8 Vt. 212.

19. Where a bill charges fraud, or a trust, the statute is not a good plea, without answer denying the trust, or fraud. Id.

20. Legal demand. The statute of limitations is a good plea in bar of a bill in equity, as well as of a suit at law, where it is brought for a legal demand;—this by analogy, though the statute does not in terms embrace equitable demands. Collard v. Tuttle, 4 Vt. 491. Stanford v. Tuttle, 4 Vt. 82. Tharp v. Tharp, 15 Vt. 105.

21. Where courts of law and of equity have concurrent jurisdiction, if the claim is barred at law by the statute of limitations, it cannot be enforced in equity. Id. Hall v. Hall, 8 Vt. 156.

22. Presumption. In analogy to the statute barring a right of entry after fifteen years, a mortgage debt will, after the lapse of fifteen years, be presumed in chancery to have been paid, and a bill of foreclosure will not lie. This presumption is repelled by proof of part payment, or payment of interest, or other recognition. Martin v. Bouker, 19 Vt. 526.

23. The doctrine of presumption in chancery is in strict analogy to the statute of limitations. That court, it is true, applies the presumption in cases not within the statute, but never to cases excepted by the statute. Wells v. Morse, 11 Vt. 9, 15.

24. Where the remedy is in chancery only, the statute of limitations does not directly apply, that statute, in terms, applying only to actions at law; still, a court of chancery, to quiet a stale claim and discountenance laches in the claimant, will, from lapse of time, raise a presumption of adjustment or payment, in analogy to the statute, provided the case furnishes no evidence to rebut the presumption and satisfactorily account for the delay; and no presumption can be made which is contradicted by the pleadings. Id. Spear v. Newell, 18 Vt. 288.

25. Where a mortgagee was administrator of the mortgagor's estate, and had his mortgage debt allowed by the commissioners while the heir was an infant without guardian, and there was a strong presumption of fraud in obtaining such allowance, and, upon obtaining it, the mortgagee entered into possession and so remained for more than 20 years, but not for more than 15 years after the heir became of age;—Held, that the statute of limitations did not apply to bar the right of redemption; that there was no presumptive bar; and that the heir might redeem. Wells v. Morse, 11 Vt. 9.

26. Bar at law as ground for relief. That a party is barred by the statute of limitations from relief at law, does not form a substantive ground of relief in equity; but, in order to such relief, the defendant must be charged and fixed with some act, or course of conduct, which was designed to be, and in fact was, the inducement for the orator to delay the assertion of his legal claim, and thus expose it to the statutory bar. Burton v. Wiley, 26 Vt. 480. Fletcher v. Warren, 18 Vt. 45.

II. WHEN THE STATUTE BEGINS TO RUN.

27. From demand. Where a right of action depends upon a demand made, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until demand. Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aik. 180. Hutchinson v. Parkhurst, 1 Aik. 258.

28. Where a contract is payable in specific articles or property on demand, and all at one time, and there is nothing peculiar in the terms of the contract, or other circumstances indicating that the parties contemplated any longer delay than is to be inferred from the fact that the contract is so payable, perhaps the rule adopted in certain reported cases is sufficiently liberal towards the creditor—which is, that he may have the whole period of the statute of limitations in which to make demand, and if he make no demand in that time, the statute will then commence running. Peck, J., in Thrall v. Mead, 40 Vt. 540; and so held in this case, distinguishing it from Stanton v. Stanton, 37 Vt. 411.

29. Where a written contract for the payment of specific articles or property, in which no certain day of payment is named, indicates of itself that the calls for payment are to be indefinitely prospective, and to be made as may suit the wants and convenience of the payee, there is no ground furnished from which the law can assume any fixed point as a limit to a reasonable time for making a demand, and from that point give operation to the statute of limitations. Semble, that this fixed point might be determined from other facts proved. Stanton v. Stanton.

30. A promissory note promising, for value received, to pay $ "four hundred dollars in produce or wood from the farm on demand as he may want to use the same, on interest," had run for over twelve years without any demand or request for payment. Held (nothing more being shown), that the action upon it was not barred by the statute of limitations. Id.

31. Default of officer. The right of action against an officer for an insufficient levy upon land accrues immediately on the breach of duty, and the statute of limitations then begins to run; and it is not saved or deferred by the fact that the creditor went into possession under a void levy, and after quiet possession for more than six years, was afterwards evicted in ejectment by the debtor, because of the invalidity of the levy. Hall v. Tomlinson, 5 Vt. 228. 18 Vt. 586.

32. Guaranty. A guaranty that a note, payable at a future day, "is due and that the maker has nothing to file against it," was held to refer to the time of the maturity of the note; and that the statute of limitations did not commence running on such guaranty until the note became due. Adams v. Clark, 14 Vt. 9.

33. Estate tail. The statute of limitations does not commence to run against the issue in tail, until at the death of the donee in tail. Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344.

34. Interest. The statute of limitations does not begin to run upon a demand until the principal, or at least some separate and distinct portion of the principal, becomes due and payable,—and then only upon such distinct and separate portion. The previously accrued yearly interest is not barred, if the principal is not. Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 463. 36 Vt. 599.

35. Contract to pay after death. Where the plaintiff supported his father's second wife at the father's request, and upon the father telling him "to carry in his claim against his (the father's) estate, after his death;"—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of a contract to that effect; that the statute of limitations did not begin to run during the life of the father; and that without other evidence of an agreement for the payment of interest, none could be allowed against the estate until from the father's death. Sprague v. Sprague, 30 Vt. 483.

36. Propagation society. Where the defendant took possession under a perpetual lease by the town, under the act of 1794, of lands granted in the town charter to the propagation society;—Held, that such possession was adverse to the society; and that such possession, commenced before the act of 1832 [which removed the exemption in previous statutes of limitations as to persons beyond seas], but continued for 15 years thereafter, gave title to the defendant against the society. Propagation Society v. Sharon, 28 Vt. 603.

37. Retainer as attorney. The defendant consulted with the plaintiffs and retained them as his attorneys in an expected litigation, for which they charged him a retaining fee. No litigation was had, and there was no further service rendered by the plaintiffs. Held, that the statute of limitations commenced to run from the date of the retainer, although the plaintiffs continued professionally bound thereafter by the retainer. Adams v. Mott, 44 Vt. 259.

38. Entire day for payment. December 24, 1874, the plaintiff brought suit on a promissory note dated December 24, 1867, payable generally to the plaintiff, or bearer, in one year from date, and not entitled to grace. In the absence of proof of demand and refusal of payment on the day the note fell due;—Held, that that should not be presumed; that the right of action accrued only at the close of the 24th day of December, 1868, and that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations. Beeman v. Cook, 48 Vt. 201.

39. Disabilities. If more than one disability exists at the time the right accrues, the statute of limitations will not begin to run until all those disabilities are removed. But successive disabilities will not save from the statute,—as where a new disability succeeds the one which existed when the right accrued. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165.

III. SUSPENSION OF THE STATUTE.

1. By supervening disability.

40. Death of party. The death of a creditor after a cause of action has accrued to him, does not interrupt the running of the statute of limitations. Conant v. Hitt, 12 Vt. 285. (Changed by G. S. c. 68, s. 16.)

41. Without any special statute to that effect, it was held, that from the death of a debtor until the appointment of an administrator, the running of the statute of limitations was suspended. Hapgood v. Southgate, 21 Vt. 584.

42. If a debtor die before the statute of limitations has run upon his debt, the operation of the statute is suspended for two years at the farthest after the granting of administration (G. S. c. 68, s. 16); and such suspension is not extended by the opening of the commission for the presentation of such debt. (C. S. c. 52, s. 9.) Briggs v. Thomas, 32 Vt. 176.

43. Insanity. A disability—as, the insanity of the plaintiff—occurring after the accruing of the cause of action, does not prevent the running of the statute of limitations. Lincoln v. Norton, 36 Vt. 679.

44. Minority. No disabilities are within the saving of the statute of limitations, except such as existed at the time the right first accrued. Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 503. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165. Arbuckle v. Ward, 29 Vt. 48.

45. Where the right to an easement in the plaintiff's lands depended upon an uninterrupted adverse use for 15 years, commenced in the lifetime of the plaintiff's ancestor;—Held, that it was not interrupted by a descent cast upon the plaintiff during his minority. Tracy v. Atherton.

46. Agreement. Parties claiming adverse rights in land agreed to submit their rights to arbitration, and that the party in possession should so continue until the decision of the arbitrators. Held, that the running of the statute of limitations was thereby interrupted, the possession under the agreement not being adverse. Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 273.

2. Ineffectual suit.

47. Without fault of plaintiff. Whenever the merits of an action fail to be tried without fault of the plaintiff, it is a case falling within G. S. c. 68, s. 17, allowing another action to be commenced in a year thereafter, though in the meantime the statute of limitations had run; and this, regardless of the particular manner in which the action terminated; as, where it was by non-suit, not voluntary, but constrained by some decision of the court. Spear v. Newell, 18 Vt. 288. Phelps v. Wood, 9 Vt. 399, 404.

48. G. S. c. 68, s. 17, providing for a second suit within one year after the defeat of the first "for any matter of form," &c., does not cover the case of a defeat of the first suit by a non-suit ordered for lack of compliance with an order to furnish bail for costs, although the plaintiff through poverty was unable to furnish it. Hayes v. Stewart, 23 Vt. 623.

49. Where the plaintiff became non-suit by order of court, and it did not appear affirmatively that this was without his fault;—Held, that the case did not fall within the equity of this statute. Poland v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 47 Vt. 73.

50. Where an action failed through the neglect of the justice to be present with the writ at the time and place of trial, and without fault of the plaintiff;—Held, that the case was within the equity of G. S. c. 68, s. 17; and that an action, brought within one year thereafter, was not barred by the statute of limitations, which had in the meantime run (as to time) upon the claim. Spear v. Curtis, 40 Vt. 59.

51. Plaintiff's guardian brought assumpsit in his own name, as guardian, and for that reason the suit was defeated without trial on the merits. The plaintiff, within one year after, by the same person as guardian, brought a new action for the same cause. Held, that the first action, with its result, had saved the case from the statute of limitations, under G. S. c. 68, s. 17. Spear v. Braintree, 47 Vt. 729.

3. Absence from the State.

52. Terms—"Absence." Section 10 of the statute of limitations of 1797 (Slade's Stat. 291) provided, that if the debtor was without this State at the time the cause of action accrued, the suit might be commenced within six years after his coming, or return, into this State. Held, that this applied to resident citizens of other States, who came but temporarily into this State, as well as to citizens of this State temporarily absent; and this, although both parties resided out of the State when the cause of action accrued; and although the action was barred by the statute of limitations of the State where the cause of action accrued, and where both parties resided. Graves v. Weeks, 19 Vt. 178. Dunning v. Chamberlain, 6 Vt. 127. Mason v. Foot, 1 Aik. 282. Hill v. Bellows, 15 Vt. 727.

53. "Coming"—"Return." The "coming" or "return" into this State which sets in operation the statute of limitations where the debtor was out of the State when the cause of action accrued—as mentioned in Stat. of 1797, a. 10 (Slade's Stat. 291; R. S. c. 58, a. 14; C. S. c. 61, s. 14; G. S. c. 63, a. 15)—means a "coming" to the knowledge of the creditor, or a coming to dwell and reside permanently. Mason v. Foot. Hill v. Bellows. Hall v. Nasmith, 28 Vt. 791. Davis v. Marshall, 37 Vt. 69.

54. "Residing." A debtor must be considered "absent from" and to "reside out of the State" (G. S. c. 63, a. 15), when his domicile in this State is so broken up, that it would not be competent to serve process upon him by leaving a copy there; and for that purpose, there must be some place of abode which his family, or his effects, exclusively maintain in his absence, and to which he may be expected soon, or in some convenient time, to return, so that, a copy being left there and notice in fact proved, the plaintiff may take a valid judgment. Hackett v. Kendall, 23 Vt. 275.

55. If a debtor, having no intention to reside in this State, comes or returns into the State, and this is known to the creditor so that he has opportunity to make service of process upon him, the statute of limitations will be set in operation. Mason v. Foot, 1 Aik. 282. 30 Vt. 205.

56. "Go"—"Absence." The statute of 1832, No. 3, providing that "if any person shall go from this State before the cause of action shall be barred by the statute of limitations," "the time of such absence shall be deducted in deciding whether such cause of action is barred," &c., was held (Bennett, J., dissenting) not intended to apply to a cause of action already barred under a previous statute, although the debtor had left the State before such previous statute had run. Lourey v. Keyes, 14 Vt. 66.

57. Nor does this statute allow, in behalf of the plaintiff, the deduction, in any case, of the time of the defendant's absence from the State before the passage of the act—it having no retrospective action whatever. Wires v. Farr, 25 Vt. 41. Poland, C. J., in Richardson v. Cook, 37 Vt. 605.

58. Under C. S. c. 61, s. 15 (G. S. c. 63, a. 15) any absence of a debtor from the State, while having a residence in it so that service of process may be made upon him, is not to be taken into account to prevent the running of the statute of limitations; otherwise, if he leave no domicile in this State. If he have a fixed residence out of this State, then all his absences from the State are to be deducted from the time of limitation fixed by the statute. Hall v. Nasmith, 28 Vt. 791.

59. Residence. If a debtor comes to reside in this State and actually resides here for the statute time in all, though it be with occasional interruptions, the statute of limitations will bar the claim. Russ v. Fay, 29 Vt. 386. Hackett v. Kendall, 23 Vt. 275.

60. Under G. S. c. 63, s. 15, the time of the debtor's absence from this State while residing out of it, is to be deducted in computing the period of the statute of limitations, although he was absent and resided out of this State when the cause of action accrued,—the creditor always residing in this State. Davis v. Marshall, 37 Vt. 69.

61. Military service. Under G. S. c. 63, a. 20, the time of absence from the State of an inhabitant of the State in the U. S. military service, is to be deducted in computing the period of the statute of limitations, notwithstanding his wife and family resided in the State during his absence. Cardell v. Carpenter, 42 Vt. 234.

62. This statute is retrospective, as well as prospective, in its operation; and the time of one's absence as a volunteer or enlisted soldier, in the U. S. service before the passage of the act, is not to be taken as any part of the time limited for the commencement of an action. Cardell v. Carpenter, 43 Vt. 84.

63. Several partners. In an action against several partners, it was held barred as to some, although not as to those who had been absent from the State. Spaulding v. Ludlow Woolen Mill, 36 Vt. 150.

64. "Known property." The settled construction of the terms: "known property in this State, which could by the common and ordinary process of law be attached," as applicable to the case of an absent defendant under the statute of limitations (G. S. c. 63, a. 15), is, that the defendant's ownership of the property must be notorious to such an extent that it would not escape a reasonable search and inquiry on the part of the plaintiff; but that actual knowledge of the property and of the defendant's title to it need not be possessed by the plaintiff, if by reasonable diligence he would acquire that knowledge. Tucker v. Wells, 12 Vt. 240. Wheeler v. Brewer, 20 Vt. 118. Stoughton v. Dimick, 29 Vt. 538. Hill v. Bellows, 15 Vt. 727. Moore v. Quint, 44 Vt. 97.

65. The "known property within this State" which saves to a defendant absent from the State the benefit of the statute, must be so far known that by reasonable diligence it can be found and attached, and it must also be of an amount sufficient to yield a substantial benefit to the plaintiff, and be so far unembarrassed as to be liable to a levy for satisfaction of the debt. Wheeler v. Brewer, Royce v. Hurd, 24 Vt. 620. Russ v. Fay, 29 Vt. 881.

66. It is not enough to bring a case within this statute, in case of a debtor absent from the State, that he should show he had deeds of land in this State on record, without proof of title; but he must prove that he had known and visible property within the State from which the plaintiff could have satisfied his demand, by attachment and levy of execution. Hill v. Bellows, 15 Vt. 727.

67. Known property in this State belonging to a partnership, not shown to be insolvent, of which an absent debtor is a member, is such property of the debtor, within this statute, as "could by the common and ordinary process of law be attached." Russ v. Fay, 29 Vt. 881.

68. Whether, in a given case, mortgage incumbrances would exclude property from the expression "known property which could, by the common and ordinary process of law, be attached," would depend on whether, by attachment and levy, the creditor might derive substantial benefit in the matter of getting pay upon his debt. Moore v. Quint, 44 Vt. 97.

69. The statute of limitations will run in favor of a party residing out of this State, during the time that he has known attachable property within it, although his ownership is not continuous; and if amounting in all to six years (or other statute period), will bar an action. (G. S. c. 63, s. 15.) Russ v. Fay, 29 Vt. 881. Dictum contra in Royce v. Hurd, 24 Vt. 620, denied.

70. A replication to a plea of the statute of limitations, that the defendant had resided out this State, &c., without averring that he had had no known property in this State, &c., had not been within the State, &c., was held ill. Stevens v. Fisher, 30 Vt. 200.

IV. AVOIDANCE OF STATUTE.

1. By acknowledgment; new promise; part payment.

71. Acknowledgment of debt — New promise. An unqualified acknowledgment that a debt is due, takes it out of the statute of limitations. Barlow v. Bellamy, 7 Vt. 54. Gailer v. Grinnel, 2 Aik. 349.

72. The admission of a debt as due takes it out of the statute, though the debtor says he is poor and unable to pay it, and for that reason refuses to give a new note for it. Olcott v. Scales, 8 Vt. 178.

73. An acknowledgement or new promise within six years, removes the bar of the statute as to a judgment, as well as to a simple contract. Id.

74. It is not essential to the sufficiency of an acknowledgment of a debt so as to take it out of the statute of limitations, that the acknowledgment be made to the creditor, his agent, or servant. It may be sufficient if made to a stranger. Brewin v. Farrell, 39 Vt. 206. Blake v. Parleman, 18 Vt. 574. Minkler v. Minkler, 16 Vt. 193. Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 368.

75. The effect of a new promise, or of part payment, to avoid the statute, is the same, whether made before or after the limitation has run. Carlton v. Ludlow Woolen Mill, 27 Vt. 496.

76. The acknowledgment of a debt barred by the statute, includes as well the interest as the principal, unless the acknowledgment be limited. Williams v. Finney, 16 Vt. 297.

77. An acknowledgment of an existing debt, or promise to pay it, does not keep the right of action in life beyond the period fixed by the statute, dating from the time of such acknowledgment or new promise. Munson v. Rice, 18 Vt. 53.

78. An acknowledgment or part payment of the debt by one of several joint contractors, removes the bar of the statute as to all. Wheelock v. Doolittle, 18 Vt. 440. Wilson v. Green, 25 Vt. 450. Joslyn v. Smith, 18 Vt. 353. (Changed by G. S. c. 63, s. 23.)

79. But this statute (G. S. c. 63, s. 23) does not apply to the case where one partner, as agent for the firm, makes a part payment from the partnership funds. Carlton v. Coffin, 28 Vt. 504.

80. Where there is no dispute about the facts and what the admissions are, which are insisted on as taking a case out of the statute of limitations, their effect is a question of law. Chapin v. Warden, 15 Vt. 580. Phelps v. Stewart, 12 Vt. 256.

81. The acknowledgment of a debt, barred by the statute, from which a new promise to pay can be implied, must be an acknowledgment of the debt as subsisting and still due—a distinct, unqualified acknowledgement. Brewin v. Farrell, 39 Vt. 206—with an apparent willingness to remain liable for it, or, at least, without an avowed intention to the contrary. Phelps v. Stewart, 12 Vt. 256. Blake v. Parleman, 18 Vt. 574. Cross v. Conner, 14 Vt. 394. Carruth v. Paige, 22 Vt. 179. Brainard v. Buck, 25 Vt. 573. Aldrich v. Morse, 28 Vt. 642. Bowker v. Harris, 30 Vt. 424. Moore v. Stevens, 33 Vt. 308. Goodwin v. Buzzell, 35 Vt. 9. Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 359.

82. An unqualified acknowledgment of a debt, barred by the statute, as unpaid and still subsisting, with an apparent willingness to remain liable for it, or unaccompanied by any unwillingness to pay it, is evidence from which a new promise is to be inferred, and will take the case out of the statute. Phelps v. Stewart. Blake v. Parleman. Moore v. Stevens. Brewin v. Farrell. Hunter v. Kittredge. Brayton v. Rockwell, 41, Vt. 621.

83. But the mere acknowledgment of an original indebtedness, is not sufficient. It must be such, as that a promise to pay can be implied. Brainard v. Buck, 25 Vt. 573. Brayton v. Rockwell.

84. An acknowledgment by the defendant that certain notes against him existed, and that he had an account to go against them, and a promise to call and have the notes and account settled, were held sufficient to take the notes out of the statute of limitations. Chapin v. Warden, 15 Vt. 580.

85. The debtor's promise to pay a debt barred by the statute, "as soon as he could," was held to remove the statute bar, without proof of his ability to pay. Cummings v. Gassett, 19 Vt. 308.

86. A declaration by the defendant, that "the plaintiff's account ought to be settled, that he would call and settle it, and did not suppose there was much due," is a sufficient acknowledgment to take the account out of the statute. Williams v. Finney, 16 Vt. 297.

87. So, where the defendant requested a third person to call on the plaintiffs and settle his account with them, saying he thought he had paid them more than was due; and afterwards said to the same person, that the plaintiffs' account was not settled. Blake v. Parleman, 18 Vt. 574.

88. So, where the defendant said he did not suppose he ought to pay the demand, but that, if it was right, he would pay it, as he did not mean to decline paying a just debt; and said to the officer, when the writ was served upon him, that he had assured the plaintiff that he would not take advantage of the statute of limitations. Paddock v. Colby, 18 Vt. 485. (Questioned in Carruth v. Paige, 22 Vt. 179.)

89. So, saying that the statute of limitations should make no difference; that he and the plaintiff would look over their accounts, and what was due the plaintiff should have. Cooper v. Parker, 25 Vt. 502; and see Minkler v. Minkler, 16 Vt. 193.

90. But, saying that it was a just debt and ought to have been paid, but he became poor and could not pay it, but that he would pay one-half of it the next winter if the plaintiff would give up the note, does not take the case out of the statute. Cross v. Conner, 14 Vt. 394.

91. Nor does a declaration by the defendant that he would not take advantage of the statute, but if it was a just account he would pay it,—when he at the same time contended that it was not a just account. Carruth v. Paige, 22 Vt. 179.

92. If a debtor denies his indebtedness, but expresses a willingness to settle it, if established, and the indebtedness is proved to have existed, the admission is sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations. Paddock v. Colby, 18 Vt. 485. Hill v. Kendall, 25 Vt. 528. Steele v. Towne, 28 Vt. 771. But see Carruth v. Paige, 22 Vt. 179; and questioned in Moore v. Stevens, 33 Vt. 308.

93. Within six years, the plaintiff requested the defendant to apply the claim now in suit upon certain demands which the defendant then had against him. The defendant replied, "No matter about it—it will all come right;" and at another time, on like request, he said "he was too busy." Held, that the operation of the statute was not saved thereby. White v. Dow, 23 Vt. 300.

94. As to the note in suit, the defendant said "he had signed with his son, and in the end he thought he should have this to pay;" and added, "that there had been enough paid to pay the debt, if it had been paid when it should have been," or, "in the first place." Held, that such acknowledgment prevented the operation of the statute of limitations. Phelps v. Williamson, 26 Vt. 230.

95. An admission by the maker of a promissory note, that the amount of it is to be deducted from a larger claim which he has against the holder, is a sufficient acknowledgment to remove the statute of limitations. Brigham v. Hutchins, 27 Vt. 569.

96. The defendant, being called upon for payment of his note, said: "I supposed it was paid by White, by an arrangement; tell your father (the plaintiff) to put White up to pay it;—if he does not, I shall have to pay it." Held, as matter of law, that this took the note out of the statute of limitations. Hayden v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 768.

97. A receipt in full was given by the defendant, "one item only excepted," [specifying that], "which may be adjusted as the facts may prove." In an action to recover that item;—Held, that the case was taken out of the statute by the terms of the receipt. Sweet v. Hubbard, 36 Vt. 294.

98. Under an issue formed upon a plea of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff proved that the defendant had admitted, on the day of a former trial, "that the plaintiff had an old judgment against him, then on trial, and that he was willing to pay it, and would pay it the next fall in cash, or labor." Held, that this was legally sufficient to authorize the finding of the issue against the plea. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

99. An acknowledgment that an account is open and unadjusted, or a promise to settle and adjust it, will take the account out of the statute, unless accompanied by language showing that the party was unwilling to pay the balance found due, if it should be found against him. Prentiss v. Stevens, 88 Vt. 159. Blake v. Parleman, 18 Vt. 574. Minkler v. Minkler, 16 Vt. 193. Williams v. Finney, 16 Vt. 297. Cooper v. Parker, 25 Vt. 502.

100. An acknowledgment of an open and unsettled account was held sufficient to take the whole account out of the statute, in the absence of proof of any other dealings to which the acknowledgment could apply. In the absence of such proof, such is the only reasonable presumption. Prentiss v. Stevens, 88 Vt. 159, distinguished from Kimball v. Baxter, 27 Vt. 628.

101. An acknowledgment that an account is open and unadjusted, and a promise to settle and adjust it, where part of the account was barred by the statute, was held to apply to the whole account, like a payment on account, and to remove the statute bar. Prentiss v. Stevens.

102. An unqualified promise "to settle book accounts" which are barred by the statute, is a direct admission of unsettled accounts existing between the parties at the time of such admission, and such promise, when unaccompanied by any unwillingness to pay the balance, if any, implies a promise to pay whatever balance should, upon such settlement, be found due. Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 359.

103. Agreement not to take advantage of the statute. A mutual agreement between parties that they will take no advantage of the statute of limitations in the final settlement of their respective claims, prevents the running of the statute; and the expression of the opinion by one, that he shall not be owing upon a final settlement, will not affect the agreement. Noyes v. Hall, 28 Vt. 645.

104. The agreement of a debtor that he will not take advantage of the statute of limitations, operates as an estoppel, and also contains an acknowledgment of the debt and a promise to pay. It need not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be shown in evidence under the issue formed by traversing the plea of the statute. Burton v. Stevens, 24 Vt. 131. Stearns v. Stearns, 32 Vt. 678. Paddock v. Colby, 18 Vt. 485.

105. Other instances. An offer, not accepted, to pay part of a debt barred by the statute, with a refusal to pay more, is not such an acknowledgment as will remove the statute bar. Aldrich v. Morse, 28 Vt. 642. Slack v. Norwich, 32 Vt. 818.

106. The defendant, after the commencement of the suit and about the time of the trial, admitted that the plaintiff's account was just when it accrued, but claimed that he had paid it to one E and that E was authorized by the plaintiff to receive such payment; and promised to pay the account, if he did not prove that he had already paid the same. The auditor reported that he did not find that E was authorized to receive payment, and that the defendant failed to prove that he had ever paid the account. Held, that there was no such acknowledgment, or new promise, as to take the account out of the statute. Moore v. Stevens, 83 Vt. 808. (Hill v. Kendall, 25 Vt. 528, and Steele v. Towne, 28 Vt. 771, so far as they conflict herewith, questioned. Ib. 810.)

107. In a conversation about the plaintiff's account, the defendant claimed that he did not owe it, but added, "if he will swear to that account I will pay it"; and afterwards said, "I do not think that account is just, but if it is just I will pay it." Held, that these were not such acknowledgments as took the account out of the statute. Goodwin v. Buzzell, 35 Vt. 9.

108. The defendant's note, signed in his name by an agent, which was given in the agent's business and which it was his duty to pay, was presented by the holder to the defendant for payment. The defendant told the holder that he ought to have his pay, that it was right he should have it, but that he (the defendant) had lost a great deal in this business, and was not worth anything, and could not pay it. Held, that such acknowledgment was not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Galpin v. Barney, 37 Vt. 627.

109. Where the plaintiff applied to the defendant to renew some notes barred by the statute, the defendant declined, but said, "I will come up soon and have a general settlement of accounts, and if all accounts are all right, other matters will be all right." And, on a second application to renew, the defendant refused, saying: "We have a long string of accounts to look over. If I find that all right and satisfactory, the notes will be all right." Held, that this did not remove the statute bar. Brayton v. Rockwell, 41 Vt. 621.

110. New promise to be in writing. G. S. c. 68, s. 25, requiring the new promise to be in writing in order to take a case out of the statute of limitations, was held, on construction, not to apply to a pre-existing debt and a verbal new promise made before the passage of the act. Richardson v. Cook, 37 Vt. 599.

111. Part payment. Part payment of a debt barred by the statute, if made without protestation against further liability, is a recognition and acknowledgment of the debt, from which a promise to pay the residue will be implied. Ayer v. Hawkins, 19 Vt. 26. 35 Vt. 11.

112. A general payment or credit upon an account, within six years, has the effect to take the whole account out of the statute, upon the ground that it is an acknowledgment of an unsettled account between the parties. Hutchinson v. Pratt, 2 Vt. 146. Strong v. McConnell, 5 Vt. 338. 88 Vt. 162.

113. In order that the items of an account may be saved from the statute by a payment, such payment must be made on the general account, and with a view to affect the general balance, thereby acknowledging the existence of an open, running account, which is to be the subject of future adjustment. Payment of specific items of charge, unaccompanied by any circumstances showing a recognition of any other account, will not remove the operation of the statute. Hodge v. Manley, 25 Vt. 210.

114. Where one pays, or promises to pay, part of a debt to be in full of the debt, or refuses to pay the other part, such promise or payment of part will not take the balance of the debt out of the statute. Phelps v. Stewart, 12 Vt. 256. Bowker v. Harris, 80 Vt. 424; and see Aldrich v. Morse, 28 Vt. 642.

115. One summoned as a trustee denied his liability, but, forgetting the day of trial, was adjudged trustee on default, and paid the judgment. Held, that this did not operate as such an acknowledgment of indebtedness, as to take his debt to the defendant in that suit out of the statute. Goodwin v. Bussell, 35 Vt. 9.

116. The defendant assigned to a trustee for certain creditors all his demands, to be collected by the assignee and paid to such creditors. Within six years before suit the assignee received payment of one of said demands, and an entry of the payment was made on the books of the assignee by the defendant, who was his clerk. Held, that the case was not thereby taken out of the statute. Hard v. Edgell, 35 Vt. 510.

117. An indorsement of part payment upon a written contract, as affecting the statute of limitations, operates as an acknowledgment only at the time when the payment was in fact made, and not at the time when the indorsement was made, when that was made at some other time. Hayes v. Morse, 8 Vt. 316.

118. The plaintiff proposed to take certain specified property then at defendant's house, and of less value than $40, and apply it on a note which he held against the defendant. The defendant assented. No price was named, nor time named for the defendant to deliver the property, nor for the plaintiff to send for it. The plaintiff, some six months afterwards, sent a man who got the property and brought it to him, and he then indorsed it, as of that date, on the note. Held, for the purposes of the statute of limitations, that the payment must be reckoned as of the date of the agreement, and not the date of the taking of the property. Lincoln v. Johnson, 43 Vt. 74.

119. A promissory note executed by B, as agent, in the name of the defendant, but really made in B's own business, and barred by the statute, was presented by the holder to the defendant who, though acknowledging the debt, declined any promise to pay. The holder then presented the note to B for payment or renewal, who said he had no authority to make a new note, but offered to pay a dollar upon the note and have it indorsed, saying, that would renew it, and then paid the dollar from his own money, and indorsed it upon the note. Held, that this did not revive the note as to the defendant. Galpin v. Barney, 37 Vt. 627.

2. Mutual accounts.

120. Where there are mutual, current, and unsettled dealings and accounts between parties, if any of the items are within six years, the whole accounts are taken out of the statute of limitations. Wood v. Barney, 2 Vt. 369.

121. In the case of mutual accounts, each item of debt or credit draws after it such as are within six years preceding, and the statute is no bar to a recovery of the balance, if the suit be brought within six years of the date of the last item;—and this is so, although the accounts were kept by only one of the parties. Hutchinson v. Pratt, 2 Vt. 146.

122. But where the account is all of one side, without credits, and without charges by the other party, the statute will bar all such items as are not within six years of the bringing of the suit. Id. Chipman v. Bates, 5 Vt. 143. Munson v. Rice, 18 Vt. 53.

123. Where the items of an account are all on the debit side, the cause of action arises from the date of each item, and has reference to that item separately, without regard to the general balance of the account, so that the entry of a new item has no effect upon the operation of the statute of limitations as to previous items; but in the case of mutual dealings and accounts, the cause of action dates from the last item of credit, and has reference to the balance of the general account, and each new item of credit, or part payment, is equivalent to a new promise to account and pay the balance due—that is, where such new item is with the mutual understanding, express or implied, that it is to enter into the mutual dealings or accounts of the parties, and be the subject of future adjustment in ascertaining the general balance due. Abbott v. Keith, 11 Vt. 525. Hodge v. Manley, 25 Vt. 210.

124. For a portion of the plaintiff's open account against the defendant, B, a third person, was liable to the defendant. Within six years before this suit, the several parties together examined the plaintiff's whole account, and the defendant and B selected the items which B was to pay for, and he paid the plaintiff therefor, and the plaintiff credited on the account the sum paid. Held, that such examination of the whole account by the defendant, without objection made to any part of it, accompanied by such payment of part of it, was such a recognition of the account, as to save it from the statute of limitations. Sanderson v. Milton Stage Co., 18 Vt. 107.

125. In matters of account, one party may credit to the other items that represent a legal indebtedness that should go into the account, and thereby avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, although the other party has not charged such items, and insists that they should not be allowed him. Davis v. Smith, 48 Vt. 52.

V. PLEADING.

126. The taking out of a writ is the commencement of an action to save the statute of limitations, if delivered for service in season to be served and returned to the court to which it is made returnable, and is so served. Allen v. Mann, 1 D. Chip. 94. Day v. Lamb, 7 Vt. 426. And the date of the writ is prima facie evidence that it issued at that date. Day v. Lamb.

127. Where the statute of limitations was eight years (as in an action of debt on judgment);—Held, that a new promise, or acknowledgment, within eight years, was a sufficient answer to a plea of the statute. Gailer v. Grinnel, 2 Aik. 849. 22 Vt. 98. 8 Vt. 162.

128. To an action of debt on judgment the plea was, that the cause of action did not accrue within eight years. A replication, that within six years, &c., the defendant promised to pay the judgment, was held ill on special demurrer. Russell v. Stevens, 20 Vt. 53.

129. Where a part payment, acknowledgment, or new promise is relied upon as against a plea of the statute of limitations, the usual replication, viz: a traverse of the plea, is sufficient. Aldrich v. Williams, 12 Vt. 418, 419. Gailer v. Grinnel, 2 Aik. 849. Russell v. Stevens.

130. So held, where there was an agreement not to take advantage of the statute. Burton v. Stevens, 24 Vt. 181. Stearns v. Stearns, 32 Vt. 678.

131. To a plea of the statute, a replication that within six years the defendant had paid part of the debt, was held ill on general demurrer. This was pleading the evidence, instead of the fact, of a new promise. Aldrich v. Williams, 12 Vt. 418.

132. Where the statute begins to run from the time of making the promise, a plea in assumpsit that the defendant did not assume and promise within six years, &c., is well enough; but in cases where the cause of action accrues after making the promise, as where the promise is to pay at a future day, the plea must be that the cause of action did not accrue within six years, &c. Cook v. Kibbee, 16 Vt. 484.

MAINTENANCE.

1. The offense of maintenance seems now to be confined to the intermeddling of a stranger in a suit, for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing litigation. Dorwin v. Smith, 35 Vt. 69.

2. It is not committed by parties who enter into an agreement to maintain and defend each other, in a matter in which they believe their interests to be identical. Id.

See CONTRACT, 85.

3. The purchase of a pending suit for property converted, to be prosecuted at the purchaser's own risk and expense, was held not to be maintenance. Semble, that the common law offense of maintenance, or champerty, has not been adopted in this State. Danforth v. Streeter, 28 Vt. 490. See Wright v. Whithead, 14 Vt. 268.

See ATTORNEY, 29, 30.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

1. When an action lies therefor. An action on the case for malicious prosecution lies only where there has been a legal prosecution, a judicial proceeding. A declaration was held ill on demurrer, which was according to the form for a second count in 2 Ch. Pl. [611], averring only a charge made, an arrest, discharge and acquittal, but failing to state a judicial proceeding. Drew v. Potter, 39 Vt. 189.

2. An action will lie for the malicious prosecution of a civil suit, though that suit was commenced by a summons only. Closon v. Staples, 42 Vt. 209.

3. In an action for a malicious prosecution commenced by complaint to a justice, who had power only to bind over or discharge;—Held, that the prosecution was sufficiently ended to warrant the action, where the prosecuting attorney entered a nolle prosequi which the justice minuted upon his files, and where the justice in fact discharged the party and the proceedings came in fact to an end. Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 124.

4. A suggestion to the State's attorney by the respondent, that it was hard to hold him any longer before the examining magistrate, followed by the promise to enter and the entering of a nolle prosequi, and the discharge of the respondent, was held not to be such an ending of the prosecution by consent, as to bar the respondent of his action for a malicious prosecution, where it did not appear that the action of the State's attorney, or of the prosecutor, was influenced by such suggestion, but that the prosecution was ended for other reasons. Ib.

5. Probable cause—Malice. In an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove both want of probable cause, and malice. Ib. Barron v. Mason, 81 Vt. 189.

6. What is probable cause. Probable cause is such a state of facts and circumstances as would induce a reasonable, prudent and conscientious man to believe the party guilty of the offense charged. Ib.

7. — is a question of law. What constitutes probable cause is a question of law for the court, and all inferences to be drawn from facts undisputed, or found by the jury to exist, are inferences of law, and not of fact, and are to be drawn by the court, and not by the jury. Ib. French v. Smith, 4 Vt. 368. Hathaway v. Allen, Brayt. 152.

8. Rule how applied. In practice, a true application of the rule seems to require that if none of the facts are in dispute, the question of probable cause arising upon them should be decided by the court as a question of law, without the intervention of the jury at all; that if some of the facts are undisputed and others are in controversy, and the question of probable cause cannot be determined upon the undisputed facts without determining the existence of those in dispute, then the case should be presented to the jury by stating which of the disputed facts are to be passed upon and how, so that by determining the mere existence or non-existence of them, the question of probable cause, or the want of it, will be determined according to the view of them, in law, taken by the court. Driggs v. Burton.

10. The questions of probable cause and of malice present distinct issues, and there is no necessary, or even natural connection between them. Redfield, C. J., 81 Vt. 197. Each must be proved, and the proof of either one will not, as matter of law, supply proof of the other. The same facts that would make out the want of probable cause in many, and probably in most cases, would tend to show malice. In such case, the evidence should be submitted upon the question of malice independently, and that question should not be left to depend upon or follow the finding upon the other. 44 Vt. 149.

11. Although malice is a prima facie inference from want of probable cause, this may be rebutted by evidence, since one may act in good faith, and yet not from any reasonable or probable cause. Redfield, C. J., 81 Vt. 196-7. (Limitation of this prima facie inference. Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 209. Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 148.)

12. Distinction. The difference between proof of probable cause and malice consists chiefly in this: that probable cause has reference to the common standard of human judgment and conduct, while malice regards the mind and judgment of the defendant in the particular act charged as a malicious prosecution. Redfield, C. J., 81 Vt. 198.

13. Inference. The burden is on the plaintiff to prove a want of probable cause, and that cannot be inferred from malice. Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 222.

14. The question of malice is a question of fact for the jury. The court below charged: "That the question of malice was a question of fact for the jury to find from the evidence; that from the nature of the question it was generally, to a considerable extent, a matter of inference to be drawn from circumstances proved in the case; that the jury might or might not infer malice from the want of probable cause; that it was for the jury to say, upon the whole evidence bearing upon this point, whether the defendant, in prosecuting that suit, acted maliciously or not." Held to be correct, for "from the whole charge we think the jury did not understand that the question of malice was to be treated as a mere inference from the want of probable cause, but a question for them to determine upon the whole evidence in the case." Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 211, 222. See Barron v. Mason, 81 Vt. 196.

15. Evidence. Evidence may be given, as tending to prove both probable cause and want of malice, that the defendant received information, with such directness and certainty as to gain credit with prudent men, of the existence and susceptibility of proof of such facts as show guilt, or which the defendant, upon proper advice, supposed would constitute guilt; and common repute, not only of the general bad character of the plaintiff, but also as to the particular offense, is evidence to rebut the inference of malice. Barron v. Mason, 81 Vt. 189. French v. Smith, 4 Vt. 368.

16. That the plaintiff had committed other like offenses, which had come to the knowledge of the defendant, is evidence of probable cause. Barron v. Mason.

17. Pleading. In an action for malicious prosecution, it is not necessary to set out the first process or proceedings fully, but only the substance. Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 209.

18. The declaration alleged facts which showed a want of probable cause, and added, "and all without cause"; and in another place, "and so the defendant has without any probable cause wronged and injured the plaintiff unlawfully." Held sufficient on motion in arrest, although the declaration contained no averment in terms, that the suit was without probable cause. Id.

19. Damages. In an action for the malicious prosecution of a civil suit which had been brought by the present defendant in the name of another person, the plaintiff may recover, as part of his general damages, the excess of his taxable costs unpaid in the first suit, beyond the amount for which bail had been given, such nominal plaintiff then being and remaining insolvent. Id.

20. In an action for a malicious prosecution for perjury, the plaintiff was allowed to read a newspaper account of the prosecution, as bearing on the question of damages. Held correct, as being a natural consequence of the act of prosecution and as giving notoriety to the fact of the prosecution. Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 124.

MANDAMUS.

1. Where an act is of a judicial nature, its performance cannot be enforced by mandamus, except where the law has peremptorily directed it to be performed, or where the right is clear and no discretion exists in the inferior court in relation to it. Thus, it does not lie to compel the county court to accept a report of auditors, although it does lie to compel them to proceed to judgment, if they unreasonably refuse so to do, but without prescribing what judgment they shall give. Richards v. Wheeler, 2 Aik. 369.

2. Mandamus issued commanding jail commissioners to receive and hear the application of a prisoner to take the poor debtor's oath. Hoar v. Jail Commissioners, 2 Vt. 402.

3. A writ of mandamus will not be issued to compel the performance of a mere service, but only to compel the discharge of duties imposed by law, as distinguished from duties imposed by contract merely. Thus, where a legislative committee, appointed by joint resolution to make certain inquiries and to investigate and make report, with power to send for persons and papers and employ counsel, but not expressly empowered to appoint a clerk, employed a stenographer to take down the testimony given before the committee, the court refused a mandamus to compel him to write out and furnish the committee a transcript of his minutes, that it might be made a part of their report. Bailey v. Oviatt, 46 Vt. 637.

4. The writ of mandamus is subject to the legal and equitable discretion of the court, and ought not to be issued in cases of doubtful right. Free Press Ass'n. v. Nichols, 45 Vt. 7.

5. An act of incorporation provided for the opening of books for receiving subscriptions to its capital stock, under the direction of seven commissioners named, or a majority of them, and one of them refused to act. The court refused a mandamus upon him, for the reason that the other commissioners were ready to act, and could act effectually without him, and so the writ was not needed. In re White River Bank, 23 Vt. 478.

6. Where the county court has committed a legal error in highway proceedings—as, in dismissing an appeal from the assessment of land damages, or in refusing to establish a highway upon the report of commissioners—the supreme court, upon proper petition, will issue to the county court a mandamus in the nature of a procedendo, disregarding its former judgment. Rand v. Townshend, 26 Vt. 670. Woodstock v. Gallup, 28 Vt. 587.

7. An application for a mandamus, requiring a justice to amend his record by stating the fact that a demand was pleaded in set-off, was refused, on the ground that the demand was of insignificant consequence [$3.00], and because the amendment would not avail the petitioner. But this was done without costs, because it was the fault of the justice that he had not made his record according to the fact. Hall v. Crossman, 27 Vt. 297.

8. Writs of certiorari and mandamus, and their offices, and distinction between them, discussed. Woodstock v. Gallup, 28 Vt. 587.

9. A writ of certiorari is adapted to quashing the whole or some distinct part of erroneous or irregular proceedings, but not to requiring further proceedings. A petition for a certiorari, where the county court had erroneously dismissed a petition for the laying out of a highway, was allowed to be amended, and the supreme court thereupon awarded a mandamus in the nature of a procedendo. Moore v. Chester, 45 Vt. 503.

10. Proceedings under a petition by the town agent, in behalf of the town, for a writ of quo warranto, or mandamus, against a usurping town clerk, and rule thereon to show cause why, &c., were sustained, although the writ of mandamus for possession of the town records might more properly have been supplicated by the lawful town clerk. Walter v. Belding, 24 Vt. 658.

11. A petition for a mandamus—as, that a collector shall execute a deed of lands bid in for taxes—will not be dismissed on motion because it does not allege all the particular facts so that the case can be tried upon a demurrer. All that is requisite is, to state the right and duty in general terms. Kidder v. Morse, 26 Vt. 74.

12. In such case, held, that it was not necessary to show that all the previous proceedings had been regular, or to contest these questions with the collector; but that the land having been sold by the collector, the price paid, and the land not redeemed, he was bound to execute the deed, and let the purchaser make what he could of it. Ib.

13. Instance of mandamus on State treasurer to pay to the receiver of an insolvent bank the amount of the "bank fund," as ordered and decreed by the court of chancery against a former treasurer. Miner v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt. 92.

14. A petition for a mandamus by the receiver, in such case, is not a continuation, by way of supplement to the original proceeding, in such sense that the venue of that proceeding draws to it and fixes the venue of the petition; but it may be brought in the county where the petitioner resides. Ib.

15. Instance of mandamus to justices, to certify an appeal from an order of removal in a pauper case. Orange v. Bill, 29 Vt. 442. 32 Vt. 680.

MARRIAGE.

1. What is. An agreement of marriage per verba de presenti before a justice of the peace in Canada, not there authorized to solemnize marriage, followed by uninterrupted cohabitation of the parties there and in this State for some 18 years, was held a sufficient marriage, in a settlement case. Newbury v. Brunswick, 2 Vt. 151.

2. That a marriage per verba de presenti, if followed by cohabitation, is valid, could, I think, hardly be regarded as law in this State, without virtually repealing our statute upon that subject. Redfield, J., in Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582.

3. Void. A marriage celebrated by a justice, but without consent of the parties, or by force and duress, is void. Mount Holly v. Andover, 11 Vt. 226. 18 Vt. 467. 42 Vt. 725. INSANE PERSON, 7, 8. DIVORCE, 7.

4. Where a marriage is void, and it comes in controversy collaterally between those not parties to the contract, it may be impeached and treated as a nullity. Mount Holly v. Andover. Manchester v. Springfield, 15 Vt. 385.

5. Chancery. A contract of marriage, solemnized, was decreed void in chancery. Clark v. Field, 13 Vt. 460.

6. Effect on suit. Where a feme sole plaintiff marries pending the suit and the husband does not enter to prosecute, as prescribed by the statute, the suit may be dismissed without plea in abatement, by the defendant's filing a certificate of the marriage. Campbell v. Kathare, Brayt. 21.

7. The statute (G. S. c. 71, ss. 8, 9, 10) providing that when an unmarried woman, being plaintiff, marries before "final judgment," her husband shall come in as a party, otherwise, &c., does not apply to the case where she marries after final judgment in the county court in her favor and the case has passed to the supreme court on the defendant's exceptions. Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 23.

8. —on power. Where a feme sole, administratrix, submitted a matter to arbitration and appointed an attorney to attend before the arbitrators, but married before the award;—Held, that such marriage extinguished her powers as administratrix, and determined the power of the arbitrators, and that an award thereafter made was void. Abbott v. Keith, 11 Vt. 525.

9. —on will. Semble, that a woman's marriage does not operate to revoke her previously made will, except as to such property as the marriage conveys to the husband. Morton v. Onion, 45 Vt. 145. But see S. C., 49 Vt.

10. Proof of. On trial for adultery, the marriage cannot be proved by reputation; it might be otherwise in an action for crim. con. State v. Annice, N. Chip. 9.

11. —in another State. On trial of an indictment for being found in bed with another man's wife, "under such circumstances," &c. (G. S. c. 117, s. 3), to prove a marriage in fact the witness testified, that about six years ago he went with the woman before one J B, whom the witness called a justice of the peace, at G, in the State of New York, and was there married to the woman by said J B, and that thereupon and thereafter, for two years, they lived together as man and wife, and that she was still his wife. Held sufficient to warrant the finding of a marriage in fact,—the court saying, that by the laws of New York a marriage is legal if the parties appear before a magistrate and declare their consent to a marriage; and that it was not necessary to prove the law, if it was known to the court at the trial, or if it is now known to be as decided on the trial. State v. Rood, 12 Vt. 396. But see contra, infra, 12.

12. In an indictment for bigamy, a paper purporting to be a marriage certificate signed by one as a justice of the peace of another State does not prove itself, and is not of itself evidence. To make it evidence of a former marriage, the signature should be proved; also that the subscriber was a justice, and that by the laws of that State a justice had authority to solemnize marriages. State v. Horn, 48 Vt. 20; and see State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 65.

13. Divorce. On petition for divorce, reputation was admitted as proof of marriage, where the solemnizing magistrate was dead, and no record could be found. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 11 Vt. 184.

14. Presumption. Where a woman was married and, after a short cohabitation, the husband absconded and was not afterwards heard of, and the woman after nearly two years from the desertion married another man;—Held, in a settlement case, that the ordinary presumption of the continuance of the life of the first husband must yield to the presumption against the commission of crime by the second marriage, and that the court would not presume the second marriage to be illegal and void. Greensboro v. Underhill, 12 Vt. 604. Questioned in Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 590.

15. Where a woman abandoned her husband, and she and another man "took each other" for husband and wife before a justice, and lived together as such for some 25 years, when her husband died, after which she and the second man continued their cohabitation for some seven years, when he also died;—Held, that the presumption was forced and ought not to be made, that she was married to the second man after the death of the first, since her connection with the second was illicit in its origin; but that any presumption of the kind should be left to its natural force, as matter of fact, to the jury. Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582.

16. Identity of parties. An ancient record of a marriage in this form: "James Priest, Jr., married October 1, 1795, by James Smith, justice," was held good as far as it went, and proved the marriage of Priest to some one; and that the fact that as early as March, 1796, Priest was found living with a woman as his wife, and so on thereafter for some eleven years, they passing as husband and wife, and recognizing each other as such, was evidence from which the jury might find that that was the woman to whom Priest was married, as by the record. Id.

17. Proof of marriage regulated by G. S. c. 117, s. 7.

MARRIAGE PROMISE.

1. Infant. A promise of marriage made by an infant is void. Pool v. Pratt, 1 D. Chip. 252.

2. Attentions. Mutual promises of marriage may be inferred from proper and sufficient circumstances; but they cannot be implied from mere attentions, though exclusive, long-continued, and manifesting an apparently serious and settled attachment between the parties. Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 846.

3. But those exclusive, long-continued and special attentions which, in the circle in which the parties move, are not expected to be paid or received unless during the pendency of a treaty of marriage, are to be taken into account with the other more direct evidence to prove the promise, and, it seems, are sufficient of themselves to warrant a jury in finding the promise. Whitcomb v. Wolcott, 21 Vt. 368.

4. Survivorship. Dictum. Some assumptions survive, and some—as for breach of promise of marriage—do not. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bliss, 24 Vt. 413.

5. Damages. See CONTRACT, 450.

MARSHALING SECURITIES.

1. Where one holds security on two funds, with perfect liberty to resort to either for his pay, and another party has security upon only one of the same funds, equity will compel the first to exhaust the fund upon which he alone has the security, before taking any part of the other and thereby depriving the other party of his security; and parties will, sometimes be compelled to follow this principle without the direct interposition of the court in advance, and especially where the party was bound by contract to do so. Poland, J., in Warren v. Warren, 30 Vt. 590.

2. This doctrine applied to the creditor and a trustee under the trustee process. Edgerton v. Martin, 35 Vt. 116.

3. In marshaling assets in equity, it is indispensable that all the parties in interest should be before the court, or that the fund should be so before the court that the judgment may operate in rem. Shedd v. Bank of Brattleboro, 32 Vt. 709.

See MORTGAGE, 122 and seq.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

1. Liability of servant to master. A servant is not liable for an injury to his master's beast through his mishap, while using it in performing any of the duties of his employment, and the beast is commonly used in such services, if he acted with common prudence and discretion, although he can show no special order of the master to use the particular beast on such occasion. Hathaway v. Smith, 2 Tyl. 248.

2. — of master to servant. Whatever may be the agent which the master brings into his service, whether animate or inanimate, he is bound to exercise care and prudence in their selection, so as not to expose his servants to unreasonable risks and danger. Noyes v. Smith, 28 Vt. 59.

3. The declaration averred, that the plaintiff was hired and employed by the defendants as an engineer to have charge of, conduct and run a railroad engine, and that by virtue of such employment it became and was the duty of the defendants to furnish an engine that was well constructed and safe, &c., but that they carelessly and wrongfully furnished him an insufficient engine, &c.; that this insufficiency was unknown to the plaintiff, but which, "but for want of all proper care and diligence, would have been known to the defendants"; and that while the plaintiff was in the careful and prudent use of said engine it exploded from such insufficiency, and injured the plaintiff, &c. Held, on demurrer, that the declaration disclosed a sufficient cause of action. Id.; and see Hard v. Vt. & Canada R. Co., 32 Vt. 478.

4. — to strangers. A master is liable for the act of his servant, if the act be done while employed in the business of the master, in the following cases, viz: (1), if the act was done by the express command of the master; (2), if it was the natural and probable result of the orders given to the servant, though not expressly commanded; (3), if the act was done by the servant in the business of the master which he was directed or expected to do, and he acts in good faith, and not willfully. Aldis, J., in Andrus v. Howard, 36 Vt. 251. See May v. Bliss, 22 Vt. 477. Tuel v. Weston, 47 Vt. 634.

5. Where A, although a volunteer, was assisting the defendant in performing a certain work for the defendant, and while he was present;—Held, that the relation of master and servant existed between them, so as to make the defendant liable as a trespasser for the act of A in such service. Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178.

6. Where the defendant set his servant to cutting trees upon his land, and the servant negligently, and for want of proper information, cut beyond the defendant's line upon the land of the plaintiff adjoining;—Held, that the defendant was liable in trespass therefor, although the defendant instructed him to be careful and not cut over the line. Id.

7. The old distinction between trespass and case has practically become of but little importance, since, by statute (G. S. c. 33, s. 14), counts therefor can be joined, if for the same cause of action. Therefore, held, that a master may be liable in trespass for an act of his servant, which is a trespass, though it occur through the neglect or unskillfulness of the servant. Id. Andrus v. Howard, 36 Vt. 248. May v. Bliss, 22 Vt. 477.

8. The defendant took a bag of corn to the plaintiff's mill to be ground, containing an iron bolt which the defendant's hired servant, in the course of business and within the scope of his employment, had put in the bag, but without any notice to the defendant. In attempting to grind the corn the plaintiff's mill was injured by the bolt. Held, that the defendant was responsible for his act in so offering the grain to be ground, and could not shield himself by reason of the negligence of his servant. Tuel v. Weston, 47 Vt. 634.

9. Middleman. A mere middleman, being an agent intermediate between the common master and the direct agent, though the former be the general and the latter a special agent and under the general supervision of the former, is not constructively liable for the acts of the latter. Brown v. Lent, 20 Vt. 529.

10. Lessor. The lessor of a farm, and of an authorized ferry and ferry boat connected with it, was held not liable for the negligence of the lessee in ferrying the plaintiff; that his character of lessee was not changed to that of servant of the lessor, by a provision in the lease that the lessee should pay the lessor one-half the receipts of the ferry boat weekly. Felton v. Deall, 23 Vt. 170.

11. Remote agent. The defendants, a railroad company, contracted with E to construct certain sections of their railroad. E sublet to C the building of the abutments of a bridge. An employe of C, in drawing stone for such abutment, left one in the highway, by reason of which one P got injured, and recovered damages therefor of the plaintiff town. In an action by the town against the railroad company for reimbursement;—Held, that the employe of C was not the servant of the defendants, nor under their control, and that no privity existed between them, therefore they were not liable. Pawlet v. Rutland & Wash. R. Co., 28 Vt. 297.

12. Criminal matters. In a criminal prosecution, a master cannot be made liable for the acts of his servant, merely by reason of the legal relation which exists between them, and where the facts exculpate the master from all fault and negligence. State v. Bacon, 40 Vt. 456.

For other kindred cases, see AGENT.

MEETING HOUSE.

1. Pews real estate. Pews or slips in a meeting house are, in the absence of any statute provision, considered in this country as real estate, in all cases arising under the statute of frauds, or of conveyances, or of descents and distributions. They are declared to be real estate by G. S. c. 4, s. 8. O'Hear v. DeGoesbriand, 33 Vt. 598. Kellogg v. Dickinson, 18 Vt. 266. Hodges v. Green, 28 Vt. 358. Barnard v. Whipple, 29 Vt. 401. Perrin v. Granger, 33 Vt. 101.

2. Ejectment therefor. A pew in a meeting house is real estate, and to be conveyed as such. In ejectment therefor;—Held, that a levy of execution upon it as real estate should prevail over a prior assignment of a certificate of ownership and record thereof by the clerk of the society according to the by-laws; and that the latter conveyed no legal title. Barnard v. Whipple.

3. Trespass qua. clau. The owner of a pew in a meeting house may maintain trespass qua. clau. for the destruction of his pew against even the society or person who has the legal title to the land and building. O'Hear v. DeGoesbriand, 33 Vt. 598.

4. Notwithstanding the canon law of the Roman Catholic church forbids the ownership or control of a pew in a church by a layman, yet, whether that law was recognized or adopted by the signers of a subscription for the building of a "Roman Catholic chapel," is a question of fact, and not of law, and is provable by parol evidence. And on proof that it was originally agreed among the subscribers that they should have choice of pews and hold them as their property in severalty, and that such division had been made, the plaintiff, a subscriber, recovered, in an action of trespass qua. clau., against his bishop for the destruction of his pew, although the legal title to the land and the building had become vested in the defendant. Id.

5. A pew-holder cannot maintain trespass for the mere breaking and entry of a meeting house in which his pew is situate; but he may for the destruction of his pew, and this, although he sue for the entry with it,—for the destruction of the pew is not mere matter of aggravation, but is of the gist of the action. Hove v. Stevens, 47 Vt. 262.

6. Although others may have so far obtained possession of a meeting house as to oust the society in charge, yet a pew-holder may maintain trespass for the first invasion of his individual right, by the destruction of his pew, after such ouster. Id.

7. Case for disturbance. Case is the appropriate, and ordinarily the only remedy for a disturbance in the enjoyment by a pew-holder of his right, as such. For a mere disturbance in the use of his pew, trespass or ejectment will not lie. Perrin v. Granger, 33 Vt. 101. Bakersfield Soc'y. v. Baker, 15 Vt. 119. Kellogg v. Dickinson, 18 Vt. 266.

8. The collector of a religious society unlawfully sold the plaintiff's pew in a meeting house, and the purchaser took possession of it under his purchase. Held, that both were jointly liable in case, for the disturbance of the plaintiff's use of his pew. Perrin v. Granger.

9. Right qualified. In ordinary cases, the pew-holders in meeting houses or churches built by incorporations under the statute, have only a right of occupancy in their seats, subject to the superior rights of the society owning the fee of the house. Perrin v. Granger. Bakersfield Soc'y. v. Baker, 15 Vt. 119. Kellogg v. Dickinson, 18 Vt. 266.

10. A religious society may repair, take down and rebuild its meeting house, with or without compensation to the pew-holders, as the case may be, and erect another, without any particular regard to the way or manner in which it was first built, or the religious tenets of those who first erected it, or made donations therefor. Kellogg v. Dickinson. Id. 547.

11. The right of a pew-holder to a pew in a meeting house is a qualified right, and subordinate to the rights of the owners of the house. He has an exclusive right to occupy his pew, when the house is used for the purposes for which it was erected, but he cannot convert his pew to other uses, not contemplated. If the house be taken down as a matter of convenience, or taste, by the owners, he is entitled to compensation; but if of necessity, because the house has become ruinous and wholly unfit for the purposes for which it was erected, he is not entitled to compensation, although the owners use the materials of the old house, or their avails, in building a new one. Id.

12. A town, under the act of 1787, built a meeting house upon land leased to it for that purpose, and sold the pews at auction in town meeting. In 1842 the town released all its right in the house and land to a religious society organized under the act of 1814, which continued to occupy the house, as it had been occupied, for purposes of public worship. Held, that the society had succeeded to the rights of the town as owner of the house and land, and might, in case of necessity, take down and rebuild the house without making compensation to the pew owners. Id.

13. The right of a pew-holder is only a right to occupy his pew during public worship; and so, whenever the meeting-house becomes in such ruinous condition that it is not, and cannot be, occupied for public worship, he can recover only nominal damages for a destruction of the pew. Hove v. Stevens, 47 Vt. 262.

14. A meeting house was built upon land with permission of the owner, who afterwards conveyed the land to trustees in trust for the purpose of continuing the meeting house thereon, and for a common or green; and when ceased to be occupied for that purpose to revert to the grantor. Held, that the failure to keep the house in such repair that it could be occupied for public worship would not, of itself, terminate the right of a pew-holder to his pew, nor leave him without right to maintain an action for an injury done thereto by a stranger; but would only make his right to it less valuable, and so lessen the amount he could recover. Id.

15. Conveyance. A parcel of land, described as a meeting house green with a meeting house thereon, was conveyed to three persons, their heirs and assigns and the survivor of them, in joint tenancy, in trust for that use, and for the owners and proprietors of said meeting house, with a condition of reverter to the grantor and his heirs, on failure to occupy the premises for the purposes of a meeting house and green. The survivor of the trustees and the heir of the grantor afterwards conveyed the premises to the defendant, a school district, which claimed under the condition of reverter and purposed to convert the property into a school house and grounds. On a bill in equity by the pew owners for an injunction;—Held, that the defendant took the estate charged with the trust, and that the pew owners, the use of the property for the purposes named in the original grant not having been in intent and fact abandoned or discontinued, though a good deal neglected, were entitled to the injunction. Howe v. School Dist. in Jericho, 43 Vt. 282.

16. A deed of lands was to a religious society, habendum "during the time said society or their heirs shall meet on said land for public worship, or have a meeting house standing on said land and appropriate the use of the same to Congregational or Presbyterian public worship." After building a meeting house upon the land and occupying it for many years, a majority of the society and church moved to another place, taking with them the corporate organization, and erected and occupied a new meeting house, abandoning and ceasing further to meet in the old house; but a small minority remaining formed a new religious society, and were authorized by the old society to occupy the old house for Congregational public worship, which was done. Held, that under the second clause of the habendum the land was saved from reverting to the grantor. Cong. Soc'y. of Halifax v. Stark, 34 Vt. 243.

17. Administrator's right. An administrator, before distribution or surrender, may himself occupy a pew belonging to his intestate's estate, or may lease it; and for a disturbance of his personal use of the pew may maintain an action as administrator; or, semble, he might sue in his personal capacity, making title by his letters of administration. Perrin v. Granger, 33 Vt. 101.

18. Setting off meeting house on execution. The meeting house of a religious society cannot be taken on an execution against the society, although the fee of the land may be in the society, where the several pew-holders have an individual interest in the house. Bigelow v. Congregational Society, 11 Vt. 288.

19. Disturbance of society. A meeting house was built by the "Union Society," an incorporated association, exclusively for the use of the "Religious Congregational Society," another incorporated association, the fee of the land remaining in the Union Society. Held, that the Congregational Society could not maintain trespass quare clausum against a pew-holder and an outside minister who, by his invitation, occupied the pulpit on Sunday, and prevented that society from holding their accustomed worship there;—that trespass was not the proper remedy. Bakersfield Society v. Baker, 15 Vt. 119. 24 Vt. 533. 33 Vt. 105.

See ASSOCIATIONS.

20. Catholic chapel. The term "Catholic chapel," as used in a writing, has no such precise and definite signification as to exclude extrinsic oral evidence to interpret its meaning, or to point its application to the subject matter,—as, a Roman Catholic Chapel, to be used as a place of public worship, according to the rites and ceremonies of the Roman Catholic Church. O'Hear v. DeGoesbriand, 33 Vt. 593.

MERGER.

I. AS TO CONTRACTS.

II. AS TO ESTATES.

I. AS TO CONTRACTS.

1. Where a contract of a higher nature, and affording an adequate remedy, is taken as a substitute for one of an inferior nature, as, a sealed for a simple contract, the first contract is merged in the last, and the last is a bar to an action upon the first. Bryant v. Gale, 5 Vt. 416. Mott v. Harrington, 12 Vt. 199. Hall, J., in Langdon v. Paul, 20 Vt. 220.

2. Where there was an unsealed contract in writing for the conveyance of land free of incumbrances, and afterwards, in consummation of this contract, a deed of the land was given and a bond to indemnify against a supposed incumbrance;—Held, that the claim upon the simple contract became merged in the higher security, and that no action lay thereon. Smith v. Higbee, 12 Vt. 113.

3. The maker of certain negotiable promissory notes executed a sealed instrument, certifying "to all persons" that he had signed the notes, and waiving the statute of limitations thereon, and agreeing to pay them to the payee or his order, "the same as though the statute of limitations had not run on said notes." In an action upon one of the notes by an indorsee;—Held, that the instrument was not a bar to the action; that the plain intent of it was not to give an independent remedy, but to strengthen and keep alive the remedy upon the notes; and that any remedy upon it was not co-extensive with that upon the notes, and so was not a merger, but only collateral. Langdon v. Paul, 20 Vt. 217.

4. A simple contract debt is not merged in a bond, where the debt is recited in the bond, and it is provided in terms that the payment of the debt shall be a release and discharge of the obligor. Hicks v. Clark, 41 Vt. 183.

For merger of original debt in Judgment, see JUDGMENT; of account in Promissory note, see PROMISSORY NOTE.

II. AS TO ESTATES.

5. The estates of mortgagor and mortgagee [or of lessor and lessee], when united, will not be treated as merged so as to operate as payment or extinguishment of the debt [or the rent reserved], unless such was the evident intention of the parties; nor will that result follow, if there exists some beneficial interest that requires to be protected, and where it is for the benefit of the party to keep the two estates separate and distinct. Walker v. Baxter, 26 Vt. 710, 715. Spencer v. Austin, 38 Vt. 258, 269. Myers v. Brownell, 1 D. Chip. 448. Marshall v. Wood, 5 Vt. 250. Slocum v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 187.

6. Where one having an equitable title, with possession, afterwards took a perpetual lease from the legal owner, it was held that this should not operate as a merger of the equitable title so as to give precedence to an intermediate incumbrance, but rather as a further assurance of title, and as taking date from the time of the entry. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560.

7. G and S, tenants in common of lands, joined in a perpetual lease of the same to W for a certain annual rent, with right of re-entry for non-payment. S afterwards assigned all his interest in the lease to A, and afterwards one-half of W's interest in the lease and premises came to A by conveyances. Rent being in arrear, the heirs of G, deceased, brought their bill setting up their right to one-half the original rent reserved, and praying that it should stand as a charge upon the whole premises, and for a foreclosure in case of non-payment. Held, that although the title to an undivided half of the premises had become vested in A, this did not so work a merger of the two estates as to extinguish the rent in arrear to A, or A's right under the lease to enjoy his moiety of the land for the rent in arrear and the rent to accrue, that not being for his benefit nor according to the intent of the parties; that the orators' rights were not superior to his, and that they could not extend their security over the whole land. Spencer v. Austin, 38 Vt. 258.

8. A mortgage is not merged in a subsequent conveyance to the mortgagee of the equity of redemption, if such merger would operate to the injury of the mortgagee. Marshall v. Wood, 5 Vt. 250. 26 Vt. 715.

9. Where a mortgagor conveyed his equity of redemption to the mortgagee in payment of the mortgage debt, by a deed of warranty with the usual covenants;—Held, in ejectment, that this did not operate as a merger of the mortgage, so as to give priority to an intervening incumbrance by way of an attachment and subsequent levy of execution. Myers v. Brownell, 1 D. Chip. 448. 27 Vt. 495.

10. Where a mortgagor conveys absolutely to the mortgagee in payment of the mortgage, if such conveyance be avoided by the creditors of the mortgagor as fraudulent, it leaves the mortgage in force, as to such creditors. Irish v. Claves, 10 Vt. 81. 29 Vt. 415.

11. Where a mortgagee has assigned the debt and mortgage, and the mortgagor afterwards releases his equity to the mortgagee, no merger takes place;—for, by the assignment, his assignee became mortgagee, and, by the release, himself became mortgagor. There can be no merger, unless the two estates unite in one and the same person, and in the same right. Pratt v. Bank of Bennington, 10 Vt. 293.

12. Where the defendant paid off a mortgage upon land and took an assignment from the mortgagee and a conveyance of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor, the court relieved the defendant from the legal consequences of a merger, and set up the mortgage in his behalf, as against a creditor of the mortgagor who had levied upon the equity before record of the defendant's deed. Slocum v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 187. 26 Vt. 715. 27 Vt. 495. 31 Vt. 129.

13. The orator purchased of G his equity of redemption in lands mortgaged, which equity was then, as the orator knew, under an attachment by the defendant, the orator agreeing with G to pay the mortgage debt, but nothing being said as to keeping the mortgage on foot. The deed excepted the mortgage from the covenants. The orator paid the mortgage debt to the holder, under an arrangement with him that the orator should have the security, and the holder accordingly transferred the mortgage notes and mortgage to the orator, without recourse. The defendant, following up his attachment, obtained judgment and levied his execution. In a bill to foreclose the mortgage;—Held, that there was no merger of the mortgage, and the orator was entitled to a decree for the amount paid by him upon it. Bullard v. Leach, 27 Vt. 491.

MILITIA.

1. The act of 1837, "for regulating and governing the militia," expressly repealed the militia act of 1818, and no new organization under the act of 1837 took place until July, 1838. Held, that, although the act of 1837 repealed the act of 1818, it did not disband the militia organized under the act of 1818, nor break up such organizations; and that for a delinquency at June training, 1838, the party was punishable, according to the act of 1837, and by a court-martial created and organized under that act. Gilman v. Morse, 12 Vt. 544. (Redfield and Bennett, J. J., dissenting.)

2. Able-bodied. Mere physical infirmity does not operate as an exemption from enrollment and military jurisdiction, under a provision requiring the enrollment of every "able-bodied" citizen; and of the extent of such infirmity, whether visible or not, the enrolling officer must judge in the first instance, leaving his error to be corrected by a disenrollment, as provided in the statute, and not by an action as for excess of jurisdiction. Darling v. Bowen, 10 Vt. 148. Warner v. Stockwell, 9 Vt. 9. 16 Vt. 254.

3. Courts-martial. In imposing and remitting fines, militia officers act judicially, and their final decisions are conclusive. Mower v. Allen, 1 D. Chip. 381. Warner v. Stockwell.

4. The adjudication of summary and special jurisdictions—as, of a court martial, in imposing a fine—having jurisdiction both of the subject matter and of the person of the party, cannot be voided by any circumstantial irregularity in the detail of the proceedings, either before or at the time of trial. Held, that the judgment of a court-martial was not avoided by reason of a defective notice of the charges, and of service of process. Brown v. Wadsworth, 15 Vt. 170.

5. But where there was want of jurisdiction of the person, as where an alien, not subject to military duty, was amerced by court-martial;—Held, that the proceedings were void, and the officer liable for serving the execution. Barrett v. Crane, 16 Vt. 246. See Darling v. Bowen, 10 Vt. 148.

MISTAKE.

1. When equity will relieve. Chancery will correct a mistake in a conveyance, where the mistake is undeniably proved, and perfect the conveyance according to the intent of the parties; and this, whether the mistake is in regard to a statutory or common law requisite; or whether the parties failed of executing such an instrument as they intended, or mistook in respect to the operation of the instrument. Beardsley v. Knight, 10 Vt. 185.

2. Where a mistake in a conveyance is of so fundamental a character that the minds of the parties have never, in fact, met; or where an unconscionable advantage has been gained by mere mistake or misapprehension, and there was no gross negligence on the part of the plaintiff, either in falling into the error or in not sooner claiming redress, and no intervening rights have accrued, and the parties may still be placed in statu quo, equity will interfere, in its discretion, in order to prevent intolerable injustice. (Relief granted in this case, where the orator omitted in the deed to make a reservation of a spring of water.) Brown v. Lamphear, 35 Vt. 252.

3. In order for chancery to correct alleged mistakes in written contracts, or deeds, the mistake must be either admitted by the defendant, or else be proved by such evidence "as admits of no doubt"—"the most conclusive evidence"—"the most irrefragable evidence." Redfield, J., in Griswold v. Smith, 10 Vt. 452. Cleveland v. Burton, 11 Vt. 138. Goodell v. Field, 15 Vt. 448. Preston v. Whitcomb, 17 Vt. 188. Shattuck v. Gay, 45 Vt. 87.

4. Instances. The parties owning a farm in common, which the orator had a right to flow by means of his mill dam, made partition by mutual quit-claim deeds. Held, that the legal effect was to release the orator's right of flowage; but, such not being the effect intended, the defendant was restrained in chancery from setting up the deed as such release. Mower v. Hutchinson, 9 Vt. 242. 22 Vt. 268.

5. The defendant, being the owner of the one-half of a saw-mill, contracted to sell the same to the orator for the price of a full title to such half, and to give a warranty deed thereof. The deed given was of the defendant's "right, title and interest" in the mill, and contained no covenant except to "warrant and defend the aforesaid premises." The premises were then in fact subject to a mortgage. Held, that the contract was for a deed including covenants of seisin and against incumbrances, and it being found that the deed was not according to the contract, the defendant was enjoined from suit upon a note given for part of the purchase price, until he had removed such incumbrance, the same as if such covenants had been inserted in the deed. Bowen v. Thrall, 28 Vt. 883.

6. Where the parties to a contract of sale of land were under a mutual mistake as to the grantor's title, so that no title was conveyed, the purchaser was relieved in equity. Hadlock v. Williams, 10 Vt. 570. 31 Vt. 388.

7. A bond given to three jointly, without naming assignees, &c., was allowed in chancery to be reformed, so as to stand for the protection and benefit of a business and new parties becoming interested therein. Smith v. Wainwright, 24 Vt. 97.

8. The official bond of a constable, imperfect for want of sealing, was treated, as to him and his sureties, as sealed, where the defendants, in their answers to a bill by the town, admitted that it was their intention to have sealed it. Rutland v. Paige, 24 Vt. 181.

9. The orator, having a just claim against the estate of a decedent, presented it to the commissioners for allowance. No defense or objection was made to the allowance, and the orator had reason to believe, and did believe, that the claim was acted upon and allowed, and did not learn the contrary until after the statute time for opening the commission had expired. The commissioners, through mistake or forgetfulness, had omitted to embrace the claim in their report, as presented to or acted upon by them. Held, that it was within the jurisdiction of the court of equity, to afford relief against the consequences of such accident and mistake. Diskey v. Corliss, 41 Vt. 127.

10. A party having equitable rights in premises, different from what appeared on the face of the deeds, consented to the appointment of commissioners on the petition of his adversary to make partition, mistakenly supposing that his equitable rights would be available to him before the commissioners. Held, in chancery, that this was no waiver of his right; and no bar, there being no judgment. Piper v. Farr, 47 Vt. 721.

11. Where relief must be refused. Where the contracts of parties have produced results not anticipated, they have never been relieved from such results, unless that could be done and leave the contract operative as to what they did intend. Poland, C. J., in Fletcher v. Bennett, 36 Vt. 665; citing Proctor v. Thrall, 22 Vt. 262. Fletcher v. Jackson, 28 Vt. 581. Barnes v. Lapham, 28 Vt. 307.

12. If the different operation of the contract, beyond what was intended, is merely a legal effect or result of what the parties did intend, so that relief cannot be given except by annulling the very contract understandingly and intentionally entered into, chancery will not interfere. Proctor v. Thrall.

13. The owner of mortgaged premises, being about to sell them, procured the first mortgagee to execute to the purchaser a bond, conditioned that the seller should save him harmless from any incumbrance upon the land. Held, that the effect was to release the land from that incumbrance, not only as to the purchaser, but as to all intermediate owners and incumbrances; and that although this latter consequence was not intended by the parties, yet as it was the legal consequence of what they did intend, equity could not relieve the mortgagee. Ib.

14. Mistake or misjudgment of counsel, is no ground for relief in equity against a judgment at law. Burton v. Wiley, 26 Vt. 430.

15. Less still, the mistake of the court. Pettes v. Bank of Whitehall, 17 Vt. 435.

16. Where a party has committed a tort in consequence of a mistake of law, though he acted under the advice of legal counsel in so doing, chancery cannot relieve him from the legal consequences of his tortious act, or omission;—as, where a sheriff neglected to commit a debtor upon execution, upon the erroneous belief, and the advice of counsel, that the execution was void. Ib.

17. Surprise. Surprise, not accompanied with fraud and circumvention, is not ground for relief in equity. McDaniels v. Bank of Rutland, 29 Vt. 230.

18. Ignorance. Nor, is ignorance of facts merely, where actual knowledge could have been obtained by the exercise of due diligence and inquiry. Ib.

19. Nor, is mistake of the law, except in peculiar circumstances involving other elements,—as, ignorance of title, imposition, misrepresentation, undue influence, misplaced confidence, and surprise. Ib.

20. Nor, although the party in such case acted upon the advice of counsel. Ib. Pettes v. Bank of Whitehall, 17 Vt. 435.

21. Relief against judgment. In order to obtain a new trial of a suit at law by bill in equity, the orator must show that he failed of obtaining redress in the suit at law by the fraud of the opposite party, or through inevitable accident, or mistake, without any default, either of himself, his counsel, or agents. Burton v.

Wiley, 26 Vt. 480. Essex v. Berry, 2 Vt. 161. Fletcher v. Warren, 18 Vt. 45. Warner v. Conant, 24 Vt. 351. Emerson v. Udall, 13 Vt. 477. Pettes v. Bank of Whitehall, 17 Vt. 485. Briggs v. Shaw, 15 Vt. 78.

22. That a judgment at law may have worked injustice is not, of itself, enough to authorize a court of equity to relieve against it. It is only upon collateral grounds, not directly passed upon by the court of law, that a court of equity can proceed in such cases; and then it acts upon the conscience of the party in fault, and not upon the court of law. It is therefore usual to allege and show, that the party seeking relief had a just defense, either legal or equitable, of which, through the fraud or wrongful act of his opponent, he was unable to avail himself in time. Mere accident or mistake on his own part is rather to be accounted his misfortune, than imputed as a wrong to the other party. Fletcher v. Warren.

23. Chancery refused relief against a judgment rendered on default, where the non-appearance arose from the accident that the party's attorney did not seasonably receive a letter requesting his appearance;—because (1), the accident might have been prevented by common prudence; (2), substantial justice had been done; (3), the relief prayed went only in reduction of damages; (4), the sum in controversy was small. Essex v. Berry, 2 Vt. 161.

24. Chancery will not relieve against a judgment rendered against one as trustee, on the ground that through forgetfulness or neglect of himself, or his agent, he failed to attend the court, even though it appear that he would have been discharged upon disclosure made, and though there be no redress at law, where no fraud is imputable to the party obtaining the judgment. Warner v. Conant, 24 Vt. 351. 46 Vt. 27.

25. Lapse of time. Chancery will not reform a contract, or set aside an award or proceeding, where the party affected has omitted for a long time to make objection to it. Barker v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 700.

26. Other instances. The defendant, having a contract and covenant from D to convey to him title to certain land upon certain conditions of payment, sold and assigned the same to the orators. They paid D the sums falling due upon the contract, but ascertaining that the title was not in D, and supposing it was in E, they obtained a conveyance from E, and gave up to D his contract. The title, in fact, was in neither, but was in the United States. Held, that the orators, by giving up to D his contract and covenant and taking a new security, had put it out of their power to rescind their contract with the defendant; and that they had no remedy in chancery against him, although he might have made false representations as to the title upon making the assignment. Blanchard v. Stone, 15 Vt. 271.

27. The orator claimed relief against the defendant's claim, at law, for an annuity agreed to be paid upon the purchase of the defendant's interest in an estate, conveyed by quit-claim, on the ground of a lien of the administrator for payment of debts and expenses larger than was supposed. The court not finding any guaranty, fraud, or material mutual mistake, the bill was dismissed. Newton v. Bennett, 38 Vt. 181.

28. One, by mistake of description in his deed, conveyed to the defendant more land than was intended, and afterwards devised "all his real estate" to his wife, and this descended to their son, who, without consideration, quit-claimed to the orator the land mistakenly conveyed, but with notice that he asserted no claim thereto; and neither the devisee nor heir ever asserted or claimed any right as against the legal title conveyed by the deed of the testator. Held, that the orator had no standing for asserting a claim that the deed be reformed. St. Johnsbury v. Bagley, 48 Vt. 75.

VI. MORTGAGE OF CHATTELS.

I. WHAT IS A MORTGAGE.

1. Characteristics in general.

1. Pledge for a debt. A mortgage is nothing else than a pledge of real estate as security for the payment of the mortgage debt. It is an accident of the debt, and liable at all times, before the equity of redemption is foreclosed, to be defeated by the payment of the debt. Briggs v. Fish, 2 D. Chip. 100.

2. The lien of a mortgage lasts as long as the debt, and a change of securities is no discharge of the mortgage, either as to the mortgagor or subsequent incumbrancers, unless that was the intention of the parties. Seymour v. Darrow, 81 Vt. 122. Dana v. Binney, 7 Vt.

498. McDonald v. McDonald, 16 Vt. 690. Dunahoe v. Parmelee, 19 Vt. 173.

3. Or, unless securities of a lower grade are merged in those of a higher one—as, a specialty for a simple contract—and then probably equity would relieve from the legal consequence of the merger. Redfield, C. J., in Seymour v. Darrow, 31 Vt. 129, citing Slocum v. Catlin, 23 Vt. 137.

4. Payment. A executed to B and C a mortgage, conditioned to become void if he should pay a note which they had signed with him as surety. Afterwards he conveyed to B and D the premises subject to the incumbrance, which they were to pay and discharge. B afterwards paid the note on which he and C were sureties. Held, that the mortgage was discharged and could not be set up by B and C. Harvey v. Hurlburt, 8 Vt. 361.

5. Where a second mortgagee has purchased in the equity of redemption and has paid off the first mortgage, he cannot maintain an action upon the first mortgage notes against the original debtor, or his sureties. Viles v. Moulton, 11 Vt. 470. Converse v. Cook, 8 Vt. 164.

6. A second mortgagee, who had acquired the equity of redemption and sold the premises for a sum larger than the first mortgage, purchased one of the notes secured by the first mortgage, which note had been indorsed by the first mortgagee, and sued him thereon as indorser. Held, that such purchase should be treated as payment and satisfaction of the note. Smith v. Day, 23 Vt. 656.

7. In an action on a mortgage bond executed in the State of New York;—Held, that the purchase of the mortgaged premises at the mortgage sale by the mortgagee, the same being authorized by the law of New York, operated only as payment pro tanto, although he afterwards sold the premises at a greater price,—no fraud being shown. Sabin v. Stickney, 9 Vt. 155.

8. Right of redemption inseparable. If a transaction between parties is in fact a mortgage, the right of redemption attaches as an inseparable incident, created by law, which cannot be waived by agreement made at the time of the execution of the deed of conveyance, nor upon any future contingency whatever. Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 169, 181. Cutlin v. Chittenden, Brayt, 163. Baxter v. Willey, 9 Vt. 276. Wright v. Bates, 18 Vt. 341. Davis v. Hemenway, 27 Vt. 589.

9. Particular cases. A tenant in common of land mortgaged it to his co-tenant, his late partner, to indemnify him against the partnership debts, of which a debt due the orators was one, and then mortgaged the same land to the orators to secure their debt. Afterwards both tenants sold and conveyed the land to a stranger. Held, on a bill to foreclose, that the orators were entitled to a foreclosure; as to a moiety, against both tenants and their grantee. Prothingham v. Shepard, 1 Aik. 65.

10. One mortgaged white acre to secure the payment of notes on a day certain, and also black acre conditioned for the payment of the same notes, or, in case of failure, to surrender white acre without suit or trouble. The notes were not paid, and the mortgagor abandoned white acre, without formal surrender, and after ten months the mortgagee took possession, and the mortgagor conveyed black acre to S. On a bill against the mortgagor and S to foreclose as to both parcels, it was decreed, that the defendants might redeem black acre by paying the costs and interest on the orator's debt while he was out of possession of white acre, and by surrendering all claim to white acre; but, in case of failure, that they be foreclosed as to both parcels, for the whole mortgage debt. Hunt v. Tyler, 2 Aik. 238.

11. Where a mortgage is taken from one of two joint debtors, as a security for the payment of a ratable proportion of the debt, it cannot be enforced beyond the purpose intended by it, though the other part remains unpaid. Newell v. Hurlburt, 2 Vt. 351. 8 Vt. 277.

12. A party conveying land in consideration of an agreement to support, secured by mortgage, was quieted in his title by decree, under the circumstances of the case, the mortgagor having failed to perform his contract. Devereaux v. Cooper, 11 Vt. 103. Frisbie v. Dearth, 28 Vt. 787.

13. The defendant assigned and indorsed to the orator a negotiable promissory note, and executed to him a mortgage conditioned that the defendant should "well and truly pay or cause to be paid" said note. Held, on a petition to foreclose the mortgage, that it was not discharged by the mere failure of the orator to charge the defendant as indorser of the note. Mitchell v. Clark, 35 Vt. 104.

14. Equitable set-off. Equity will not permit a grantor of lands to recover the entire purchase money and leave an unpaid incumbrance upon the land, which he is under obligation to discharge. The purchaser has the right, in equity, to retain of the purchase money sufficient to secure him against such incumbrance, particularly where the grantor is insolvent, and no adequate remedy can be had on his covenants. Bowen v. Thrall, 28 Vt. 382.

15. In negotiating the sale of a farm at a gross price, the vendor represented that the meadow part contained not less than 80 acres, whereas in fact the meadow contained but 60 acres. He made these representations with professed knowledge on the subject, knowing that the vendee relied upon them as true; and the vendee had a right, under the circumstances, so to rely upon them and made his purchase in faith of them. Held, on a bill to foreclose the mortgage given for the purchase price, that the difference between the value of the farm at 80 acres and at 60 acres, of meadow, should be deducted from the mortgage note. Twitchell v. Bridge, 42 Vt. 68.

16. The law is the same as to a misrepresentation of the productiveness of the land. Ib.

17. Particular phrases. Where a note was given for land incumbered by mortgages, with a condition added, that before payment should be made or demanded all incumbrances on the land should "be removed therefrom";—Held, in an action at law, that the clear meaning was, that the incumbrances should be removed in a manner known to the law,—that is, by deed from the mortgagee, or his discharge on the record according to the statute. Hoyt v. Swift, 18 Vt. 129.

18. The plaintiff deposited with the defendant certain notes, to hold until the plaintiff should "get up" two mortgages which appeared on the record as incumbrances upon land conveyed by him to a third person, and by that person to the defendant. He procured all the notes mentioned in both mortgages, a recorded release of one of them, and, the other mortgagee being dead, tendered to the defendant all said notes and a bond of indemnity against such other mortgage, which the defendant accepted. Held, that the condition of the deposit was sufficiently complied with to entitle the plaintiff to a surrender of the notes deposited, and to maintain trover for a refusal. Robbins v. Packard, 81 Vt. 570.

19. Priorities. One of the defendants sold a farm to the orator by warranty deed and took his notes therefor, secured by mortgage thereon. There was a mortgage on the farm at the time, unknown to the orator. That defendant was under legal obligation to his mother, the other defendant, to support her through her life, and towards the discharge of this obligation and as a means for her current support he transferred to her the orator's notes, not due, and absconded from the State, leaving no property. The mother took the notes in good faith, without intent to defraud the orator. Held, that the orator had no equity as against the mother to restrain her in the negotiation and use of the notes, but that she had the legal right, and the superior equity. Kittridge v. Batchelder, 47 Vt. 64.

20. Where the defendant took from the orators their mortgage to get it recorded, not disclosing to them his prior unrecorded mortgage from the same debtor, and procured his own mortgage to be first recorded;—Held, under the circumstances of the case, and as the orators had proved no damage to them from such concealment, that the mortgage first recorded had the priority. Palmer v. Palmer, 48 Vt. 69.

2. Form.

21. A penal bond to re-convey lands is a mortgage. Reynolds v. Scott, Brayt. 75.

22. An absolute deed, if intended, given and held to secure a debt, or duty, is a valid mortgage, not only as to existing debts, but also as to subsequent advances and liabilities assumed by the grantee for the grantor. Gibson v. Seymour, 4 Vt. 518. 81 Vt. 181.

23. Where lands are conveyed in fact as a security for a debt which is kept on foot, the instrument is a mortgage, although there is no covenant or other personal obligation to pay the money. Wing v. Cooper, 87 Vt. 169, 180. Graham v. Stevens, 84 Vt. 166. Campbell v. Worthington, 6 Vt. 448. Mott v. Harrington, 12 Vt. 199.

24. Where there had been a negotiation for a loan to be secured by a mortgage, and a loan made, and a deed given, which, though absolute upon its face, was, by parol agreement, only to stand as a security, and the grantor had remained in possession, paying interest for the money loaned;—Held, that this was a mortgage in equity; that the grantor's equity of redemption was not tolled, nor the transaction converted into a conditional sale by the mortgagee's giving him a lease for years at a certain rent and an obligation to convey upon being paid a certain sum; and that the grantee of the mortgage, having notice of the claim of the mortgagor, came in subject to his equitable right to redeem. Wright v. Bates, 18 Vt. 341. See also Davis v. Hemenway, 27 Vt. 589.

25. The orator, being indebted to the defendant, gave him an absolute deed of a farm, taking back a writing of defeasance. The orator afterwards received further advances, until the whole sum due was $600. The parties then agreed that the defendant should have the farm for $800, and the defendant gave the orator his note for the difference, and the orator surrendered the defeasance; but it was verbally agreed that the defendant should sell the farm, and the orator should have what it brought over $800 after paying the defendant for his time and trouble. The defendant sold the farm at auction and became himself the purchaser at $1,000, and offered to pay the orator such excess, which the orator declined. The farm was worth $1,100 or $1,200. The orator was a poor man and sore pressed. Held, that the contract was in equity a mortgage, with power of sale in the mortgagee, and the orator was allowed to redeem. Hyndman v. Hyndman, 19 Vt. 9. 27 Vt. 598.

26. On a bill to redeem, parol evidence is admissible to prove that a conveyance absolute in form was a security, and in equity a mortgage, the possession of the premises having remained in the grantor and the paper title in the grantee. Hills v. Loomis, 42 Vt. 562. Wright v. Bates, 18 Vt. 341. Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 182.

27. Otherwise, where the grantor conveys with warranty, and possession follows the deed through several successive grantees, unless the purchasers had full knowledge of the character and nature of the contract between the original parties, and purchased fraudulently, with intent to defeat the right of the grantor. Connor v. Chase, 15 Vt. 764.

28. In the case of a conveyance, where a right to redeem is not plain upon paper, lapse of time without claim made, though short of the period of legal limitation, bears strongly against the right. Ib. Mellish v. Robertson, 25 Vt. 603.

29. On bill to redeem from a conveyance absolute in form, but claimed to be a mortgage, relief was refused upon the facts stated. Ib.

30. A deed absolute on its face, but intended merely as security for existing and future liabilities, was held not fraudulent and void as against a later incumbrance, but to be valid as a mortgage. Bigelow v. Topliff, 25 Vt. 273.

31. A deed conditioned to become void unless a certain sum be paid by a day certain, has been regarded as in effect a mortgage from the debtor to the creditor. Austin v. Downer, 25 Vt. 558. S. C. 27 Vt. 636.

32. A quit-claim deed upon a consideration in money named, with a condition for redemption by giving good security in ninety days that the same sum and interest should be paid in two years, was held not to be a mortgage, and that the condition only secured a right of repurchase. Henry v. Bell, 5 Vt. 393. But see Graham v. Stevens, 34 Vt. 166.

33. A conveyance and bond for a reconveyance were held not to be a mortgage, upon the facts stated. Rich v. Doane, 35 Vt. 125.

34. A deed with a bond for a re-conveyance, construed as a mortgage, in Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 169. Davis v. Hemenway, 27 Vt. 589.

35. Where a deed of land was absolute upon its face, but a condition was written on the back, of the same date, although not signed, that if the grantor should pay a certain note to the grantee, as described in the condition, then said deed should be void;—Held, that the condition should be presumed to have formed a part of the deed at the time of the delivery, and that the deed was prima facie subject to such condition, which made it a mortgage. Whitney v. French, 25 Vt. 663.

36. S and his wife executed to G a deed of a farm for the expressed consideration of $800, and before delivery G signed an agreement not sealed, but indorsed upon the deed, that if S should within five years pay him $851, "together with the use of said farm," then he should execute to S a good and sufficient deed of said farm. The farm was worth $1000, and S remained in possession. In an action of ejectment by G against S, brought before the expiration of the five years;—Held, that the deed was subject to the indorsed agreement as a condition, and was a mortgage to secure a debt of $851; and that, the condition not being broken, the plaintiff could not recover. Graham v. Stevens, 34 Vt. 166.

37. S, the mortgagor under the deed above named, remained in possession and made a second mortgage to W. Held, that S was not in possession as lessee of G, and that W was not liable, as assignee of S, to pay rent to G. Graham v. Way, 38 Vt. 19.

38. If a deed clearly appears on its face to be a mortgage, parol evidence is not admissible to show that it was a conditional sale only, and not a mortgage. Ib. Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 169.

39. A power of sale in a mortgage is in practice unusual, if not unknown, in this State, and ought not to be recognized in any case unless it is conveyed by an express grant and in clear and explicit terms. Ib.

40. A mortgagee of certain land conveyed another piece, and, in the conveyance, expressly subjected it to his mortgage. Held, that, as against the grantee and those holding under him, this was equivalent to a reservation of a lien for the payment of his mortgage, and as effectually charged the land conveyed as would a direct mortgage. Sweetser v. Jones, 35 Vt. 317.

41. Future advances. A mortgage to secure future advances is good, and all that is required in the way of description of the debt is, that the extent of the mortgage should be described in general terms, as, "all I now owe or may hereafter owe" the mortgagee. Redfield, C. J., in Seymour v. Darrow, 31 Vt. 133.

42. Where the description in the condition was: "Also what I may owe him on book," and there was then no existing account between the parties;—Held good to secure a subsequently accruing account, as against a subsequent and recorded mortgage, and until express notice given by the subsequent mortgagee against further advances—the record of the later mortgage not being constructive notice to the previous mortgagee. McDaniels v. Colwin, 16 Vt. 300.

43. Where the description was: "All the notes and agreements I now owe or have with him (the mortgagee), or I and others jointly and severally have with him";—Held, by three judges (Poland and Barrett, J. J., dissenting), that, as against a subsequent mortgagee, this embraced an existing contract to indemnify against indorsements thereafter made. Seymour v. Darrow, 81 Vt. 122.

44. The description in the condition was: "All sums that he (the mortgagee) may become liable to pay by signing or otherwise," &c., without limitation as to amount. Held to be a sufficient description of all future liabilities for the mortgagor, and that it was not material that no sum or limitation was stated. Soule v. Albee, 31 Vt. 142.

45. Equitable mortgage. A mere parol agreement that advances made towards the improvement of real estate shall be secured upon the estate, as by mortgage, will have no effect against a bona fide purchaser, or attaching creditor without notice. Bailey v. Warner, 28 Vt. 87.

46. Whether, under the laws of this State, an equitable mortgage can be created by the deposit of title deeds as a security for the loan or advance of money—dubitatur. Bicknell v. Bicknell, 81 Vt. 498.

47. B, owning land by deed not recorded, deposited his deed with H as security for advances made, until he should execute a mortgage therefor. B afterwards, for valuable consideration, quit-claimed to the orator, who had notice of the agreement between B and H. Held, without determining the respective rights of the parties in the land, that the orator was entitled to a decree that B and H should procure the deed to be recorded. Id.

II. RELATIVE RIGHTS OF MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE.

48. The mortgagor's tenancy. A mortgagor, though in possession, cannot effectually surrender or pass any right of the mortgagee in the premises,—as, to yield to a false division line. Ellithorp v. Dewing, 1 D. Chip. 141.

49. There is such a relation between the mortgagor and mortgagee of land as constitutes a tenancy, and makes the joinder of them in an action of ejectment proper, under the statute, although the mortgagee may never have been in actual possession. Marvin v. Dennison (U. S. C. C.), 20 Vt. 662. 27 Vt. 257.

50. The doctrine that a mortgagor is quasi tenant of the mortgagee and cannot dispute his title, or set up an outstanding title against him, &c., applies as well to a second or subordinate mortgagee as to a first. Wires v. Nelson, 26 Vt. 13.

51. Where a mortgagor took a lease from his mortgagee for a definite term, but continued in possession after the termination of the lease;—Held, that his original liability as mortgagor revived at the termination of the lease, and he became again a tenant at sufferance, and not a tenant from year to year. Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 346.

52. After the expiration of the law day in a mortgage, the mortgagor, or one occupying his position, is considered as tenant at sufferance of the mortgagee, and liable to be evicted without notice to quit. The mortgagee, in such case, has a right of entry which he may peaceably assert without notice and without action; or he may, with or without notice to quit, bring ejectment, and may recover possession of the land and damages for use and occupation after notice to quit, and if no notice, then after the service of the writ—and this against either the mortgagor or his assignee. Mason v. Gray, 36 Vt. 311-12. Stanbury v. Dean, Brayt. 166. Atkinson v. Burt, 1 Aik. 329. Babcock v. Kennedy, 1 Vt. 457. Lyman v. Mower, 6 Vt. 345. Wilson v. Hooper, 18 Vt. 653. Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 346. Lull v. Matthews, 19 Vt. 322. Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165. Collamer v. Langdon, 29 Vt. 83.

53. Mortgagor's ownership. The mortgagor is owner of the land mortgaged, and, under the statute, is entitled to possession until condition broken. Even after this he is owner, and the mortgagee is a creditor having a lien on the land for his debt, with the right of possession. The mortgagor, or his assignee, is so far a tenant of the mortgagee, that the mortgagee cannot maintain trespass qua. clau. until he has taken actual possession. Merely forbidding the mortgagor to enter or occupy does not make him a trespasser by so doing. Hooper v. Wilson, 12 Vt. 695.

54. Where a mortgagor with right of redemption took a lease from the mortgagee at a specified rent, under a stipulation that the crops to be raised should be the property of the lessor until payment of the rent;—Held, that the crops raised by the mortgagor were subject to attachment by his creditors, the mortgagee not being absolute owner of the premises leased. The mortgagor, in possession, is to be treated, as to third persons, as remaining the owner. Cooper v. Cole, 38 Vt. 185.

55. The mortgagor and those standing in his right are entitled to the rents and profits of the premises mortgaged, without accountability to the mortgagee. Walker v. King, 44 Vt. 601. S. C. 45 Vt. 525.

56. Where a mortgagor, before condition broken, in good faith cut wood upon the premises for his necessary fire-wood;—Held, that the title to the wood vested in the mortgagor by the severance, and that he was not liable to the mortgagee for removing it from the premises, after the law day had expired, although the mortgage debt exceeded the value of the premises. Wright v. Lake, 30 Vt. 206.

57. Lapse of time as affecting mortgagor's rights. An equity of redemption is not barred by the possession of the mortgagee for a time less than 15 years, though there may be a difficulty in taking the accounts. Merriam v. Barton, 14 Vt. 501.

58. Where a party had an equitable right in lands, somewhat in the nature of a mortgage with an equitable right of redemption after forfeiture, but surrendered possession and took no steps whatever to pay the sum due, and offered no excuse for not doing so, the court was not inclined, after the lapse of some six years before claim made, to allow a redemption; but relief was granted, on other grounds, to a purchaser from him. Smith v. Blaisdell, 17 Vt. 199.

59. The mortgagee—His interest. The estate of a mortgagee may be attached and execution extended thereon. Wilkinson v. Lathrop, Brayt. 168. (Overruled.)

60. A mere mortgagee has no attachable interest in the lands mortgaged. So held, where the mortgagee had obtained judgment by default in an action of ejectment upon his mortgage, but without foreclosure of the equity of redemption. Barrett v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 365.

61. Tacking. A mortgagee cannot purchase in a mortgage on a different piece of land and tack it to his own mortgage, and so compel a redemption of both, or neither. Cleveland v. Clark, Brayt. 165.

62. The doctrine of tacking mortgages, so as to squeeze out an intermediate incumbrancer, though he be an attaching creditor, is not adopted in Vermont. Chandler v. Dyer, 37 Vt. 345.

63. Distinct remedies. A mortgagee has a right to collect his debt independent of the mortgage. Catlin v. Chittenden, Brayt. 168.

64. A mortgagee does not lose his right to pursue the land, by allowing an action to recover the debt to become barred by the statute of limitations. Richmond v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 324.

65. The neglect to present a mortgage note for allowance to the commissioners of claims against the mortgagor's estate, does not preclude the enforcement of the mortgage security. Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 463.

66. If so presented and allowed, the mortgage security is not affected thereby, nor the right to foreclose. Putnam v. Russell, 17 Vt. 54.

67. Where claims secured by mortgage are allowed against the estate of the mortgagor, the mortgagee will be entitled to the same proportionate dividend as the other creditors; nor will his mortgage security be defeated or impaired thereby, nor lessened beyond the dividend paid. Walker v. Barker, 26 Vt. 710.

68. Where a mortgagee had procured an allowance of the mortgage claims against the estate of the mortgagor, and afterwards, at the administrator's sale, bought in the equity of redemption, subject to the application upon the mortgage of the dividend to be struck upon the allowed claims;—Held, that he was entitled to such dividend. Id.

69. A mortgagee is not obliged to foreclose for all the mortgage notes. He may withhold a part from entering into the decree, and afterwards sue them at law. Langdon v. Paul, 20 Vt. 217.

70. A mortgagee may legally hold two mortgages on different pieces of land to secure the same debt, and may foreclose the mortgage upon one piece without the other; and a foreclosure of the one would bar a foreclosure of the other only in case the land foreclosed should be equal in value to the debt. In that case it would be a bar, for the debt would be thereby paid. Burpee v. Parker, 24 Vt. 567.

71. Lapse of time. Where there has been no entry by the mortgagee nor payment of interest by the mortgagor, the presumption of payment of the mortgage becomes absolute after the lapse of fifteen years, like the bar of the statute of limitations. It is a presumption of law, and conclusive, unless encountered by distinct proof of recognition of the subsistence of the mortgage. Whitney v. French, 25 Vt. 663.

72. The interest of a mortgagee, being but a chattel interest, and always in a condition to be enforced by some one, the operation of the presumption of payment by lapse of time is not interrupted by the succession of rights to the mortgage—as, by death of the mortgagee, &c. Id.

73. Injunction against waste. A mortgagee is entitled to an injunction to restrain waste by the mortgagor, by which the mortgage security is in danger of being reduced in value below the amount of the mortgage debt. Hastings v. Perry, 20 Vt. 272.

74. The court, in such case, will not only restrain future waste by injunction, but, if the bill be framed to that end, will, as incident to the injunction, proceed to take an account of the waste committed, and decree satisfaction therefor. Id.

75. And such decree will be made, not only against the mortgagor, but against such as acted under license from him, having knowledge of the rights of the mortgagee. Id.

76. Right of entry. A mortgagee, after condition broken, has a right of entry which he may assert by peaceably entering, without notice and without an action of ejectment. Wilson v. Hooper, 18 Vt. 653.

77. —and right of action. A mortgagee of lands after condition broken (but not before) is entitled to possession, and may then maintain trespass for an injury thereto done after breach of the condition. Harris v. Haynes, 34 Vt. 220.

78. After the condition of a mortgage is broken, the mortgagee is to be regarded at law as the owner of the mortgaged premises, and entitled to immediate possession; and any timber thereafter cut upon the premises by the mortgagor, or those acting under him, is to be regarded as tortiously taken, and the title thereto remains in the mortgagee, the same as before severance. Wright v. Lake, 30 Vt. 206. Morey v. McGuire, 4 Vt. 327. Lull v. Matthews, 19 Vt. 323. Langdon v. Paul, 23 Vt. 205. 44 Vt. 302.

79. After condition broken, the interest of the mortgagor in the premises mortgaged becomes, at law, absolutely vested in the mortgagee, and he has the right of immediate possession; and for any act essentially impairing the inheritance, and not mere acts of occupation, he may maintain trespass qua. clau. Hagar v. Brainerd, 44 Vt. 294.

80. The right of entry upon land mortgaged is not lost to the mortgagee, either by presumption or the statute of limitations, except by a continued interruption and ouster for the term of fifteen years. This interruption, or ouster, ceases upon the acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagee by the owner of the equity of redemption, or by the owner of the equity in part, if the title subsequently comes to him. Such acknowledgment is a virtual compromise of any prior ouster. Richmond v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 324.

81. For wood or timber cut by the mortgagor upon the mortgaged premises after condition broken, and converted, the mortgagee may maintain trover, or (semble) an action on the case in the nature of waste. Langdon v. Paul, 23 Vt. 205. Hutchins v. Lathrop. Id. 210.

82. Rents and profits. Notice given by a mortgagee to a tenant or assignee of the mortgagor, after the law day has expired, that the mortgagee claims the possession and payment of the rents and profits, is equivalent to a notice to quit; after which, the mortgagor cannot recover therefor, but they may be recovered by the mortgagee as damages in ejectment. Babcock v. Kennedy, 1 Vt. 457, 462. Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 352. Mason v. Gray, 36 Vt. 306.

83. A had mortgaged land to the defendant and, after condition broken, conveyed it to the plaintiff, who had notice of the mortgage. In May, one K went into possession under separate contracts with the plaintiff and the defendant, to hold as tenant of each, neither knowing of the contract made by K with the other until the next December, although the plaintiff, soon after his contract with K, knew that the defendant claimed of K the rents and profits. Held, that in law K was the tenant of the defendant, and that he was entitled to the rents and profits as against the plaintiff. Mason v. Gray.

84. Mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee in possession after condition broken, whether before or after the entering of a decree of foreclosure, is not accountable at law to the mortgagor for rents, profits, or management of the estate, or for waste committed, while he was so in possession. The only remedy of the mortgagor is in equity, as incident to his equitable right to redeem. Seaver v. Durant, 39 Vt. 108. Chapman v. Smith, 9 Vt. 158.

85. M, a mortgagee in possession after condition broken, let D occupy under a covenant that D should keep the estate in repair. L, the mortgagor, redeemed, and, for his own benefit, sued D at law in the name of M, but against the will of M (though offering him an indemnity), for a breach of this covenant happening before the redemption. Held, that the action would not lie, and it was dismissed upon motion. Seaver v. Durant.

86. A mortgagee in possession is not required, in a suit against a stranger for an injury to his possession, to make proof of the mortgage debt. Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 100.

III. ASSIGNMENT; SUBROGATION; CONTRIBUTION.

87. Assignment. The assignment of a mortgage written on the back of the mortgage and executed as a deed of lands, quitting and assigning all the right, title and interest of the mortgagee "in or to the within mortgage deed," was held to convey such title as to sustain ejectment by the assignee. Stewart v. Thompson, 3 Vt. 255.

88. The law does not require the assignment of a mortgage to be recorded, as essential to its validity, nor is this necessary for the purposes of a foreclosure; and as the mortgage debt may be assigned by parol, it follows that the mortgage security, which is a mere incident of the debt, may be transferred in the same way. Pratt v. Bank of Bennington, 10 Vt. 293. 21 Vt. 338. 22 Vt. 139.

89. W mortgaged lands to H, who assigned the notes and mortgage to the orator. This assignment was not recorded. Afterwards, W, by general deed of quit-claim, released to H, and H mortgaged to the defendants, who had no notice of the assignment. On a bill to foreclose;—Held, that the orator's preference was not lost, and that he was entitled to a decree of foreclosure. Pratt v. Bank of Bennington.

90. The assignment of a debt secured by mortgage carries with it the security as an incident, unless there be an agreement to the contrary; and this, although the mortgage be not assigned or delivered, and though the assignee may not know of the existence of the security. Keyes v. Wood, 21 Vt. 331.

91. H and T being joint mortgagees in a mortgage given to secure a debt due them jointly, T, by deed, assigned his moiety in the mortgaged premises to K. The mortgagor paid H his half of the mortgage debt, whereupon H delivered the mortgage notes to K. Afterwards, the mortgagor mortgaged the same lands to S who went into possession, H having in the meantime deceased. On a bill by K against the mortgagor and S, to foreclose for a moiety of the original mortgage debt;—Held, (1), that the conveyance by T to the orator entitled him to hold the premises until the mortgage debt was paid; (2), that the delivery of the mortgage notes by H to the orator was sufficient without a formal assignment or indorsement; (3), that the bill was properly brought by the orator alone, and that he was entitled to a decree of foreclosure for a moiety of the original mortgage debt, on production of the notes. King v. Harrington, 2 Aik. 33.

92. Upon the death of a mortgagee before foreclosure, his legal title and interest in the mortgaged premises vests in his executor or administrator, to be administered as assets of the estate; and this legal title the executor or administrator may convey by deed, so as to give his grantee all the rights of the mortgagee. Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165. Collamer v. Langdon, 29 Vt. 32.

93. Where an estate was settled and divided by amicable arrangement of the heirs, assigning to one of them a note and mortgage, part of the estate, without the appointment of an administrator or any proceedings in the probate court, a foreclosure was allowed in favor of such heir, no creditor of the estate objecting, upon the orator's filing an indemnity to protect the defendant against being again called upon for payment. Babbitt v. Bowen, 32 Vt. 437.

94. The debt in several notes. Where all the notes secured by a mortgage are assigned, the mortgage passes. Where a part are assigned and a part retained, it is entirely a matter of contract between the mortgagee and the assignee, how and for whose benefit the mortgage shall be held; it is matter of intention and mutual understanding. Langdon v. Keith, 9 Vt. 299. 10 Vt. 293. 21 Vt. 338. Ib. 554. Wright v. Parker, 2 Aik. 212.

95. Where a mortgage was given to secure several notes, and all the notes were assigned except one, and the whole mortgage was assigned;—Held, that, as between the mortgagee and the assignee, the assignee had acquired the whole interest in the mortgage, yet, as against the mortgagor, the mortgage remained to the mortgagee as a security for the note not assigned. Langdon v. Keith.

96. If part of a debt, as one or more of several notes secured by the same mortgage, be assigned, a pro rata portion of the mortgage security accompanies the part of the debt assigned, in the absence of a contract to the contrary. Keyes v. Wood, 21 Vt. 331. 23 Vt. 662.

97. And this, although the residue of the debt, together with the mortgage, be afterwards assigned to another party. Belding v. Manly, 21 Vt. 550.

98. A held certain notes, payable at different dates and secured by the same mortgage, which he had received of B and held as collateral security for B's indebtedness to him. B afterwards procured A to transfer to C, to whom B was indebted, a portion of these notes, which C was to hold as collateral security for B's indebtedness to him, and B agreed with C that the mortgage should stand as a prior security to him for the notes so assigned; and B returned to A other securities of value equal to the notes so assigned. On a petition by A to foreclose;—Held, that C acquired a priority in the mortgage under his agreement with B; that B was the general owner of the notes and acted for himself and with reference to his own interest, as he properly might, in the making of that contract; and that he was agent for A only so far as to protect and keep good the collateral security to A. George v. Woodward, 40 Vt. 672.

99. After foreclosure by the assignee of part of certain mortgage notes, and no redemption, partition of the lands between him and the assignee of the other notes was ordered,—the several assignments having transferred to each a proportionate part of the mortgage security. Wright v. Parker, 2 Aik. 212.

100. Subrogation. Where several persons are interested in land incumbered by a mortgage, whether as owners of distinct parcels or as tenants in common of the whole, each is at liberty to redeem for the protection of his own interest, and when he so redeems he becomes substituted in equity, in the place of the mortgagee, and is entitled to hold the land, as if the mortgage existed, until the others pay him their shares of the incumbrance—their shares being the pro rata value of their respective interests—and may enforce this right by bill to foreclose. Hubbard v. Ascutney Mill Co., 20 Vt. 402.

101. Payment of money due upon a mortgage may operate to cancel it, or in the nature of an assignment of it, as may best subserve the purposes of justice, and the just and true interest of the parties. The purpose, however, must be innocent, and injurious to no one. Bullard v. Leach, 27 Vt. 491. 44 Vt. 644.

102. A subsequent incumbrancer, or one who has acquired a legal or equitable interest in mortgaged premises, who so stands in reference to the property that it becomes his interest and duty to pay off the prior incumbrance for his own protection, may do so, and will then be treated as the equitable assignee of such prior mortgage, and may keep it on foot as against intervening incumbrancers. Aliter, as to a volunteer. Downer v. Wilson, 23 Vt. 1.

103. Where one advanced money to a mortgagor to redeem a first mortgage, and took a usurious note additional, or as bonus, and a mortgage on the same premises to secure such note;—Held, that as to intermediate incumbrancers, he was a volunteer, and could not be subrogated to the rights of the first incumbrancer. Ib.

104. Where the holder of an estate pays off a previous existing mortgage, a payment necessary to be made to save his estate, no assignment to him of the mortgage, nor proof of an intention on his part to keep it alive, is necessary to give him the benefit of it—his payment of it, together with its relation to his estate, being in aid of his title, to strengthen and uphold it,—except in certain exceptional cases. Walker v. King, 44 Vt. 601. S. C. 45 Vt. 525.

105. The petitioner took a mortgage of the equity of redemption of redeeming three prior mortgages—that is, a fourth mortgage. The defendants, F and M, purchased the mortgagor's final equity and paid therefor, as agreed, the first two mortgages and a certain agreed sum on the third, and thereupon went into possession, and they, and the other defendants, their assigns, ever after occupied the premises, taking the rents and profits to themselves. On this petition, both to redeem and to foreclose;—Held, (1), that the defendants were not liable to account for the rents and profits; (2), that the defendants, to the extent of their payments of the previous mortgages, were subrogated to the rights of those mortgages, and those mortgages constituted part of their title; (3), that they were entitled to interest on such mortgages, to be computed according to the terms thereof (annual interest), except as to those which had been merged in a decree; and on those, simple running interest;—and a decree of foreclosure was ordered for the petitioner upon redemption of the previous mortgages. Ib.

106. A court of chancery will uphold a mortgage for the benefit of a party who has advanced money upon it, when equity requires it; and it is not indispensable that there should be an agreement that the mortgage should be kept on foot. This is often done when there is no agreement at all to that effect, but where the money paid was intended as a payment and satisfaction of the mortgage. But a court of equity will not convert a payment into a purchase, in favor of a party advancing the money, when there is a superior countervailing equity

107. A mortgagee cannot be compelled to rely upon a portion of the mortgaged premises, though adequate security. To do this, would be to make contracts for the parties, not to enforce them. But where one's right arises out of the chancery principle of subrogation, this not being by force of the contract of mortgage, his right by substitution is not necessarily co-extensive with that of the mortgagee, but may be limited, as may be equitable. Bailey v. Warner, 28 Vt. 87.

108. A sold to B a piece of land subject to an outstanding mortgage, but, by mutual mistake, his deed described only an adjoining piece to which he had no title. B took possession of the parcel so sold and intended to be conveyed. The oratrix, a creditor of B, attached all B's real estate in the town, and levied her execution upon an undivided part of B's equity of redemption in the parcel so occupied by B. Before this, C had paid for B the outstanding mortgage, and, between the attachment and the levy, by agreement with B, took for his security a quit-claim deed from A of the premises, by a true description. Held, that the attachment and levy gave the oratrix an equitable title according to her levy; that the attachment was such constructive notice of her lien, that C could not thereafter defeat it by getting in the legal title, unless having a superior equity; that his equity, arising by way of subrogation under the mortgage, was not necessarily co-extensive with the rights of the mortgagee; and it appearing that the remainder of the premises, not levied upon, was sufficient to pay C's claim, a decree was ordered that B and C should convey to the oratrix the part embraced in her levy. Ib.

109. Where one, pending the running of a decree of foreclosure, set off upon execution the land mortgaged;—Held, that he incurred thereby no duty to the mortgagor to redeem, and that he might properly purchase in the right of the mortgagee and take a conveyance thereof, and thus, after the expiration of the decree without redemption by the mortgagor, he would become vested with the absolute title. Tichout v. Harmon, 2 Aik. 37.

110. A creditor levied his execution upon his debtor's equity of redemption in land, and, to protect the same, paid off a decree of foreclosure of the mortgage, about to expire. To do this, he borrowed money of the orator and gave a mortgage therefor upon the same land. The levy proved defective, and the debtor conveyed to the defendant. Held, that the money paid to discharge the first mortgage was a charge upon the land in the hands of the defendant. Payne v. Hathaway, 3 Vt. 212. 20 Vt. 388.

111. Held, also, that neither the original creditor, nor debtor, was a necessary party to the bill. Id.

112. One who levies upon an equity of redemption and pays off the mortgages to which his levy is subject, becomes thereby in equity the assignee of them, and is entitled to all the rights of the mortgagees in the premises, and to set up any defense to a prior mortgage which they might have. Warren v. Warren, 80 Vt. 580.

113. Where the defendant held the title of a levying creditor upon an undivided part of an equity of redemption, and had paid the mortgage after it had become due, and the plaintiff made a levy, subsequent to that of the defendant, upon an undivided part of the same equity;—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain ejectment to be let into possession as a co-tenant, since the defendant by paying the mortgage stood upon the prior and paramount right of the mortgagee to possession. Benton v. McFarland, 26 Vt. 610.

114. Where the orator, by levy of execution, had become owner of part of an equity of redemption in lands, and as such had redeemed a previous decree of foreclosure;—Held, that he should be treated as assignee of the mortgage, although the payment of the money, received by the clerk, was certified on the record to be "a full discharge of the decree;" and that he could enforce contribution from the other part owners of the equity, according to their interests. Wheeler v. Willard, 44 Vt. 640.

115. B gave A a mortgage of lands of which S held a prior mortgage. Afterwards, B proposed to A that he should take the lands at an appraisal to apply upon his mortgage. To this A assented, provided the lands should be released from the mortgage to S. B then agreed with S to substitute other security for the mortgage to him, and thereupon S sent a letter to A, in which he agreed to discharge all his claims on the lands, in case B should make arrangements with A, and B should desire it. Relying upon this letter, A agreed with B to have the lands appraised and to receive them upon his debt, and notice of this arrangement was given to S. The lands were afterwards appraised, and B conveyed them to A, and A surrendered to him the mortgage notes. On a bill to foreclose brought by S against B and A;—Held, that the mortgage of S should be postponed to the title of A, although B had not fully performed his agreement with S. Simonds v. Brown, 18 Vt. 281.

116. A private corporation gave its note secured by mortgage, on which note C and several others were sureties. Afterwards C became owner of the entire capital stock, and, in consideration of the assignment to him by the other sureties of their stock, agreed with them to pay all debts of the corporation on which they were sureties, and save them harmless. F afterwards became surety for C to the mortgagee and paid the mortgage debt, and the mortgagor assigned the mortgage to F, and F to the orator. On a bill to foreclose;—Held, that C remained surety for the corporation, notwithstanding his said agreement with the other sureties, and that F by his payment for C became subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, as C would have been if the payment had been made by him; and that the orator could enforce the mortgage both against the corporation, and a creditor of the corporation who had attached the estate after the execution of the mortgage. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274. 44 Vt. 610.

117. Certain land was subject to a mortgage, then to an attachment lien, and then to another mortgage. The first mortgagee brought his bill to foreclose, making the mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagee defendants, and obtained his decree. The attaching creditor then obtained his judgment and levied his execution on the land, subject to the first mortgage. The second mortgagee duly made redemption of the decree of foreclosure. Held, that the second mortgagee became thereby entitled to be subrogated to all the equitable rights of the first mortgagee, and to hold the land as his security for reimbursement of the redemption money paid, as against the attaching creditor, and a decree of foreclosure was granted him accordingly. Downer v. Fox, 20 Vt. 388.

118. An attachment of land creates a specific lien, and gives the attaching creditor a right to redeem from a previous incumbrance, even before he has obtained judgment. Hence, his payment of a previous mortgage is not regarded as a voluntary payment in extinguishment of the mortgage, but is the exercise of a legal right, and keeps such mortgage alive as against the mortgagor and all incumbrancers subsequent to the attachment, although he may satisfy his judgment upon other than the attached property. Chandler v. Dyer, 87 Vt. 345.

119. C attached lands subject to a mortgage to D. D then took a second mortgage of the same lands, and afterwards foreclosed each mortgage by separate bills. Before the first decree became absolute, C redeemed it by depositing the amount with the clerk of the court, which D received and retained. The second decree became absolute without redemption, and D took possession under it. C was not made a party to either bill of foreclosure. He did not obtain judgment in his attachment suit until after such second decree had run, and then levied his execution upon other property of his debtor. In a bill by C against D, praying that he pay the amount paid by C to redeem the first mortgage, or be foreclosed;—Held, that he was entitled to the relief claimed. Ib.

120. The defendant, while a married woman, bought a farm for $700, and paid towards it $500, and she and her husband mortgaged back the farm to secure her and her husband's note for the balance, $200. She afterwards through a trustee conveyed an undivided interest in the farm to her husband, and he agreed to pay the mortgage. The mortgage was foreclosed, and during the running of the decree they were divorced, and she, afterwards, paid towards redeeming the decree such proportional part as her interest in the land bore to the whole, and the balance of the decree was paid by the orators, creditors of the husband, who had levied their executions on his equity of redemption. These levies turned out to be defective and void. The defendant afterwards got judgment against her former husband, and set off on her execution his interest in the land, disregarding the other levies. In a bill brought by such other creditors to compel the defendant to repay the sums paid by them in redemption of the mortgage, they were found to be chargeable with notice of the arrangement between her and her former husband, and that he was to pay the mortgage. Held, that her equity, by subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee, was superior to theirs as to the sum advanced by her, and that she had acquired the legal right by her levy; and the bill was dismissed. Stevens v. Goodenough, 26 Vt. 676.

121. The defendant, a widow, had a homestead right which had passed to her by the decease of her husband, and had been set out by the probate court, and which was covered by two mortgages executed in the lifetime of her husband. The first mortgagee had waived payment of his mortgage for the benefit of the defendant, who was his mother, and had discharged his mortgage. Held, that the second mortgagee was not entitled to a decree of foreclosure without first paying the defendant the amount of the first mortgage. Spaulding v. Crane, 46 Vt. 292.

122. Contribution. Where a third person became interested through necessity, or from motives other than voluntary speculation, in a portion of lands mortgaged, he was allowed his choice, whether to pay the whole mortgage debt and take an assignment of the whole mortgage, or to have the mortgage debt apportioned between the two parcels according to their value, and to redeem his parcel by paying according to the apportionment. Chittenden v. Barney, 1 Vt. 28. (Limited, or overruled, in Gates v. Adams, 24 Vt. 70. Lyman v. Lyman, 32 Vt. 79.

123. Where the orator, in order to free his land of an existing incumbrance which covered also the land of the defendant, was compelled to pay such incumbrance, the court decreed contribution from the defendant proportioned to the relative value of the respective parcels. Lyman v. Little, 15 Vt. 576. Payne v. Hathaway, 3 Vt. 212.

124. Where two or more estates are subject to the same mortgage, the general rule of equity, as to contribution, is, that all the estates concerned, whether defined by quantity of interest and duration, or by extent of territory, shall contribute according to their relative values at the time the contribution becomes obligatory, which is when the debt falls due;—for, until then there is no power to compel payment, or contribution. Danforth v. Smith, 28 Vt. 247.

125. The orator having a mortgage of one parcel of land, afterwards took of the debtor a mortgage of another parcel to secure the same debt, and afterwards caused to be entered on the margin of the record of the first mortgage, under his hand and seal, the following: "This mortgage is discharged, a second mortgage having been given of other lands to secure the same debt." The lands embraced in the second mortgage had, before such entry on the record, been conveyed by the mortgagor in parcels to sundry persons, defendants. Upon a bill to foreclose the second mortgage;—Held, that, prima facie, the orator had the right to go against either piece of land for his debt, and if the defendants would compel him to go altogether against the other, they must show such a state of the title as would enable the orator to get his pay by so doing; or else, charge him with the release under such a state of facts and knowledge, as to make it an express fraud upon the defendants;—and, the answer lacking such allegations, a decree of foreclosure was ordered. Gates v. Adams, 24 Vt. 70.

126. A sale of mortgaged premises, under our practice, is never decreed. All, then, which could be consistent with the rights of the mortgagee, where the mortgaged estate has been conveyed away in parcels, is to apportion the mortgage upon the parcels according to value, and first foreclose the mortgage, then give a time for the owner of each parcel to redeem his portion, or be foreclosed; and if both or neither redeem, that will end it. If one redeems his portion, and the other not, then the one redeeming his own must also redeem the other, or forfeit the whole estate; and if he does redeem the whole, then he is to be allowed to take the whole. Redfield, J. Ib.

127. Such apportionment cannot be made compulsory upon the first incumbrancer of the whole estate, but the subsequent purchasers may redeem the whole and compel contribution among themselves. Redfield, C. J., in Lyman

v. Lyman, 82 Vt. 79; and see Bailey v. Warner, 29 Vt. 87.

128. Rule of contribution. Where lands subject to a common burden, as a mortgage, are sold in separate parcels to different purchasers, and the deeds are duly recorded, or actual notice is had of the state of the title and of the subsisting equities, the several purchasers, as between themselves, are charged and must contribute to the common burden in the inverse order of the time of their acquiring title. Lyman v. Lyman. Root v. Collins, 84 Vt. 178.

129. Instances. G mortgaged land to E, and afterwards conveyed a part thereof to L, with full covenants, and after that mortgaged the remainder to B. Each of these conveyances was recorded before the execution of the one next following. Afterwards, E, knowing of the mortgage to B, released from his own mortgage the part conveyed to L. On a bill of foreclosure by E against G and B;—Held, that the charge rested primarily upon the part conveyed to B, and that he was not entitled to a deduction from E's mortgage in proportion to the value of the part released, as compared with that of the whole land included in the mortgage. Lyman v. Lyman.

130. A parol sale of a part of land mortgaged, followed by possession and improvements on the same by the purchaser, was held sufficient, as between the purchaser and a subsequent grantee of another parcel of the mortgaged land who, at the time of his purchase, had actual notice of the previous parol sale, to throw the burden of the mortgage upon the parcel last conveyed; and such notice to the party for whose benefit the deed of the second parcel was given, though made to another person, but in fact in trust, was held sufficient. Root v. Collins, 84 Vt. 178.

131. Tenant for life—Reversioner. As to a mortgaged estate, the general rule is, that the tenant for life is holden in equity to pay the interest accruing during his enjoyment of the estate, and that the reversioner is holden to pay the principal. Doane v. Doane, 46 Vt. 485.

IV. REMEDY AT LAW.

132. Ejectment. The prohibition in the probate act (Slade's Stat., c. 44, s. 58), of any action against an executor, &c., until the expiration of the time allowed for payment of debts, &c., does not apply to ejectment upon a mortgage, or bill to foreclose. Bradley v. Norris, 8 Vt. 369.

133. A bill in chancery by a mortgagor does not lie to enjoin an action of ejectment brought upon the mortgage, where the bill is not brought for discovery and denies any breach of the condition of the mortgage;—his defense at law, in such case, being full, clear and adequate, and the jurisdiction of the law court having first attached. Henry v. Tupper, 27 Vt. 518.

134. In order to sustain ejectment upon a mortgage given to secure a promissory note, the plaintiff must produce the note, in order to prove the existence of the debt. Edgell v. Stanford, 8 Vt. 202. 5 Vt. 253. (Royce, J., dissenting.)

135. But not, if the equity of redemption has been conveyed in satisfaction of the note. Marshall v. Wood, 5 Vt. 250.

136. In ejectment upon a mortgage, where the note produced as the mortgage note varied from that described in the mortgage;—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that the note produced was the one intended by the description in the mortgage, and that the variance occurred through mistake;—that the plaintiff's remedy was in chancery. Edgell v. Stanford, 8 Vt. 202. 7 Vt. 502. 13 Vt. 495.

137. Effect of payment. Ejectment by mortgagee, commenced after a decree of foreclosure, is defeated by the mortgagor's paying the amount of the decree, which destroys the title of the mortgagee. Burton v. Austin, 4 Vt. 105. 18 Vt. 149. (Changed by G. S. c. 40, s. 4.)

138. But in such case, if the decree be not redeemed, the plaintiff in ejectment may recover nominal damages and costs, although he has entered into possession under the decree, and although the premises are worth the amount of such decree at the time it became absolute. Barnes v. Beach, 18 Vt. 146.

139. To an action of ejectment upon a mortgage, the defendant pleaded in bar payment of part of the debt, and an agreement to postpone payment of the balance for one year. Held ill, for (1) the agreement was without consideration; (2), if otherwise, as an agreement not to sue for a given time, it would be no bar; and (3), if this, possibly, amounted to a parol lease for a year, it should have been so pleaded. Mason v. Peters, 4 Vt. 101.

140. — of tender. A tender of the sum due upon a mortgage defeats an action of ejectment upon the mortgage; and a tender made at any time after suit commenced, with all the costs which had then accrued, has the same effect to defeat the action. McDaniels v. Reed, 17 Vt. 674. Downer v. Bowman, 17 Vt. 417. Powers v. Powers, 11 Vt. 262. 16 Vt. 148.

141. The same doctrine was applied to a decree of lands as alimony, but conditioned that such assignment should be void upon the payment of a certain sum. Powers v. Powers.

142. In such case, the money tendered need not be brought into court. It is enough that the defendant have it ready, if called for. McDaniels v. Reed, 17 Vt. 674.

143. In ejectment based upon several mortgages, each describing a distinct parcel of land and each given to secure a distinct and particular debt, which mortgages had come to the plaintiff by assignment;—Held, that a tender, during the pendency of the suit, of the debt due upon part of the mortgages, and the costs, defeated the action as to the lands embraced in those mortgages. Id.

144. Rents and profits. Where a second mortgagee, or a creditor who has levied upon the equity of redemption, brings ejectment against the mortgagor after judgment in ejectment by a former mortgagee, and while the time given therein for redemption is running, he cannot recover the rents and profits, for they belong to the former mortgagee, but he may recover nominal damages. Collins v. Gibson, 5 Vt. 248.

145. A second or later mortgagee may maintain ejectment against the mortgagor, or any one in possession claiming title under him, and may, by way of damages, recover rents and profits from the time of notice given, or suit brought, unless the previous mortgagee has brought suit, or given notice to pay the rents to him. Wires v. Nelson, 26 Vt. 18, explaining Collins v. Gibson.

146. Redemption. The statute allowing the redemption of lands after judgment in an action of ejectment (G. S. c. 40, s. 7), applies only to the case of a technical mortgage, either by way of a conveyance to be void on condition, or with defeasance under seal. Miller v. Hamblet, 11 Vt. 499. Olcott v. Dunklee, 16 Vt. 478. Harrington v. Donaldson, 31 Vt. 585.

147. The defendant conveyed lands to the plaintiff by deed, with a condition of defeasance upon the payment of certain notes to the plaintiff, and that he "should also put a good cellar under the frame on said premises, and finish off the house in good style, and paint it white within one year," &c. In ejectment, the plaintiff proved a breach of this last condition, and recovered judgment. On motion by the defendant to redeem under G. S. c. 40, ss. 7-11;—Held, that the statute did not apply, and that the defendant's only relief was in a court of equity. Harrington v. Donaldson.

148. The plaintiff in ejectment held two mortgages of the premises, one of which was due when the suit was brought, and the other not, but it became due before the judgment. On the defendant's motion, after judgment, to redeem;—Held, that in ascertaining the sum due in equity, the sum due on the first mortgage only should be computed, and that the defendant was entitled to redeem on payment of that sum. Lamson v. Sutherland, 13 Vt. 309.

149. Execution on judgment. In ejectment upon a mortgage, where the defendant on motion gets time to redeem and fails to redeem, the plaintiff is entitled, with his writ of possession, to an execution for his costs, although embraced in the decree. The day of the expiration of the time limited for redemption is the day of the rendition of final judgment, for the purposes of taking execution and charging bail upon the original writ. Emerson v. Washburn, 8 Vt. 9.

V. REMEDY IN CHANCERY.

1. Bill to foreclose;—to redeem.

150. Foreclosure. A bill to foreclose need not allege that the mortgagor had any title in the premises mortgaged. Shed v. Garfield, 5 Vt. 39.

151. The foreclosure of mortgages by petition under the act of 1852 (G. S. c. 29, s. 75), applies as well to disputable cases, as to cases not disputable. Wood v. Adams, 35 Vt. 300.

152. Where a mortgage given to secure a promissory note misdescribed the note, by mistake;—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to relief in equity, and to a decree of foreclosure against a subsequent mortgage. Porter v. Smith, 13 Vt. 492.

153. Redemption. A mortgage deed was decreed to be reformed in chancery, on bill brought by the mortgagee, so as to include some lands intended and agreed to be mortgaged, but which, by mutual mistake, were not included;—and this was done after the mortgagee had obtained a judgment in ejectment according to the mistaken description and the time given for redemption had expired, and after the mortgagee had conveyed the estate, according to such description, to a third person, but all before the mistake was discovered;—and the decree in the action of ejectment was opened, and the mortgagor, on his cross bill, was allowed to redeem the whole premises according to the reformed deed, by paying the whole mortgage debt. Blodgett v. Hobart, 18 Vt. 414.

154. A mortgagee sold at auction the mortgaged premises, and gave a warranty deed and possession, and applied the proceeds upon the mortgage debt,—all this, with the approval and concurrence of the mortgagor. The purchaser went into possession, and so held for more than 18 years, having made valuable improvements, and without any claim or dissent on the part of the mortgagor. Held, that the mortgagor could not be let in to redeem;—much less his assignee, who had taken a conveyance from him upon an agreement to pay a certain price in case a redemption was allowed, otherwise nothing;—that such bargain was unlawful, as being a species of champerty or maintenance. Wright v. Whithead, 14 Vt. 268.

155. The orator conveyed land to B, as a security, taking back a bond of defeasance. By subsequent arrangement between these parties and C, C advanced to B what was then mutually understood and estimated as the sum due to B, and thereupon the orator surrendered to B his bond, and B conveyed the premises to C; and the orator also conveyed to C, and C gave the orator a bond of defeasance conditioned for the payment of the sum so advanced for him to B—thus, in effect, creating a new mortgage to C. The sum so estimated as due to B and advanced by C was, in fact, less than the sum due and secured. On a bill against B and C to redeem;—Held, that B retained no subsisting lien for such excess, and, on the case as thus made and heard on bill and answers, the orator was allowed to redeem by paying the amount due to C. Hodgman v. Hitchcock, 15 Vt. 374.

See Coers, II.

2. Parties.

156. Upon a bill to foreclose a mortgage given to one member of a copartnership, but to secure a debt due the firm;—Held, that all the partners must be joined. Noyes v. Sawyer, 8 Vt. 160.

157. A subsequent mortgagee is a proper but not necessary party defendant to a bill to foreclose. Wood v. Beebe, 31 Vt. 495.

158. A creditor who has levied his execution upon an equity of redemption is a proper party defendant to a bill to foreclose the mortgage, although the time for redemption from the levy has not expired. Bullard v. Leach, 27 Vt. 491.

159. A creditor who has attached lands previously mortgaged is a proper defendant in a bill to foreclose the mortgage—(overruling, on this point, Nichols v. Holgate, 3 Aik. 188, and dictum in Downer v. Fox, 20 Vt. 388). If not made a party, he is not bound by the decree rendered. Chandler v. Dyer, 37 Vt. 345. (Since provided for by Stat. 1864, No. 29.)

160. To a bill by a trustee to foreclose a mortgage, the cestui que trust is a necessary party. Davis v. Hemingway, 29 Vt. 438.

161. To a bill to foreclose a mortgage given by a surety, the principal should be made a party; but where objection was not taken for this cause in the outset, and the principal was present at the accounting, the court proceeded to render a complete decree. Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 503.

162. The purchaser of land subject to a mortgage, who afterwards conveys it with warranty, is not a necessary party to a bill to foreclose the mortgage; and the bill, as to him, may be dismissed on his motion. Soule v. Albee, 31 Vt. 142.

163. A decree of foreclosure will not be opened to allow such person, not made a party, to redeem, although he conveyed with warranty against incumbrances, in ignorance of the mortgage lien. Barton v. Kingsbury, 43 Vt. 640.

164. The chancellor, in his discretion, might have allowed such person to come in and be heard in respect to the accounting; but, in a bill to foreclose, it is not necessary to make those parties who have no lien or interest in the premises. Id. Prout, J.

165. The orator bought a farm of A, and gave A a mortgage back to secure his notes given for the purchase money. He afterwards sold the farm to B, and took back a mortgage conditioned for the payment of the notes given to A, as they should fall due. B sold the farm to C, who mortgaged it back to B with like condition. C made a second mortgage to D. Upon a bill against B, C and D to compel them to pay the orator's notes to A, and to release him from liability thereon, or be foreclosed;—Held, that A was a necessary party. Morse v. Larkin, 46 Vt. 371.

166. In case of the decease of a mortgagor, his administrator is the proper party to bring a bill to redeem. Merriam v. Barton, 14 Vt. 501.

167. On a bill to redeem, a party liable to account is a proper party defendant. Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 169.

168. Where the assignee of a mortgage brings a bill to foreclose, he must see to it that the mortgagee is made a party, whenever that is necessary for his security, and cannot require the defendant to bring a cross bill for the purpose of bringing in the mortgagee. Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115.

3. The account.

169. Rents and profits. In determining the sum due upon a mortgage, where the mortgagee had been in possession, and there was no evidence as to the value of the rents and profits, the court balanced the interest by the rents. Wright v. Parker, 2 Aik. 212. Hunt v. Tyler, 2 Aik. 238.

170. In an accounting between mortgagor and mortgagee, where the latter had entered upon and occupied the premises;—Held, that he should account for rents and profits arising from improvements made by a third person, who claimed under neither, but occupied wrongfully. Merriam v. Barton, 14 Vt. 501.

171. A mortgagee in possession is bound to account only for what he receives or might receive from the mortgaged premises by the use of fair, reasonable diligence and prudence, and if he rents the premises, and the rents are lost by the failure of the tenant, without fault of the mortgagee, he is not liable to account therefor; but where the mortgagee himself occupies, and especially where the premises are a farm under cultivation, upon which labor and expenditures are to be bestowed to produce annual crops and profits, he will be charged with such sum as will be a fair rent for the premises, without regard to what he may, in fact, have realized as profits from the use. Sanders v. Wilson, 34 Vt. 318.

172. Where a mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged premises with full knowledge of the right to redeem, and there is nothing to show but that the mortgagor desires and intends to redeem, he has no right to expend the rents and profits for anything but such as are strictly necessary repairs. If he go beyond this, and make improvements, though they are such as are beneficial to the estate, and such as a judicious and prudent owner would make for the benefit of it, he will not be allowed for them. Poland, C. J. Ib.

173. In taking an account, with a mortgagee in possession, of the sum due upon the mortgage, the annual rents and profits should be applied annually, first in payment of the interest, and the balance in reduction of the principal. Gladding v. Warner, 36 Vt. 54.

174. Application of counter-claim. D, in his lifetime, gave the orator his notes and secured them by mortgage, and afterwards gave the orator other notes not secured. The orator afterwards became indebted to D, not in the way of payment upon the notes. D died insolvent, and all the notes were presented to and allowed by the commissioners, and D's claim was allowed in set-off thereto, and a general balance struck in favor of the orator, being something less than the amount of the mortgage notes. On a bill to foreclose the mortgage;—Held, that the administrator could not insist that the claim in favor of D's estate should be first applied upon the mortgage notes, but that the law would apply it first upon the notes not secured; and the orator was allowed a decree of foreclosure for the balance found by the commissioners. Putnam v. Russell, 17 Vt. 54.

175. Costs of former suit. Costs of a suit at law brought to recover a mortgage debt, but afterwards discontinued, are not to be included in a decree of foreclosure of the mortgage. Woodstock Bank v. Lamson, 36 Vt. 118.

176. Where a former decree of foreclosure has become absolute as to the mortgagor, an after decree against a subsequent mortgagee should embrace the costs in the first; for, by redeeming, he would acquire the benefit of the first decree free of redemption by the mortgagor. Ib.

177. Interest. In making up a decree of foreclosure against a subsequent mortgagee, the amount is to be ascertained by computing simply the sum due upon the mortgage; and not by taking the amount of a previous decree of foreclosure of the same mortgage, and casting interest thereon, where the defendant was not a party to that decree. This would be to charge him with interest upon interest. Ib.

4. Decree.

178. Form of decree. A sale of mortgaged premises under our practice is, never decreed. Gates v. Adams, 24 Vt. 70, 74.

179. A power of sale in a mortgage is in practice unusual, if not unknown, in this State. Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 169.

180. The ordinary time allowed for redemption from a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage, fixed at one year and one week. Langdon v. Stiles, 2 Aik. 184.

181. In behalf of an administrator, the court extended the usual period of redemption in a decree of foreclosure, by ordering payment of the mortgage money, one-half in one year, and the remaining half in two years. Austin v. Jackson, 10 Vt. 267.

182. In this State, on a bill to redeem, the course is the same as on a bill to foreclose,—that is, the decree fixes a time when the money due on the mortgage is to be paid, and, on failure, that the equity of redemption be foreclosed. Smith v. Bailey, 10 Vt. 163.

183. Effect. A decree of foreclosure is conclusive as to the amount due on the mortgage, which, of course, settles all questions as to the rents received by the mortgagee before that time. Chapman v. Smith, 9 Vt. 153.

184. The purpose and effect of a decree of foreclosure are to cut off the right of redemption, and not to settle questions of construction of the deed; it simply converts the conditional title into an absolute one, and, in other respects, leaves the rights of the parties to be determined by the deed;—unless the question of construction is made in the bill, and is explicitly adjudicated in the decree. Carpenter v. Millard, 38 Vt. 9.

185. A foreclosure does not cut off a right or easement in the mortgaged premises which a defendant, not mortgagor, had acquired before the giving of the mortgage. A foreclosure simply cuts off an equity of redemption in the thing mortgaged. Shaw v. Chamberlin, 45 Vt. 512.

186. A stranger, by the consent of a mortgagor, built a barn upon the land mortgaged, after the law day of the mortgage had expired, and during the pendency of a suit for the foreclosure of the mortgage. Held, that the title to the barn passed to the mortgagee, the premises not being redeemed; and that the builder had no right to remove the barn after the time fixed in the decree for redemption had expired. Preston v. Briggs, 16 Vt. 124.

187. A decree of foreclosure, and expiration of the time for redemption, and possession taken under the decree, operate as a purchase of the estate by the mortgagee in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, if the value of the estate be equal to the amount of the decree at the expiration of the time given for redemption; if less than that value, then in satisfaction pro tanto. Lovell v. Leland, 3 Vt. 581. 15 Vt. 118. 36 Vt. 122. Paris v. Hulett, 26 Vt. 308, overruling Strong v. Strong, 2 Aik. 873.

188. The law is the same, where the foreclosure is by an action of ejectment and motion to redeem, under the statute. Paris v. Hulett. Emerson v. Washburn, 8 Vt. 14.

189. Held otherwise, where no decree, in form, had been made and enrolled, and the mortgagee had not taken possession, nor attempted to. Austin v. Howe, 17 Vt. 654.

190. Payments—Their effect. The payment of a decree of foreclosure stays its operation, not only as against the party paying, but as to the other defendants. Wheeler v. Willard, 44 Vt. 640.

191. As to opening decree. A decree of foreclosure, whether redeemed or not, is no bar to a suit upon the mortgage securities. The sum paid on the redemption, or the land taken on the decree, only operates as a payment pro tanto. But such suit lays the foundation for opening the decree, if the mortgagor so elect. Smith v. Lamb, 1 Vt. 396.

192. Where, after foreclosure of a mortgage and possession taken under the decree, the mortgagee sues to recover the balance of the mortgage debt, this, as it seems, operates to open the foreclosure, and to give the mortgagor an election to redeem. In such case, the mortgagee should have it in his power to reconvey on receiving the whole amount of his debt. Lovell v. Leland, 3 Vt. 581.

193. But if, pending the running of the decree, the mortgagee recovers judgment for damages in ejectment and collects such damages before forfeiture under the decree, this will not open the decree without an offer to pay the balance due, nor could the money so collected be recovered back. Thomas v. Warner, 15 Vt. 110.

194. If, after a decree of foreclosure has expired, the mortgagee receives payment of part of the sum decreed, this opens the foreclosure. Converse v. Cook, 8 Vt. 164.

195. After a decree of foreclosure had expired, but after the payment of some previous instalments, the assignee of the mortgagor contracted to pay the mortgagee a sum for the land, exceeding the amount of the decree, for a deed thereof. He paid the amount of the decree, and gave his note for the balance, and took a deed. Held, there being no fraud, nor any unauthorized advantage taken of circumstances, that chancery would not relieve the assignee from payment of the note. Smalley v. Hickok, 12 Vt. 153.

196. A decree of foreclosure was opened, where the failure of the mortgagor to pay according to the decree, was in consequence of propositions of settlement and payment to be carried into effect after the expiration of the time fixed, by the decree, for payment, and the failure to perform was on the part of the mortgagee. It would be otherwise, where the failure so to perform was on the part of the mortgagor. Pierson v. Clages, 15 Vt. 93, 104. 18 Vt. 422.

197. The failure of the mortgagor to pay a second installment of a decree of foreclosure, fallen due while his bill was pending to be relieved from the forfeiture for non-payment of an earlier installment, was held to be no obstacle to opening the decree. Pierson v. Clages.

198. Where one, at the request of a mortgagor and for the purpose of giving him further time to redeem, purchased and took an assignment of a decree of foreclosure, before the time limited for redemption had expired;—Held, that this opened the decree and left the mortgagor as if no decree had been made, and that the assignee took the place of the mortgagee without foreclosure. Cooper v. Cole, 38 Vt. 185.

199. A promise made by a mortgagee, after foreclosure of his mortgage, to a subsequent mortgagee, which is relied upon by the latter, that he might redeem after the expiration of such decree, will, in equity, bind the former, or any purchaser of his mortgage and of the decree after it has expired, who has knowledge of such agreement; and will entitle such second mortgagor to redeem. Woodward v. Cowdery, 41 Vt. 496.

200. In such case, the redemption by a subsequent mortgagee of the mortgage foreclosure would open the decree as to all persons interested in the mortgaged estate, and preserve their respective rights, according to the priority of their respective equities in the premises. Id.

VI. MORTGAGE OF CHATTELS.

201. The mortgage of a personal chattel passes the general property to the mortgagee, subject to be redeemed according to the terms of the contract; and if not redeemed within the time limited, the property becomes absolute in the mortgagee. But in case of a pledge, the general property does not pass, but only a special property, or lien; and in this case, although the pledge may not be redeemed by the time limited, yet it still retains the character of a pledge. Wood v. Dudley, 8 Vt. 480.

202. By the mortgage of a chattel, the general property passes; whereas, by a pledge, only a special property passes. Possession by the pledgee is essential to a pledge; whereas, in case of a mortgage, the mortgagor may, as between the parties, retain possession. The same terms which create a pledge, if possession passes, will generally be held to create a mortgage, if possession is to be retained. Conner v. Carpenter, 28 Vt. 237.

203. The mortgagor of a personal chattel cannot sustain trover against his mortgagee for a sale of it, unless it be redeemed. Without redemption, the title of the mortgagee becomes absolute at the date of the mortgage, by relation. Wood v. Dudley, 8 Vt. 430.

204. The defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff, gave him an absolute bill of sale of certain household goods, with receipt of payment therefor, and at the same time gave the plaintiff a receipt for the same goods, to be safely kept and returned on demand after a certain date. It was further agreed by parol, that if the defendant should pay said debt by the date named in the receipt, the goods should be his, otherwise they should be the plaintiff's absolutely. Held, that this was a mortgage, and that trover lay therefor, upon demand, after the time of payment named. Gifford v. Ford, 5 Vt. 532.

205. A writing by which a chattel was expressed to be "turned out and delivered," and which conferred a power of sale to satisfy a certain demand, where the property remained in the possession of the grantor, was held not to be a pledge, but a mortgage. Atwater v. Mower, 10 Vt. 75.

206. So, where it was expressed as "turned out" as "security" for a certain debt, and it was contemplated that the possession was to remain in the grantor. Coty v. Barnes, 20 Vt. 78. Blodgett v. Blodgett, 48 Vt. 32.

207. A mortgagee or pawnee of a chattel may assign over the thing mortgaged or pawned; and the assignee will take it under all the responsibility of the original party. Russell v. Fillmore, 15 Vt. 180. Hammond v. Plimpton, 30 Vt. 333.

208. A mortgagor of personal property, after condition broken, has an equity of redemption which may be asserted, if he bring his bill to redeem within a reasonable time. A tender of the debt after default, without acceptance, does not extinguish the legal title of the mortgagee; but where, after a tender and before final hearing, the mortgagee disposed of the property, he was held to account, on a bill to redeem, for the excess of value above the debt. Blodgett v. Blodgett, 48 Vt. 32.

209. Change of possession. The doctrine that a sale of personal property unaccompanied by a change of possession is inoperative and void as against the creditors of the vendor, is applicable to a mortgage of chattels, even where it is a mortgage back of the property at the same time purchased. Tobias v. Francis, 3 Vt. 425. Woodward v. Gates, 9 Vt. 358.

210. Executed in another State. J, a resident of this State, purchased of the plaintiff in New Hampshire a horse, and gave back a mortgage of the same to secure the purchase price, and brought the horse into this State, where it was attached for his other debts. The Statute of New Hampshire required that the mortgage be recorded in the office of the clerk of the town where the mortgagor resides. It was, in fact, recorded in the town where the mortgagee (the plaintiff) resided. Held, that the statute of New Hampshire could apply only to contracts in that State, the mortgagor residing there, and that the attachment must prevail. Woodward v. Gates.

212. Our local rule of policy, requiring a change of possession of chattels sold, or mortgaged, in order to protect the property from attachment and execution for the debts of the vendor, or as against a bona fide purchaser, does not extend to a transfer made in another State where the parties to the contract resided, and where the property was located at the time of the transfer, so as to defeat a title which was perfect by the laws of that State, not only against the former owner, but against his creditors. Cobb v. Russell, 37 Vt. 337. Taylor v. Boardman, 25 Vt. 581. Jones v. Taylor, 30 Vt. 42.

213. Where certain carding machines, situate in Massachusetts, were there mortgaged, two of the three mortgagors and the mortgagee residing there, and the mortgage was assigned to the plaintiff and by him there foreclosed, so that his title by the laws of that State was absolute and valid as against creditors and purchasers of the mortgagors, without the taking of possession, and one of the mortgagors wrongfully brought the property into Vermont and here sold it to the defendant, a resident of Vermont, who purchased it bona fide and without notice of the mortgage;—Held, in an action of trover therefor, that the plaintiff's title was not defeated by want of possession, and that he was entitled to recover. Taylor v. Boardman.

214. A chattel mortgage executed in New York—both parties there residing, and the property having its visible locality there, and being valid by the laws of that State without a change of possession,—was held to prevail against an attachment in Vermont by a Vermont creditor of the mortgagor, though the property was in the mortgagor's possession when attached, and the mortgage had not been foreclosed. Jones v. Taylor, 30 Vt. 42.

215. A like decision, upon like facts, as to a chattel mortgage executed in New Hampshire, although the mortgagor, by consent of the mortgagee, brought the property into this State, and held it in his possession and use for seven months, when it was attached as his property by a Vermont creditor. Cobb v. Bunwell, 37 Vt. 337.

216. But this local rule of policy is universal, in its application in Vermont, to all personal property actually within this State, though in the hands of a third person at the time of the transfer, and though the transfer, made in another State, be valid in that State without change of possession. Rice v. Courtis, 32 Vt. 460. Martin v. Potter, 34 Vt. 87.

217. The requirement as to a change of possession is no part of the contract. Id. Cobb v. Bunwell, 37 Vt. 337.

N.

NAMES.

1. The county court ruled that the name N. B., Jr., and N. B. did not, prima facie, indicate the same person. Held erroneous, where the question of identity was not otherwise raised, nor made a point at the trial. Allen v. Ogden, 12 Vt. 9.

2. The addition of "junior" is in law no part of a man's name, but is used as merely descriptive of the person, and is assumed, applied, and discarded, at will. Kellogg, J., in Prentiss v. Blake, 34 Vt. 465. Brainard v. Stilphen, 6 Vt. 9. Keith v. Ware, Id. 680. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 89. Isaacs v. Wiley, 12 Vt. 677. Jameson v. Isaacs, 12 Vt. 611.

3. A deed from E G, of H, to E G, Jr., of H, was presumed to be from father to son. Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14.

4. An initial letter between the christian and surname is no part of the name, and the omission of it is not a misnomer or variance. Alexander v. Wilmarth, 2 Aik. 413.

5. An initial letter is not regarded as any part of a man's name; especially where one name is given in full. Walbridge v. Kibbee, 20 Vt. 543. Isaacs v. Wiley, 12 Vt. 674. Allen v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 599; and see Blood v. Crandall, 28 Vt. 396.

6. Barnabas D. Balch was sued, by that name, upon a recognizance of "Barney D. Balch." Held, that there was no variance—Barney and Barnabas being used for the same name. McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 562.

7. In an indictment for passing a counterfeit bank bill, in setting out the tenor, the name Thompson was stated as Thompson. Held to be idem sonans and no variance. State v. Wheeler, 35 Vt. 261.

8. So, as to the name Heremon for Harri-man, in an indictment for forgery. State v. Bean, 19 Vt. 530.

9. Aaron I. Boge was named as a proprietor in a town charter. In the proprietors' records, Aaron J. Boge in one instance, and Aaron Jordan Bogue in another, was named as a proprietor. No other person of the name of Boge or Bogue was named in the charter. The name of the plaintiff's ancestor was Aaron Jordan Bogue, formerly spelled by him and the family Boge, but afterwards changed by usage to Bogue. Held, that the names were prima facie identical, and that the plaintiff's ancestor was prima facie the person named in the charter. Bogue v. Bigelow, 29 Vt. 179.

10. Upon the question of the identity of a particular person with the one named in a town charter;—Held, that the fact that such person did not reside in the same place where the other proprietors are described as residing, is not legal proof of want of identity. Id.

11. Identity of name indicates identity of person—how far. Dummerston v. Jamaica, 5 Vt. 399.

12. Parties in successive deeds, constituting a chain of title, of the same name, are presumptively the same persons. So held, although the place of residence was set up differently in the two deeds, but twenty years intervened between the dates of the two deeds. Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14.

13. The grantees in a mortgage deed were described as "Morse & Houghton of Bakersfield." Held, in an action of ejectment thereon, that evidence was admissible that the plaintiffs, John Morse and Joel Houghton, had lately been in partnership at Bakersfield under the firm name of Morse & Houghton, and that the mortgage note, of the same date with the mortgage deed, was executed to them as such partners; and that, upon such proof, the grantees were sufficiently designated. Morse v. Carpenter, 19 Vt. 613.

14. A deed described the land conveyed as in "Lington" in the county of Addison. Held, that this name was so like the name Lincoln, a town in that county, and so unlike the name of any other town in the county, that there was no error in admitting the deed, in connection with other evidence showing the situation and circumstances at the time, as tending to show that the lot in question, in Lincoln, was conveyed by that deed. Armstrong v. Colby, 47 Vt. 859.

15. An action lies on a judgment in which the christian name of the defendant is not given—the identity of the party being averred. Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 802.

16. Where, in describing a person, some other than his legal name is given, it is a sufficient answer to an objection taken thereto, that he is generally known by the name given. St. Johnsbury v. Goodenough, 44 Vt. 662.

NEGLIGENCE.

1. What is. In any business involving the personal safety and lives of others, due care, reasonable diligence, is nothing less than the most watchful care and the most active diligence; anything short of this is negligence, and carelessness. Poland, C. J., in Hadley v. Cross, 34 Vt. 586.

2. One may act in good faith, and still be guilty of the grossest, the most flagrant negligence, and want of care. Redfield, C. J., in Lincoln v. Buckmaster, 32 Vt. 662.

3. Whether a question of law, or of fact. Whether a sheriff has used reasonable diligence in endeavoring to arrest a debtor upon execution, is a mixed question of law and fact. Hopkinson v. Holmes, 18 Vt. 18.

4. Whether certain facts should be considered by the jury as constituting negligence, Redfield, J., says: I am not prepared to say that it could be determined, as a question of law, that any given proposition of fact, however absurd, was incapable of proof, unless it were a simple proposition contrary to the laws of nature. Taylor v. Day, 16 Vt. 566.

5. Questions of negligence, where the law has settled no rule of diligence, can never be determined as matter of law, except where the testimony is all one way. If there is no testimony tending to show negligence, then it may be determined by the court that there was no negligence; or, if the testimony is uncontradicted and makes a clear case of negligence, it becomes matter of law only. Redfield, C. J., in Barber v. Essex, 27 Vt. 62.

6. The question of negligence may, in some cases, be taken from the jury—as, where there is no testimony tending to show it; or where a given course of conduct is admitted which results in detriment, and no excuse is given. In the latter case, the liability follows as matter of law, and there is nothing for the jury but a question of damages. Briggs v. Taylor, 28 Vt. 180.

7. Where a carriage, wagons and sleighs, not past use, were attached and allowed by the officer to remain during the winter in the open fields, wholly exposed to the weather, for which no excuse was offered except the difficulty of finding a place for them under cover;—Held, that it was error to submit to the jury the question whether the officer had exercised proper care; that they should have been instructed that the officer was liable to the owner for the damage thereby done to the property. A judge is never bound to submit to a jury questions of fact resulting uniformly and inevitably from the course of nature, as that such carriages will be injured, more or less, by exposure to the weather during the whole winter; nor to submit to a jury the propriety of such a course, when it is perfectly notorious that all prudent men conduct their own affairs differently. This uniformity of the course of nature, or the conduct of business, becomes a rule of law. Id.

8. The question of negligence is not always a matter of law where there is no conflict in the testimony as to the particular facts. If it still rests upon discretion, experience and judgment to determine whether the acts complained of were a departure from the rules and usages which prudent and careful men have established in the conduct of similar business, under similar circumstances, it is a question of fact for the jury—as, whether it was negligence for a peddler to leave his horse unhitched in the highway under given circumstances. Vinton v. Schwab, 32 Vt. 612.

9. The only case in this State where the court have taken it upon them to decide that a particular course of conduct was, or was not, according to the requirements of common prudence, is the case of Briggs v. Taylor, 28 Vt. 180. Poland, C. J., in Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 510.

HIGHWAYS, 164 et seq. 208.

10. The court refused to instruct the jury that a certain course of conduct of the plaintiff in driving upon a highway was, as matter of law, negligence, Held, no error. Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95.

11. Plaintiff and defendant were farmers. Plaintiff went to defendant late in the evening to buy six bushels of oats. Defendant had no oats which he wished to sell, but, yielding to the plaintiff's importunity and necessities, consented to sell the oats. Defendant kept his granary constantly locked. He went some distance and got the key and went with the plaintiff to the oats lying in bulk on the open floor above. He stepped back for his measure, and, while thus absent, the plaintiff walked across the floor in another direction, in the dark, and fell through an aperture in the floor, and received a severe injury. On these facts found by a referee;—Held, that the defendant was not liable. Pierce v. Whitcomb, 48 Vt. 127.

12. Contributory negligence. The question of contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury, and not of law for the court. Allen v. Hancock, 16 Vt. 230. Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 470. Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 501.

13. In case for negligence, judgment was reversed for the refusal of the court, upon request, to charge (at least) that if the injury would not have happened but for want of ordinary care and diligence in the plaintiff, the jury must find for the defendant. Washburn v. Tracy, 2 D. Chip. 123.

14. If an injury is in whole or in part owing to the plaintiff's want of ordinary care or prudence, he cannot recover. Briggs v. Guilford, 8 Vt. 264. 24 Vt. 496. 27 Vt. 466.

15. In all cases where a party claims to have suffered damage by the carelessness or negligence of another, it is a rule nearly if not entirely universal, that if the negligence or carelessness of the person injured contributed in any material degree to the production of the injury complained of, he cannot recover,—as, in actions against towns for damages sustained through the insufficiencies of highways. Poland, C. J., in Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 507.

16. In an action for negligence, where the evidence tended to show that the plaintiff exercised some control over the manner of doing the act complained of as negligently done;—Held to be error, to submit the case to the jury simply upon the negligence of the defendant, without charging as to the legal effect of the plaintiff's negligence as contributory. Willard v. Pinard, 44 Vt. 34.

17. Terms—"Ordinary care," &c. In an action against a town for an injury received by the breaking down of a bridge, the defendants requested the court to charge that the plaintiff's conduct in driving upon the bridge, under the circumstances, must have been that of a prudent and careful man to entitle him to recover, and that if he had reasonable ground to apprehend that the bridge was unsafe for such a team and load, the driving upon the bridge with such a team and load was such an act of imprudence and want of care as to prevent a recovery. The court declined so to instruct the jury, but charged that if the plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care and prudence in attempting to cross the bridge, and this contributed to the injury, he could not recover; but that he had a right to presume the bridge safe for a proper load, and was not bound to examine it before attempting to cross it, unless he had been informed that it was unsafe, or had reason to distrust or suspect its safety. Held, that the defendants were entitled to a charge in the terms of their request, and that the omission so to charge was error. (Comments on the terms "ordinary care and prudence," as being liable to misconstruction.) Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 591. These terms are calculated to mislead juries. Briggs v. Taylor, 28 Vt. 184.

18. Proximate—Remote. In cases of injuries occurring through the mutual negligence of the parties, if the negligence of the plaintiff was the proximate cause, i. e., occurring at the time, and that of the defendant was the remote cause, i. e., consisting of other matter than what occurred at the time of the injury, the plaintiff cannot recover. So, if the negligence of each was the proximate cause, or of each was the remote cause, both being of the same character and degree, there can be no recovery. But if the negligence of the defendant be proximate and that of the plaintiff remote, he may recover, although not wholly without fault himself, on the ground that the defendant was bound to exercise reasonable care to avoid the injury, though the plaintiff had been negligent in exposing himself to it. Isham, J., in Trow v. Vt. Central R. Co., 24 Vt. 487. 27 Vt. 458; and see Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213.

19. Rule as to children, idiots, &c. In an action by a child of four years old for an injury received by being run over in the highway, through the defendant's negligent driving of his team, the court charged that in determining the amount of care and prudence to be required of the plaintiff, the jury need not measure it by the rule that would be applicable to an adult, but might consider that he was a child, about four years of age, from whom a less degree of care and prudence might be expected. Held correct, and that all which can be required of a plaintiff in such case is care and prudence equal to his capacity. Robinson v. Cone.

20. Although a child, or idiot, or lunatic, may be in a highway through the fault or negligence of his parents or keeper, and so be improperly there, yet, if he is hurt by the negligence of the defendant, he is not precluded from his redress. If one know that such person is in the highway, or on a railway, he is bound to a proportionate degree of watchfulness, and what would be but ordinary neglect, in regard to one whom the defendant supposed to be of full age and capacity, would be gross neglect as to a child, or one known to be incapable of escaping danger. Id. 39 Vt. 459.

21. In order that the negligence of another should be imputed to the plaintiff, such relation must exist between them as to impose upon such person the duty of care towards the plaintiff, in the matter in question. Glidden v. Reading, 88 Vt. 52.

22. Surgeon—Physician. In an action against a surgeon for improperly setting and dressing the plaintiff's broken arm;—Held, that a showing on the part of the defendant that the ultimate damage or injury to the arm resulted in part from the subsequent mismanagement and negligence of those having charge of the plaintiff, did not touch the cause or right of action, but only the measure and amount of damages; that the contributory negligence, which precludes a right of recovery, is such as enters into the creation of the cause of action, and not merely supervenes upon it, by way of aggravating the damaging results. Wilmot v. Howard, 89 Vt. 447.

23. Where a surgeon, through lack of proper skill, in setting a broken limb, bandaged the limb too tightly;—Held, that an action therefor was not defeated by the fact that another surgeon, who took the case, failed, through want of proper skill, to loosen the bandages and dress the limb, although if he had so done the ultimate injury might have been prevented. Hathorn v. Richmond, 48 Vt. 557.

24. Physicians and surgeons are bound to have and exercise ordinary skill, and nothing more, unless they profess more—that is, such skill as doctors in the same general neighborhood, in the same general lines of practice, ordinarily have and exercise in like cases. Id.

NEW TRIAL.

I. UPON WHAT GROUNDS GRANTED.

1. In general.
2. Fault of, or in respect to, jury.
3. Error of court.
4. Surprise on trial.
5. Newly discovered evidence.
6. Statute provisions.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND PRACTICE.

I. UPON WHAT GROUNDS GRANTED.

1. In general.

1. On motion or petition. The court will not grant a new trial where the equity is strongly in favor of the verdict, although what was stated as the law, and on which the verdict was founded, is doubtful. Rogers v. Page, Brayt. 169.

2. The court should never grant a new trial in favor of the plaintiff in a suit upon a jail-bond, unless he failed in his former trial through some fraud of the defendant. Perkins v. Dana, 19 Vt. 589.

3. New trials will be granted in pauper cases, as in other cases, upon proper showing. Kirby v. Waterford, 14 Vt. 414.

4. As a general rule, in order to sustain a petition for a new trial, it must appear, not only that injustice has been done on the trial, but that there has been no want of diligence on the part of the petitioner; and in no case will a new trial be granted, unless there is a reasonable certainty that the subject matter on which the application is founded will, on another trial, produce a different result. Noyes v. Spaulding, 27 Vt. 420.

5. On a petition for a new trial, the apparent justice or injustice of the verdict is to be considered, and, to warrant the granting of it, it should appear that justice would be likely to be served by having the case tried again. Gilman v. Nichols, 43 Vt. 313. Beckwith v. Middlesex, 20 Vt. 593. Bullock v. Beach, 3 Vt. 73. Dodge v. Kendall, 4 Vt. 31. The court should feel assured that injustice has been done, and that a new trial would, in all probability, lead to a different result. Middletown v. Adams, 13 Vt. 286. Briggs v. Gleason, 27 Vt. 116. State v. Camp, 23 Vt. 551.

6. A new trial will not be granted on petition, to enable the party to avail himself of a defense which, though legal, is clearly inequitable, and where no injustice has been done. McConnell v. Strong, 11 Vt. 280.

7. That the amount in controversy is small, is a sufficient reason for refusing a new trial. Bullock v. Beach, 3 Vt. 73.

8. That the statute of limitations did not bar a new suit in ejectment was recognized as a reason for refusing a new trial to the plaintiff. Smith v. Hubbard, 1 Tyl. 142.

9. The refusal of the county court to grant a new trial, though not a bar conclusively, should have very considerable weight with the supreme court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, against granting a new trial for the same cause. Briggs v. Gleason, 27 Vt. 114; and see Hill v. New Haven, 87 Vt. 512.

10. A petition for a new trial is an appeal to the judicial discretion of the court, and, in the exercise of that discretion, such court is supreme, and its proceedings are not subject to be revised, or controlled by writ of error, exceptions, certiorari, or appeal, since the discretionary power of one court cannot be exercised by another. But for an error in law committed in such case, the proceedings may be revised. Houghton v. Slack, 10 Vt. 520. Chase v. Davis, 7 Vt. 476. Myers v. Brownell, 2 Aik. 407. Minkler v. Minkler, 16 Vt. 193. Wheatley v. Waldo, 36 Vt. 287. Sheldon v. Perkins, 37 Vt. 550.

11. Questions of law decided on exceptions cannot be again raised on a petition for a new trial. McConnell v. Strong, 11 Vt. 280. Beardsley v. Gordon, 8 Vt. 824.

12. On exceptions — Harmless error. Although there may have been error in the trial below, yet if from the whole case it clearly appears that on another trial the same verdict, or the same judgment, must inevitably be rendered, a new trial will not be granted. Walworth v. Readsboro, 24 Vt. 252. Brayt. 168. 1 Aik. 48. 17 Vt. 499. 19 Vt. 210.

13. If, upon the whole record, the court can see that a correct result followed and that the judgment was right, it will not be reversed for immaterial error. Farmers & Mechanics v. Flint, 17 Vt. 508. Fitch v. Peckham, 16 Vt. 150.

14. A new trial refused on exceptions, where a record, imperfect in the county court, had been perfected before hearing on the exceptions. Paine v. Webster, 1 Vt. 101. Dixon v. Parmelee, 2 Vt. 190.

2. Fault of, or in respect to, jury.

15. Qualifications. Where a juror was a freeholder when his name was put into the town jury-box, but was not a freeholder at the time of the trial;—Held, that this was not cause for setting aside the verdict, but should have been objected in challenge. Orcutt v. Carpenter, 1 Tyl. 250.

16. Under a statute, then in force, requiring that jurors should be freeholders;—Held, that want of such qualification in one of the jurors was ground for a new trial, when that fact was not known to the moving party at the trial;—that this was a mistrial. (Bennett J., dissenting.) Briggs v. Georgia, 15 Vt. 61. 30 Vt. 474. (Changed by act of Nov. 12, 1842, G. S. c. 15, s. 18.)

17. By mistake of the sheriff in the name of a juror drawn from the box, he summoned another person whose name was not in the box, but who was legally competent to act as a juror, and he was sworn and sat in the cause. This irregularity was unknown to the parties and to the court, till after the verdict had been delivered and the panel discharged, and no fraud or collusion was suggested. Held, that the verdict should not, for this cause, be set aside. Mann v. Fairlee, 44 Vt. 672.

18. Oath. The fact that a juror in a civil cause is not sworn is an irregularity which may be waived, like a known cause of challenge to a juror. The county court refused to set aside a verdict, for such cause, upon the affidavit only of one of the defendant's counsel that the fact was unknown to him. Held correct. Scott v. Moore, 41 Vt. 205.

19. After this decision of the county court, the defendant offered affidavits of the defendant and the other counsel of the defendant, that such fact was unknown to them. These the county court refused to receive. Held, that this was matter of discretion, and not subject to exceptions. Ib.

20. Expression of opinion. It is good cause for a new trial that one of the jury had, before the trial, expressed his opinion upon the merits in favor of the successful party. Deming v. Hurlbut, 2 D. Chip. 45. French v. Smith, 4 Vt. 363; and see State v. Godfrey, Brayt. 170, State v. Clark, 43 Vt. 639.

21. A new trial was refused, when the alleged reason was that a juror had, previous to the trial, formed and expressed an opinion,—there being but the oath of one witness to the fact against that of the juror, and the alleged opinion being upon a question of law;—and it appearing that the juror was not conscious of having formed or expressed any opinion. Thrall v. Lincoln, 28 Vt. 356.

22. Separation of jury. A motion for a new trial, for that the jury, after the case was submitted, separated before agreeing on their verdict, and after agreeing separated without sealing up their verdict, and returned it not sealed up, was held as addressed to the discretion of the county court, and not subject to revision. Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 584.

23. On a motion to set aside a verdict because the jury, after the charge and after they had retired for consultation and before agreeing upon their verdict, separated without an order of the court, and, without being under the charge of an officer, went to their dinners;—Held, that G. S. c. 30, s. 34, on this subject was purely directory; that this was not such an irregularity as, per se and as matter of law, avoided the verdict; but the motion was addressed to the discretion of the court that tried the cause,—the inquiry involving matters of fact as to whether the jury might have been tampered with, &c.; and that the decision was not revisable by the supreme court, no error in law being shown. Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467.

24. Verdict—Irregularity. A new trial was refused in ejectment, when the jury by mistake returned a verdict for the whole land, whereas a small part was proved to be in a third person, but the damages recovered were only nominal. Pomeroy v. Taylor, Brayt. 169.

25. It is no cause for setting aside a verdict, that, in ascertaining the damages, each juror marked a sum and the whole amount was divided by 12, when they afterwards deliberated and returned a different sum than such quotient. Cheney v. Holgate, Brayt. 171.

26. A verdict assented to in court in usual form by the jury, was refused to be set aside on the ground that the foreman had promised one of the jurors to inform the court that he did not assent to it. Id.

27. The jury had settled their minds as to the rights of the parties, but, being in doubt as to the proper mode of making a computation of what was due upon an execution, called the county clerk into the jury room, and, upon their inquiry how the computation should be made, he told them, and told correctly. Held, that this was an irregularity, but, being without the fault of the parties and no error or injury having resulted, it furnished no sufficient cause for a new trial. Dennison v. Powers, 85 Vt. 89.

28. Contrary to law. When the verdict is manifestly contrary to law, a new trial will be granted. Hall v. Downs, Brayt. 168.

29. Law or charge misunderstood. A new trial will not be granted on the ground that the jury mistook the law when both matters of law and of fact were submitted, where they applied the law correctly, if they found certain facts. Smith v. Hubbard, 1 Tyl. 142.

30. A new trial is sometimes granted when there is reason to apprehend that the jury may have mistaken the purport of the instruction, and thus have been misled in an important particular materially affecting the merits; but held otherwise, where it was merely conjectural whether there was any misapprehension in the minds of the jury, and where the matter was indifferent, or of slight importance. Sherman v. Champlain Transportation Co., 81 Vt. 162.

31. It is not the legal duty of the county court to set aside a verdict, because the jury misunderstood the charge of the court, as to damages. Wheatley v. Waldo, 36 Vt. 288.

32. Nor, because some of them were induced to agree to a verdict, through the erroneous belief that the cause was reviewable. Newton v. Booth, 13 Vt. 320.

33. Nor, because misinformed by the foreman that full costs would follow a verdict for a particular sum in damages. Cutler v. Cutler, 43 Vt. 660.

34. The setting aside of verdicts for such like causes, discountenanced. 18 Vt. 320. 36 Vt. 238. 43 Vt. 660. Sheldon v. Perkins, 37 Vt. 557.

35. Verdict against evidence. The supreme court has power, under the statute, to grant new trials of cases tried in the county court, for the cause that the verdict was contrary to and unsupported by the evidence; but this court will not set aside a verdict as being against the weight of evidence, except where it is clear that the verdict is wrong, and not warranted by any fair construction of the evidence, and where there is no room for difference of opinion, in fair judgment, as to which way the verdict should be. If there is any conflict of evidence, and any reasonable ground for doubt on the evidence which way the fact is, the verdict is conclusive. Northfield Bank v. Brown, cited in Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 512.

36. To warrant the setting aside of a verdict as against evidence or the weight of evidence, it is not sufficient that the verdict is merely against a preponderance of the testimony, but it should appear to be manifestly and palpably wrong. Weeks v. Barron, 38 Vt. 420.

37. Outside interference. Under G. S. c. 37, s. 16, providing that if "a party obtaining a verdict in his favor" shall give to a juror any victuals or drink "by way of treat," this shall be a sufficient reason to set aside the verdict;—Held, on a motion to set aside a verdict obtained by a town, (1), that the mere furnishing of food or drink to a juror, when confined within the limits of ordinary hospitality, and not furnished for any improper purpose, and where it had no improper influence upon the verdict, does not fall within the statute; (2) that merely a ratable inhabitant of the town is not such a "party;" and that the furnishing referred to must be at the expense of the town, or must be the act of some one of its authorized agents. Carlisle v. Sheldon, 38 Vt. 440.

38. The verdict of a jury may be properly set aside and a new trial granted, where, during the trial, conversations were had with and in the presence of the jury by the friends of the prevailing party, which were calculated and intended to influence them to render the verdict they did, though it is not shown that the verdict was in fact influenced thereby, and although such conversations were had without the procurement or knowledge of the prevailing party, and were listened to by the jurors without understanding that they were guilty of misconduct in so doing. McDaniels v. McDaniels, 40 Vt. 363.

39. It is not, as matter of law, necessary in such case, that the moving party should either allege in his motion, or prove, that he had not knowledge of such misconduct;—such case is distinguishable from cases where the objection to the juror is some matter that existed before the trial. Id.

40. In order to justify the granting of a new trial because a paper not used on the trial went to the jury with the other papers in the case, without design, the paper should be such as to convey some information which might, by some reasonable intentment, have influenced the verdict. Peacham v. Carter, 21 Vt. 515. Winslow v. Campbell, 46 Vt. 746.

3. Error of court.

41. It is no ground for a petition for a new trial, that the court below refused a continuance; or committed an error in law not set forth in a bill of exceptions. Durkee v. Fessenden, Brayt. 167.

42. A petition for a new trial was dismissed without hearing on the merits, where the only cause alleged was that the court were mistaken in the law. Purdy v. Walker, Brayt. 78. Such objection must be raised upon a bill of exceptions allowed. Durkee v. Fessenden. Nixon v. Phelps, 29 Vt. 188.

43. It is cause for granting a new trial that the judge at the fact term refused to allow and sign exceptions, provided the cause designated in the exceptions, if allowed and signed, would have been sufficient to induce the court to set aside the verdict. Fisk v. Steel, Brayt. 168.

44. Where a party had good reason to believe that two material witnesses would be present at the trial and he commenced the trial without moving for a continuance, and the witnesses were prevented from attending, one by being taken suddenly sick and the other by breaking his leg, a new trial was granted on terms. Barrett v. Barrett, Brayt. 170.

4. Surprise on trial.

45. New trial granted for surprise and mistake of counsel on trial. Dow v. Hinesburgh, 1 Aik. 85.

46. New trial granted for mistake, oversight, or surprise on the trial, where the real merits failed of being tried. Stanton v. Banister, 2 Vt. 464.

47. New trial granted in a criminal case, on the ground that the respondent was advised by his counsel that certain testimony against him would not be admitted, and hence he omitted to procure rebutting evidence; and that the admission of such testimony was a surprise to him and his counsel. State v. Williams, 27 Vt. 724.

48. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of surprise, because a witness was introduced directly to prove what was directly put in issue; nor because such witness was interested, where his interest appeared on the record, and no objection was taken. Dodge v. Kendall, 4 Vt. 81.

49. The surprise which affords ground for a new trial must be one which is not the petitioner's own fault. Burr v. Palmer, 23 Vt. 244.

50. Surprise of party, diligence, materiality of evidence, &c., on petition for new trial, considered. Shepherd v. Hayes, 16 Vt. 486.

51. The non-production of a witness on the final trial who had testified on a former trial, is not cause for a new trial on the ground of surprise. Id.

52. That the county court ruled the law different from what the party expected, and that such ruling was affirmed by the supreme court, can never form the basis of a petition for a new trial, on the ground of surprise. Morgan v. Houston, 25 Vt. 570; and see Pettes v. Bank of Whitehall, 17 Vt. 485.

53. As the ground of an application for a new trial, surprise is scarcely ever tenable. That a witness for the party was rejected as incompetent by reason of interest, is not a sufficient reason for a new trial, as for a surprise; nor that the county court refused, on the argument to the jury, to treat certain papers as in evidence to be commented upon, which the party supposed to be in evidence, though not formally offered and admitted. Haskins v. Smith, 17 Vt. 268.

54. It must be a strong case which would induce the court to grant a new trial on the ground of surprise on the trial below, where the party neglected, at the proper time, to move for a continuance. Bennett, J., in Briggs v. Gleason. 27 Vt. 114.

5. Newly discovered evidence.

55. General rules. Courts will not in all cases refuse a new trial, where the cause stated is the discovery of new and important evidence, although it is to a point litigated at the trial. The case, however, must be a strong one to induce the court to interfere. Hurd v. Barber, Brayt. 170. State v. Cox. Id. 171.

56. Contradictory evidence by the same witness at different trials, to a point material, is cause for a new trial, provided that fact could not be shown at the trial. Durkee v. Fessenden, Brayt. 167.

57. To entitle a party to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear that the evidence has been discovered since the trial; that no laches are imputable to him; and that it is material. Myers v. Brownell, 2 Aik. 407.

58. A petition for a new trial will not be sustained, which is founded upon facts which should have been presented to the county court as a reason for rejecting a report of referees. Fuller v. Wright, 10 Vt. 512.

59. After judgment by default in an action upon a note given for a patent right, a new trial was granted, upon terms, on the ground that further use of the machine had proved the invention to be of no value, or of much less value than represented, where this ground of defense was too little known when the action was defaulted to afford any prospect of defense. Burnham v. Brewster, 1 Vt. 87. Burnham v. Hubbard, 1 Vt. 91.

60. A petition for a new trial was refused, where a judgment in the county court had been rendered for the defendant on demurrer to a replication to a plea of the statute of limitations,—the grounds of the petition being newly discovered evidence, and a new promise to pay a part after the judgment. Ferris v. Barlow, 10 Vt. 138.

61. Cumulative evidence. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence, where it is merely cumulative, and leaves the question still doubtful, not making a clear case. Dodge v. Kendall, 4 Vt. 31. Bullock v. Beach, 8 Vt. 73.

62. Cumulative testimony, under the rule relating to new trials, is to the same fact litigated at a former trial and upon which testimony was then given. Kirby v. Waterford, 14 Vt. 414.

63. "Cumulative evidence" is additional evidence of the same kind, to the same point. Bradish v. State, 35 Vt. 452.

64. On a petition for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the court should regard the state of the case as it stood upon the evidence on the trial. If the evidence produced fairly and reasonably entitled the party to a verdict, it could hardly be said that he was lacking in reasonable diligence in not inquiring for more, though such inquiry would have resulted in his finding it, and even the very evidence newly discovered, and perhaps decisive. Gilman v. Nichols, 42 Vt. 313.

65. The rule as to cumulative evidence does not exclude evidence of the same facts testified to on the trial, if these facts are material, and would, with reasonable certainty, be controlling, if established. Id. Myers v. Brownell, 2 Aik. 407. Barker v. French, 18 Vt. 460.

66. If cumulative, it must, at least, be of such a character as, prima facie, to raise a strong probability that it will be decisive of the case. Redfield, J., in Burr v. Palmer, 23 Vt. 246.

67. Newly discovered. In trover for the conversion of certain tallow of the plaintiff sold to the defendant by one S, the main question litigated was whether S was authorized to make the sale. Verdict for the plaintiff. S was then in the State prison upon a conviction, procured by the plaintiff's testimony, for having stolen the same tallow from the plaintiff. S having served out his term and been pardoned, the defendant brought his petition for a new trial, assigning as newly discovered the testimony of S, that he had authority from the plaintiff to sell the tallow. Held, that the case was not within the recognized rules in granting new trials; that such testimony was rather new created than new discovered; that to admit it would be of bad precedent. Petition denied. Waters v. Langdon, 16 Vt. 570.

68. Where testimony, claimed to be newly discovered, was all of record in the court and might have been found on reasonable search;—Held, that to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence would be to relieve the party from the consequences of his own neglect; and the petition was denied. Morgan v. Houston, 25 Vt. 570.

69. Conclusiveness. A petition for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, was refused, because of want of due diligence, and because not conclusive, or decisive in character. Stearns v. Allen, 18 Vt. 119. Lindsey v. Danville, 45 Vt. 72.

70. A new trial will not be granted on the grounds of newly discovered evidence, where the verdict was general, so that it does not appear how the jury found the fact to which the new evidence applies. Briggs v. Gleason, 27 Vt. 114.

6. Statute provisions.

71. Chancery cause. Under the authority given to the supreme court, by statute, to grant new trials, (G. S. c. 88);—Held, that that court could not grant a new trial or rehearing of a case determined in the court of chancery. Slason v. Cannon, 19 Vt. 219.

72. Case "tried"—"determined." The statute authorizing the supreme court to grant new trials in cases "tried before any county court," (Stat. 1825 s. 17,) or "determined by such court," (G. S. c. 88, s. 2,) applies only to those cases where a trial has been had, and does not reach the case of a default. Adams v. Howard, 14 Vt. 158. S. C., 14 Vt. 560; and see Scott v. Stewart, 5 Vt. 57. Hyde v. Haskell, 10 Vt. 427. Foster v. Austin, 33 Vt. 615. Goddard v. Fullam, 38 Vt. 75; nor the case of a non-suit. Montgomery v. Vinton, 37 Vt. 514;—nor the case where the party failed by accident to enter bail for a review. Beckwith v. Middlesex, 20 Vt. 593.

73. "Fraud, accident or mistake." Where a party suffers a judgment by default before a justice through his own, or his attorney's, or any agent's forgetfulness of the day of trial, this is not such a case of being "unjustly deprived of his day in court by fraud, accident or mistake," under G. S. c. 88, s. 7, as to warrant the setting aside of the judgment on petition. Babcock v. Brown, 25 Vt. 550. Davison v. Heffron, 31 Vt. 687. Denison v. True, 22 Vt. 42.

74. Appeal refused. In a justice writ the ad damnum was laid at $10, but the copy served set it at $40. The defendant appeared and judgment passed against him, he supposing the case to be appealable. The justice refused an appeal. On the defendant's petition to the county court to set aside the judgment (G. S. c. 88, s. 7,) the court dismissed the petition. Held, (1) that the case was not appealable; (2) that the case was not one for a petition within the statute, and the court had no power independent of the statute; (8), that if decided as matter of "discretion," no exception lay; (4), and, if so decided, it was rightly decided. Downs v. Reed, 82 Vt. 785.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND PRACTICE.

75. Petition. Where a case passes to the supreme court on exceptions, a motion for a new trial will not be entertained. The cause for a new trial can be presented only by a petition, according to the statute. Minkler v. Minkler, 14 Vt. 558. Blodgett v. Roylton, 16 Vt. 497.

76. Consecutive motions and petitions for a new trial, pending at the same time, seem not to be warranted by precedent, or practice. Shepherd v. Hayes, 16 Vt. 486. So held in Mann v. Fairlee, 44 Vt. 672.

77. The supreme court has no jurisdiction to grant a new trial in the county court for matters not appearing upon the record, except upon petition under the statute, although the case in the supreme court is pending upon exceptions. So. Royalton Bank v. Colt, 87 Vt. 415.

78. Its form and verification—Affidavits. In petitions for a new trial for newly discovered evidence, the petition must set forth the history of the former trial fully enough to show the applicability and effect of the newly discovered evidence, and a statement of such newly discovered evidence. To this must be attached the affidavit of the party that the evidence is newly discovered, and also the affidavits of the witnesses from whom the new evidence is expected, of what they will testify. (Rule of 1851, 22 Vt. 670.) Bradish v. State, 85 Vt. 452. Cardell v. Lawton, 16 Vt. 606.

79. The verification of a petition for a new trial by the oath of the party really in interest was held sufficient, where the party of record, in whose name the petition was necessarily brought, was out of the State. Bradish v. State.

80. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence, simply on the oath of the party interested; the motion must be accompanied with the affidavits of the newly discovered witnesses. Webber v. Ives, 1 Tyl. 441.

81. Judge's Minutes. On the hearing of a petition for a new trial, the minutes of the judge who tried the case in the county court, or a copy of them, must be produced. Only in case they cannot be obtained will the affidavits of the attorneys as to what passed at the trial be received, instead. Durkee v. Marshall, 14 Vt. 559.

82. The judge's minutes need not be made a part of the petition. (See Rule 9, 1 Aik. 399.) Cardell v. Lawton, 16 Vt. 606. Bradish v. State, 85 Vt. 452.

83. Affidavits in defense. In petitions for new trials, and like proceedings, affidavits in defense should, in strictness, be taken upon notice; if not so done, the testimony should at least be filed a sufficient length of time to enable the opposite party to prepare to meet it before the trial. Wing v. Bates, 16 Vt. 148.

84. Citation—Recognizance. A petition to the supreme court for a new trial in the county court, with a citation annexed, is not "a writ of summons," requiring a recognizance for costs. Durkee v. Marshall, 14 Vt. 559. 27 Vt. 560.

85. Where the recognizance was defective, which was taken on a petition for a new trial, under the statute, where judgment had been rendered by a justice on default;—Held, that the petition should not for this cause be dismissed, but be retained and further security ordered,—the court distinguishing between such case and the case of original writs, where the statute prescribes the effect of an omission of a recognizance, to wit, that the writ shall abate. Houghton v. Slack, 10 Vt. 520.

86. Service. Under the statute requiring notice of the petition for a new trial to be served upon the adverse party;—Held, that service upon the party's attorney of record was sufficient, where such party resided out of the State. Wellington v. Aiken; cited in Bradish v. State, 85 Vt. 453. Mann v. Fairlee, 44 Vt. 672.

87. The proper service of a petition for a new trial in a State case, is upon the State's attorney; but service upon the attorney of record would seem to be sufficient. Bradish v. State.

88. Evidence. On petition for a new trial, the court refused to receive the affidavit of an auditor, to show what he intended by certain terms and expressions in his report made to the county court, upon which judgment had been rendered. McConnell v. Strong, 11 Vt. 280.

NOTICE.

1. What is notice, and its effect. If one has knowledge of distinct facts affecting the title of property which he is about to purchase, he is not at liberty to close his eyes and then screen himself under a plea of ignorance of other facts connected with those facts already known to him; but he is bound, in good faith, to make reasonable inquiry, and will be presumed to have done so, and will be affected with notice of all such facts as he might have learned by such inquiry. Redfield, J., in Blaisdell v. Stearns, 16 Vt. 179.

2. Whatever is sufficient to put a party upon inquiry, is sufficient to affect him with notice of all those facts which he might be presumed to have learned upon reasonable inquiry. Stafford v. Ballou, 17 Vt. 829.

3. Where one is put upon inquiry, and has the means of obtaining knowledge of all the facts, this is equivalent to notice, and he will be charged with the consequences of actual knowledge. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274. 26 Vt. 684. 22 Vt. 372.

4. Notice of an outstanding claim or defense given to a purchaser, such as to put upon him the risk of payment to the vendor, must be not only such as to alarm him and put him upon inquiry, but must be sufficient to enable him to conduct that inquiry, in the usual course of such business, to a successful termination. Adams v. Soule, 38 Vt. 588.

5. A purchaser from one having no notice affecting his title, may stand upon the title of the vendor, and such title is not affected by any notice which the purchaser may himself have. Powers v. Dennison, 30 Vt. 753.

As to Notice in particular matters, see BILLS AND NOTES; DEED; GUARANTY; MORTGAGE; NUISANCE, &c.

NUISANCE.

1. Action for, at law. An action on the case lies against one who maintains a nuisance, in favor of one who sustains special damage therefrom, though it be a public nuisance. Abbott v. Mills, 8 Vt. 521.

2. But only in case of such special damage. Hatch v. Vt. Central R. Co., 28 Vt. 142.

3. An action cannot be maintained for continuing an obstruction—as, an obstruction to a way—which was erected by the defendant's grantor, without previous notice to the defendant to remove it. Dodge v. Stacy, 39 Vt. 558. Same law as to the use of a mill-dam, or of the water thereof. Howe Scale Co. v. Terry, 47 Vt. 109. Pettibone v. Burton, 20 Vt. 302.

4. In chancery. The court of chancery has authority to grant injunctions to restrain parties from the use of their own lands and buildings for trades and purposes in themselves lawful, but necessarily so noxious, unhealthy, dangerous, or unwholesome to the occupants of neighboring buildings, as to destroy, or seriously and substantially to impair, their value for the purposes for which they were designed. Curtis v. Winslow, 38 Vt. 690.

5. An injunction against the completing and using of a horse-barn, claimed to be a nuisance to the orator's premises, was refused, although inconvenient, yet not so manifestly and seriously injurious as to come within the class of cases in which such relief is granted. Id.

6. Where the orator bought land of the defendant with notice that the defendant intended to build a horse-barn near by on his land adjoining, and the defendant afterwards erected the barn at the place designated;—Held, on a bill brought to enjoin the completion and occupation of the barn, that after the purchase, under such circumstances, the orator could not at equity abridge the exercise of the defendant's lawful right in the use of his own land. Id.

7. Indictment. In an indictment for a nuisance, it is not indispensable that it should be alleged that it was "unlawfully" maintained; the words "injuriously and wrongfully," are sufficient. State v. Vt. Central R. Co., 27 Vt. 108.

8. Upon trial of an indictment for a nuisance, the act complained of was the taking and appropriating to private use of property dedicated to the use of the public, so as wholly to exclude the public from the enjoyment of it. Held, that this was in law a nuisance, and that the law did not require this question to be submitted to the jury. State v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92. (But see State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14.)

OFFICER.

- I. APPOINTMENT; TITLE; LIABILITY.
- II. OFFICERS CONNECTED WITH SERVICE OF PROCESS.

1. Powers, duties and liabilities.
2. Fees.

- I. APPOINTMENT; TITLE; LIABILITY.

1. As to third persons. Where third persons are interested in the acts of public officers, proof that they are reputed to be such, or that they have acted as such, is sufficient without the production of evidence of their appointments; and officers duly appointed and commissioned are presumed to have taken the regular oaths. Adams v. Jackson, 2 Aik. 145. 34 Vt. 521. 36 Vt. 331, 396.

2. The doings of a militia sergeant under a writ of execution for a fine, being regular in form, were held to be sustained by proof that he was sergeant de facto, he having been duly elected and sworn, though his warrant of appointment was imperfect. Warner v. Stockwell, 9 Vt. 9.

3. All officers having general duties assigned them by statute, if shown to have acted and to have been recognized as such, are presumed to have been regularly appointed, commissioned and sworn. Panton Turnpike Co. v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 198.

4. We are not aware that any different proof of the appointment of an officer in a foreign country is required, from that at home. Proof of one exercising the office de facto is usually sufficient, in either case. Redfield, J., in Spaulding v. Vincent, 24 Vt. 501, note.

5. Where one holds office by color of title, his acts as an officer de facto are valid so far as they may affect the rights of third persons, or the public, to the same extent that they would be if he were an officer de jure. Lyndon v. Miller, 86 Vt. 329. State v. Bates, Id. 396. Adams v. Jackson, 2 Aik. 145. Taylor v. Nichols, 29 Vt. 104. McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 428. Ferris v. Smith, 24 Vt. 27. Courser v. Powers, 84 Vt. 520.

6. An action upon an officer's receipt for property attached is, prima facie, brought for the ultimate benefit of the creditor; and where the plaintiff was an officer de facto, such suit cannot be defended on the ground that he was not duly qualified, without at least showing that the suit is now prosecuted solely for his own benefit. Taylor v. Nichols.

7. Incompatible offices. Although a postmaster is disqualified by the constitution from holding the office of justice of the peace, yet, having been elected a justice, he is such officer de facto, and his acts as justice are, as respects third persons, valid; and, in a suit brought before him as justice, objection to his jurisdiction for such cause cannot be sustained. McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 428. 24 Vt. 82. 36 Vt. 329.

8. Under the constitution of this State, declaring that "no person holding any office of profit or trust under the authority of Congress shall be eligible to any appointment in the Legislature, or of holding any executive or judiciary office under this State," a postmaster is eligible to the office of justice of the peace, but he cannot hold and exercise both offices at the same time. If he accept the last he must abandon the first; otherwise, he may be removed from the State office by quo warranto, and, in a suit brought against him, could not justify his acts as justice, while he held the office of postmaster. Id.

9. The official act of a constable de facto in serving process is valid, as to the public and third persons, although he may hold another office incompatible with the first. State v. Clark, 44 Vt. 638.

10. Justifying an officer. Where an officer himself, or those under whose authority he was appointed and put in motion, are called to justify his proceedings, it is not enough that he was an officer de facto, but they must show his right to exercise the functions of the office. Cummings v. Clark, 15 Vt. 653.

11. Where a public officer is a party, and he claims or justifies by virtue of his office, he can protect himself only by showing that he is an officer de jure. Kellogg, J., in Lyndon v. Miller, 86 Vt. 331. Id. 398. Adams v. Jackson, 2 Aik. 145. McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 428. Courser v. Powers, 84 Vt. 517.

12. Official bond. The official bond of a public officer de facto, elected and acting as such—as, a first constable and collector of taxes, or a State treasurer,—is an obligatory instrument upon his sureties, although such officer neglected to take the oath of office as required by the laws and the constitution. Lyndon v. Miller, 86 Vt. 329. State v. Bates, Id. 387.

13. An official bond is commensurate with the appointment and covers that official term, and no more. State Treasurer v. Mann, 84 Vt. 871.

14. Oath. The same law as to an oath of office. Courser v. Powers, 84 Vt. 517.

15. Vacancy. The refusal in good faith, of a public officer to do a particular official act, although required by his duty, does not create a vacancy in his office; as, where a highway surveyor refused to give a receipt for a tax bill committed to him. Cummings v. Clark, 15 Vt. 653. So, where the prudential committee of a school district refused to assess a tax voted by the district. Stevens v. Kent, 26 Vt. 503.

16. Liability for error within jurisdiction. Where a mere ministerial officer acts under the authority of a court or other board or tribunal of a limited jurisdiction, if the act be beyond their jurisdiction, he is, or may be, liable in trespass. But where there is jurisdiction over the person and the subject matter, he is not liable for any irregularity or mistake in the exercise of that jurisdiction. Brown v. Mason, 40 Vt. 157.

17. No action lies for misconduct or delinquency in the performance of judicial duties. Although the officer may not in strictness be a judge, still, if his powers are discretionary and in their nature judicial, and he acts within the scope of his legitimate authority, he is not responsible for any error of judgment, while acting in good faith with reasonable diligence. Fuller v. Gould, 20 Vt. 643. Stearns v. Miller, 25 Vt. 20. Davis v. Strong, 31 Vt. 333. Universalist Society v. Leach, 85 Vt. 108. Mower v. Allen, 1 D. Chp. 381. Warner v. Stockwell, 9 Vt. 9.

II. OFFICERS CONNECTED WITH SERVICE OF PROCESS.

1. Powers, Duties and Liabilities.

18. Agent of creditor. Dictum—An officer in making an attachment is the agent and servant of the creditor. Felker v. Kimerson, 17 Vt. 101; but, held, that he is not, by receipt of the writ for service, made agent to receive payment of the demand. If paid, he holds the money as agent of the debtor until paid over. Wainwright v. Webster, 11 Vt. 576.

19. Set-off of executions. An officer is empowered to set off one execution against another between the same parties, where both are in his hands at the same time. Culver v. Pearl, 1 Tyl. 12. But he is not compelled to do so, though so requested by one of the parties. Anon, Brayt. 118. See infra.

20. An officer cannot apply the money collected by him upon an execution, in satisfaction of an execution against the creditor in the first. Prentiss v. Bliss, 4 Vt. 513.

21. Regarding equities. Officers are not bound to regard the equities subsisting between the debtors in an execution, or between the debtors and their other creditors; nor is he liable to a co-obligor or surety for any default in enforcing an execution against the principal debtor. Rutland v. Paige, 24 Vt. 181. Warren v. Edgerton, 23 Vt. 199.

22. Money collected on execution. The cause of action against an officer for not paying over money collected on execution does not accrue until demand made. Hutchinson v. Parkhurst, 1 Aik. 258.

23. An officer sued for not paying over to the creditor the avails of a sale on execution, may defend on the ground that the property sold was not the debtor's. Wakworth v. Readboro, 24 Vt. 252.

24. Where a judgment was rendered in the county court against a sheriff for money collected on an execution, with 15 per cent. interest from the time of demand, according to the statute, the supreme court, on affirming that judgment, directed the clerk to cast 15 per cent. interest on so much of it from its date, as was for money detained, and 6 per cent. upon the residue; although the court below, on allowing the exceptions, ordered a stay of execution. (Redfield, J., dissenting). Barron v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 385.

25. For the neglect of a sheriff to pay over money collected on an execution, the plaintiff, under G. S. c. 12, s. 23, recovered the sum with 15 per cent interest thereon as damages. On affirmance of that judgment in the supreme court;—Held, that only six per cent interest on that judgment should be computed. (G. S. c. 30, s. 59.) Smith v. Pike, 44 Vt. 61.

26. Subrogation. An officer who becomes chargeable for default upon an execution and pays the creditor therefor, may, with consent of the creditor and in his name, use the creditor's remedies to enforce payment of the debtor. State Treasurer v. Holmes, 4 Vt. 110; and see Oliver v. Chamberlin, 1 D. Chip. 41. 9 Vt. 294.

27. The liability of an officer for having neglected to levy an execution is altogether collateral to the debt, and confers no legal interest in it, nor right to control or discharge it. Fletcher v. Crooker, 8 Vt. 814.

28. In what cases a sheriff may be subrogated to the rights of the creditor in an execution, where the sheriff has become charged thereon; and in what cases sureties may be subrogated to the rights of the execution creditor against the sheriff,—considered. Belows v. Allen, 23 Vt. 169.

29. Where the maker of a promissory note was sued upon it and his property attached, and the attaching officer was obliged to pay the debt through the failure of the receptors of the attached property;—Held, that the suit and attachment were for the benefit of a collateral guarantor of the note, as well as for the creditor, and that the officer was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the guarantor, a surety. Hammond v. Chamberlin, 26 Vt. 406.

30. Duty to execute all process not void. A sheriff or constable cannot excuse himself from the service of process because it is erroneous, but is bound to execute it unless absolutely void. Stoddard v. Tarbell, 20 Vt. 321. Fletcher v. Mott, 1 Aik. 889. Lewis v. Avery, 8 Vt. 287. Avery v. Lewis, 10 Vt. 332. Bank of Whitehall v. Pettes, 13 Vt. 395. Chase v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 469. Thus, he is bound to serve an execution issued more than a year and a day after the judgment. Fletcher v. Mott;—or an execution having a false date, as, June 13, 1809, but reciting the judgment truly as rendered at June term, 1839. Bank of Whitehall v. Pettes.

31. A writ, legally served, was afterwards altered by the plaintiff, without consent of the defendant therein, by changing the date and return day, and was again committed to the same officer for service, with notice to the defendant of a discharge of the first suit. Held, that the writ, as so altered, was not void, and that the officer was liable for his neglect to serve it. Stoddard v. Tarbell, 20 Vt. 321.

32. It is not a defense to an officer sued for his neglect to serve an attachment, that it might have proved of no benefit to the plaintiff by reason of anticipated proceedings under the bankrupt act. Carlisle v. Soule, 44 Vt. 265.

33. As to void or irregular process. Though an officer may be justified in serving a writ legal upon its face, yet he is not bound to execute it if it be in fact void, or irregular, so that the creditor would become a trespasser by the service. Hill v. Wait, 5 Vt. 124. Barber v. Benson, 9 Vt. 171.

34. In an action against a sheriff for default of his deputy in not paying over money collected upon an execution;—Held, that it was no defense that the execution was for a less sum than the judgment and was therefore void as to the creditor, although the officer might for this reason have refused to collect it. It being valid on its face, it was a good justification for collecting and paying over the money. Coburn v. Chamberlin, 81 Vt. 326.

35. Where an officer was sued for neglect to return a writ issued in an action upon a note;—Held, that he might in defense impeach the note as having been fraudulently obtained, and void. Woolcott v. Gray, Brayt. 91.

36. Officer interested. Under a statute (G. S. c. 12, s. 27) prohibiting a sheriff, or other officer, from serving "any writ when he is a party or interested in the suit, or in which a private corporation of which he is a member is a party, or interested;"—Held, that a sheriff was not liable for neglect to levy and return an execution, committed to him, in favor of a bank of which he was a stockholder, although he served the original writ, attached property thereon, took a receipt, and had obtained judgment against the receipt, who proved insolvent. Bank of Rutland v. Parsons, 21 Vt. 199.

37. Special cases. It is not the legal duty of an officer having an execution in his hands for collection, to levy it upon the lands of the debtor unless so directed by the creditor, although, by direction of the creditor, he served the original writ by the attachment of real estate. Bank of Newbury v. Baldwin, 81 Vt. 811.

38. Where an officer, having an execution in his hands for collection, delivered it over to another for service, and informed the debtor thereof, who in consequence of such information avoided the execution, which was returned non est;—Held, that the first officer was liable in an action for not executing the writ. Isham v. Eggleston, 2 Vt. 270.

39. If an officer would excuse himself by a return of languidus upon process, and by that only, the return must show that the sickness was such as would endanger life to execute the process, and that this continued up to the return of the process. But if he finds the party sick, his duty is not to remain with him, but only to use reasonable diligence in holding watch for his recovery, so as to make service of the process, and is liable only for negligence herein. Bramble v. Poulitney, 12 Vt. 842.

40. Where the return, in such case, showed that when the officer first called on the debtor with the execution he found the debtor thus sick, and that for six days thereafter on diligent search he could find neither the body nor property of the debtor, and the execution was seasonably returned;—Held, that upon the return, prima facie, the officer was not liable for neglect to levy the execution. Ib.

41. Where the original act of an officer in the service of civil process is unlawful—as where he breaks open the outer door of a dwelling house for that purpose—those who aid him in the performance of it are trespassers, though they act by his command. Hooker v. Smith, 19 Vt. 151.

42. An execution does not, of itself, empower the officer holding it to make a sale of property thereon to himself; and without authority from the parties to it, or of the debtor, at least, he acquires no title to the property so bid off by himself, though he pay the amount of the execution to the creditor. Woodbury v. Parker, 19 Vt. 353.

43. But with the assent of the parties to the execution, there being no fraud in the transaction as to other creditors, he may become such purchaser; it being virtually a purchase of the debtor. Ib. Farnum v. Perry, 43 Vt. 473.

44. Interference of creditor, as an excuse. The taking back of an execution from an officer, at such a time as to prevent him from completing his duty, would release him; but otherwise, where his liability has already become fixed. Wetherby v. Foster, 5 Vt. 136.

45. In an action against an officer for a false return of a capias, by stating that he had taken "sufficient bail," whereas he did not take bail;—Held, that the officer was not concluded by his return from proving that the plaintiff directed him not to require bail; and that such direction was a bar to the action. Ordway v. Bacon, 14 Vt. 378.

46. So, in an action against an officer for neglect to keep property, returned as attached, so as to answer upon the execution;—Held, that he was not concluded by his return from proving that he was directed by the plaintiff to make such return and not take the property into his possession, but to leave it with the debtor; and that this was a defense. Abbott v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 208.

47. Where a party or his attorney gives special instructions to an officer, in regard to the execution of process, different from his legal duty, and he is influenced thereby to omit the performance of his plain official duty (which will be presumed where the instructions have such a tendency, unless the contrary appears), or where the officer is authorized to act according to his discretion, he is exonerated from legal liability as an officer. In such case, he ceases to be a public officer as to the business entrusted to him, and becomes a mere private agent. Willard v. Goodrich, 31 Vt. 597. Strongs v. Bradley, 14 Vt. 55. S. C., 13 Vt. 9. Fletcher v. Bradley, 12 Vt. 22. Kimball v. Perry, 15 Vt. 414. Bellows v. Allen, 23 Vt. 169. Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 514.

48. The attorney of an execution creditor sent the execution to a deputy sheriff for collection, with the following written instructions: "Should you find it necessary to take any other course than the straightforward one, you will please advise me." In an action against the sheriff for neglect to collect or make return of the execution;—Held, that this writing gave the deputy an unlimited discretion in the management of the collection of the execution, and that whatever he did, or omitted, should be referred to that discretion, in the absence of evidence that his conduct was in no degree influenced by such instructions; and held, that the sheriff was not liable. Strongs v. Bradley.

49. The plaintiff had obtained judgment against a sheriff (Church) for neglect to collect an execution, and Church had obtained judgment against the receiptor of the property attached in the original suit. Both judgments were obtained by the same attorney, who handed an execution in each case, and both at the same time, to the defendant, a constable, for collection, saying, "You may go to Church for directions." The defendant did apply to Church, who directed him not to return the execution against himself (Church). Relying upon this, the defendant suffered the execution to expire in his hands. In an action therefor, —Held, that the defendant was justified in following the instructions given. Willard v. Goodrich, 31 Vt. 597.

50. Instructions given by the creditor to the officer as to the manner of serving process, which do not, in fact, mislead him in the performance of his official duty, do not release him from the consequences of his official neglect. Hoves v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 508.

51. A certain interference by the creditor assenting to delay of payment of a bid on execution sale [see facts stated and verdict] construed not to be such a control as to release the officer for not collecting the execution. Walworth v. Readboro, 24 Vt. 252.

52. A deputy sheriff holding an execution for collection, sent a message to the creditor, by the debtor's request, inquiring if he would take the note of one D for the amount of the execution. The creditor returned word to the deputy, that he might take the negotiable note of D, or of any good man, for the amount of the damages, but that the costs must be paid. The deputy thereupon took the non-negotiable note of D for the amount of both damages and costs and sent it to the creditor, who refused to receive it, claiming that it was not such a note as he had authorized the deputy to take. The deputy did nothing more to collect the execution, but suffered it to expire in his hands. Held, that the creditor had done nothing to release the deputy from doing his legal duty, but only authorized him to suspend action upon the performance of a specific act by the debtor; that he had violated his official duty, and that the sheriff was liable to the creditor therefor. Mason v. Ide, 30 Vt. 697.

53. Instructions to an officer by the creditor's attorney, which were construed as equivalent to a direction not to attach real estate, and that for the personal property to be attached he might take receiptors, and before removing it he might go to the debtor and see if he would furnish receiptors, were held not to release the officer from liability for the property attached, where the receiptors taken, although then responsible, afterwards failed and became irresponsible. Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 506.

54. Measure of liability for neglect. Where an officer neglected to return an execution in due season to charge the bail, he was held liable for the whole amount of the execution. Turner v. Lowry, 2 Aik. 72.

55. So, where the officer refused, or wholly neglected to serve and return the execution, he was held liable for the whole debt, and was not allowed to prove the poverty of the debtor in mitigation of damages. Hall v. Brooks, 8 Vt. 485. See Watkinson v. Bennington, 12 Vt. 404.

56. An officer holding final process against the body of a debtor which he might have served but neglected to do so and "let it run out on his hands," or, having once had an opportunity to arrest the debtor, neglected to do so, and the debtor afterwards absconded, is fixed with the debt, and in an action against him, cannot show the insolvency of the debtor in mitigation. Goodrich v. Starr, 18 Vt. 237.

57. The leaning of courts in this State, as well as in others, has been not to hold sheriffs, or other officers of that class, liable for damages for any neglect of duty, unless the same was gross and willful, beyond a fair compensation to the party for his actual loss. Poland, J., in Blodgett v. Brattleboro, 30 Vt. 588-4.

58. For the mere neglect of an officer to return, within its life, an execution not fully executed, he is liable, but only for nominal damages, unless it appears that actual damages have been sustained. Kidder v. Barker, 18 Vt. 454. Ives v. Strong, 19 Vt. 546. Bank of Newbury v. Baldwin, 31 Vt. 811. Watkinson v. Bennington, 12 Vt. 404. Turner v. Lowry, 2 Aik. 72.

59. Where an officer, through mere casualty, neglects to return a writ, the actual injury to the plaintiff by the non-return of the writ is the measure of damages. Hamilton v. Marsh, 2 Tyl. 408.

60. In an action against an officer for not taking bail upon a writ, the rule of damages is the amount of the judgment, where the debtor has absconded so that he cannot be reached by execution, unless there be evidence tending to prove the insolvency of the debtor. Crane v. Warner, 14 Vt. 40.

61. In an action against an officer for not levying upon particular property, the rule of damages is the cash value of the property, not exceeding the amount due on the execution, and not an estimated auction value. Witherby v. Foster, 5 Vt. 186.

62. It is not a full defense to an action against an officer for making a defective levy of execution upon land, that the levy had become perfected by lapse of time after the commencement of the suit. Bell v. Roberts, 18 Vt. 582;—nor is it a defense that the debtor had no title to the land. S. C., 15 Vt. 741.

2. Fees.

63. Where an officer receives a writ for service without objection for non-prepayment of his fees, he is bound to serve the writ notwithstanding. Such acceptance is a waiver of prepayment. Carlisle v. Soule, 44 Vt. 265.

64. An officer cannot charge fees for return of an execution stayed by a supersedeas in a writ of error. Fitch v. Stanton, 1 Tyl. 28.

65. An officer, who proceeded to levy an execution for his fees, after payment of the execution by the debtor to the creditor, while in the officer's hands and before levy, which payment was indorsed upon the execution, was held liable in trespass;—that without a levy, or payment of the money upon the execution to the officer, he was not entitled to fees. Barnard v. Stevens, 2 Aik. 429. 19 Vt. 572.

66. An officer had levied an execution and advertised the property for sale, when it was taken from him by writ of replevin, of all which he made return upon the execution. Held, that he was entitled to recover of the execution creditor his full fees as for a levy of the execution, including travel and poundage. Baldwin v. Shaw, 85 Vt. 272.

67. A charge, in addition to the travel fee, for the "conveyance" of a prisoner to jail upon a commitment on a tax warrant, or for debt, is not, under ordinary circumstances, allowable. Henry v. Tilson, 17 Vt. 479.

68. A constable who commits one to jail upon a tax warrant is entitled to travel fees only one way—no return being necessary. Id.

69. In trespass by an officer, against a person other than the debtor in an execution, for taking from his possession property held on the execution, it was held no objection to including in the damages his fees on the execution, that they were stated on the execution in gross, and not by items. (G. S. c. 12, s. 29.) Houston v. Howard, 89 Vt. 54.

70. The defendant, a constable of the plaintiff town, had an execution in favor of one S against the town in his hands for collection. After demanding, but before receiving, payment thereof, he advanced to S, at his request, the amount thereof, with the understanding that the money when collected on the execution should be his own. He retained the execution and afterwards the plaintiff, knowing the facts, paid the defendant the amount of the execution, together with his fees for collection, without objection. Held, that the defendant had no such legal interest in the execution as disqualified him from charging his fees for collecting it, and that the plaintiff could not recover back from him the fees so paid. Strafford v. Blaisdell, 45 Vt. 549.

71. Illegal fees. Where an officer charged the plaintiff in a suit, and was paid by him while that suit was pending, larger fees than allowed by law for serving the writ;—Held, that the officer was liable to him for the statute penalty, notwithstanding the fees, as charged, were afterwards taxed for such plaintiff in his bill of costs, and were paid by the defendant in that suit to such plaintiff's attorney. Johnson v. Burnham, 22 Vt. 639.

72. The penalty for receiving illegal fees (G. S. c. 125, s. 17), applies as well to charges for official services for which no fixed, but only proportionate, compensation is authorized (G. S. c. 126, s. 52), as to such as are specified in the fee bill. Henry v. Tilson, 17 Vt. 479.

73. An officer who receives illegal fees, is not liable to the penalty imposed by the statute, unless received with a knowledge of their illegality. Id. Haynes v. Hall, 87 Vt. 20.

Where an officer is held to become a trespasser ab initio, see TRESPASS, I., 2.

PARENT AND CHILD.

- I. PARENT'S RIGHTS.
- II. PARENT'S LIABILITIES.
- III. SERVICES AND SUPPORT IN THE FAMILY.

I. PARENT'S RIGHTS.

1. Minor child's services and earnings.

The plaintiff having the care of the minor children of his wife by a former husband, although not their guardian, was allowed to recover for their services. Stone v. Pulsipher, 16 Vt. 428.

2. Where the plaintiff's claim is for services of his minor son, under a contract made by the son, the right to compensation depends upon a proper performance of the contract; and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, in violation of the contract so made. Dictum in Rogers v. State, 24 Vt. 513,—the case stating that the contract was made "without the knowledge of the plaintiff." But see Chilson v. Philips, 1 Vt. 41.

3. The plaintiff's agent hired out the plaintiff's minor son to the defendant, for a specified term and at a stipulated price, the defendant reserving the right to discharge the boy, if he did not like him. After a few weeks' service, the defendant told the boy he could not keep him under that contract, and agreed with him to continue at a less price; but neither the plaintiff nor such agent was informed of this. The boy remained in service. In an action to recover for the services;—Held, that the boy had no authority to make a new contract, or to dispense with the original one; that the defendant, not having actually discharged the boy, was answerable for his services according to the original contract. McDonald v. Montague, 80 Vt. 357.

4. Giving minor his time. A father may, at his discretion, by gift or otherwise, relinquish to his minor child his right to the time and earnings of the child during the whole or part of the child's minority, and to the property acquired thereby, against any claim of the father's creditors. Chase v. Elkins, 2 Vt. 290. Tillotson v. McCrillis, 11 Vt. 477. Bray v. Wheeler, 29 Vt. 514.

5. He may do this verbally. Chase v. Smith, 5 Vt. 558.

6. A father may, by agreement with his minor child, relinquish to the child the right he would otherwise have to the child's services, and authorize those who employ him to pay him his wages. In such case, the child's contract with a third person is conclusive upon the father. Varney v. Young, 11 Vt. 258. Chilson v. Philips, 1 Vt. 41.

7. Father's assent to his minor son's contracts and to payment of wages to him, shown by giving the son his time, course of dealing with him, &c. Perlinau v. Phelps, 25 Vt. 478. Chilson v. Philips.

8. A certain deed, &c. [recited in the case], from a father to his minor son, held not to operate as an emancipation. Mason v. Hutchins, 82 Vt. 780.

9. Minor's property. The father of an infant derives no right from that relation to make a sale or transfer of the infant's property, much less to dispose of it in satisfaction or security of his own debts. Keeler v. Fassett, 21 Vt. 539.

II. PARENT'S LIABILITIES.

10. For necessities for child. A father is not bound to pay for necessities furnished to his minor child, unless an actual authority be proved, or the circumstances be sufficient to imply one. There must be proof of a contract, express or implied, a prior authority, or a subsequent recognition of the claim. Varney v. Young, 11 Vt. 258.

11. The moral obligation the parent is under to support his children, infers no such liability to third persons; affords no inference of a promise to do so. Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348.

12. If one trades with an infant and gives credit to him alone, knowing all the facts in the case, he can never, after that, sustain an action against the father for articles thus delivered. It is the same doctrine as applies to agents generally. Id.

13. The defendant permitted his minor son to go out to work by the month, and, while so out at work, the plaintiff, knowing the circumstances, let the son have some cloth and trimmings for articles of necessary clothing, but without any authority given by the father. Held, that the father was not liable therefor, although he knew of the purchase by the son, and gave him some money to pay for making up the cloth, and permitted him to wear out the clothes, when made. Id. 20 Vt. 579.

14. While one's minor children remain a part of his family and household, and receive necessities with the knowledge of the father and without objection on his part, it is the same thing as if he himself, or his wife, had received them; and if furnished upon his credit and charged to him in good faith, he is liable therefor. So held, where the claim was for medical attendance upon the defendant's minor son, sick at the defendant's house, although the defendant had given him leave to act for himself, and had published the fact, and that he would not thereafter pay any debts of the son. Swain v. Tyler, 26 Vt. 9.

15. Articles not necessary. The plaintiff's son of eleven years purchased of the defendant, a shop-keeper, cigar-holders and pipes in cases, and paid therefor in money $4.75. The next day the plaintiff's wife, and boy's mother, went with the boy to the defendant's shop, tendered back the articles, and demanded the money paid therefor. The defendant did not question the mother's authority, offered to return part of the money, but refused to return the whole amount, and the mother left the articles. Held, that the money so paid was presumably the money of the plaintiff, and that he could recover it in assumpsit for money had and received. Sequin v. Peterson, 45 Vt. 255.

III. SERVICES AND SUPPORT IN THE FAMILY.

16. After becoming of age. The fact that a child continues to live with a parent after becoming of age, or returns to live with him and becomes one of the family, does not ordinarily constitute the relation of creditor and debtor between them, so as to warrant a charge for board on the one side, or for services in the family on the other. A claim for compensation, in such case, must rest upon an express promise, or such facts as show a mutual understanding, or expectation, of compensation. Fitch v. Peckham, 16 Vt. 150.

17. The law is the same as to adopted children, and the like. Andrus v. Foster, 17 Vt. 556. Lunay v. Vantyne 40 Vt. 501.

18. In order to maintain an action for services rendered by a child or other relative living in the family of a parent or other person standing in that relation, it must appear unequivocally that the parties, at the time of the service, supposed they were dealing as debtor and creditor, that the service was for wages and not for support, or in expectation of a gratuity or legacy. Davis v. Goodenow, 27 Vt. 715. (Cobb v. Bishop, 27 Vt. 624.)

19. But this does not alter the rule of the common law, that a fair balance of proof will rebut the legal presumption against the claim. In such case, and establish it by proof of an express promise, or a mutual understanding, that the services should be paid for. Ib.

Putnam v. Tower, 34. Vt. 429. (Way v. Way, 27 Vt. 625.)

20. It is well settled by repeated decisions in this State that when a child, after becoming of age, remains at home, continuing a member of the family, receiving support and performing services, the law implies no contract by which the relation of debtor and creditor arises between the parent and the child; and, in order to create any right of recovery either way, for support, or for services, an express contract must be shown. Poland C. J., in Sprague v. Waldo, 88 Vt. 141.

21. Persons standing in like relations. This rule was applied to the case of a son-in-law, who came into the family on his marriage to the daughter, then a member of the family, and they continued so to live and serve as members of the family, until her death. Ib. 189.

22. The defendant, being childless, took the plaintiff, a niece of his wife, when eight or nine years of age, to live with him until she should become of age, and she so lived in his family until she became of age, when he told her she was free to go, but that "if she remained with him and did well, he would do well by her." She consented to stay, and continued on working, as before, for some six years, living in the family as a member of it, attended school some, and was uniformly treated as she was before she became of age, neither party keeping any accounts. She then left and went to New Hampshire, not expecting to return. Nothing was then said about any settlement, or pay, or claim. After about five years, at the request of the defendant, she returned and worked for him in his family for about a year, and until near her marriage. The defendant made her a payment on this last service. In an action on book;—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for her services before she went to New Hampshire, but was entitled to recover for such services after her return thence. Andrus v. Foster, 17 Vt. 556.

23. The plaintiff was taken into the defendant's family as an adopted daughter, to live there until she should become of age, without any agreement or expectation of pay for services. By a mutual mistake as to the plaintiff's age, she continued her services in the family for a full year after she became of age. After that year the defendant employed her at wages. The mistake was afterwards discovered. In an action to recover for such year's services;—Held, that from the fact that the defendant paid her after he understood she had become of age, a promise could not be implied to pay for previous services, against the mutual understanding that the services when rendered were not to be paid for; and that the plaintiff could not recover. Lunay v. Vantyne, 40 Vt. 501.

24. Where a father, with his family, lived with his son and performed for him valuable services, more than the support of the father and family was worth;—Held, that, by reason of the relationship, no implied obligation to pay wages arose; and that a loan of money by the son to the father, made without reasonable expectation of repayment, should not, for the same reason, be treated as a payment on account of such services. Harris v. Currier, 44 Vt. 468.

25. Where a child supported his parent without express contract for compensation, the situation and circumstances of the parties, as set forth, were held to rebut the presumption that the support was to be rendered without compensation. Doane v. Doane, 46 Vt. 485.

26. The plaintiff was the maiden sister of the intestate, and never made his house her home before August, 1865. She then went there, without invitation, to see the defendant's sick daughter, who died soon after. At this time, the intestate was single, and so continued till his death in April, 1870, having no relative in his house but the plaintiff. Soon after the daughter's death, the plaintiff commenced taking charge of the domestic affairs of the intestate, with his knowledge and approval, but there was no evidence of his request or invitation so to do, and she so continued until his death, rendering valuable services. Held, that, without evidence of an expectation to the contrary, the law implied a promise to pay for such services. (See case for special circumstances.) Briggs v. Briggs, 46 Vt. 571.

PARTITION.

- I. AT LAW, ON PETITION.
- II. THE PETITION AND PROCEEDINGS.
- III. PARTITION BY AGREEMENT, OR DEED.

I. AT LAW, ON PETITION.

1. Subject of partition. The court refused, on petition, to make partition of an ore bed, or to direct a sale of the defendant's share, on account of the situation and quality of the property,—referring the petitioner to the court of chancery, as the proper tribunal. Conant v. Smith, 1 Aik. 87.

2. Dictum that proceedings cannot be sustained for partition of a saw-mill and its appurtenances, or for a sale or assignment thereof, where the petitioner has not been deprived of his turn in the occupancy of the premises.

Brown v. Turner, 1 Aik. 350. Overruled in Baldwin v. Aldrich, 84 Vt. 526.

3. Petitioner's title. One of several mortgagees of undivided interests in the same land, though never in possession, and before foreclosure, may maintain a petition for partition against the others, and the mortgagor in possession cannot defend against it. Munroe v. Walbridge, 2 Aik. 410, Prentiss, J., dissenting. 18 Vt. 323.

4. In order to sustain a petition for partition, actual possession by the petitioner is not essential, provided he is not legally disseized; and, for this purpose, a distinction is recognized between a mere possession of the plaintiff's share by a third person, or by the defendant, and a legal disseisin. Hawley v. Soper, 18 Vt. 320. 28 Vt. 680.

5. In order to sustain a petition for partition of lands, the plaintiff must have possession, or the right of immediate possession. It cannot be had of reversionary interests. Baldwin v. Aldrich, 84 Vt. 526. Nichols v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 228.

6. The petitioner for partition had set off, on execution against the defendant, an undivided part of the defendant's land; but the defendant remained in possession of the whole, claiming adverse to the levy. Held, that the plaintiff had only a right of entry, and there was no such privity between the parties, or seisin in the plaintiff, as entitled him to partition. Brook v. Eastman, 28 Vt. 658.

7. It is no objection to a partition, assignment or sale under G. S. c. 45, upon proper petition, that the plaintiff is not hindered in the enjoyment of his share of the premises. Dictum contra, in Brown v. Turner, 1 Aik. 350, denied in Baldwin v. Aldrich, 84 Vt. 526.

8. Defendant's title. Where a petition for partition is brought against several defendants for the partition of several parcels of land, each of the defendants must be interested in each of the parcels. For a misjoinder, in this respect, the petition was dismissed. Brownell v. Bradley, 16 Vt. 105.

9. Where the plaintiff in partition claimed by virtue of a levy of execution, and the defendant, to defeat the plaintiff's right, put in evidence a deed to a third person of the share claimed, made before the levy, but without showing such third person in possession;—Held, (1), that such possession would not be presumed; (2), that the plaintiff might show that the deed was fraudulent and void; (3) that such third person was not a necessary, or proper defendant. Hawley v. Soper, 18 Vt. 320.

10. In partition, a plea that the defendant's title, by decree in bankruptcy, passed to his assignee, is a good bar; but (by Bennett, J.) doubtless the petition might be so amended as to bring the assignee before the court. Onion v. Clark, 18 Vt. 863.

11. Partition between heirs. The county court has jurisdiction to make partition of land which descended to heirs, among whom it was never divided, where the petitioner has bought out the shares of some of the heirs, and holds the estate in common with the others; and, dubitat, whether the probate court has jurisdiction in such case. Collamer v. Hutchins, 27 Vt. 738. (G. S. c. 45, s. 1.)

12. Injunction. The orator paid the entire purchase money for a parcel of land, but took the conveyance to himself and the defendant jointly, upon the defendant's agreement to pay one-half. The orator paid all rents and taxes, and permanently improved the premises by erecting buildings and clearing the land. The court enjoined the defendant's suit for partition until compensation should be made to the orator, and ordered an account to be taken. Maloy v. Sloan, 44 Vt. 311.

II. THE PETITION AND PROCEEDINGS.

13. A petition for partition with citation annexed, is not "a writ of summons" requiring a recognizance for costs. Brock v. Eastman, 27 Vt. 559.

14. A petition under the partition act of 1797 was held ill on demurrer, because not according to the statute. Jewett v. Nash, 4 Vt. 517.

15. Where a petition for partition contained no prayer for a sale or assignment, a plea in bar that the premises were not partible, was held good. Brown v. Turner, 1 Aik. 350. See Baldwin v. Aldrich, 34 Vt. 528.

16. On a petition for partition, if it appear that the plaintiff is entitled to partition of only part of the premises embraced in the petition, the court may order partition, assignment, or sale of that part. (G. S. c. 45, s. 7.) Baldwin v. Aldrich. Hove v. Blanden, 21 Vt. 315.

17. In proceedings for partition at law between tenants in common by deed, the legal operation of the deed cannot be changed by any form of issue under the petition, or by the result of the proceeding, short of impeaching the deed for fraud. Thus, a deed of an undivided half cannot be treated, in partition, as a deed of a particular half in severalty. Piper v. Farr, 47 Vt. 721.

18. Commissioners. Commissioners to make partition of lands should set forth in their return what lands they divide, and, specifically, what is set to each one of the parties, and not by way of reference to the petition. For such last defect the report was set aside. Harlington v. Barton, 11 Vt. 31.

19. Commissioners to make partition, under G. S. c. 45, are not empowered to determine any question of right, title or interest, as between the parties to the partition. That is to be done in the county court, preliminary to the judgment for partition. Gourley v. Woodbury, 43 Vt. 89.

20. Costs. Upon judgments in partition cases, costs may be taxed after the court adjourns, as well as in any other cases. Strong v. Hobbs, 20 Vt. 192.

21. All costs which accrued in consequence of the trial of any of the facts alleged in the original petition, to which the petitionee interposed a plea of denial and upon which the petitioner prevailed, are properly taxable, in the discretion of the court, for the petitioner. But, in practice, costs in regard to the trial have only been taxed where the title to the land, in some way, came in dispute between the parties. Id.

22. In partition cases, the supreme court, in a case before it, may order a sale of the land for the payment of the costs. Id.

23. Regularly, an order of sale cannot be made at the same term of final judgment, but the order of payment of costs should then be made, and the cause be entered continued; and, if such order should not be complied with, then at the next term an order of sale should be moved for. When not so continued, the case may be brought forward on formal petition served on the opposite party, and the proper orders be made. Id.

III. PARTITION BY AGREEMENT, OR DEED.

24. Tenants in common, though their title has not become perfected by 15 years' possession, may make partition by parol, provided such severance is accompanied by possession in severalty. Pomeroy v. Taylor, Brayt. 174. 27 Vt. 291.

25. A partition in fact among tenants in common, acquiesced in for more than fifteen years, becomes absolutely perfect in law. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560.

26. If two own a lot in equal portions in severalty, but in fact not divided, and enter on extreme parts of the lot, each upon his own portion, it will be considered that they intend a division by a line drawn through the center, leaving the two parts as nearly similar as they can be, and be equal. Beecher v. Parmele, 9 Vt. 352. 10 Vt. 211. 27 Vt. 743.

27. In a division, by deeds of quit-claim, between tenants in common of land, if the title to a part falls, the loss, in the absence of all fraud, falls upon him who took that share in the division. Beardsley v. Knight, 10 Vt. 185.

28. Partition deeds between tenants in common of a water privilege, executed at the same time, are to be taken as one instrument; and any grant or limitation of the use of water, contained in either, is binding on both parties, and those claiming under them. Rogers v. Bancroft, 20 Vt. 250. (20 Vt. 546.)

PARTNERSHIP.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES A PARTNERSHIP.

1. As between the parties.
2. As to third persons.

II. PROOF OF PARTNERSHIP.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

1. In general.
2. In respect to partnership property and partnership debts.
3. Act of one partner as binding the others.

IV. DISSOLUTION AND CHANGE OF MEMBERSHIP.

1. Partner's authority after dissolution.
2. Continuing liability.

V. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES.

1. Between the partners.
2. As to third persons.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES A PARTNERSHIP.

1. As between the parties.

1. To constitute a partnership, there must be an agreement to share in the ultimate profit and loss of the business. Bowman v. Bailey, 10 Vt. 170.

2. Where one party furnished a boat and the other sailed it, under an agreement for a division of the gross earnings of the boat;—Held, that this did not constitute a partnership. Id.

3. Division of earnings merely does not constitute a partnership. Id. Ambler v. Bradley, 6 Vt. 119;—though the division is to be made only after deducting such expense of repairs by the one or the other party. Boardman v. Keeler, 2 Vt. 65. Tobias v. Blin, 21 Vt. 544. 26 Vt. 725.

4. Persons jointly interested in the net profits of an adventure or business, or in the profits as affected by the losses, are partners. Chapman v. Decereux, 32 Vt. 616. Kellogg v. Grinstead, 12 Vt. 291. Brigham v. Dana, 29 Vt. 1.

5. It is not requisite to the constitution of a strict partnership, that each partner, as between themselves, should be liable to share indefinitely in the losses. An agreement to share in the profits, and consequently in the losses as they affect the adventure, will ordinarily be held sufficient to constitute a strict partnership. Nor is it essential to the constitution of a general partnership, that the partners should be proportionate joint owners of the property of the concern; but the whole capital may, by stipulation, remain in one or more of the parties who furnished it. All that is indispensable is, that the parties shall be jointly interested in the profits as affected by the losses, or net profits of the concern. Brigham v. Dana.

6. An agreement between parties for the transaction of a certain business, wherein all furnish specified portions of the capital and jointly own the property purchased, which is to be sold for their joint and mutual benefit, and where each is to contribute his skill and aid to the business and share in the final profit or loss at the close of the business, contains every ingredient of a partnership between themselves, and makes such partnership, although the parties were not aware, and did not suppose, that the legal effect of the agreement was to create a partnership. Duryea v. Whitcomb, 31 Vt. 395.

7. Where two or more persons agree to become partners, and actually proceed to carry into execution the joint undertaking or business, the relation of partners exists between them, although the conditions of the partnership were not understood alike by the partners. Cook v. Carpenter, 34 Vt. 121.

8. A and B agreed to work together in the business of manufacturing marble. B was to furnish the marble and to board A. A was to pay B one-half the cost of the marble. Both were to contribute their labor and skill in the business, and the products and avails were to be equally divided. Held, that they became strictly partners, as between themselves. Griffith v. Buffum, 22 Vt. 181. 26 Vt. 725. 31 Vt. 395.

9. The plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract for the manufacture and sale of hat bodies; the defendant to furnish the wool for the hat bodies, to peddle or sell the same after manufactured, and to charge nothing for his time while engaged in the sale; the plaintiff to manufacture the wool into hat bodies, and to charge nothing for his time while so engaged; each party to pay one-half the expense of extra labor, wool, and use and wear of the machinery; the defendant out of the sale of the hat bodies to retain the cost of the wool, and the profits, after paying for the wool, to be equally divided. Held, that the parties were not, as between themselves, partners,—the one-half of such profits, payable to the plaintiff, being a virtual compensation to him for his labor expended upon the wool; and that an action of book account lay therefor. Mason v. Potter, 26 Vt. 722; and see Kellogg v. Grinstead, 12 Vt. 291.

10. The defendant took the job of finishing off a church at a certain price. Afterwards, the defendant agreed with the plaintiff that they would go on together and do the job, each working, and the work of each to offset that of the other; the expense of materials and other work to be deducted from the price of the job, and the balance to be equally divided between them. They did the job accordingly, the plaintiff having worked thereon thirty days more than the defendant. Held, that the parties were not partners as between themselves, and that the plaintiff could recover in assumpsit what the defendant had received on the job more than his share; and that, in determining how much the plaintiff was entitled to receive, such extra work should be reckoned for which, by the contract, he was to be allowed. Hawkins v. McIntyre, 45 Vt. 496.

11. The plaintiff owned a tin-shop and carried on the business in his own name. D was a practical plumber, and engaged his services under an agreement between them by which the plaintiff was to be allowed out of the profits of the business ten per cent on his stock invested, and the remainder of the profits was to be equally divided between them. They went on under this agreement, each devoting his whole time and attention to the business, which was carried on in the plaintiff's name as before, and D's share of the profits remained in the concern. Held a partnership. Tyler v. Scott, 45 Vt. 261.

2. As to third persons.

12. Persons are to be treated as partners, in their dealings with others, if they conduct and hold themselves out as such, though there may be no partnership in fact. Stearns v. Haven, 14 Vt. 540. Cottrill v. Vandusen, 22 Vt. 511.

13. In assumpsit against A and B, as partners, for goods sold, the defense was that B was not the partner of A, but that C, not joined, was. Held, that if this were so, and yet B represented himself as a partner in making the purchase, a recovery could be had against A and B, the non-joinder of C being, at most, cause for abatement. Hicks v. Crane, 17 Vt. 449.

14. The defendants bought a grist-mill and privilege, under an agreement between themselves to rebuild the works and run them, and to share the profits and loss of the business. The plaintiff, under the engagement of one of the defendants, but expecting that all were liable, performed services in rebuilding the mill. Held, that the defendants were partners and liable as such, although there was an agreement between the defendants, unknown to the plaintiff, that each should pay the men engaged by him, and charge therefor to the company. Noyes v. Cushman, 25 Vt. 390. 31 Vt. 398.

15. In an action against partners to recover for publishing a newspaper advertisement, which was in the name of one partner, but which, as claimed, enured to the benefit of the firm;—Held, that evidence in defense was admissible, that the advertising partner had a special interest to be promoted by the advertising outside the partnership interest; also, that it was agreed between the partners, on the formation of the partnership, that they should not advertise in the newspapers, and that they never had. Harris v. Holmes, 30 Vt. 352.

16. L. D. Hill and Harrington were never partners, and no such firm as L. D. Hill & Co. ever existed; but Harrington gave the plaintiff a note for property purchased by him, signed "L. D. Hill & Co. by Harrington," without the knowledge of Hill. Two or three years before this, Hill was informed that Harrington was using the name of L. D. Hill & Co. in his business, and thereupon he told Harrington he must not use that name to injure him, and Harrington said he would not. The plaintiff, at the time he took said note, did not know of such previous use of the name of Hill, and it did not appear whether Harrington made any representations to him at the time beyond what appeared on the face of the note. Held, that the legal intentment was that the plaintiff took the note on the faith of Hill's name, and that Hill was liable upon it. Smith v. Hill, 45 Vt. 90.

II. PROOF OF PARTNERSHIP.

17. A partnership may be proved against the partners by oral evidence of the actions and declarations of the parties, although there are written articles; but to prove the partnership in their own behalf, they must produce the written articles. Cutler v. Thomas, 25 Vt. 73. Hastings v. Hopkinson, 28 Vt. 108.

18. The admission of a partnership, or a joint liability, by one of two or more defendants, is evidence against himself, but not against the others. Cottrill v. Vandusen, 22 Vt. 511. Noyes v. Cushman, 25 Vt. 390.

19. Partnership proved by admissions of the several defendants sued as partners. Mathews v. Felch, 25 Vt. 536.

20. Common reputation is not competent evidence to prove the fact of a partnership. Hicks v. Crane, 17 Vt. 449. Carlton v. Ludlow Woolen Mill, 27 Vt. 496.

21. To prove that a person was a member of a firm, testimony is admissible that he held a deed of an undivided portion of the common factory property, and that, with his knowledge, suits respecting said property had been brought in his name with others as joint owners of the factory, and that he took an active part in making repairs and advising about the same, and in the manufacturing at the mill, although he had before that erased his name from the articles of copartnership. Carlton v. Ludlow W. Mill, 28 Vt. 504.

22. Where the plaintiff attempted to prove a partnership as existing between two defendants as inn-keepers, &c., by the admission of one of them, and by the course and circumstances of their business and their joint use of the tavern property;—Held, that, as tending to rebut such evidence and to prove that the defendants had not been in the joint receipt of the income of the tavern, it was admissible for one of the defendants to prove that the other had assigned tavern furniture and tavern accounts to a third person for the payment of his individual debts. Callender v. Sweat, 14 Vt. 160.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

1. In general.

23. A note signed by each member of a firm individually, instead of by the partnership name, because the payee so insisted, the consideration of which went into the partnership business, was held to be a partnership debt. Kendrick v. Tarbell, 27 Vt. 512.

24. One of three partners in a country store, the partnership being notorious, purchased a horse for which he gave his individual note, and afterwards sold the horse and put the avails with other money of the concern, but upon what conditions did not appear. Held, that the partnership was not liable, either in an action upon the note, or for goods sold. Holmes v. Burton, 9 Vt. 252. 36 Vt. 157.

25. The extent of the powers of a co-partnership, or of one of its members, to bind the firm, and the liability of the members, must be determined by the law of the place where the partnership was formed and had its place of business, although the transaction in question was had in another State. Cutler v. Thomas, 25 Vt. 73. Hastings v. Hopkinson, 28 Vt. 108.

26. Where a note is signed by one of two partners for partnership purposes, and under circumstances to constitute it a partnership debt, the other partner is under equal obligation to pay it; and though he pays it out of his private funds, it is thereby extinguished and he cannot keep it on foot so as to maintain an action upon it, but his payment becomes a matter of partnership accounting; and a subsequent naked promise by the signer to pay the note to the other, does not revive it as an obligation. Sprague v. Ainsworth, 40 Vt. 47.

2. In respect to partnership property, and partnership debts.

27. Real estate. Land paid for with partnership funds and occupied and used for the partnership benefit and conveyed to the partners jointly, though not described as partners, is partnership property, and should be so regarded even in a controversy for priority between partnership and private creditors. Willis v. Freeman, 35 Vt. 44. Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt. 479.

28. A and B being partners, B, for their joint benefit, but in his own name, bought certain standing timber, which was to be taken from the land by a day named. The timber was wholly paid for and with joint funds. It was not all got from the land by the day set, and afterwards the owner of the land, not insisting on a forfeiture, conveyed the land for the price of the mere land to B, and B afterwards cut and got off the timber. In a bill by A against B, to account;—Held, that they remained joint owners of the timber, and B was liable to account. Washburn v. Washburn, 23 Vt. 576.

29. While the orator and the defendant were partners, land was purchased for the partnership use, with the expectation that it would be paid for by the firm. The defendant, without the orator's knowledge, took the conveyance to himself alone and gave his own note for the price, which he afterwards paid from partnership funds, and the land was regarded and used as partnership property during the existence of the firm, being 26 years. Held, that the defendant held the title only as trustee for the firm, and he was decreed to convey an undivided half to the orator. Dewey v. Dewey, 35 Vt. 555.

30. Primary liability of partnership property for partnership debts. At law, both separate and joint creditors of a partnership may attach either separate or joint property, and may sell the personal property upon execution in satisfaction of their judgments, without regard to the equities of the debtors. Bardwell v. Perry, 19 Vt. 292. 29 Vt. 387. Reed v. Shepardson, 2 Vt. 120;—or may, in like manner, set off the lands upon execution. Clark v. Lyman, 8 Vt. 290.

31. A partnership contract imposes precisely the same obligation upon each separate partner that a sole and separate contract does, and there is no express or implied contract resulting from the law of partnership, that the separate estate shall go to pay separate debts exclusively. All that the separate creditors can require, in equity, is, that the partnership creditors shall exhaust their remedy against the partnership funds before resorting to the separate estate. Beyond this, or when there is no partnership estate, both sets of creditors stand precisely equal, both at law and in equity. Bardwell v. Perry.

32. In equity, the creditors of an insolvent partnership are entitled to have the partnership assets applied in satisfaction of their debts, in preference to the creditors of the individual partners, although the separate creditors may have first attached those assets. This is by virtue of a lien which each partner has, by implied contract, upon all the partnership effects until all the partnership debts are paid—the interest of each partner being only his share in the surplus after the partnership accounts are settled, and all just claims satisfied. Washburn v. Bank of Bellows Falls, 19 Vt. 278. Bardwell v. Perry, Id. 292. Shedd v. Wilson, 27 Vt. 478. Russ v. Fay, 29 Vt. 381. Willis v. Freeman, 35 Vt. 44. Miner v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 610.

33. A separate creditor of one member of a copartnership acquires no greater right by attachment of the partnership effects, than that member of the firm has, after payment of all the debts of the firm, and a final settlement between the copartners. Miner v. Pierce. Washburn v. Bank of Bellows Falls. Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt. 479. Shedd v. Wilson.

34. The creditors of an insolvent partnership have, in equity, a claim to the partnership property, which is paramount to any lien acquired by the attachment of it by either the creditors of the individuals composing the partnership, or the creditors of another firm composed of the same members together with others. Shedd v. Wilson.

35. Where a creditor of an individual partner attached that partner's interest in partnership property, being one-half, and the partnership was not shown to be then insolvent;—Held, in equity, that the lien thereby created was superior to that of a partnership creditor, subsequently acquired, although the partnership became insolvent before the recovery of judgment in the first case. Willis v. Freeman, 35 Vt. 44.

36. A and B were copartners in trade, and the partnership was insolvent, and B was indebted to the partnership, and was insolvent. C, a creditor of B, attached the partnership goods and sold on execution B's interest therein, and they were dispersed. In a bill by A against B and C;—Held, that C should account to A for the value of the goods, within the limits of B's indebtedness to A as partner. Miner v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 610.

37. Where several creditors of a partnership had made separate successive attachments of the partnership property, and brought their bill in chancery for relief against the previous attachments of separate creditors, the court granted the relief, but held that the partnership creditors should share the assets pro rata (the partnership being insolvent), and not in full, in the order of their attachments. Washburn v. Bank of Bellows Falls, 19 Vt. 278.

38. If the contract of copartnership, or association, be of such a nature that the individual associates have no lien upon the partnership funds for the payment of partnership liabilities before individual debts, the partnership creditors cannot claim such preference;—as, where the case was one of a universal hotchpot of all the property and liabilities, present and prospective, of the associates, constituting a community of goods and all other interests, without accounts kept, or settlement made, or possibility of making any. Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt. 479.

3. Act of one partner as binding the others.

39. One member of a partnership has no implied authority, as partner, to assign all the partnership property to a trustee for the benefit of the creditors of the firm, and thus put an end to the partnership. Redfield and Bennett, J. J., in Dana v. Lull, 17 Vt. 390.

40. The assignment of a partnership demand by one partner, to secure a loan by a third person to an employee of the firm, was held, under the circumstances stated, not so invalid as to leave the demand subject to trustee process against the firm. Crosier v. Shants, 48 Vt. 478.

41. A mere partnership relation does not authorize one partner to execute an instrument under seal, whereby a new and original obligation is created, which will be binding on the company as a specialty debt, or which can be enforced by an action of covenant; but an instrument, so executed, may become obligatory as the deed of the company, by a previous parol authority, or by a subsequent parol ratification by the other partners, and so as to sustain an action of covenant thereon. McDonald v. Eggleston, 26 Vt. 154.

42. One joint debtor cannot confess judgment for his co-debtors; as, one partner for his firm. Shedd v. Bank of Brattleboro, 32 Vt. 709.

43. One partner cannot, by virtue of his relation as partner, bind his copartner by the submission of a partnership matter to arbitration. St. Martin v. Thrasher, 40 Vt. 460.

44. The active partner of a firm accepted, for the firm, service of a writ against all the partners, and employed an attorney to review the cause, who entered a general appearance for the defendants, and reviewed from a judgment against them. Held, that all the partners were concluded thereby. Bennett v. Stickney, 17 Vt. 531.

45. Where a partnership was interested in the event of a suit, a release, by one of the firm, of all his claims as an individual and as a member of the firm, was held sufficient to render him competent as a witness. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

46. Where negotiable paper is rightly taken payable to a partnership, either partner may bind the firm by an indorsement, in the name of the firm, to a bona fide purchaser for value, although, as between the partners, the paper was the sole property of the one who indorsed it, and although the partners had agreed that no member should indorse paper to make the others liable. Barrett v. Russell, 45 Vt. 43.

47. Dealings with one partner. Where a party seeking to charge a partnership is apprised that the transaction is not for or on account of the firm, and that the credit is not for their benefit, and the act is not in the usual course of business, prima facie the firm is not bound, and he must show the authority or approbation of the partner attempted to be charged. It is not necessary that he should have known or believed that each member of the firm would approve the transaction; but it is necessary, in the absence of all proof of such assent or approbation, that he should not have known that the transaction was not for the benefit of the firm. Huntington v. Lyman, 1 D. Chip. 438.

48. Where a contract is made by one partner, in the name of the firm, which is beyond the scope of the partnership, a subsequent assent thereto may be inferred from the declarations or conduct of the other partners, so as to bind them. Waller v. Keyes, 6 Vt. 257.

49. One member of a firm of three made a negotiable promissory note, in the name of the firm, to a second member, who indorsed it to the plaintiff. In an action thereon against the firm;—Held, that the note and indorsement, prima facie, showed a good cause of action against the firm. Norton v. Downer, 15 Vt. 500.

50. If one partner purchases property upon his single credit, for the use of the partnership, and the seller is not aware of the existence of the partnership, he may, when he discovers it, have the benefit of the partnership liability. Griffith v. Buffum, 22 Vt. 181.

51. Where a contract is made with one partner and in his name alone, the other party knowing of the partnership, if it turns out that such partner was not justified in making the contract on behalf of the firm, the other partners are not liable. Chapman v. Devereux, 32 Vt. 616.

52. Where by the terms of a partnership one partner has no authority to purchase upon the credit of the partnership, or of some of the partners, and this is known to the vendor, a sale to one of the partners upon such credit will not bind the non-consenting partners.

Hastings v. Hopkinson, 28 Vt. 108. Chapman v. Devereux.

53. The private debts and transactions of one partner become matters of charge against the partnership, where the other partners assent. Miller v. Dow, 17 Vt. 235. Willard v. Collamer, 34 Vt. 594.

54. The acceptance of a claim against one partner as payment of a partnership claim, is payment. Churchill v. Bowman, 39 Vt. 518.

55. It is incident to ordinary partnerships, that either partner should have the right to interfere to prevent the diversion of the partnership property from the legitimate business of the partnership, as for the payment of the debts of one of the partners; but as to parties dealing with either of the partners, the intention thus to interfere should be so expressed, and be evidenced by such acts, as to leave no reasonable doubt upon the subject. Tyler v. Scott, 45 Vt. 261.

56. Defense and set-off. Where one in good faith and by agreement with one of the partners, receives the goods or services of a partnership in payment of, or to apply upon, his claim against such partner, although without the knowledge of the other partners, he may to that extent defend against an action by the firm. Strong v. Fish, 13 Vt. 277. Fay v. Green, 1 Aik. 71. 2 Aik. 886. 17 Vt. 237. 27 Vt. 868. 34 Vt. 597. Eaton v. Whitcomb, 17 Vt. 641. (Williams, C. J., dissenting.) Tyler v. Scott.

57. In an action by a partnership, the defendant may use, by way of defense or set-off, any claim which he has against that partner with whom he contracted or dealt without knowledge of the partnership, although such claim existed when the contract was entered into. Bryant v. Clifford, 27 Vt. 664. Hilliker v. Loop, 5 Vt. 116.

58. In book account by two, as partners, for goods sold, if in fact the goods and business belonged to only one of them, the defendant's account against that one may be set off and adjusted. Lewis v. Parks, 47 Vt. 336.

59. Notice to one. Notice to one of two partners is notice to both. Barney v. Currier, 1 D. Chip. 315. Stevens v. Goodenough, 26 Vt. 676.

60. So, as to others having a joint interest. Stevens v. Goodenough.

61. The plaintiffs, R, H and E, were partners owning some hay. The defendant asked R if he had any hay to sell, and said he was buying hay for one H, as his agent, as the fact was. R said he was not prepared to contract. The hay was not then all cut. The defendant said he would call again. Four weeks after, the defendant called and bought the hay of H, in the absence of the other partners and without the knowledge of R, the defendant not disclosing his agency and H having no knowledge thereof. Held—the conversation with R being no part of a negotiation for the hay—that the knowledge of the defendant's agency derived therefrom must be treated as if incidentally derived from a stranger, and did not become, constructively, knowledge by the firm; and that the defendant was personally liable. Baldwin v. Leonard, 39 Vt. 260.

62. Payment. Where part payment was made upon the promissory note of a firm, by one of the partners who was agent of the firm for making disbursements, &c.;—Held, that the fair intendment was, that it was made out of the joint funds of the partnership; and that such payment was not to be treated as a payment by the individual member, but by the entire firm on their joint account, and therefore took the case out of the statute of limitations as to all the partners. Carlton v. Ludlow W. Mill, 28 Vt. 504.

IV. DISSOLUTION AND CHANGE OF MEMBERSHIP.

1. Partner's authority after dissolution.

63. After the dissolution of a partnership, one of the partners has no implied authority to impose new obligations upon the firm, or to vary the form, or character, of those already existing; as, by giving a partnership note for a pre-existing partnership debt, or by stating a partnership account, so as to bind the firm. Woodworth v. Downer, 13 Vt. 522. Torrey v. Baxter, Id. 452.

64. A note executed by one partner in the name of the partnership and for a partnership debt, but not delivered by him until after the dissolution, was held not to bind the partnership, for that a note takes effect only from its delivery. Woodford v. Dorwin, 8 Vt. 82. 30 Vt. 25. Chamberlain v. Hopps, 8 Vt. 94.

65. A promissory note was indorsed by a firm as collateral security for a partnership debt. One of the partners afterwards paid that debt with his own money, and took up the indorsed note and, before its maturity, but after the expiration of the partnership, transferred it, so indorsed, in payment of his individual debt. Held, that by his payment of the debt for which the note was pledged, the indorsement became legally extinct, and that he could not, after the dissolution, re-transfer the note so as to bind the firm by the old indorsement. Dana v. Conant, 30 Vt. 246.

66. A member of a dissolved partnership may pay, or release, a partnership debt, and much more receive back a note or bill, which the firm had fraudulently put in circulation as payment of their debt; and thus leave the original demand in force. Torrey v. Baxter, 18 Vt. 452.

67. A payment to one partner, though after a dissolution and against the prohibition of the other, operates as a payment of the debt, when made in good faith and when it does not appear that it operates as a fraud upon the other partner. Thrall v. Seward, 37 Vt. 578.

68. An admission by one partner, made after a dissolution of the firm, in regard to the business of the firm previously transacted, is admissible as evidence against all the partners, and binding on the firm. Loomis v. Loomis, 26 Vt. 198.

2. Continuing liability.

69. Notice of dissolution. A retiring partner who was known to be a member of the firm, must publish notice of such retirement in some newspaper where advertisements are inserted and published in the place where the business is done, in order to shield himself from liability for the future debts of the firm, even to those with whom they have had no previous dealings; and as to those with whom the firm have had dealings, actual notice is requisite. Simonds v. Strong, 24 Vt. 642. Prentiss v. Sinclair, 5 Vt. 149.

70. Where a retiring partner suffers his name still to appear as one of the firm, he must be held liable as a partner to those who are misled by it into dealings as with the firm, although he may have given notice by newspaper publication that he has ceased to be a partner, and although such fact be generally known at the place where the contract is made, but not known to the persons so dealing. Wait v. Brewster, 31 Vt. 516. Amidown v. Osgood, 24 Vt. 278; and see Southwick v. Allen, 11 Vt. 75.

71. Other party's knowledge. A retiring partner cannot be held for a subsequent debt of the firm, if the creditor, at the time of the contract, was ignorant that such partner had belonged to the firm. Benton v. Chamberlain, 23 Vt. 711.

72. In order to hold an outgoing partner upon a contract as made with the firm, but after the dissolution, the plaintiff must show, (1), that he knew, when he made the contract, that the defendant had been a partner; (2), if he knew this, then that he did not know of the dissolution; and (3), that he contracted upon the faith and credit of the defendant as a partner. Pratt v. Page, 32 Vt. 13. Spaulding v. Ludlow Woolen Mill, 36 Vt. 150.

73. Held, that the defendant, who was a member of a division of the N. E. Protective Union when the dealings between the plaintiff and such division began, could not escape responsibility for the payment for goods sold to the division after he had withdrawn himself as a member, but before the plaintiff was notified of such withdrawal, unless it appeared that when the plaintiff [first] gave credit to the division he did not know that the defendant was a member. Tenny v. N. E. Protective Union, &c., 37 Vt. 64.

74. The plaintiff, an attorney, had been retained generally for the defendants, while partners, in all their business. C, one of the defendants, sold out all his interest to the others and retired from the firm. The plaintiff, on the application of the other defendants, brought a suit in the name of the firm upon a cause of action existing before the dissolution, and rendered services therein. He knew that C had retired from the firm, but it did not appear that he knew of the details, or that C had parted with his interest in the assets. In an action to recover for such services;—Held, that C was liable with the other defendants. Cahoon v. Hobart, 38 Vt. 244.

75. A and B, the plaintiffs, were partners in the ownership and running of a saw-mill. A sold his half of the mill and lumber on hand, but not his half of the partnership accounts. These he left with an attorney for collection, and absconded. B notified the defendant, a debtor of the partnership, to pay no one but himself, and demanded the accounts of the attorney, which the attorney refused to surrender. B then brought this suit in the name of A & B, after which the defendant paid his debt to said attorney, taking from him a release, of which A was informed and he approved it. Held, that such payment and release were not a bar to the suit. Ayer v. Ayer, 41 Vt. 346.

76. Change of membership. The death of a member of a partnership designed to be continuing and to have perpetuity, as a division of the N. E. Protective Union, does not work a dissolution of the partnership. Tenney v. N. E. Protective Union, &c., 37 Vt. 64.

77. The formation of a new partnership, alone, is no evidence of a dissolution of a previous one existing between some members of the new firm; but the discontinuance of the business of an old firm and the formation of a new one, who succeed in business at the same store, does tend to prove a dissolution. Southwick v. Allen, 11 Vt. 75.

78. Where the defendant's dealings with a former firm are, by his consent, carried into the accounts of a succeeding firm and charged to him, they become proper matters for adjustment in the action of book account between the second firm and the defendant. Eaton v. Whitcomb, 17 Vt. 641.

79. Where the property and liabilities of a partnership had become merged in a succeeding corporation and the partnership extinguished, and the orators had for some two years dealt with the parties on this basis, transferring the partnership account to the corporation and taking judgment against the corporation for their entire claim;—Held, that they could not, upon the insolvency of the corporation, go against the partnership for any part of their claim. Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425.

80. Where a change takes place in the membership of a firm, and the account with a customer goes on as one continuous, open and current account, or the old balance is carried forward and blended in the general account with other transactions, and he makes payments generally on the account, for the purpose of reducing the general balance, such payments, the rights of third persons and sureties not being affected, will be first applied to the extinguishment of the earliest accounts. Morgan v. Tarbell, 28 Vt. 498.

81. A surviving partner is not bound by the agreement of his deceased partner, to apply upon a partnership demand his individual indebtedness,—the application not having been in fact made. Stearns v. Houghton, 38 Vt. 588.

82. Certain promissory notes belonging to a partnership, though made payable to one of the partners who afterwards deceased with the notes in his possession, passed into the hands of the defendant as his administrator. Held, that the defendant was liable to the surviving partner in trover, for refusal to deliver the notes on demand. Id.

V. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES.

1. Between the partners.

83. Action at law. In a partnership of three, two cannot sue the third at law, for property of the firm received by him, although charged to him on the partnership books. Judd v. Wilson, 6 Vt. 185.

84. No action at law lies on a contract with a partnership of which the plaintiff is a member. Estes v. Whipple, 12 Vt. 373.

85. Assumpsit will not lie by one partner against another, to recover an unliquidated and unsettled balance of a partnership business. Spear v. Newell, 13 Vt. 288.

86. If partners, by an express agreement, separate a distinct matter from the partnership dealing, and one expressly agrees to pay the other a specific sum for that matter, assumpsit will lie on that contract, although the matter arose from their partnership dealing. Collamer v. Foster, 26 Vt. 754.

87. — in chancery. To settle and adjust a partnership, and to recover from a partner who has received none of the avails of the concern, a balance due to make up losses, a bill in chancery is the only remedy. Spear v. Newell, 13 Vt. 288.

88. Winding up of a "union store" in chancery. Stimson v. Lewis, 36 Vt. 91. Henry v. Jackson, 37 Vt. 431.

89. Account, and accounting. In an action of account to settle the affairs of a partnership engaged in the business of buying and selling wool;—Held, that the several partners were entitled to interest on the money advanced in the business, from the time it was advanced. Hodges v. Parker, 17 Vt. 242.

90. In an action of account between partners, the plaintiff was held entitled to charge a reasonable compensation for his services in closing up the business of the firm after its dissolution, although there was no agreement to that effect, and although, by the terms of co-partnership, he was not to receive compensation for services during its continuance. Bradley v. Chamberlin, 16 Vt. 613.

91. Where, on the dissolution of a partnership, one partner agreed to collect the partnership demands, and divide after deducting "all expenses and costs of collecting," and he sent out his clerk for this purpose and paid the clerk only his customary wages during the time;—Held, that such partner was not entitled to claim any larger sum, on the ground that such clerk's services would have been worth more to him, if the clerk had remained in his individual employment. Porter v. Wheeler, 37 Vt. 281.

92. A partner is liable to make up, in his accounting with the partnership, for losses occasioned by his diversion of the funds, and for his fraud and unfaithfulness occasioning loss. Pierce v. Daniels, 25 Vt. 624.

93. A, B, C and D entered into an arrangement to purchase a patent right, to pay equally towards the purchase, and each to own one-quarter of the patent right, and to share equally in the profits and loss upon sales. The purchase was made by one of the associates, who falsely represented the price paid by him to be greater than the truth was, and the other associates contributed towards the purchase according to the report so falsely made. Upon a bill in chancery for settlement of the partnership and for an account;—Held, that, upon the adjustment of the accounts, such over-payments were a proper charge in favor of the parties making them, so as to make the parties equal in the purchase. Penniman v. Munson, 26 Vt. 164.

94. A and B were co-partners and equal owners in trade, having a shop at J and one at W. The business at J was managed by B alone. From that business A never received anything, and B showed no losses, but the effects there had been expended. All the effects at W had gone into the business and to pay partnership debts. On a bill to settle the partnership;—Held, that B could not object to being charged with the value of the goods taken to the shop at J, and to paying A the one-half. Minor v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 610.

95. Special cases. The covenant of one partner to the other, to pay all the partnership debts with the avails of the partnership property after the expiration of the partnership, is discharged by a joint sale of all the partnership property before dissolution, where the covenantee alone receives the pay, and by an assignment to the covenantee, after dissolution, of all the covenantor's interest in the partnership. Austin v. Cummings, 10 Vt. 26.

96. Where one partner, not well acquainted with the affairs of the firm, purchased of the other a part of his interest, and gave a note therefor, on the false representations of the latter, afterwards discovered to be fraudulent, as to the value of such interest, the firm being in fact insolvent at the time, and so the interest purchased worthless;—Held, that such facts were a defense to the note, and this without an offer to rescind; for, there being no residuum after payment of debts, the purchase was of a thing which did not exist, and therefore could not be restored. Smith v. Smith, 30 Vt. 139.

97. P and K dissolved their partnership, K taking the partnership property and giving P a note for $938, and agreeing to pay all partnership liabilities. K afterwards failed, leaving the partnership liabilities unpaid to the amount of $1,500, and informed P that he could not pay them, and that P must. Finally, upon K's proposal, P agreed to pay K $700 upon being indemnified by certain persons named against such partnership liabilities. K procured the indemnity proposed, and paid P the balance of the note after deducting the $700, and P surrendered to him the note and discharged the mortgage given to secure it. Held, that the indemnity was a sufficient consideration for the compromise, and that, in the absence of fraud on the part of K, P could not recover the $700, as due upon the note, or otherwise. Parmenter v. Kingsley, 45 Vt. 382.

98. K, the plaintiff, one of the partnership of B and K, engaged in the manufacture and sale of slate mantels, sold his interest in the business and property of the firm, including debts due, to the defendant, upon condition that the property sold should remain the property of the plaintiff until paid for, and until the liabilities of that firm, which the defendant assumed, should be paid. B retained his interest in the business and kept along in it as partner with the defendant. The defendant, with the consent and concurrence of B and in the usual course of business, sold a portion of said property, without having fully paid for his purchase and without having paid any of the liabilities of K & B, not intending at the time to appropriate the avails thereof contrary to his agreement; but, subsequently, he did appropriate such avails to his private use, and abandoned the business. Held, that the defendant was not liable in trover for the property so sold. Kellogg v. Fox, 45 Vt. 348.

99. The defendants, T and D, gave their bond to E, the plaintiff, conditioned to indemnify him against all claims, &c., due from the firm of E, T and D, among which were certain notes of this firm to the firm of E and L. The notes having fallen due, E & L charged them to the private account of E, with his consent, and gave them up to him. Held, that this was a payment of the notes by the plaintiff, and that the defendants were liable to him upon the bond,—his being a member of both partnerships not affecting the question. Emerson v. Torrey, 10 Vt. 323.

2. As to third persons.

100. Joinder of parties. Where one member of a partnership contracts separately, and so declares, he cannot afterwards in a suit against him object that his co-partner is not joined, though such partner may have been interested in the contract. Goddard v. Brown, 11 Vt. 278.

101. Where one member of a partnership makes a contract, and the partnership is not disclosed nor known to the other party, but credit is given to such partner alone, he may be sued without joining the other partners. Blin v. Pierce, 20 Vt. 25. Hagar v. Stone, 20 Vt. 106. Cleveland v. Woodward, 15 Vt. 302.

102. Where a contract is made with one of several partners by one who is not aware of the partnership, but supposes he is contracting only with the individual, such partner may maintain an action upon the contract in his own name; or, he may bring it in the name of all the partners. Curtis v. Belknap, 21 Vt. 433.

103. One who is a nominal and ostensible partner may be joined as plaintiff, although he has no interest in the firm. Waite v. Dodge, 34 Vt. 181.

104. A partner whose "name was not known nor used in the business of the firm," was held to be a dormant partner. Waite v. Dodge.

105. A dormant partner may, or may not, be joined as plaintiff in a suit, and the joinder or omission is no ground for abatement, nonsuit, or writ of error. Id. Lapham v. Green, 9 Vt. 407. Hiliker v. Loop, 5 Vt. 116. Morton v. Webb, 7 Vt. 123.

106. Joinder of claims. A plaintiff may join, in one action, his individual claims with those he has as a surviving partner. Wood v. Insurance Co. 81 Vt. 565.

107. In an action by one as surviving partner, the defendant may set off a claim against the plaintiff individually, unless it appears that partnership creditors have a lien upon the balance of the plaintiff's account. Meador v. Leslie, 2 Vt. 569. Meador v. Scott, 4 Vt. 26. 31 Vt. 565.

108. Individual contract. An order drawn upon a firm for the funds which the drawer had in the firm, directing the firm to pay the plaintiff whatever they, or either member of the firm, might have in possession, was accepted by the defendant, one of the partners, individually, he having the control and management of the business out of which the money was expected to come. Held, that the defendant was individually liable on his acceptance, either on a special count, or for money had and received. Prentiss v. Foster, 26 Vt. 742.

PATENT.

Where a patented invention is only a new combination of old materials before in use, it is not an infringement to use one or all the materials forming the composition, and for the same purpose, provided they are not used in the combination patented; nor is it an infringement to use them in combination with some other material—the difference not being merely colorable. Byam v. Eddy (U. S. C. C.), 24 Vt. 666.

III. REMOVAL OF PAUPER.

1. Who are subject to removal.
2. Order of removal.
3. Appeal.
4. Pleadings.
5. Validity and effect of order.

IV. EXPENSES FOR RELIEF OF PAUPER.

V. PROCEEDINGS AGAINST AND BETWEEN KINDRED.

VI. WRONGFUL TRANSPORTATION OF PAUPER.

VII. CERTAIN CONTRACTS.

I. OVERSEERS OF THE POOR.

1. Binding out pauper. Authority of overseers of the poor to bind out pauper children as apprentices, under the statute of 1797. Warner v. Sweet, 7 Vt. 446. 22 Vt. 580.

2. Overseers, in binding out to apprenticeship a pauper child, have no authority to bind the town by a covenant for faithful service of the apprentice for the term. Baldwin v. Rupert, 8 Vt. 256.

3. Binding town by contract. Overseers may bind the town by contract for the support of the poor; and one of them, requested by the others to take charge of a particular pauper, may contract for his support so as to bind the town. Washington v. Rising, Brat. 188.

4. The selectmen and overseers of the poor cannot bind the town by contract to pay for the support of a pauper having a legal settlement in such town, beyond the sum of five dollars, without an order from a justice of the peace, in pursuance of section 20 of the pauper act of 1797. Ives v. Wallingford, 8 Vt. 224.

5. Otherwise, in case of a transient pauper. Harrington v. Alburgh, 14 Vt. 182.

6. An overseer of the poor has authority to employ counsel, at the charge of the town, to give legal advice and assistance in the matter of paupers, their removal, &c. Burton v. Norwich, 84 Vt. 845.

7. Personal liability. The defendant, one of the overseers of the poor, contracted, in behalf of the town, with the plaintiff, for the support of a poor person belonging to the town and needing relief, but he neglected to procure an order from a justice for an allowance, according to section 20 of the act of 1797, so that the town, in a suit for such support, was held not liable beyond the sum of five dollars (8 Vt. 224). Held, that the defendant was liable in assumpsit for such support, above the sum of five dollars. Ives v. Hulet, 12 Vt. 314. Williams, C. J., and Redfield, J., dissenting.

8. An overseer of the poor received a small legacy due the plaintiff, who was a non compos without a guardian, and a town pauper, and gave his receipt therefor, as overseer, to the executor, and applied a part of the legacy, properly and judiciously, in the necessary support of the plaintiff. Held, that the estate of the overseer was liable for the balance expended, but for that only. Thurston v. Holbrook, 81 Vt. 354.

9. Custody of pauper. The plaintiff agreed with a town, in town meeting, to board for one year, at a small price per week, a certain child of six years who was a fixed charge upon the town as a pauper. Held, that the plaintiff thereby acquired the right to the custody, control, and earnings of the child, for the year, and that the overseer of the poor had no right to remove the child, even for the purpose of binding him out—the town, his superior, having acted. Houston v. Kimball, 22 Vt. 575.

10. Held, also, that the father of the child, who was wholly destitute of a home and means of support, and who had never contributed to the support of the child, could not interfere with the plaintiff's custody of the child. Id.

11. Pauper in jail. An actual commitment to jail of a pauper, casts upon the jailer and overseer of the poor, after the requisite notice, the duty of providing for his support; and this duty is not dependent upon the legality of the process on which he stands committed. Newfane v. Dummerston, 34 Vt. 184.

12. Overseer's book. A book of accounts kept by an overseer of the poor, under the requirements of G. S. c. 20, s. 88, showing the expenditures for the poor, was held to be original evidence, in behalf of the town, of the fact of an expenditure for a particular pauper. Cabot v. Walden, 46 Vt. 11.

II. SETTLEMENT.

1. In one's own right.

13. Act of 1779. A legal settlement was acquired in a town by one year's continuous residence therein, between the years 1779 and 1787, under the pauper act of 1779. Corinth v. Newbury, 18 Vt. 496. Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 416.

14. Act of 1797. "Coming and residing in this State," as provided in the settlement act of 1797, does not require the coming from another State, but applies also to such persons as were within the State at the passage of the act who had no settlement in it. Burlington v. Calais, 1 Vt. 885. Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 18 Vt. 215.

15. "Able-bodied." The health ordinarily enjoyed by men of health, and the physical ability ordinarily possessed by men of sound bodies, make one "healthy and able-bodied," within the meaning of the act of 1797, s. 1, relating to legal settlement; and this, notwithstanding casual and temporary illness, or bodily unsoundness producing an occasional and temporary effect upon the man's capacity to gain a livelihood by his bodily exertions. Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 15 Vt. 200.

16. Repeal. The repeal of the settlement act of 1797 by the act of 1801, although without a saving clause, did not terminate a settlement acquired under the first act. Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 18 Vt. 215.

17. Residence. Residence under the settlement acts does not require that the head of the family should remain constantly in the town with his family, if he there keeps up his family establishment, and intends living in that town unless he finds a place that suits him elsewhere. Burlington v. Calais, 1 Vt. 885.

18. The residence of a man in a town so as to confer a settlement, is not continued by his wife and family in his absence from the State, where the family establishment is discontinued and broken up. Middletown v. Poultney, 2 Vt. 437. 7 Vt. 410.

19. The time a person is a patient in any lunatic asylum is not to be computed toward making up a settlement. (G. S. c. 20, s. 40.) Peacham v. Weeks, 48 Vt. 78.

20. A single woman, in the year 1812, went to her brother's in T, taking with her her bed, chests, chairs, &c., which remained there for several years, though she was generally absent in other towns. She returned to her brother's in T, winters, staying with him from one to three months; and, generally, she went to her brother's once or twice summers, staying a few days. Held, that for purposes of settlement, her residence, or home, was in T. Newbury v. Topsam, 7 Vt. 407.

21. The residence of a pauper who is a single man, is at the place where he makes his home. [Certain facts stated indicating such home.] Williams, C. J. Kirby v. Waterford, 14 Vt. 414.

22. Act of 1817—Sui juris. Since the act of 1817 (G. S. c. 19), such residence, to give a settlement, must not only have been continuous during the entire seven years, but must have been sui juris. Residence as wife, or child not emancipated, cannot be tacked to a subsequent residence in one's own right, so as to make up the requisite period. Brookfield v. Hartland, 10 Vt. 424. Poultney v. Glover, 23 Vt. 328.

23. A settlement by residence for the term of seven years, under the act of 1817, is confined to persons "of full age"—that is, the age of legal majority. A residence during minority, though the infant was emancipated, is not to be reckoned. Hartford v. Hartland, 19 Vt. 392.

24. Chargeable. Where there is a necessity for granting relief to a poor person, and it is granted, in good faith, by the town where he resides, this may prevent his residence ripening into a settlement, although such relief was not furnished upon his personal application, nor by his authority. Walden v. Cabot, 25 Vt. 522. (G. S. c. 19, s. 1.)

25. Aid furnished by a town to a poor person, in discharge of an obligation assumed by contract, and not of a duty imposed by statute, does not prevent his acquiring a settlement. Cavendish v. Mt. Holly, 48 Vt. 525.

26. A poor person does not become chargeable to a town, so as to prevent his acquiring a settlement by residence, by receiving aid from the town upon a sufficient pledge of his property as security for payment, the town realizing payment from the pledge. This is only a borrowing of money. Montpelier v. Calais, 5 Vt. 571.

27. Registry. Under the act of 1817, residence to give a settlement is to be computed only from the date of registry; and, under the act of 1823, a previous residence, without registry, is not to be computed towards the gaining of a future settlement. Newfane v. Dummerston, 84 Vt. 184.

28. Residence—voluntary. In order that one's living in a town should confer a legal settlement, it must not be the result of legal coercion, but there must be liberty of choice whether to live there, or elsewhere. Woodstock v. Hartland, 21 Vt. 563.

29. A person non compos cannot be said to go to a town to reside, though he may have lived there 14 years. He is to be regarded, all the while, as a transient person, except in the town of his legal settlement. The animus manendi cannot be predicated of him. Ryegate v. Wardsboro, 32 Vt. 411-414.

30. A pauper, by procurement of her brother who was under obligation to support her, went to live with another brother in Landgrove, and lived with him there for more than seven years. She was not "what is called bright;" was taken care of and provided with everything, by way of support; worked about the coarser kitchen work; knitting and sewing some; handy about taking care of small children; and, on the whole, doing sufficient service to compensate for her support. She could read in easy reading, but not long hard words; in conversation appeared broken and childlike; was accustomed to attend church, and behaved with propriety. If left to look out for herself, she was not capable of taking care of herself by seeking employment and making contracts, and providing herself with places to live, and with proper clothing and support, nor of exercising an intent of remaining or moving in, and to, and from, different places, except as she was controlled by those who had care of her. Held, that this was not a finding that the pauper was an idiot or non compos, but only that she was a person of weak intellect, yet having sufficient mental capacity to have a choice and desire as to her place of residence; and, it not appearing that she was acting under any compulsion, or restraint, or against her wishes, nor that she did not act freely and of her own choice as to her place of living, held that such residence gave her a settlement in Landgrove, although acting under the influence of her friends. Ludlow v. Landgrove, 42 Vt. 137.

31. The question whether a pauper has come to reside in a town, is one of fact. Two things are necessary to show such a residence; first, he must have come to the town actually, not by mere intention or constructively; secondly, he must have come there animo manendi, or, being there, he must intend to remain there, and must have abandoned all intention of returning to the town whence he came. Coercion or necessity, by taking away the intention of remaining, takes away from residence the essential elements of its existence as a legal residence, under the statute. Brownington v. Charleston, 32 Vt. 411.

32. Where a man having his residence, home, and family in town A, was arrested and confined in jail in town B upon a bailable criminal charge, leaving his family in A and intending to return there when his imprisonment should be ended;—Held, that the period of his imprisonment should be reckoned as part of the time requisite to give him a legal settlement in A. Northfield v. Vershire, 33 Vt. 110.

33. Transient person. A person brought from another town and confined in jail is a "transient person" under the pauper acts, and cannot be said to have "come to reside." He is not subject to an order of removal, and cannot acquire a settlement by such enforced residence. Pawlet v. Rutland, Brayt. 175. Manchester v. Rupert, 6 Vt. 291. Danville v. Putney, 6 Vt. 512. 21 Vt. 566.

34. Where a debtor from the town of H was committed to jail in W on execution, and gave a jail-bond and was admitted to the liberties, and then removed his family to W within the liberties, hired a house there and resided in it with his family, and supported them for more than seven years, and paid his taxes in the town of W, and committed no breach of his bond;—Held, that he acquired no settlement by such residence, and that on being recommitted to close jail and being then aided by W, that town could recover of the town of H where he had his legal settlement when first committed to jail, the sum expended in his support. Woodstock v. Hartland, 21 Vt. 563. 32 Vt. 414. 33 Vt. 113.

35. Continuous residence. To gain a settlement under the act of 1817 by a residence "for the term of seven years," the residence must be continuous for seven successive years, without interruption. Royalton v. Bethel, 10 Vt. 22. Monkton v. Panton, 12 Vt. 250. 19 Vt. 397. 33 Vt. 159.

36. Residence a fact—Home. A person residing in Jamaica purchased some land in another part of the town, cleared a part, and had cut some timber for building him a house upon it, when he removed to Londonderry with his wife and family, taking all his furniture and implements of housekeeping, except a few articles of little value, or use, and resided there 29 days, when he moved back to Jamaica. The court charged the jury, upon these facts, that although such person [a pauper] when he moved to Londonderry, intended speedily to build said house and return and live therein, yet, if he left no shelter or dwelling in existence in Jamaica to which he intended to return, and intended also to remain in Londonderry until he built said house, such removal would interrupt his residence in Jamaica. Held correct.

Residence is a fact. Mere intention does not constitute a residence; as, in this case, the man had no local habitation or place which he could justly call home, to return to. Jamaica v. Townshend, 19 Vt. 267. 26 Vt. 552. 33 Vt. 59. Id. 164.

37. Where a pauper, with his family and effects, moved from Hartford into New Hampshire in order to learn the trade of shoemaking, staid three or four months and then moved back to Hartford;—Held, that although he may have contemplated a return to Hartford at some future and uncertain time, his residence at Hartford was interrupted. Hartford v. Hartland, 19 Vt. 392. 33 Vt. 163.

38. M, having no family, nor property, except his clothes and two axes, worked at different places in B, from 1850 to 1859, except that from July, 1852, to the spring of 1853, and from January, 1855, to the following spring, he worked in three other towns, taking with him his effects. He had no particular home anywhere; his engagements to labor were not for any particular periods, but he seemed to desire to stay, as long as he could, wherever he could find employment and people would keep him,—he being subject to fits, &c. Held, that an intention on his part to return to B, to seek a home and employment there at the expiration of his particular term of service elsewhere, he having no particular place or home to which he intended to return, was not sufficient to keep up his residence in B during such absences therefrom. Barton v. Irasburgh, 33 Vt. 159.

39. Intent. The animus revertendi, as aiding to continue a residence during a personal absence, must be a present, fixed, and continuous intention, and not a mere desire, or mental purpose of return at some future indefinite time. Id. Jamaica v. Townshend, 19 Vt. 270. Hartford v. Hartland, Id. 397.

40. Residence under former act. A residence commenced under the act of 1801 cannot be computed as any part of the term of seven years' residence required by the act of 1817, for gaining a settlement. Monkton v. Panton, 12 Vt. 250. (G. S. c. 19, s. 1, eighth.)

41. Previous settlement. Under the act of 1817, a settlement was not gained by residence in a town for seven years, unless the person had a previous legal settlement in some other town in this State. Sutton v. Burke, 15 Vt. 730.

42. Foreigner. The statute providing for the acquiring of a settlement in a town at the time of its organization (Slade's stat. 382. G. S. c. 19, s. 1, 7th division), applies to unnaturalized foreigners, as well as to all other persons of full age. Derby v. Salem, 30 Vt. 723.

43. Jurisdictional limits. A settlement is gained by residence within the jurisdictional limits of a town, although without the charter boundaries. Corinth v. Newbury, 18 Vt. 496. Landgrope v. Peru, 16 Vt. 422. Reading v. Weathersfield, 30 Vt. 504.

44. But if the jurisdictional line is disputed and unsettled, the jurisdiction being claimed and exercised by both towns, then the settlement will be determined by the charter boundaries. Landgrope v. Peru.

45. Where town C, for more than seven years, had levied and collected taxes of a resident upon land outside its charter limits, caused his children to be returned as belonging to one of its school districts, and allowed him to vote at its town meetings, there being no evidence of counter-jurisdiction exercised over this particular land and resident by town W, within whose charter limits they were situate;—Held, that the party thereby acquired a settlement in town C. Reading v. Weathersfield, 30 Vt. 504.

46. Change of settlement. A settlement acquired by residence within the jurisdictional limits of a town, although without its charter boundaries, is not changed by an act of the Legislature changing the jurisdictional line. Landgrope v. Peru, 16 Vt. 422.

47. A settlement once obtained in this State is not lost by afterwards acquiring a settlement in another State of the United States. Georgia v. Grand Isle, 1 Vt. 464.

48. All that is required in order to change a legal settlement by seven years' residence is, that the person, being sui juris, should have his permanent domicile for seven consecutive years in the second town, and keep himself, and family, if he have one, from becoming chargeable to either town. Tunbridge v. Norwich, 17 Vt. 493.

49. Evidence. The declarations of a pauper that he was then living in a particular town and had been for a year previous thereto, were held inadmissible to prove the fact of residence in such town previous to the date of the declarations, though within the year named—and quære whether admissible to prove the fact of residence at the date of the declarations. Such declarations as to a past residence, are clearly not evidence of the fact. Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 416. Derby v. Salem, 30 Vt. 722. 41 Vt. 106.

50. The supporting of a poor person by the overseers of the poor, upon the supposition or understanding that his legal settlement was in such town, was held not conclusive of the settlement. Barre v. Morristown, 4 Vt. 574.

51. Settlement by paying taxes. In order to gain a settlement under the act of 1797 by reason of having been charged with, and the payment of, public rates or taxes, &c., it must appear that a tax had been assessed against, as well as paid by, the pauper. Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 18 Vt. 215.

52. — by being listed. In order to acquire a settlement under sec. 4 of the act of Nov. 4, 1817, by reason of a list of $60 or upwards for five years in succession, the party's estate must be "set in the list" at that sum. It is not enough that the party's estate remained sufficient to produce that sum if the listing law had not, before the fifth year, been changed. Manchester v. Dorset, 14 Vt. 224.

53. And held, that the party's list of April 1, 1817, could not be counted as one of the five to complete the settlement, the act being prospective. Id.

54. — by purchase of estate. Under section one of the pauper act of 1797, it was held a sufficient payment on the "purchase of a freehold estate of the value of $100," that the party purchased land for the price of $250 and paid $100 down, taking a deed, and with no lien on the land for the balance. Kirby v. Waterford, 15 Vt. 758.

55. Estate in one's own right. Where one took a farm to carry on at the halves and to pay one-half the taxes, and the farm and stock were set in the grand list to himself and the owner jointly;—Held, that this was not a holding "in his own right" so as to give a settlement under the pauper act of 1817. Newfane v. Dummerston, 34 Vt. 184.

56. Real estate of a wife is not, as the statutes now are, so held by the husband "in his own right," as that the assessment of their estate to him for purposes of taxation, at the sum of three dollars or upwards for five years in succession, will affect his settlement under G. S. c. 19, s. 1. Baltimore v. Chester, 47 Vt. 648.

57. Holding office. Where a pauper had been a lister in the town of W in the year 1823, and also in 1827, but had, between those dates, resided in another town some ten months;—Held, that he did not thereby, under the law of 1817, acquire a settlement in W; that the two years of holding the office need not be consecutive, but that the residence was required to be continuous. Lincoln v. Warren, 19 Vt. 170.

2. By derivation.

58. Common law—Wife and children. Previous to the pauper act of 1817, a wife took a derivative settlement from her husband, and minor children from their father, upon principles of the common law, there being then no statute upon the subject. Wells v. Westhaven 5 Vt. 322. Manchester v. Springfield, 15 Vt. 385. Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 416.

59. Wife's maiden settlement. When a husband has a legal settlement in this State, the wife takes it, and retains it after divorce a vinculo the same as if he were dead. It is only in case that the husband has no settlement in the State, that the wife is remitted to her maiden settlement. Royalton v. West Fairlee, 11 Vt. 488.

60. The marriage of a woman having a legal settlement, to a man having no legal settlement in this State, does not destroy her maiden settlement, nor so far suspend it as to prevent her children, born of that marriage, from taking that settlement. The marriage only suspends, during coverture, one of the ordinary incidents of a settlement, viz: the right of removal; and this, only for the reason that such removal would separate the family. (G. S. c. 19, s. 1.) Newark v. Sutton, 40 Vt. 261.

61. Void marriage. A marriage celebrated by a justice of the peace without the consent of the parties, by the constraint and coercion of others, and not followed by cohabitation, was held void, and not to affect the settlement of the woman. Mount Holly v. Andover, 11 Vt. 226. 18 Vt. 467. 43 Vt. 725.

62. The marriage of a woman does not confer upon her the settlement of the man to whom she was married, where a decree of nullity of the marriage has been rendered. Such decree is conclusive evidence of the invalidity of the marriage. (G. S. c. 70, s. 16.) Reading v. Ludlow, 43 Vt. 628.

63. Abandonment. When the husband, having no legal settlement in this State, abandons his wife and goes without the State, she is remitted to the settlement she had before marriage. Royalton v. West Fairlee, 11 Vt. 488. Bethel v. Tunbridge, 18 Vt. 445. Rupert v. Winhall, 29 Vt. 245. Wilmington v. Jamaica, 42 Vt. 694. Winhall v. Landgrove, 45 Vt. 376.

64. A wife was held to take the settlement of her husband and to be removable with him, although he had abandoned her and his family, in the State of New York, more than twenty years before the order of removal and had never cohabited with her after such abandonment, and although she and the family remained in the State of New York during all the time that he was acquiring, by residence, a settlement in the town to which they were removed. Tunbridge v. Norwich, 17 Vt. 493.

65. Minor child. Before the revised statutes of 1889, a child not of age nor emancipated, took the settlement of his father; and if the father died, and the mother subsequently acquired a new settlement in her own right, the child took the new settlement of the mother. Bradford v. Lunenburg, 5 Vt. 481.

66. But since 1889, it is only where the father has no settlement in the State, that the child follows and has the settlement of the mother. (G. S. c. 19 s. 1.) Sharon v. Cabot, 29 Vt. 394.

67. A child takes the settlement of his mother, when the father has none in the State, although the right of removal may not exist; and when such right of removal arises, as by the pauper's becoming of age, he may be removed to the town of the mother's settlement. Rupert v. Winhall, 29 Vt. 245.

68. Where a widow gains a settlement in her own right, this is communicated to her minor children; but her settlement acquired by marriage is not communicated to her children by a former husband. Wells v. Westhaven, 5 Vt. 322.

69. —born in another State. Children born in other States of the United States, of parents who have a settlement in this State, take such settlement themselves, by derivation, on coming into this State, whether the parent, whose settlement they thus take, ever returns into the State, or not. Westford v. Essex, 31 Vt. 459. Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 416. Waterford v. Fayston, 29 Vt. 530.

70. —born out of U. S. A child born in a foreign State—as, Canada,—of a parent who, having a settlement in this State, removed therefrom and became permanently domiciled in such foreign State, is an alien born, and does not, on coming into this State, whether a minor or of full age, take the settlement of such parent, whether or not the parent also returns. Westford v. Essex. Lyndon v. Danville, 28 Vt. 809. Albany v. Derby, 30 Vt. 718. Elmore v. Calais, 33 Vt. 468.

71. —an apprentice. A minor, bound out as an apprentice, does not gain a settlement by residence with his master, but his settlement follows that of his father. Benson v. Westhaven, Brayt. 187.

72. Emancipation. A child becoming of full age, and emancipated, does not take derivatively the settlement subsequently acquired by his father, though perfected, as to the father, by a continued residence commenced before such emancipation. Poultney v. Glover, 23 Vt. 328. Sharon v. Cabot, 29 Vt. 394. (G. S. c. 19, s. 2).

73. A child by arriving at full age becomes, at least prima facie, emancipated, so as not to take an after acquired settlement of the parent; and, quaere, whether, under our statute, a child, unless non compos, can, by continuing to reside with his parent, after becoming of full age, take by derivation an after acquired settlement of the parent. Hardwick v. Pawlet, 36 Vt. 320.

74. Emancipation under the pauper laws exists, when the infant contracts a new relation inconsistent with being a part of the family of his parents. Williams, C. J., in Wells v. Westhaven, 5 Vt. 326. Aldis, J., in Sherburne v. Hartland, 37 Vt. 529. Bradford v. Lunenburg, 5 Vt. 490.

75. As, where the infant marries. After that, he was held subject to a warning-out process under the act of 1801; and held, that, not being warned out, he acquired a new settlement distinct from his parents, by one year's residence after marriage and during his infancy. Sherburne v. Hartland, 37 Vt. 528.

76. A mere residence with another, separate from the family of the parent, is not emancipation. Where an infant from the age of sixteen to twenty-one lived separate from his mother, a widow;—Held, that he followed his mother's settlement. Bradford v. Lunenburg, 5 Vt. 481.

77. In order to constitute the emancipation of an infant by act of the parents, it must appear that they have absolutely transferred all their right to the care and control of the infant, and all their right to his services; and that the person to whom such rights are transferred has accepted the infant as his own, and agreed to stand in loco parentis. It should clearly appear that such was the intention of the parties. Wilson, J., in Tunbridge v. Eden, 89 Vt. 21. In this case, the pauper was given, at 18 months old, by his parents to another "to keep as his own child," and they had no further care or control of him. Held, that the infant was thereby emancipated, and did not take the subsequently acquired settlement of his parents. Id. 17

78. A child upon becoming of full age is prima facie emancipated, though continuing to reside in the family of the parent. This presumption is liable to be rebutted, by showing that the child was not in fact emancipated, but continued to reside in the family of the parent upon the same terms as during his minority. Kellogg, J., in Piquitney v. Glover, 23 Vt. 332.

79. The mere fact that a minor child is not removed with the parents under an order of removal, is no proof of emancipation. Rupert v. Sandgate, 10 Vt. 278.

80. Bastard. Before the pauper act of 1817, the rule of the common law prevailed, that a bastard has his settlement where born, unless fraud was practiced to occasion the birth to happen at that place, or the mother had been transported or conducted thither under legal authority. A bastard did not take a derivative settlement from the mother. Manchester v. Springfield, 15 Vt. 385. Burlington v. Essex, 19 Vt. 91.

81. A woman having no settlement in the State, but then residing in the town of W, being pregnant of a bastard, was procured by the overseers of W to be removed into the town of B, in order that the child might be there born, and it was there born. Held, that for the purposes of a settlement, the child should be treated as if born in W. Plymouth v. Windsor, 7 Vt. 827.

82. Under the act of 1817, providing that illegitimate children "shall have the settlement of their mother";—Held, that an illegitimate does not take the settlement of the mother derived by marriage after the birth of the child, but only such settlement as she acquires in her own right. Burlington v. Essex, 19 Vt. 91.

83. Held to be the same under the revised statutes (G. S. c. 19, s. 1), where the expression is, "shall follow and have," &c. Newport v. Derby, 22 Vt. 553. Morristown v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 38.

84. The intermarriage of the parents of an illegitimate child, if recognized by the father as his child, legitimates the child "to all intents and purposes," and so that the child takes the legal settlement of the father. (C. S. c. 55, s. 5; G. S. c. 56, s. 5.) Roostingham v. Mount Holly, 26 Vt. 658.

3. Act of 1801.

85. Note.—By the settlement act of 1801 it was provided, that "whenever any person or persons shall come and reside within any town in this State, the selectmen of such town may, at their discretion, warn such person or persons to depart said town." The statute then prescribed the direction and form of the warning, that it should be served as a writ of summons, should be returned to the town clerk within eight days after service and be by him entered on the records of the town,—the effect of which was to prevent the acquiring of a settlement by residence. Otherwise, one year's residence gave a settlement. 1 Tolman's Stat. 400.

86. Application. This act applied to one who was in the town at the time of the passage of the act, as well as to one who came into the town afterwards. Poultney v. Fairhaven, Brayt. 185. Stamford v. Whittingham, 2 Aik. 188.

87. It applied only to such as were competent to gain a settlement by residence, and did not extend to infants not emancipated, whether legitimate or illegitimate. Wells v. Westhaven, 5 Vt. 322. Manchester v. Springfield, 15 Vt. 385. Sherburne v. Hartland, 37 Vt. 528.

88. But did apply to an infant emancipated,—as, by marriage. Sherburne v. Hartland.

89. Warning—Effect. The effect of a warning under the act of 1801 was to prevent the gaining of a settlement by the then, or any future, residence in the town. Ira v. Clarendon, Brayt. 180. 4 Vt. 567.

90. But a warning to the parents did not extend to a child who resided in the town more than one year after arriving at full age, and who was not himself warned. Middlebury v. Hubbardton, Brayt. 183.

91. The warning of a man, his wife and family, was held to have no effect as to the woman who was living with him as his wife, but under a void marriage, nor as to their children; but that the woman, while so cohabiting with him, acquired a settlement in her own right by residence. Manchester v. Springfield, 15 Vt. 385.

92. Form. The warning must be according to the form prescribed, or it will be invalid. Warning held invalid, for certain specified variations from the form. Wheelock v. Lyndon, 6 Vt. 524.

93. A warning signed by the selectmen as selectmen simply, not adding the name of the town, was held sufficient where the name of the town sufficiently appeared in other parts of the instrument. Shrewsbury v. Mount Holly, 2 Vt. 220.

94. A warning-out process in this form: "Hereof fail not, but of [this precept with] your doings hereon due return make according to law" (omitting the words in brackets), was held good. Dummerston v. Jamaica, 5 Vt. 399.

95. Service and return. The service, return and record must be as prescribed by the act, or the whole proceedings will be invalid. The return of service must state the particular situation in which the copy was left. Brandon v. Pittsford, Brayt. 183.

96. The return stated that it was "by leaving a true and attested copy of the same lying on the table at the last and usual place of abode of" the person required to be warned out. Held insufficient. Castleton v. Weybridge, 46 Vt. 474.

97. A warning-out process, served by leaving a copy at the dwelling house of the person named, or at his last place of abode, without stating with whom or in what situation, is insufficient. Barre v. Morristown, 4 Vt. 574. Hale v. Turner, 29 Vt. 850. 46 Vt. 477.

98. So, when served by copy left at the last and usual place of abode of the party warned, with a person named, the return omitting to add, "then resident therein,"—Held, that for this cause the service was fatally defective. Reading v. Rockingham, 2 Aik. 272. 46 Vt. 477. 47 Vt. 496.

99. The return of service by leaving a copy at the last and usual place of abode, &c., "with a person of discretion residing therein" (not naming the person), was held insufficient. Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564.

100. A return is void which omits to state that the officer's return was upon the copy of the process which was served. Castleton v. Clarendon, Brayt. 181. New Haven v. Vergennes, 3 Vt. 89. Winhall v. Landgrove, 45 Vt. 376.

101. The return set forth the service as made in a certain mode (which was good), or, in a certain other mode (which was bad). Held insufficient. Marshfield v. Montpelier, 4 Vt. 284.

102. The return on a warning-out process was as follows: [Date.] "Then served the within precept by leaving a true and attested copy with the with Jonas," &c. Held insufficient, and that it could not be read as if written the within named Jonas. Townshend v. Athens, 1 Vt. 284. This is an authority for no other word whatever. Collamer, J., in Fairles v. Corinth, 9 Vt. 268.

103. Where a process against several persons is required to be served by copy, or as a summons, the return must show a copy left with each. Leaving "a copy with the within named persons," or "defendants," is not sufficient. Smilie v. Runnels, 1 Vt. 148. Waterford v. Brookfield, 2 Vt. 200. New Haven v. Vergennes, 3 Vt. 89. Reading v. Weathersfield, 3 Vt. 349.

104. Several persons being named in one warning-out process, the return was of proper service on some of them, and then set forth a service upon the others, "as above stated." Held, that, by reference, the return was sufficient. Marshfield v. Montpelier, 4 Vt. 284.

105. "Served this warning by leaving a true and attested copy with the within named," &c. This is sufficient, by intendment, as a copy of the warning. Waterford v. Brookfield, 2 Vt. 207. 9 Vt. 269.

106. The return was as follows: [Date.] "I then served this precept by leaving a true and attested copy of the same and return," &c. Held sufficient, it being plainly understood as if written, this return. Fairles v. Corinth, 9 Vt. 265.

107. To a warning-out process against Oliver Taft residing in the town of B, the officer made return of service, dated at B, "by leaving in the hands of Oliver Taft, at his abode, a true and attested copy of the same, with my return thereon indorsed." Held good, in the absence of proof that there was more than one person of that name residing in B. Dummerston v. Jamaica, 5 Vt. 399.

108. Where the warning issues against a man and his wife, a service on the man alone is sufficient. Barrett v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564. Dummerston v. Jamaica, 5 Vt. 399.

109. Evidence. The time when a warning-out process was returned by the officer to the town clerk's office, may be proved by parol—it not being required to be matter of record. Pittsford v. Brandon, Brayt. 183.

110. The onus of proving the warning-out of a pauper, under the act of 1801, is upon the party claiming the benefit of the proceeding. Fayston v. Richmond, 25 Vt. 446. 5 Vt. 825; and that the proceedings were recorded within the year. Pawlet v. Sandgate, 17 Vt. 619.

111. Record. In order to be of any effect, a warning out process, with the return of service, must be recorded in the town clerk's office within a year; and neither the return nor record can be thereafter changed. Mount Holly v. Panton, Brayt. 182. Brandon v. Pittsford, Brayt. 188. New Haven v. Vergennes, 8 Vt. 89.

112. A copy of a warning-out process, having indorsed upon it by the then town clerk: "Received into record 9th October, 1807," was certified by the town clerk, in 1848, as "a true copy of record as recorded among the records of the town," &c. Held, that the court would not intend that the paper was recorded, that is, transcribed upon the record books, in 1807, but that the time of such record, or transcription, must be proved affirmatively by the town claiming the benefit of the record as in fact made in 1807. Pawlet v. Sandgate, 17 Vt. 619.

113. A warning-out process and the return of service were copied upon the town records and attested by the town clerk, under proper date, as follows: "Received this warning on record,"—and was signed; which attestation was made at the lower left hand corner of the precept, but above the return. From these facts, and from the custom of the town clerk in making like records, as seen from an inspection of the book;—Held, that the attestation included the return; and that the word "warning" in the attestation included both the precept and the service. Salisbury v. Middlebury, 28 Vt. 283.

114. Where the certificate of record of a warning-out process and return of service was: "February 17, rec'd. and record'd by David Tuthill, Town Clerk";—Held, that it was not competent to show by extrinsic evidence in what year the record was made. Winhall v. Landgrove, 45 Vt. 876. (H. E. Royce, J.)

III. REMOVAL OF PAUPER.

1. Who are subject to removal.

115. Insane person. The insanity of a pauper does not prevent an examination and order of removal. Londonderry v. Windham, 2 Vt. 149.

116. A lunatic female pauper may be removed to the place of her settlement, although such removal may separate her from the family of her mother. Randolph v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 436. 20 Vt. 577.

117. Coming to reside. If a person comes into a town and resides in a family, for even a few days, as a servant, though hired for no definite time, this is a "coming to reside" within the pauper acts, and subjects such person to an order of removal on becoming chargeable to the town. In such case, such person is not a "transient person," so as that an action lies against the town of his settlement for aid furnished him as a pauper. Middlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 200. 19 Vt. 271. 33 Vt. 164. 44 Vt. 386. 46 Vt. 611. (G. S. c. 20, ss. 4, 13.)

118. A pauper had separated from his wife in G, she going to S to live. After some three months he took his trunk, clothing and effects, and went off roaming, without any purpose of returning to G, and went to S, but without any purpose of remaining there any length of time, or of living with his wife. They soon concluded to live together again, and he hired her boarded there, by the week, and went out to work in the neighborhood, having no particular time in contemplation during which he should remain in S. After some 14 days, he fell sick and became chargeable to S. Held, that he had come to reside in S so as to warrant an order for his removal to the town of his legal settlement. Sharon v. Cabot, 29 Vt. 394.

119. The pauper, a single man, went to the town of P in May, for the purpose and with the intention of hiring out in the vicinity for the season, and to go to Massachusetts in the fall. Soon after stopping there, he was taken sick and was aided by the town of P as a pauper. Held, that he had "come to reside" in P, and was subject to an order of removal, and was not "a transient person" so as to sustain an action by P against the town of his settlement for the aid furnished him. Pittsford v. Chittenden, 44 Vt. 382.

120. The pauper, having separated from his family, came into the town of S and hired out to work there by the month to one V, and after working several weeks, quit before the term of his service expired and engaged himself elsewhere for a term to commence that evening; but before entering upon it he went back to V's in S to get some things he had there, and there broke his leg, and was aided by S. Held, that he had come to reside in S and was not a transient person; and that, not having entered upon the new service, his residence in S continued. Stamford v. Readsboro, 46 Vt. 606.

121. Transient person. There is nothing in any statute which extends the right of removal to a transient pauper. Button v. Cabot, 19 Vt. 522.

122. A person who goes into a town other than that in which his family resides, and there lives and works under a temporary contract, is a "transient" person in such town, and is not subject to an order of removal. He has not "come to reside," for his residence remains where his family is. Bristol v. Rutland, 10 Vt. 574. 21 Vt. 567.

123. Chargeable. A person is not "likely to become chargeable," so as to be liable to removal, unless, at the time of making the order, there was a prospect or strong probability, arising from circumstances then existing, that he or his family would soon become chargeable to the town. Londonderry v. Acton, 3 Vt. 122. Pomfret v. Barnard, 44 Vt. 537.

124. The fact that two years prior to an order of removal the pauper was likely to become chargeable, does not tend to prove that he was so when the order was made. Danville v. Wheelock, 47 Vt. 57.

125. Whether a person is legally chargeable to a town so as to be the subject of removal, must depend upon the degree of his destitution and poverty when the proceedings are taken. (For special circumstances, see case.) Hartford v. Hartland, 19 Vt. 392.

126. The ability of a husband to support his wife, under the pauper acts, means a pecuniary ability in the present tense, and is not affected by the fact that he had before disposed of all his property, provided such disposition was binding upon him. St. Johnsbury v. Waterford, 15 Vt. 692.

127. No person can become legally chargeable to a town so as to be subject to an order of removal, while he has the means of supporting himself. Ludlow v. Weathersfield, 18 Vt. 39. Londonderry v. Acton, 3 Vt. 122. Randolph v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 442.

128. A pauper is subject to removal to the town of his legal settlement, although he is a minor and has a father of sufficient ability to support him, residing in another town of this State. Berlin v. Morristown, 20 Vt. 574. Bennett, J., dissenting.

129. Though a husband and father may be unable to support himself, yet if he is supported by his wife and children, constituting his family, so that the family is self-supporting, neither he nor they are subject to an order of removal, as "likely to become chargeable." Danville v. Wheelock, 47 Vt. 57.

130. An unmarried man having no property in this State, but owning a lot of land, uncumbered, in the State of New York, worth four or five hundred dollars, was insane, and, on the application of his friends, had been assisted by the town where he was, as a pauper. Held, that the town was under no legal obligation to furnish him relief, and that he was not removable to the town of his legal settlement, as being chargeable, or likely to become chargeable. Ludlow v. Weathersfield, 18 Vt. 39.

131. Owning freehold. No person is a subject of removal, as a pauper, while he owns and occupies a freehold estate. Londonderry v. Acton, 3 Vt. 122.

132. This applies to a tenant in dower. Brookfield v. Hartland, 6 Vt. 401; though the dower has not been actually assigned, or set out. Dummerston v. Newfane, 37 Vt. 9.

133. The rule is the same, whether the estate be a legal, or an equitable freehold; as, a trust estate. Walden v. Cabot, 25 Vt. 522.

134. A married woman is not subject to an order of removal, where her husband owns an equity of redemption in lands, which equity is worth (say) $285, and may be made available for her support. Chelsea v. Brookfield, 27 Vt. 587.

135. Estate not freehold. Where a husband abandoned his wife, and he owned an interest, not freehold, in land which yielded but a small share of what was necessary for her support, and it did not appear that it could have been made more productive;—Held, that she could be subject to removal as a person likely to become chargeable to the town. Winhall v. Landgrove, 45 Vt. 376.

136. Expending estate. It is not fraudulent, so as to affect the question of the rightful removal of a lunatic pauper, for the overseers of the poor to procure the appointment of a guardian of the lunatic, and to have him sell and convey the real estate of the pauper, so as to render him removable after expenditure of the proceeds in his support. Randolph v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 436.

137. Family. The wife of a minor son is not of the family of the father whom he is bound to support, within the meaning of the pauper and settlement acts; nor are the children of his wife by a former husband. Manchester v. Rupert, 6 Vt. 291.

138. Separation of. An order of removal can never be allowed to have the effect to separate husband and wife, so long as they cohabit together in the family relation; and an order which would require the removal of either from the other, and thereby break up the family relation between them, should be treated as void. Dummerston v. Newfane, 37 Vt. 9. Hartland v. Pomfret, 11 Vt. 440. Northfield v. Roxbury, 15 Vt. 623. Rupert v. Winhall, 29 Vt. 245. Hartland v. Windsor, 29 Vt. 354.

139. In such case, if either is irremovable, the other is. Dummerston v. Newfane. Danville v. Wheelock, 47 Vt. 57.

140. When a husband ceases to be the head of the family—as, by his death, his utter abandonment of his family and removal beyond the limits of the State, or by a divorce a vinculo—that office devolves upon the wife; and their minor children, while they form a portion of her family, have the domicile and settlement of the mother, and are removable with her. Bethel v. Tunbridge, 13 Vt. 445.

141. The confinement of a husband in jail by virtue of legal process cannot be regarded as an abandonment of his family, or as breaking up the family relation, so as to justify an order of removal of his wife and minor children, without him. Peckham v. Waterford, 46 Vt. 154.

142. Where husband and wife lived separate by agreement, but on friendly terms, he supporting part of the children and she the others;—Held, that this was not such an abandonment of the wife, or legal separation, as that the parties could be separated by an order of removal. Danville v. Wheelock, 47 Vt. 57.

143. Minor children, whose tender age, or physical or mental weakness or condition, makes it necessary that they should have the care, sympathy, and control of their parents, rendering it improper upon the principles of humanity that they should be separated, are irremovable from them, notwithstanding the general "unqualified language of the statute. But the simple fact that the pauper is a minor does not render him irremovable from them, where their places of legal settlement are not the same. Morristown v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 88.

144. The objection that a minor cannot come to a town to reside, within the meaning of the pauper act, cannot prevail where such minor was with his parents, as part of the family, when they removed there to reside and commenced their residence. Id.

2. Order of removal.

145. Complaint. The signature of one overseer of the poor to a complaint, as a basis for an order of removal, is sufficient. Castleton v. Clarendon, Brayt. 186.

146. It is no cause for quashing an order of removal, that the complaint was served by a constable who was also the overseer of the poor who made the complaint. Bristol v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 208.

147. The complaint need not set forth the place of the pauper's legal settlement; but this, and other facts found and determined by the justices, should be set forth in the order of removal. Wilmington v. Jamaica, 42 Vt. 694.

148. It is no objection to an order of removal of A, appealed from, that B also was joined in the complaint. Windham v. Chester, 45 Vt. 459.

149. Order. An order of removal of a pauper to a town in which he has no legal settlement, does not lie, although such town had fraudulently sent the pauper into the other town. The right of removal depends upon settlement. Charlotte v. Colchester, 20 Vt. 91.

150. The justices. Justices, though rated inhabitants and tax-payers of a town, are, by G. S. c. 20, s. 4, qualified to make an order of removal in behalf of such town, notwithstanding their interest. Morristown v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 88.

151. The record. An order of removal will not be quashed on the ground that the justices found that the pauper "is likely to become chargeable," where the complaint was that "she is chargeable." The latter includes the former. Hardwick v. Pawlet, 36 Vt. 320.

152. Certificate. The certificate of the justices upon the copy of an order of removal to be served, to the effect that it is a true copy, is an indispensable requisite and a constituent part of the process to be served, and without it, the statute (G. S. c. 20, s. 11) is not complied with. For such defect the order was quashed. Sharon v. Strafford, 37 Vt. 74. The defect, not being in the officer's return, is not, after service, amendable. Id.

153. Warrant. It is no objection to a warrant of removal that it bears date the day of the order. Georgia v. St. Albans, 3 Vt. 42.

154. As to family. Dictum. An order of removal of a pauper, "his family and effects," (using the statute form), will be quashed on appeal, as to the family, who are not named; but held, where such order, followed by removal, was not appealed from, that it was conclusive as to the settlement of the wife and minor children constituting the family. Hartland v. Williamstown, 1 Alk. 241. A like order was quashed as to the wife and family, and held binding only as to the pauper named, in Newbury v. Brunswick, 2 Vt. 151. An order will not be quashed because the "family" are not named, unless it appear that the pauper has a family. It would, in either case, be good as to the pauper named. Bristol v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 208.

155. The above cases reviewed, and held, that such order in the statute form—"his family and effects"—was good as to the wife and minor children. Landgrove v. Pawlet, 20 Vt. 309. Chester v. Wheelock, 28 Vt. 554. Windham v. Chester, 45 Vt. 459.

156. Motion to quash an order of removal as to four children of the pauper, because not named and not alleged that they were minor children. The order stated that the justices considered that H M, with his wife, S M, "and his four children," had become chargeable, &c.; that he ought to be removed "with his said wife and family;" and it was ordered that the said H M do remove with his said wife, S M, "and their four children, &c." Held, that the children being described as of his family, they should be presumed to be minors subject to parental control; and the motion to quash was overruled. Burlington v. Essex, 19 Vt. 91.

157. An order of removal of "Nancy Webb and her daughter Sarah A. Webb," was quashed upon motion, the said Sarah A. Webb not being otherwise described, nor as of the family of Nancy Webb, except in the complaint of the overseer. Derby v. Barre, 38 Vt. 276. Peck, J., dissenting.

158. Motion to quash an order of removal, because embracing two persons not of the same family. The order named the paupers as W G and I G, "her child," and ordered that the said

W G and I G, "her child, do remove with her family and effects, &c." Held, that the fair intendment was that the words her family meant the family of W G, and that I G, her child, was of her family. Order sustained. Danville v. Peacham, 41 Vt. 838.

159. Notice of order. A general notice, and demand of payment of the sum expended in supporting the pauper, is not a sufficient notice of the order. Fairfield v. St. Albans, Brayt. 176.

160. A majority of the court inclined to the opinion, that, before the statute of 1817, no effectual notice of the order could be given except in cases of removal by warrant. Hartland v. Williamstown, 1 Aik. 241.

161. Copy. The act requiring an attested copy of an order of removal to be left with the overseer, is not satisfied by a copy of the warrant containing a copy of the order, certified and left by the constable serving it. Georgia v. St. Albans, 8 Vt. 42.

162. The copy of the order to be left with the overseer, under the act of 1817, must correspond with the original in every substantial part. A fault in the copy, which would be fatal in the original, is fatal to the proceeding. Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564.

163. The leaving of a "true and attested copy of the original complaint and warrant of removal," is not due service of the order of removal, under the statute which requires a copy of the order to be left with the overseer. Dorset v. Rutland, 16 Vt. 419.

164. Where an order of removal was made, but there was no removal in fact, and there was no copy of the order left with the overseer within the thirty days after making the order, although the warrant of removal was served, the order was quashed upon motion. Marshfield v. Calais, 16 Vt. 598. (Altered by C. S. c. 18, s. 13. See 88 Vt. 254.)

165. Under G. S. c. 20, s. 11, as changed by the substitute act of 1864, No. 18, it is not necessary, on the removal of a pauper under an order and warrant of removal, if done within 30 days after making the order, that a copy of the order should be served upon the overseer. Barnet v. Woodbury, 40 Vt. 286. 45 Vt. 404.

166. In G. S. c. 20, s. 11, the words, "which copy of the notice," are to be read, which copy and notice; and under that statute, as under C. S. c. 18, s. 13, there need be no copy of the order of removal, certified to be such by the justices, delivered to the overseer, but the service of a copy of the order and of the notice, as a writ of summons, is sufficient. East Haven v. Derby, 88 Vt. 253; and see acts of 1864, No. 18.

167. Removal. It is not a reason for quashing an order of removal, that the pauper was removed on the warrant before the day named in the order that he should remove himself, where such removal was with the pauper's consent; and, quære, whether the appealing town could avail itself of this ground to quash the proceedings, even if the pauper had not consented. Plymouth v. Mendon, 23 Vt. 451;—substantially overruling, on this point, Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564.

168. Service of order. Since the statute of 1817, an order of removal may be served before an actual removal and before the day fixed by it for the removal; and, if so served, is conclusive as to the settlement of the pauper, although no actual removal was ever made under it. Poultney v. Sandgate, 35 Vt. 146. Stowe v. Brookfield, 26 Vt. 524.

169. Service of an order of removal was duly made by an officer as a writ of summons, by copy left at the house of the usual abode of the overseer, &c., under the act of 1850 (G. S. c. 20, s. 11). The overseer received no actual notice of the order, or of the service, in season for an appeal. Held, that the order was, nevertheless, conclusive as the settlement of the pauper. Poultney v. Sandgate; and see East Haven v. Derby, 88 Vt. 253.

170. An officer's return of service indorsed upon a warrant of removal, that he had served a certified copy of the order of removal, &c., was held sufficient evidence of the fact, although no copy of the order of removal appeared among the appeal papers. Windham v. Chester, 45 Vt. 459.

171. Service of an order of removal on H, overseer of the poor of W, "by leaving a true and attested copy of this order of removal and citation at his house, in the hands of Wales Williard, he being a person of suitable discretion with whom to leave the same," was held wholly inoperative to affect the settlement, though not appealed from. Whittingham v. Wardsboro, 47 Vt. 496.

172. Record. The omission in the justices' record of the statement that they examined the pauper, does not render the proceedings void; and quære whether this is cause for quashing the proceedings. Hartland v. Williamstown, 1 Aik. 241.

173. Where the record followed the statute form,—"after hearing the proofs and allegations and examining the same;"—Held, not necessary that it should state specially that the justices had examined the pauper. Bristol v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 208.

3. Appeal.

174. Under the pauper act of 1817 and R. S. c. 16, s. 8 (G. S. c. 20, s. 8), an appeal from an order or warrant of removal must be taken to the term of court next after service of the order, unless so served within 30 days next preceding such term. Strafford v. Hartland, 2 Vt. 565. Braintree v. Westford, 17 Vt. 141. Poultney v. Sandgate, 35 Vt. 146.

175. An order of removal was made, and within 30 days thereafter a copy of the complaint and warrant, but not of the order, was left with the overseer of the defendant town. After the next term of the county court, the pauper was removed upon the warrant, and the defendant town thereupon appealed to the next term thereafter. On motion to dismiss the appeal,—Held, (1), that in order to prevent such proceedings from becoming conclusive upon the defendant town, the same not being void, but merely voidable, an appeal was necessary; (2), that the appeal was taken in season, being to the next term of court after the defendant town was made a party to the proceedings by the actual removal of the pauper. Dorset v. Rutland, 16 Vt. 419.

176. Where an order of removal was made, but no copy of the order was left with the overseer of the defendant town, and no removal made, but only a copy of the warrant of removal was so left within 30 days after the date of the order;—Held, that an appeal lay, and the order was quashed. Marshfield v. Calais, 16 Vt. 598. Hebard, J., dissenting. 38 Vt. 255.

177. Where a copy of the order of removal is not left within the time prescribed by the statute, and the pauper is afterwards removed upon a warrant of removal, an appeal lies to the term of the county court next after the service of the warrant. Under this, as well the question of settlement as all other questions that legitimately arise, can be litigated. Landgrove v. Pawlet, 18 Vt. 325.

178. In such case, an appeal professedly taken from the warrant of removal, without mention of the previous order, is authorized by the statute. Id.

179. Form of appeal. No particular formality is required in taking an appeal from an order of removal; all that is required is, that notice of the appeal should be given to the justices, or one of them. If the appellant intended, by what he said, to take such appeal, and the justice supposed he so intended it, this is sufficient. On a refusal of the justices, in such case, to certify the appeal, a peremptory mandamus was ordered. Orange v. Bill, 29 Vt. 442. 32 Vt. 680.

180. Agreement. Where an order of removal had been made and the pauper removed, but the time for taking an appeal had not expired;—Held, that it was competent for the overseers of the poor of the two towns, by mutual agreement, to abandon all proceedings and claim, take back the pauper, and restore things as if the order had not been made. Pawlet v. North Hero, 8 Vt. 196.

181. Where an order of removal of a man and his [professed] wife and children was made by M to H, and H forbore to appeal in consideration of M's waiving the order as to the wife and children;—Held, that the order did not affect the settlement of the wife and children. Morristown v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 33.

4. Pleadings.

182. A verdict in a pauper case upon the plea of unduly removed [treated as a general issue], is conclusive of the settlement of the pauper. Therefore, questions not affecting the fact of settlement cannot be tried under this issue, but must be presented and decided as dilatory pleas. Bradford v. Corinth, 1 Aik. 290. Richmond v. Milton, Brayt. 188. Waterbury v. Fairfax, 1 Aik. 295.

183. On appeal from an order of removal, the question whether chargeable or likely to become chargeable, or not, must be raised by a motion to quash, or by plea in bar, such defense being interlocutory; while a plea to the merits should state and rest upon the fact that the town to which the removal was made is not the legal settlement of the pauper;—a plea that the pauper was "unduly removed," simply, means anything, or nothing, and is a mere nullity. Corinth v. Bradford, 2 Aik. 120.

184. A motion to quash, or to dismiss, in such case, is proper only when the defect appears of record. Waterford v. Brookfield, 2 Vt. 200.

185. The question whether the pauper had come to reside in the removing town, may be presented by plea. Button v. Cabot, 19 Vt. 522.

186. A plea that the pauper, at the time of the order, "was well seized and possessed in his own right of a certain messuage and lands," &c., was held ill, for not averring that it was a freehold estate. Middletown v. Pawlet, 4 Vt. 202.

5. Validity and effect of order.

187. Validity. The validity of an order of removal must be determined upon the facts as they existed at the time the order was made, and is not affected by events subsequently happening. Hartland v. Windsor, 29 Vt. 354.

188. Effect. An order of removal of a pauper, with notice duly given, either not appealed from, or affirmed on appeal, is conclusive that the pauper's settlement, at the time of the order, was in the town to which the removal was ordered; and this, in favor of any town as against any other town, where the settlement is brought in question. Dorset v. Manchester, 8 Vt. 370. Barre v. Morristown, 4 Vt. 574. Rupert v. Sandgate, 10 Vt. 278. Hartland v. Williamstown, 1 Aik. 241. Stowe v.

Brookfield, 26 Vt. 524. Hale v. Turner, 29 Vt. 350. Poultney v. Sandgate, 35 Vt. 146. Cabot v. Washington, 41 Vt. 168.

189. Such order is not conclusive where a copy is not left within the thirty days; and this provision of the statute cannot be waived by any agreement between the overseers. Barre v. Morristown, 4 Vt. 574.

190. Such order is as conclusive of every fact necessary to uphold it, as it is of the settlement. Poultney v. Sandgate, 35 Vt. 146.

191. An order of removal of a man and "his wife" (naming her), not appealed from, where a copy of the order had been duly served, was held conclusive, on the question of settlement, as to the relationship between them; as much so, as if the paupers had been actually removed. Chester v. Wheelock, 28 Vt. 554.

IV. EXPENSES FOR RELIEF OF PAUPER.

192. Statute obligation. No obligation, except as imposed by statute, rests upon towns to sustain their own poor. It is altogether a matter of positive law, and the right of any one to compel towns to pay for the support of their poor is one stricti juris, and cannot be enforced except in accordance with some statutory provision. Castleton v. Miner, 8 Vt. 209. Middlebury v. Hubbardton, 1 D. Chip. 205. Jamaica v. Guilford, 2 D. Chip. 108. Aldrich v. Londonderry, 5 Vt. 441. Ives v. Wallingford, 8 Vt. 224. Houghton v. Danville, 10 Vt. 537. See Worcester v. Ballard, 38 Vt. 60.

193. Action. It is no objection to an action by one town against another to recover, under the statute, the sum expended for the relief of a transient poor person, that a remedy therefor might be had, by petition to the county court, against certain relatives of the person relieved. Woodstock v. Hartland, 21 Vt. 563.

194. Under s. 4 of the pauper act of 1797, a town cannot recover of the town of legal settlement the expenses of supporting a resident sick pauper, unless such pauper has been actually removed under the order of removal, or such removal has been prevented by the extreme sickness or death of the pauper. Essex v. Milton, 8 Vt. 17. (G. S. c. 20, s. 6.)

195. No such expenses can be recovered, in such case, which accrued before the order was made; nor can the costs of removal be recovered, except where the sickness of the pauper prevents an execution of the order for a time. Londonderry v. Windham, 2 Vt. 149. 3 Vt. 24.

196. Where an appeal from an order of removal was, by agreement, discontinued "with costs";—Held, under R. S. c. 16, s. 9, that the expense of maintaining the pauper during the pendency of the appeal was not taxable. Brookfield v. Braintree, 21 Vt. 447.

197. The expenses of keeping a poor person, not acknowledged by the overseer of the poor to be a pauper, and where the overseer does not contract to pay, cannot be recovered of the town of such person's settlement. Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440.

198. Neglect of overseer. It is not a "neglect" of the overseer to provide for a transient poor person, which subjects the town to an action upon G. S. c. 20, s. 18, for the support furnished, where the overseer, at the time of the application for support, expressly promises the person furnishing it to pay him therefor, but fails to do so. In such case, the action should be upon the promise. Hove v. Royalton, 32 Vt. 415.

199. One town is not liable to another for the neglect or misconduct of its overseers in allowing its poor to stroll into such other town and to become chargeable thereto; nor for other unlawful acts of the overseer without the scope of his authority. Chelsea v. Washington, 48 Vt. 610.

200. Poor person. One who, having no property except growing crops not worth over $25, sustains a personal injury so as to be helpless for some weeks, is "a poor person who has fallen into distress and stands in need of immediate relief," so as to oblige the town to pay for support furnished him after notice to the overseer. (G. S. c. 20.) Blodgett v. Lovell, 33 Vt. 174.

201. The plaintiff at whose house a poor person, without means of support, was left, directly after receiving a disabling injury, immediately applied to the overseer of the poor to support the man. The overseer sent back word to the plaintiff to take good care of the man, and, "If he does not pay you, I will see that you have good pay." In an action against the town to recover for support of the pauper;—Held, that the circumstances excluded the idea of a collateral guaranty, and that the town was directly liable by force of the statute. Id.

202. Notice. Under the statute requiring fifteen days' notice in writing of "all the charges and expenses" of maintaining a pauper unable to be removed (G. S. c. 20, s. 6);—Held, that the defendant town is entitled to notice of the specific expenditure, and that, in order to a recovery therefor, it is not sufficient that it is embraced in some other item, without specific designation. Pawlet v. Sandgate, 19 Vt. 621.

203. Extent of recovery. In such action, —Held, that the plaintiff town was entitled to recover all such charges and expenses as it was legally bound to pay at the commencement of the suit, though not then paid and only payable in future, and even after the determination of this suit; with interest from the expiration of fifteen days after giving the notice in writing, required by the statute, but no interest before such notice. Id.

204. Held, also, that the plaintiffs could not recover the sum which they were liable to pay for services rendered by a physician attending such pauper under a contract with the plaintiffs, that if they succeeded upon the appeal from the order of removal then pending, he should have a reasonable compensation, but that if they should fail he should have nothing—although in fact they did succeed. Such contract is in the nature of a gambling contract, and, as between towns, is against sound policy. Id. 23 Vt. 204.

205. Nor can the plaintiffs, in such case, recover a larger sum than they would be liable to pay in case the pauper's settlement had proved to be in the plaintiff town. Id.

206. The plaintiff town was allowed to recover of the defendant town, as expenses of supporting an insane pauper of the defendant, the expense of supporting the pauper at an insane asylum; also, for clothing destroyed by the pauper and replaced; also, for money paid to another town for the pauper's support after an order of removal, which was vacated—the whole being reasonable in amount. St. Johnsbury v. Waterford, 15 Vt. 692.

207. Several towns, including S and F, entered into a mutual arrangement for supporting together their respective paupers upon a farm purchased by them for that purpose in the town of S; under which arrangement F sent to the farm to be supported there a pauper legally chargeable to F, but who had no legal settlement in the State. The towns subsequently terminated this arrangement by mutual consent, but F neglected to remove its pauper, who was thereafter supported by S. Held, that S could recover of F, in an action on the case, the expense of supporting such pauper after the termination of the arrangement. Sheldon v. Fairfax, 21 Vt. 102.

208. Person in jail for intoxication. L was arrested in Vershire under act of 1852, s. 2, No. 24, for being found intoxicated, and was committed to jail in Chelsea for refusal to disclose, &c. Being unable to support himself, Chelsea supported him in jail and sued Vershire for reimbursement. Held, that the action would not lie, no statute giving it; that Vershire, if liable for the support, was liable directly to the jailer, and there was no occasion for Chelsea to interfere. Chelsea v. Vershire, 35 Vt. 446.

209. Estoppel. Where a town had removed a pauper under an order not appealed from;—Held, that it could not recover of the town to which the removal was made the expense of the pauper's support prior to the order, on the claim that he was in fact a transient pauper,—his purpose, as to residence, continuing the same from the time he came into town down to the time the order was made. Pittsford v. Chittenden, 44 Vt. 382.

210. Interpretation of statute. G. S. c. 30, s. 18, giving it a sensible interpretation, though not precisely literal, includes all transient persons who are in need of present relief, though not "confined at any house." Charleston v. Lunenburg, 28 Vt. 525.

211. Notwithstanding the very plain words of C. S. c. 18, s. 9;—Held, that the town in which a pauper had his legal settlement and to which he had been ordered to be and had been removed, could not recover of the removing town the money expended in the support of the pauper after his removal, where the judgment of unduly removed was rendered because the pauper had not come to reside in the removing town. Ryegate v. Wardsboro, 30 Vt. 746.

212. Form of action. In a proper case under the statute, indebitatus assumpsit will lie against a town for money expended in support of a pauper. Danville v. Putney, 6 Vt. 519. 19 Vt. 680;—overruling dictum of Chipman, C. J., in Middlebury v. Hubbardton (1 D. Chip. 206), that the count must be special upon the statute.

213. Contract. To make a town liable to pay for support furnished its pauper, as upon a contract, there must be an express promise to pay; such promise can never be implied. Aldrich v. Londonderry, 5 Vt. 441. Castleton v. Miner, 8 Vt. 209. Houghton v. Danville, 19 Vt. 587. Putney v. Dummerston, 13 Vt. 370. Churchill v. West Fairlee, 17 Vt. 447. But see contra, Worcester v. Ballard, 88 Vt. 60. Wolcott v. Wolcott, 19 Vt. 37. Sheldon v. Fairfax, 21 Vt. 102, 107. Jamaica v. Guilford, 2 D. Chip. 108.

214. If such relief be afforded at the request of the overseer of the poor, the law implies a promise to pay, and there is no more need of an express promise than between private persons. Worcester v. Ballard. Wolcott v. Wolcott.

215. Action by jailer. Held (in 1838), that a jailer could not recover of the town where the jail was situate for the support of an imprisoned pauper, although the overseer had been applied to, to furnish such support, and had neglected to do so. Houghton v. Danville, 10 Vt. 587. See Holmes v. St. Albans, Brayt. 179.

216. Action against pauper. Money expended by a town in the support of a pauper cannot be recovered of the pauper, without a special contract for repayment. Bennington v. McGennes, N. Chip. 45. S. C. 1 D. Chip. 44. Benson v. Hitchcock, 37 Vt. 567.

V. PROCEEDINGS AGAINST AND BETWEEN KINDRED.

217. A minor, transient in the town of N, fell sick and was supported by that town, and upon claim made on the town of B, where such minor and his father had their legal settlement, B paid N the expenses. Held, that B could not maintain an action against the father for reimbursement, although he was of sufficient ability to support the minor. Broomfield v. French, 17 Vt. 79.

218. Dictum, where a relative would be liable at common law to support another, a town, or an individual, furnishing relief to such person under the pauper laws, may support an action therefor against such relative, notwithstanding the statute which gives such action against the town of such person's legal settlement. Id. 21 Vt. 569.

219. One son of a pauper was made party to a petition that he contribute to the pauper's support. (G. S. c. 20, s. 20.) He appeared, and suggested that another son should be made a party defendant; and thereupon a citation was ordered to be issued to the second son to appear at the next term and show cause, &c., and the cause was continued. On the second term after the appearance of the second son, he moved that the petition be dismissed as to him, because the pauper had died before the service of the citation upon him, but after it had issued. Held, (1), that the motion was out of time, for not having been made at the first term of his appearance; (2), that the motion had no merits, for that, by the statute, he became a party "as if he had been summoned on the original complaint," and because the statute made the defendants liable for past as well as future support; and (3), quære whether such proceedings could be revised on exceptions. Tinmouth v. Warren, 17 Vt. 606.

220. Kindred of a poor person who have been to expense for his relief and support, may maintain proceedings in their own name, under G. S. c. 20, s. 20, to have other kindred assessed for past and future support of such poor person, although he never became chargeable to any town to the extent of having received relief and support from the town, in a case where the town was liable to be charged, or should and would have relieved him but for the relief and support of the petitioning kindred. Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 617.

VI. WRONGFUL TRANSPORTATION OF PAUPER.

221. The first clause of G. S. c. 20, s. 31, subjecting to a penalty to the town aggrieved any person who shall bring into it a pauper with intent to charge such town with his support, is strictly penal; while the second clause, making such person liable to damages for the support of the pauper, is purely remedial. Different degrees of proof are required to establish the respective liabilities. Calais v. Hall, 11 Vt. 494. Barnet v. Ray, 33 Vt. 205. St. Johnsbury v. Goodenough, 44 Vt. 662.

222. In order to charge one with the penalty for transporting, or aiding in transporting, a poor person from one town to another without an order of removal, with intent to charge the latter town with his support, the intent must be proved as charged. It is not sufficient merely, that by means of the aid furnished, such poor person came to the plaintiff town and became chargeable to it. Wallingford v. Gray, 18 Vt. 228. (G. S. c. 20, s. 31.)

223. Where an order of removal was regularly made, and the defendants assisted the pauper voluntarily to remove within the time prescribed by the order;—Held, that the defendants were not liable to the penalty under G. S. c. 20, s. 31, for so removing the pauper, although the removing town failed to serve a copy of the order, or to issue a warrant of removal. Morgan v. Mead, 16 Vt. 644. 28 Vt. 454.

224. The overseer of town B hired the defendant, living in town P, to support there a transient pauper of B for three months. After the expiration of this period, the pauper remained some five months in P, supporting himself and intending to reside there, when he became destitute and the defendant then removed him back to B and left him with the overseer. Held, that although the defendant had a right to return the pauper to B at the end of the three months, he was, under the circumstances, liable to B under G. S. c. 20, s. 31. Barnet v. Ray, 33 Vt. 205. 44 Vt. 670.

225. In an action to recover damages for the removal of a pauper into the plaintiff town, with intent to charge such town with his support, &c., the fact that the pauper had a settlement in some other town, or had a father able to support him, is no defense. Marshfield v. Edwards, 40 Vt. 245.

226. Where the defendant, by consent of the overseer of the poor of S, removed a pauper to his house in D, upon the terms that the pauper should be well taken care of and be at no expense to S, but the defendant retained the right to determine the arrangement when he saw fit;—Held, that his subsequent removal of the pauper to S, before the pauper had become chargeable to any other town, and while she was in need of relief, did not subject him to the penalty given by G. S. c. 20, s. 31. St. Johnsbury v. Goodenough, 44 Vt. 662.

VII. CERTAIN CONTRACTS.

227. A bond to a town, conditioned to indemnify the town against the maintenance of any person whose legal settlement is in such town, is a legal contract, whether such person be, or be likely to become, chargeable to such town, or not. Williston v. White, 11 Vt. 40. Pawlet v. Strong, 2 Vt. 442. 14 Vt. 323.

228. Where a poor person in need of relief transferred to the town of his legal settlement, as an indemnity for his support, a horse and other things of not much value;—Held, that this was on sufficient consideration, and that the town could hold the property against an attaching creditor of such poor person. Lyndon v. Belden, 14 Vt. 423.

229. The defendant's overseer promised the plaintiff to pay for keeping a pauper until he should remove her. He afterwards went to remove the pauper and demanded her. The plaintiff told him to do as he pleased about taking her. Some dispute arising, the overseer left, saying he should never come for the pauper again, and the plaintiff continued to keep her. Held, that this left the original promise in force and made the town liable. Buck v. Worcester, 48 Vt. 1.

PAYMENT.

- I. WHAT CONSTITUTES PAYMENT.
- II. PART PAYMENT AS A FULL SATISFACTION.
- III. APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS.
- IV. PAYMENT AS AFFORDING A RIGHT OF ACTION.
- V. PAYMENT AS AFFECTING THE SECURITIES.
- VI. PLEADING.
- VII. EVIDENCE; PRESUMPTION.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES PAYMENT.

1. Base coin etc. Where one, without fault, receives payment in base coin, or counterfeit, or worthless bank paper, or the bills of a suspended and insolvent bank (Gilman v. Peck, 11 Vt. 516), although such suspension and insolvency may not be known, except in the immediate vicinity of the bank, and the bills may be current at the place of payment (Wainwright v. Webster, 11 Vt. 576), or in forged paper, as, a promissory note (Goodrich v. Tracy, 48 Vt. 314), he may treat it as no payment, and resort to his original cause of action. Id., and see Torrey v. Baxter, 18 Vt. 452.

2. The plaintiff's agent to collect a debt took in payment some bank bills, the value of which he did not know, but took a sufficient guaranty that the bills were good, and delivered the same bills and the guaranty to the plaintiff, who, doubting the bills, said he would take them and see what he could do with them. The bills were in fact worth only 20 cents on the dollar, the bank having failed. The plaintiff kept the bills two or three months before ascertaining their worth, when he made claim on the agent for the deficiency. Held, in an action of account, that the agent was not liable; that the plaintiff by his delay had exonerated him, and made the money his own. Pickett v. Pearson, 17 Vt. 470.

3. Order. An order was received in satisfaction of a judgment, if accepted and paid, and no funds of the drawer were in the hands of the drawee. The order not being paid was held no payment of the judgment. Goodrich v. Barney, 2 Vt. 422.

4. An order drawn by a debtor in favor of his creditor upon a third person, as a matter of convenience and not as an ordinary commercial transaction, does not operate as payment of the debt where the order does not prove productive. Heald v. Warren, 22 Vt. 409. Tracy v. Pearl, 20 Vt. 162.

5. C owed B on book, and B owed A. For convenience, merely, B gave A a letter of request to C to pay the balance due from him on account to A. This order C accepted, at first verbally, and afterwards by a written acceptance, he not knowing upon what agreement or understanding it had been given. B afterwards sued C on the account, and on the hearing produced the order and, by consent of A, cancelled the acceptance. Held, that the order and acceptance were not a payment of C's debt to B. Tracy v. Pearl.

6. Demand against third person. An agreement to take a debt due the defendant from a third person, as payment in presenti towards the defendant's debt to the plaintiff, was held to be a virtual purchase by the plaintiff of such demand, and to operate pro tanto as payment upon the plaintiff's demand. Hayden v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 768.

7. The plaintiff took of the defendant on account, and in supposed satisfaction of it, the note of B. By mistake B charged the note in account to the plaintiff, instead of the defendant, and the plaintiff in subsequent settlement with B, accounted to him for the note. The defendant received the note back of the plaintiff, paying him the cash therefor, and surrendered it to B, who credited him therefor on account, of which credit the defendant, in after settlement, took the benefit. Held, that the note should not be treated as any payment of the plaintiff's account; nor the money, which was but an equivalent for the note. Lockwood v. Hoskisson, 18 Vt. 37.

8. Securities. A person giving a security in payment vouches for its genuineness. Phelps, J., in Bank of St. Albans v. F. and M. Bank, 10 Vt. 145.

9. The plaintiff sold the defendant a horse at an agreed price, and took in part payment two promissory notes signed by one D, payable in specific articles to the defendant, and then upon their face appearing to be due and overdue—the plaintiff taking the risk of the responsibility of D. Before this, the defendant had contracted with D to extend the time of payment for a period not then elapsed, of which the plaintiff was not informed. Upon giving D notice of the transfer, he was informed by D of such contract of extension, and he then seasonably offered the defendant to rescind the whole contract, which offer was declined. When the period for which the notes were agreed to be extended had elapsed, D was insolvent. Held, that the temporary bar created by the agreement to extend was a defense to the notes as against the plaintiff, when assigned; that the plaintiff was deceived, and the defendant chargeable with such deceit; that the plaintiff was not limited to a special action for the deceit, or on the contract, but might treat the notes as no payment, and maintain an action of book account to recover their amount, as the balance due and unpaid on the sale of the horse. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520.

10. The plaintiff, having sold the defendant certain property, directed his agent to call on the defendant and get the pay, or else take his note. The defendant, upon the agent's call, wrote a note, but for less than the amount due, and signed it as agent for a third person, and delivered it to the plaintiff's agent, who could not read, saying to him that it was his own note for the amount due. The agent delivered the note to the plaintiff and he retained it, but without either attempt to enforce it, or offer to return it, and brought his action for goods sold and delivered, and on trial produced and offered to surrender the note. Held, that as the note came into the plaintiff's hands through the defendant's fraud, he owed the defendant no duty in respect to it; and that, unless he consented to accept it as payment, the taking and keeping of the note was not a bar to the action. Hatch v. Barnum, 23 Vt. 133.

11. The plaintiff, at the defendant's request, gave an officer's receipt for property of the defendant attached, taking from the defendant a written agreement of indemnity. The plaintiff was afterwards made chargeable on the receipt, and, on the defendant's request and promise of indemnity, signed a note with the defendant to the creditor for the defendant's debt, and took up the receipt and cancelled it, and the defendant gave him, as collateral security for so signing the note, certain notes against a third person. Held, that the second contract of indemnity superseded and discharged the first, although it turned out afterwards that such collateral notes had been attached by the trustee process—the court below not having found, as a fact, that the defendant was guilty of a fraud in the transaction. Baxter v. Downer, 29 Vt. 412.

12. Where a promissory note, received as collateral security, has been transferred by the creditor for value, without rendering himself liable upon it, this will operate as payment. But if so negotiated as to render the creditor personally liable upon it, and he has afterwards taken it up, this does not operate as payment. So held, although the indorsee had obtained judgment against the maker, which the creditor had satisfied. Dickinson v. King, 28 Vt. 378.

Promissory note of debtor as payment of subsisting claim—see BILLS AND NOTES, III.

13. Remittance. The defendants were commission merchants in Lowell, Mass., and there held produce of the plaintiff, residing in Vermont, for sale, the avails payable in Lowell. The plaintiff gave them a single special order to remit to him in Vermont a specified sum, part of the avails of the sales, in a particular way—which was done. Held, that this did not authorize a further remittance in the same way; and that, in the absence of other authority, a further remittance in the same way was at the risk of the defendant; and, the money not coming to the hands of the plaintiff, that the remittance did not operate as payment. Dodge v. Smith, 84 Vt. 178.

14. Where the defendant was, by his agreement, to pay his note to the plaintiff by sending money, instead of a draft, and the defendant, of his own motion, sent a draft;—Held, that the plaintiff's relation to the draft would not subject him to the rules of the law-merchant as to notice and return on its non-acceptance; but in such case he would be the agent of the defendant in sending the draft forward for acceptance, and payment, and would only be bound to exercise good faith and proper diligence. Moore v. Quint, 44 Vt. 97.

15. Sale of pledge. Where a creditor having two demands, the one secured by the obligation of a surety and both by a pledge of property, sells the pledge for enough to pay both, this satisfies both, and discharges the surety. Strong v. Wooster, 6 Vt. 536.

16. Privy. The plaintiff agreed with the defendant, a newspaper publisher, to report the proceedings of the State senate for the defendant's newspaper at two dollars per day, and performed his contract. No reporters were employed by the State, or by any State officer, or by either branch of the legislature; but on the night of adjournment of the legislature, a joint resolution was adopted to pay the reporters of the senate and house two dollars per day for the session. Under this resolution the plaintiff received of the State the compensation voted. Held, that the defendant could not claim the application of this upon his contract with the plaintiff. Smile v. Walton, 41 Vt. 174.

17. Ratification. In an action on a note given to the plaintiff as executor, which, after his removal as executor, the defendant had paid to the administrator de bonis non;—Held, that the presentation of his account, as executor, to the probate court for allowance, in which he claimed the amount of that debt as a credit, was prima facie an authorization or ratification of the payment to the administrator. Nason v. Potter, 6 Vt. 28.

18. Payment after suit. A defendant cannot avail himself of payment after the commencement of the suit, as a defense, unless he pays the costs as well as the debt; and unless the costs are paid, or relinquished, the plaintiff may recover nominal damages, so as to carry the costs. The rule is the same, where the plaintiff is properly pursuing separate remedies for the same debt, or demand, at the same time. The payment of one can be no discharge of the other, except on the payment of the costs in all the actions. Stevens v. Briggs, 14 Vt. 44.

19. Payment of the debt and costs, although made while a suit therefor is pending, extinguishes the claim upon which the suit is predicated. Root v. Ross, 29 Vt. 488.

20. The acceptance of money paid into court operates as payment pro tanto, and also as a conclusive admission of the conditions upon which it was paid into court. Goslin v. Hodson, 24 Vt. 140.

21. Assumpsit:—Pleas, non assumpsit and tender. The defendant, during the pendency of the suit, made an offer of money on account of the plaintiff's claim for debt and costs, sufficient to satisfy both, which the plaintiff declined to receive. The defendant claimed on trial, that the money was legally tendered. The plaintiff denied this. Afterwards, and after an increase of interest and costs, the defendant offered the plaintiff the money as the tender which he claimed that he had before made, and the plaintiff accepted it. Held, that the question whether the offer first made was a proper tender was immaterial, for that the acceptance of the money, as such tender, operated as a payment at the date when it was claimed to have been tendered. Carpenter v. Welch, 40 Vt. 251.

II. PART PAYMENT AS A FULL SATISFACTION.

22. General rule. Payment of part of a debt is no satisfaction of the remainder, although the creditor agrees to receive the sum paid, and gives a receipt, in discharge of the whole demand. Seely v. Spencer, 3 Vt. 384. Wright v. Allen, 4 Vt. 572.

23. Payment of part by one of two joint debtors, with an agreement not to call on him for the residue, or that he shall be discharged, is no bar to an action against both. Id. Spencer v. Williams, 2 Vt. 209.

24. W was employed by the defendant to purchase, for his benefit and at a discount, a debt against himself, he furnishing money for that purpose. W so made the purchase, professedly on his own account and without disclosing the facts. In an action by the creditor on the original demand;—Held, that such purchase operated only as part payment of the debt. Shaw v. Clark, 6 Vt. 507.

25. The payment, in money, of part of a debt then wholly due, and so admitted, is not a legal consideration for an agreement to accept that sum in full satisfaction of the debt. It is payment only pro tanto. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 11 Vt. 60. Goodwin v. Follett, 25 Vt. 886.

26. Exceptions. But the acceptance by the holder of a promissory note, either in money or in the debtor's own note, of an amount less than the sum due upon such note, in full satisfaction and payment thereof, with a surrender of such note to the maker, is a full discharge of it, this being equivalent to a release under seal—"an agreement executed; a release in practical operation." Ellsworth v. Fogg, 35 Vt. 855. Draper v. Hitt, 43 Vt. 439.

27. The doctrine that the receiving of part of a debt due, under an agreement that the same shall be in full satisfaction, is no bar to an action to recover the balance, does not extend to any case except where the plaintiff's claim was for a fixed and liquidated amount; or where the sum could be ascertained by mere arithmetical calculation. McDaniels v. Lapham, 21 Vt. 222.

28. A note, with surety, received as in full of a judgment, is a payment of it, though the discharge given names a less sum. Curtis v. Ingham, 2 Vt. 267.

29. The plaintiff received from the defendant, his debtor, in satisfaction of his claim, a note signed by the defendant and his wife for a less sum, which note the parties supposed to be binding upon the wife. The note was afterwards paid from the wife's separate property. Held, that this constituted a valid discharge of the original debt. Booker v. Harris, 30 Vt. 424; and see Wheeler v. Wheeler, 11 Vt. 67.

30. H & Bros., partners, sold and assigned all their demands against the defendant to a third person at 40 cents on the dollar. The defendant had before this given his note payable to one of the partners to apply on his account, but it was not credited, and the debt was reckoned without reference to the note. The defendant paid the assignee the sum paid by him, and he discharged the defendant from the debt. In an action by such partner upon the note;—Held, that these facts constituted a defense. Heartt v. Johnson, 13 Vt. 89.

31. A agreed with the debtor of an estate to purchase the debt, and that they would share equally in the difference between the price to be paid and the true amount of the debt. A did purchase the debt for less than the amount due and took it to himself. Held, that this operated as a payment or extinguishment in behalf of the debtor, to the extent of the one half of such difference. Chapman v. Comings, 43 Vt. 16.

32. Instance of non-assent to the acceptance of a sum as in full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, which was so offered, where the plaintiff said it was not enough, but that there would be no trouble about it. Willey v. Warden, 27 Vt. 655.

III. APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS.

33. One who pays money may, at the time of payment, direct the application, and, on his neglecting to do so, the payee has the right to make the application at any reasonable time thereafter; and if neither party elect, the law will make the application first to those demands which have the most precarious security. Briggs v. Williams, 2 Vt. 283. (17 Vt. 60). Hutchinson, J, dissenting, and holding that the creditor must make his election before suit brought, or the debtor's right of election is restored. Id.; and see Pierce v. Knight, 31 Vt. 701. Langdon v. Bowen, 46 Vt. 512.

34. As to the right of a creditor to make an appropriation of a general payment, not designated by the debtor, such appropriation need not be made at the very time of receiving payment. Some of the cases say that it must be done in a reasonable time (Briggs v. Williams, 2 Vt. 283); some, that the creditor may make it at any time before a controversy arises (Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 246); but the general course of decision in this country, and the more reasonable rule, is, that it should be exercised before suit brought, and that if not then made, the application is left to be made by the law. Pierce v. Knight, 31 Vt. 701.

35. When the debtor makes no appropriation of money paid generally, the creditor may make his own application, unless there be something in the case to show a different expectation on the part of the debtor. Rossau v. Cull, 14 Vt. 88.

36. Payments are to be applied according to the understanding of the parties, when that can be ascertained; and this may be ascertained by circumstances, or presumption. Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 246. Emery v. Tichout, 13 Vt. 15. Pierce v. Knight, 31 Vt. 701.

37. In the application of payment, the right of designation among several demands is essentially the right of the debtor; and if he waives it in favor of the creditor, it should be intended that he does so, relying upon an application to which he could not justly or reasonably object, and such as is usually adopted in the course of business. Thus, where the creditor has two or more demands, and a general payment is made without direction as to application, and the payment is less than either one of the demands, the creditor is not authorized, without the consent of the debtor, to divide the payment and apply a part on each demand, whether such demands are barred by the statute of limitations, as in Ayer v. Hawkins, 19 Vt. 26; or not, as in Wheeler v. House, 27 Vt. 735.

38. Where the creditor and debtor both neglect to direct the application of payments, courts will not look particularly to the interest or supposed wish of one party more than the other, but will make such application as is just and equitable between them. Pierce v. Knight, 31 Vt. 70; and see Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 246.

39. Where a person has two demands, one recognized by law, the other arising on a matter prohibited by law, and the debtor makes a payment which is not specifically appropriated by either party at the time of the payment, the law will afterwards appropriate it to the demand it acknowledges, and not to the demand which it prohibits. Wood v. Barney, 2 Vt. 369. Peters v. Slack, 13 Vt. 590. Bancroft v. Dumas, 21 Vt. 456. Backman v. Wright, 27 Vt. 187. Backman v. Mussey, 31 Vt. 547.

40. The plaintiffs, liquor dealers in New York, had sold liquors to the defendant for use in this State, one bill through their agent who took the order in this State (which the court held to be an illegal sale), and one bill on a direct order of the defendant to the plaintiffs in New York, (which the court held to be a legal sale). The defendant had made two part payments on the first bill. In their action of book account the plaintiffs presented to the auditor all the items of their account, both debt and credit, for adjustment, treating the whole as open for adjustment. Held, that, as presented, the several charges were to be determined according to their validity to go into the accounting, and to affect the general result accordingly; and that the credits were to be treated as payments upon the running account, and not as payments upon any particular items, or bill of the account, and were to be computed in favor of the defendant in arriving at the ultimate balance. Under this rule, all the plaintiffs' first bill was disallowed, and all the defendant's payments were allowed, leaving a balance in his favor. Erwin v. Stafford, 45 Vt. 390.

41. In the case of an open account, general payments, not applied, will be applied by the court, in the order of time they were made, to the charges in the order they accrued; the earliest credits to pay the earliest charges. Pierce v. Knight, 31 Vt. 701. Shedd v. Wilson, 27 Vt. 478; and see Morgan v. Tarbell, 28 Vt. 498. St. Albans v. Failey, 46 Vt. 448. Langdon v. Bowen, 46 Vt. 512.

42. The rule is well settled in this State, and in the United States supreme court, as well as in England, that general payments and credits will be applied to extinguish indebtednesses in the order of time in which they accrued, unless it appears that the intention of the parties was otherwise. And where the rights of sureties are involved, the court would be more stringent in enforcing this rule, as it is deemed just and equitable. St. Albans v. Failey. Langdon v. Bowen.

43. Payments made without direction as to their application, to a creditor holding demands due, and not due, must ordinarily be applied by the creditor first upon the demands due. Early v. Flannery, 47 Vt. 258.

44. In mutual accounts, where the parties thereto agree that certain items shall go in liquidation of certain other items, and provide for no further act to be done in respect thereto, the law makes the application at once. Bond v. Clark, 47 Vt. 565.

45. Payments upon a judgment should first be applied to the extinguishment of interest. Allen v. Lyman, 27 Vt. 20.

46. A payment made in satisfaction of one's recognizance for costs the law will apply upon the execution, rather than upon the charges for keeping the property attached. McNeil v. Bean, 32 Vt. 499.

47. The defendants in settlement of an account gave the plaintiffs an order on R for the amount, payable in freighting, which order R accepted and promised to pay. R afterwards did freighting for the plaintiffs to much more than this amount, but finally failed, owing the plaintiffs on open account much more than the order. Held, that, as to the defendants, the order and the account must be treated as paid. Sherwin v. Colburn, 25 Vt. 618.

IV. PAYMENT AS AFFORDING A RIGHT OF ACTION.

48. General rule. A payment creates no indebtedness, is never a subject of book charge, and cannot give a right of action in any form, nor of set off. It is matter of defense only, and operates presently to extinguish the debt. Jewett v. Winship, 42 Vt. 204. Slason v. Davis, 1 Alk. 78. Stevens v. Tuttle, 8 Vt. 519. Strong v. McConnell, 10 Vt. 231. Chellis v. Woods, 11 Vt. 466. Corey v. Gale, 13 Vt. 639. Brooks v. Jewell, 14 Vt. 470. Peach v. Mills, 14 Vt. 871. Bronson v. Rugg, 39 Vt. 241. Cushman v. Hall, 28 Vt. 656.

49. Qualification. But to constitute payment, it must be both delivered and received as payment. If left for subsequent adjustment or future application, this is not payment, and may be the subject of an action, if not applied and the debt has been otherwise paid. Id.

50. Articles delivered in payment of, and to be applied upon, a note, cannot be recovered for by action. Stevens v. Tuttle, 8 Vt. 519.

51. No recovery can be had for services performed in payment of a pre-existing debt. Beeman v. Webster, 15 Vt. 141.

52. Instances. The plaintiff delivered to the defendant, in part payment of a note, 125 bushels of potatoes in parcels at different times, which the defendant entered on his book as they were received. The potatoes were not indorsed upon the note, and it was otherwise paid. Held, that the book was evidence of an agreement for future adjustment and application of the payments, and, that fact being proved, the plaintiff could recover therefor. Cushman v. Hall, 28 Vt. 656.

53. The parties had mutual running accounts between them, and the plaintiff charged on his book for five days work done for the defendant, supposing this would be adjusted in their mutual accounts. The defendant soon after, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, indorsed upon a note he held against the plaintiff the price of the five days work. In an action of book account;—Held, that the defendant had no authority to appropriate the charge as a payment upon the note, as there was no mutual understanding to that effect; but it stood as the subject of mutual current account, and the plaintiff could recover therefor, notwithstanding the indorsement, and notwithstanding the defendant, after this suit had been commenced, had brought suit upon the note and had taken judgment by default, deducting from the amount due upon the note said indorsement. Cass v. McDonald, 39 Vt. 65.

54. The plaintiff delivered to the defendants, (a firm), certain articles, upon an agreement that on settlement of accounts the balance should be applied in payment of a note which J, one of the defendants, held against the plaintiff. J, on an attempted settlement, unreasonably refused to apply such balance on the note. Held, that the defendants were liable for the value of such articles in an action of book account. McNeal v. Strong, 16 Vt. 640.

55. The defendant, who held a note against the plaintiff, sold a lot of pelts for the plaintiff. Before the defendant had received the money for the pelts, the plaintiff told him that he (plaintiff) did not want the money but wanted it applied on the note. The defendant said "very well," or, "all right." The defendant did not apply the money, when received, upon the note, but appropriated it elsewhere without authority, and sued and took judgment for the full amount of the note. Held, that this differed from the case of the delivery of money or other property in hand as payment; and that the agreement was not so far consummated but that either party, before the application of the money upon the note, could have repudiated the understanding, and that the act of the defendant was such repudiation; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money. Bronson v. Rugg, 39 Vt. 241.

56. Party in fault. The plaintiff gave the defendant a negotiable promissory note, and, before it fell due, paid it, but through inadvertence the note was not surrendered, nor was the payment actually applied upon the note. Before the note, by its terms, fell due, the defendant sold and transferred it to a bona fide holder who sued the plaintiff upon it and obtained judgment, which the plaintiff paid. While that suit was pending, the plaintiff brought this action of assumpsit upon the common money counts, to recover back the sum so paid the defendant upon the note. Held, that by the assignment of the note the defendant had put it out of the power, either of himself or the plaintiff, to make the payment effectual, and thereafter he held the money in his own wrong and had forfeited his right longer to retain it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Newell, 31 Vt. 364.

57. Forged check. The payment by a bank of a forged check, drawn upon it, to a bona fide holder who has received it in due course of business for value, cannot be recovered back from him; and where such check had been placed to the credit of such holder, and notice of the forgery was not given to him for two months;—Held, that the bank had made the check its own. Bank of St. Albans v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 10 Vt. 141.

58. Sale and payment concurrent. When property is sold and paid for at the time, there is no debt or credit, and of course no right to charge on book. If there be any special agreement in relation to the property delivered in payment, giving rise to a subsequent claim, the remedy must be on such agreement. Nason v. Crooker, 11 Vt. 463.

59. Voluntary payment. We understand, that where a party pays money which he is under no legal obligation to pay, with full knowledge of the facts, he cannot recover it back; and though legal proceedings are threatened, or even commenced, to enforce payment, if they are bona fide, and no undue advantage is taken of the situation of the party, and he is thereby induced to make the payment, this does not prevent the payment from being in a legal sense voluntary. And when payment is thus voluntarily made, it amounts to nothing to make it under protest, or objection. Poland, C. J., in Taggart v. Rice, 37 Vt. 47.

60. By the defendant's request, the plaintiff received of him two notes given to him by his son, and $100 cash advanced by him to be paid to a creditor of his son, for which several amounts, deducting a debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff, the plaintiff gave his note to the defendant; upon the defendant's promise that he would not call for payment of the note until the plaintiff had collected the amount of the son, and that the plaintiff should lose nothing by the transaction. After making part payment of the note, the plaintiff gave a new note for the balance payable on demand, which, before the plaintiff did or could collect anything of the son, the defendant transferred to one R, who called on the plaintiff for payment, and he paid it without attempting to defend against it. Held,—no question being raised as to the admission of parol evidence to establish the case—that this was not a case of voluntary payment of a note legally invalid for want of consideration; that the note was upon good consideration, and this was a case of an independent counter claim against the defendant, which the plaintiff was not bound to set up as a defense to his note, and that the plaintiff could recover therefor. Id.

61. The payment of a claim, made at any time before final judgment and execution upon it, though made on account of having been sued upon it, is regarded as voluntary, unless where mens process against the body might be used as an instrument of actual duress, to extort satisfaction of an unlawful claim. Wheatley v. Waldo, 36 Vt. 237.

62. Where the plaintiff gave a note on the purchase of a patent right, and afterwards paid the note, having full knowledge, or means of knowledge, as to the validity of the patent, and the seller was guilty of no fraud;—Held, that the payment was voluntary, and that the plaintiff could not recover back the money paid, although the patent might be void. Stevens v. Head, 9 Vt. 174.

63. In an action to recover for work done under a special contract, the defendant successfully resisted to the extent of the price unpaid, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to fulfill the contract according to its terms;—but held, that he could not recover back any payments made on the contract after his discovery of the damage suffered on account of the plaintiff's breach; that such payments were voluntary and a waiver of damages to the extent of such payments. Williams v. Colby, 44 Vt. 40.

64. The plaintiff held the legal title to land. The defendant was in possession, having in fact the equitable title. The plaintiff denied the defendant's equity and his right to possession.

The plaintiff, without the request of the defendant, paid the taxes assessed on the land. The plaintiff, by decree of chancery, was afterwards compelled to convey the land to the defendant. Held, that such payment was voluntary, and the plaintiff could not recover the sum so paid. Bryant v. Clark, 45 Vt. 488.

V. PAYMENT AS AFFECTING THE SECURITIES.

65. When kept on foot. The cases are numerous, where a debt or claim has been paid to the creditor, and the securities have been kept alive for the benefit of others interested, and suits have been maintained on those securities; as, in State Treasurer v. Cross, 9 Vt. 289.

66. Upon the dissolution of a partnership, partner A agreed to pay a certain debt of the firm, but failed to do so. Partner B, for the purpose of having the debt collected of A, induced C to become the purchaser of it, and negotiated an assignment to C, at C's own risk and cost, who paid the creditor the amount. In an action by C in the name of the creditor against A and B;—Held, that by the agreement made on the dissolution B became a surety for A, and that A could not insist that the debt was paid. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Wires & Peck, 28 Vt. 98.

67. Where a surety for a debt due a bank, for the purpose of controlling the collection of the debt from his principal, let the bank's president have money enough to pay the debt, taking the president's note therefor, and turned out the note to the bank's attorney as collateral security for the debt, and afterwards caused suit for the debt to be brought in the name of the bank, and controlled the suit;—Held, against the defense of the principal, that such facts did not tend to prove payment, but that the debt was kept on foot. White River Bank v. Downer, 29 Vt. 382.

68. When not. One joint debtor cannot become the owner of the claim—as, by payment, or professed purchase and assignment—in such way as that an action will thereafter lie upon it; but such payment, or purchase, satisfies and extinguishes the debt as to all. Porter v. Gile, 44 Vt. 520. Allen v. Ogden, 12 Vt. 9. 18 Vt. 65. 22 Vt. 418.

69. Where a debt is paid and extinguished, though by a surety, all liens and securities created or obtained in the proceedings to enforce its collection are extinguished also, and so cannot be enforced by him. Moore v. Campbell, 36 Vt. 361.

70. A creditor is entitled to hold a collateral security until he gets his pay, and is not obliged to surrender it on bringing suit, or taking judgment. Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34 Vt. 89.

71. The plaintiffs made a parol agreement with their father, by which they were to pay all his debts, and he was to convey to them certain lands and his personal property. They took possession and paid part of the debts, when the father died without having reduced the agreement to writing. After his death, the plaintiffs made a written confirmatory contract with the other heirs of the deceased, by which they again agreed to pay all the debts of the estate and pay the widow $1000, and the heirs quit-claimed all their interest in the lands and property of the estate to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs afterwards, having paid the debts, caused administration to be taken of the estate and presented to the commissioners a claim for the sums so paid by them. Held, that such payments constituted no legal claim; that payment of the debts freed the estate from all lien of creditors thereon; and that the plaintiffs could not take advantage of an administration and representation of insolvency to set such claims on foot,—the estate being in effect closed, so far as creditors were concerned. Sutton v. Sutton, 18 Vt. 71. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

VI. PLEADING.

72. In an action upon a promissory note, the defendant may, under the general issue, show the delivery of articles of ordinary book charge in payment. He is not obliged to file his declaration on book in set-off. Pierce v. Clark, 1 Tyl. 140.

73. A tender, whether of money or specific articles, unless received, is not payment, and does not sustain a plea of payment. Downer v. Sinclair, 15 Vt. 495.

74. Payments, although required to be pleaded in order to bar the action, may nevertheless be proved in reduction of damages. Ferris v. Mosher, 27 Vt. 218.

75. To a declaration in a writ of review the defendant pleaded, that after the rendition of the judgment sought to be reviewed, the plaintiff paid and the defendant accepted a certain sum in satisfaction and discharge of said judgment and subject matter and action. Held good on demurrer;—that it must be taken, on this plea, that the payment was voluntary; if an enforced payment, that fact should have been replied. Watson v. Joslyn, 27 Vt. 611.

76. In an action upon a promissory note, a plea was held good on demurrer, averring in substance that the note was given for property belonging to A B which the plaintiff held as a mere cover to protect it from A B's creditors, and upon an agreement that the defendant should sell the property and pay the avails to A B, and that should be payment of the note; and that he had so done and performed his agreement. Carpenter v. McClure, 37 Vt. 127.

JUDGMENT, 107.

VII. EVIDENCE; PRESUMPTION.

77. Promissory note. A promissory note, either of the debtor or of a third person, given in settlement of an account or for a previous debt, is, by Vermont law, prima facie payment, so that a suit cannot be maintained upon the original indebtedness, whether the note be paid or not. See BILLS AND NOTES, III.

78. Release to witness. A discharge executed by an administrator to a witness of a collateral interest does not necessarily imply payment, as he may be so discharged without payment. Huntington v. Wilder, 6 Vt 334.

79. Payment to third person. Where it is necessary in a trial to show a payment to some third person, not a party or privy in the suit, evidence, which would be good against that party to establish such payment, is admissible; as, the written receipt of such person. Gilson v. Gilson, 18 Vt. 464. So, a verbal admission of payment. Reed v. Rice, 25 Vt. 171.

80. Habit of party. Evidence that the defendant was prompt and punctual in the payment of his debts, was held not admissible in aid of the defense of payment. Strong v. Slicer, 35 Vt. 40.

81. Pecuniary circumstances. As tending to disprove the plaintiff's claim, which had run for an unusual and unreasonable time, but short of the statute of limitations;—Held, that evidence was admissible that the plaintiff's pecuniary condition was such as to make it especially inconvenient and burdensome for him to go unpaid, and that the defendant had all along possessed the means of paying if called upon. Id.

82. Presumption. Presumption of payment of a bond is a legal inference after the lapse of twenty years, unless satisfactorily rebutted. The circumstances admissible to rebut such presumption must be such as prevented the recovering of a judgment. The poverty and imprisonment of the plaintiff, and of the defendant, and that the plaintiff sued out a writ but did not deliver it for service, are not sufficient. Rogers v. Judd, 5 Vt. 236.

83. Where notes signed by several joint principals had been taken up, and were found in the possession of one of them;—Held, that such possession alone did not furnish a presumption of payment by him. Mills v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 59.

84. Execution—Injunction. In an action of debt on judgment, the presumption of payment arising from the non-production of an execution issued upon it was held to be effectually rebutted by the fact, that the defendant, after the expiration of such execution, had obtained an injunction against the collection of the judgment. Bradley v. Briggs, 22 Vt. 95.

II. THE DECLARATION.

1. In general.
2. How aided by plea, or verdict.

III. PLEAS.

1. Dilatory pleas, and motions to dismiss.
2. Special pleas in bar.
3. General issue with notice.

IV. REPLICATION.

V. DEMURRER.

I. RULES OF GENERAL APPLICATION.

1. English language. The mark commonly used to denote dollars ($), is not part of the English language, within the meaning of the statute which requires pleadings, etc., to be in the English language. Clark v. Stoughton, 18 Vt. 50.

2. So, the common signs for degrees and minutes of courses in surveying (°) are insufficient in an indictment against a town for not making a highway, surveyed and laid out by such designation of termini and courses. State v. Jericho, 40 Vt. 121.

3. The term, "Legislature." The term, legislature, instead of general assembly, is well enough in pleading. State Treasurer v. Weeks, 4 Vt. 215.

4. Sense plain. The omission of a nominative case in a pleading does not vitiate, where the sense is plain. Williams v. Wilson, 1 Vt. 266.

5. Statutes of other States. The public statutes of another State are treated here as private statutes, as to the necessity of pleading them. Herring v. Selding, 2 Aik. 13. Peck v. Hibbard, 26 Vt. 698.

6. Videlicet. The averments of a plea must be made in direct terms, and not leave the main fact as matter of inference—as, by stating a date with a continuando under a videlicet. Britton v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 70.

7. A seeming repugnancy created by the stating of dates, in stating the order of events in the performance of a contract, when such dates are stated under a videlicet, is not material, where each event is alleged in conformity to the contract, and within the times limited therein. Stevens v. Chamberlin, 1 Vt 25.

8. Where a videlicet is followed by that which is material and necessary to be alleged, it is considered as a direct and positive affirmation or averment which is traversable, unless contrary to the preceding matter. It must be proved, when material, as much as if it had been averred without a videlicet. A videlicet never renders that immaterial which would otherwise be material. [Applied to a material date of a material fact laid under a videlicet.] Ladue v. Ladue, 16 Vt. 189.

9. Directness — Argumentativeness. Whatever facts are necessary to make the act charged unlawful, must appear by averments, in opposition to argument and inference; characterizing it as contrary to law, or concluding contra formam statuti, does not help the matter. Adams v. Nichols, 1 Aik. 816.

10. An averment in pleading, that notes which were executed and made payable to a married woman, during coverture, "became and were the sole property" of the husband, is not a sufficient averment that the husband reduced them to his actual possession. It is rather a legal conclusion of the pleader. Stearns v. Stearns, 80 Vt. 218.

11. An averment in a plea that the plaintiff was, by the listers, for his real estate, set in the grand list for a sum named, is a sufficiently direct and positive averment that he had a grand list to that amount for real estate. Adams v. Hyde, 37 Vt. 221.

12. An averment in pleading that "John J. Crandall became bail by indorsing his the said Crandall's said name of J. J. Crandall on said writ, as bail," &c., was held to amount to an averment that he indorsed the writ by the name of J. J. Crandall, and that this name is identical with John J. Crandall—and to be sufficient. Blood v. Crandall, 28 Vt. 396.

13. An averment that a judgment was rendered at a term of court commencing March 23, that an execution issued dated March 29, and was committed to an officer April 26th following, was held not a sufficient averment that it was so committed to the officer within 30 days from the time of rendering final judgment. McK. Ormsby v. Morris, 28 Vt. 711.

14. Continuous fact. Where a fact, continuous in its nature, is averred in pleading as existing, it is to be taken as continuing unless the contrary be averred, and that should come from the opposite party. Except in pleas of abatement, it is not necessary that the defendant should anticipate in his plea matter appropriate for a replication, and negate it. Kinsman v. Page, 22 Vt. 628. Day v. Abbott, 15 Vt. 632.

15. Condition. Where a condition is to do a thing when thereto requested, the request is a part of the condition—a traversable fact—and must be averred with all necessary circumstances of time and place. Jones v. Cooper, 2 Aik. 54.

16. Profert. Where a deed is the foundation of the action, the declaration must make profert of it, though professed to be set out in hæc verba. Austin v. Dills, 1 Tyl. 808.

17. The omission of a profert, when necessary, is only cause for special demurrer. Way v. Swift, 12 Vt. 890.

18. Oyer. The defendant is not entitled to oyer where there is no profert. Where profert is unnecessarily made, the defendant is not on that account entitled to oyer, but must plead without it; but if oyer is asked for and is given, he may make use of it. Story v. Kimball, 6 Vt. 541.

19. Matter of record. In pleading matters of record, the record must be vouched to verify them. Holden v. Scanlin, 80 Vt. 177.

20. Scire facias against bail was held ill on special demurrer, for want of a prout patet per recordum. Wright v. Brownell, 2 Vt. 117.

21. Contradicting record. A pleading is bad, which contradicts a record by matter in pais. Lopham v. Briggs, 37 Vt. 26.

22. Departure. Instance of a departure in pleading. Houghton v. Jewett, 3 Tyl. 183. Joslyn v. Taylor, 33 Vt. 470.

23. Instance of a departure in a replication; repugnancy; no denial of facts stated in the plea, nor avoidance, &c. Watson v. Joslyn, 29 Vt. 455.

24. Duplicity. If the facts alleged in a plea are ever so multifarious, yet if they all go to make up one entire result and require but one answer, there is no duplicity. Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 853, 412. Waddams v. Burnham, 1 Tyl. 238.

25. Several matters in a plea do not render the plea double, if they are constituent parts of the same entire defense, or are alleged as inducement to, or as a consequence of, another fact. Mott v. Haasen, 27 Vt. 208.

26. In order to determine whether a plea is double, reference must be had not only to the matter, but also to the general frame and structure, of the plea. Where two defenses are combined in one plea, it is not necessary that each should be a sufficient defense in order to render the plea double. The plea in this case was held bad for duplicity. Vaughan v. Everts, 40 Vt. 526.

27. In trespass de bonis, the defendant pleaded in bar the organization and existence of a school district, the warning and holding of a school meeting, the voting of a tax, the plaintiff's liability to be taxed, the assessment of the tax by the prudential committee, the issuing and delivery of the tax warrant to the defendant, who was collector, and his proceedings under it in taking the property, &c.: Replication, that said supposed tax "was not legally and duly assessed by the then prudential committee of said school district upon the lists of said district." Held, upon special demurrer, that the replication presented but a single issue, viz: the actual assessment by the prudential committee, and whether, from the vote of the district and the grand list, they did truly ascertain and fix the amount to be paid by each person liable to be taxed—all the proceedings preliminary to such assessment being admitted by the pleadings. Moss v. Hinds, 28 Vt. 279. S. C., 29 Vt. 188.

II. THE DECLARATION.

1. In General.

28. Is part of the writ. By G. S. c. 83, s. 9., the writ and declaration are blended in one instrument, and the declaration is thereby made a part of the writ. Hence, the writ may be referred to, to aid a defective averment in the declaration proper; as, that one of the plaintiffs is wife of the other. Church v. Westminster, 45 Vt. 880.

29. Several counts. Every special count must contain in itself all the averments necessary to show a cause of action. Farnsworth v. Nason, Brayt. 192.

30. Where a declaration contains several counts, each for a separate cause of action, each count should be complete in itself and not require aid by reference to the others. Where only such general reference is made, the court cannot be required to look into the pleadings and assort the parts, and appropriate them in aid of the needy counts. Holton v. Muzzy, 80 Vt. 885.

31. Declaration on record. In declaring upon a matter of record of a justice court, it is not necessary to set forth the proceedings at large, as by a transcript, but only to aver the facts with a prout patet per recordum. Chittenden v. Catlin, 2 D. Chip. 22.

32. —on contract. A written contract must be declared on according to its legal effect, and not by setting out its words. It cannot be referred to, and so be made a part of the declaration, as is done in chancery. Estes v. Whipple, 12 Vt. 373.

33. To declare upon a contract in the words of it, is sometimes sufficient, and sometimes not. That depends upon the degree of precision with which the contract is drawn. The declaration should be certain to a certain intent, and when the contract is not so, but is vague and uncertain, the pleader must intelligently express that view of the contract upon which the claim is founded; otherwise, the declaration will be bad on demurrer, and, many times, on motion in arrest. But if described in the words of the contract, there cannot be said to be a variance. Royalton v. R. & W. Turnpike Co., 14 Vt. 311.

34. Declaration upon a note, or written contract, for the payment of a certain sum, at a certain time and place, in certain due-bills—omitting to aver that the plaintiff was present then and there ready to receive them;—Held good—certainly, after verdict. Carpenter v. Coit, 1 D. Chip. 88.

35. In the case of mutual covenants, where the declaration avers that the defendant has disabled himself from performance, the plaintiff need not aver a tender of performance on his part, but must aver that he was ready and willing to perform. Stow v. Stevens, 7 Vt. 27. Joslyn v. Taylor, 33 Vt. 470.

36. Matter of evidence. C. S. c. 20, s. 12, provided that a contract with a school-teacher for teaching should be null and void if he should fail to obtain a certificate of qualification before the commencement of the school. In an action by a teacher upon such contract;—Held, that the declaration need not aver that he had obtained such certificate; that this is matter of evidence pertaining to the remedy. Doyan v. School Dist. Montgomery 35 Vt. 520; and see Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591.

37. Consideration. A contract was set out in a plea as made "upon a good and valuable consideration." Held insufficient on general demurrer. The consideration should be set out, that the court may see that it is a good and valuable one—that it is legally sufficient. A demurrer does not admit this. It admits such facts only as are well pleaded. Marshall v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 327. (See Paddock v. Jones, 40 Vt. 474.)

2. How aided by plea, or verdict.

38. Aided by plea. A plea may, by a direct admission of facts omitted or obscurely expressed in the declaration, aid the declaration; it may, by intendment, aid that which is defectively set forth; but will not, by intendment, aid that which is the very gist and point of the action. Ralston v. Strong, 1 D. Chip. 287. Post 144.

39. Aided by verdict. A motion in arrest for the insufficiency of the declaration will not prevail, where it contains the substance of a good declaration, and all the facts necessary to a recovery, though imperfectly stated. Battles v. Braintree, 14 Vt. 348. Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 225.

40. Defects merely formal are aided by verdict; and many defects which would be reached by general demurrer are also cured by verdict. The omission of that which must necessarily be presumed to have been proved on trial, is not cause of arrest; but nothing is presumed to have been proved, which is not expressly stated in the declaration, or necessarily implied from those facts which are stated. Vadakin v. Soper, 1 Aik. 287. Keyes v. Throop, 2 Aik. 276.

41. The language of a declaration is to be favorably construed to sustain a verdict; as, where an equivocal term is used. Manwell v. Manwell, 14 Vt. 14.

42. A declaration, ill on demurrer, may be good after verdict on motion in arrest. After verdict, every reasonable presumption should be made in favor of the sufficiency of pleadings. A title defectively stated is cured by verdict, but not a defective title. Brown v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 452. Lincoln v. Blanchard, 17 Vt. 464.

43. Judgment will not be arrested after verdict, for lack of an essential averment in the declaration which is contained by implication in the averments used, or which may be considered to have been proved as a part of what is alleged. Morey v. Homan, 10 Vt. 565;—which is implied or must have appeared in proving what is actually alleged. Needham v. McAuley, 18 Vt. 68. Lincoln v. Blanchard. Brown v. Hitchcock. Curtis v. Burdick, 48 Vt. 166.

44. In an action upon an award embracing the arbitrator's fees, the court refused to arrest judgment upon a verdict for the plaintiff including such fees, although the declaration did not aver that the plaintiff had paid them. He could not have recovered them without such proof. Blanchard v. Murray, 15 Vt. 548.

45. Under G. S. c. 52, s. 17, requiring an action, for an injury causing death, to be brought by the personal representative of the deceased within two years from the decease, the declaration averred the date of the decease, and this date was, in fact, within two years from the commencement of the suit; but it did not aver (otherwise) that the decease occurred within such two years. On motion in arrest;—Held, that the declaration was sufficient; and the fact being one which was necessary to be proved in order to a recovery, it would, after verdict, be presumed to have been proved, even if the time of the decease had not been alleged at all. Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 501.

46. In case for fraudulent representations as to land sold, the declaration alleged that the plaintiff bargained with the defendants to buy of them a certain piece of land; that said land was described in a deed from the defendants to the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff purchased of the defendants the land described in said deed. Held, on motion in arrest, that the word purchased implied payment of a price, and that the presumption was that these several averments of the declaration were proved on trial. Motion overruled. Curtis v. Burdick, 48 Vt. 166.

47. Defects in a declaration in the statement of value, kinds and enumeration of articles of property, &c., were held cured by verdict. Wetherbee v. Foster, 5 Vt. 186. Fuller v. Fuller, 4 Vt. 123.

48. The lack of averring a special demand, when necessary, is cured by verdict. Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252.

49. A declaration in debt for goods sold and delivered was held good after verdict, where there was no averment that the goods were so sold, &c., "at the special instance and request of the defendant." Durrill v. Lawrence, 10 Vt. 517.

50. A new or an amended declaration, not concluding with an ad damnum, but where the ad damnum was set forth in the original declaration, was held sufficient on motion in arrest. It must be considered as referring to the original declaration. Parlin v. Bundy, 18 Vt. 582.

51. Whatever may be the rule in regard to supplying what is necessary in one count by reference to others, where the objection to such reference is taken by special demurrer, such objection cannot prevail on motion in arrest. Curtis v. Belknap, 21 Vt. 483.

52. In a declaration to recover for work done in building a railroad, upon a contract in which it was agreed that the payments should be made from time to time according to estimates of the engineers of the amount of work so done, it was held, on motion in arrest, that an omission to aver that such estimates had been made was cured by an averment that it was the duty of the defendant to have such estimates made, and that it was through his fault that they were not made. Camp v. Barker, 21 Vt. 469.

53. In declaring upon a promise, the want of an averment of consideration, or the averment of an insufficient consideration, is not cured by verdict. Vadakin v. Soper, 1 Aik. 287.

54. Counts in case for a false warranty cannot be joined with a count in assumpsit upon an express warranty. After a general verdict in such case for the plaintiff, judgment was arrested on motion. Joy v. Hill, 86 Vt. 333.

55. In a plea which should have concluded to the country, the conclusion was wholly omitted. Held good after verdict. Stearns v. Stearns, 32 Vt. 678.

56. Good and bad counts. Where one count of a declaration is fatally defective, although joined with other good counts, and the verdict is general, judgment will be arrested. Haselton v. Weare, 8 Vt. 480. Bloss v. Kittridge, 5 Vt. 28. Harding v. Cragin, 8 Vt. 501. Walker v. Sargeant, 11 Vt. 327. Wood v. Scott, 13 Vt. 47. Needham v. McAuley, Id. 68. Sylvester v. Downer, 18 Vt. 32. Barrett, J., in Joy v. Hill, 86 Vt. 336. Dunham v. Powers, 42 Vt. 1.

57. The same doctrine applied to a declaration in set-off. Bloss v. Kittridge. Walker v. Sargeant.

58. The above rule criticised in Wood v. Scott, 13 Vt. 47. Whitcomb v. Wolcott, 21 Vt. 368. Camp v. Barker, Id. 469. McDuffee v. Magoon, 26 Vt. 518; and apparently held, that where it appears that the evidence was applicable solely to the good counts, a general verdict will be sustained; or that it would be presumed that the verdict was upon the good counts only, the contrary not appearing.

59. Note. Now settled by stat. 1865, No. 12, enacting that where the counts are for the same cause of action, a general verdict in such case "shall be deemed as the finding of the jury on the good count or counts, unless it otherwise appears," &c.

60. But unless for the same cause of action, the judgment in such case will be arrested; and so done in Dunham v. Powers, 42 Vt. 1. Kimmis v. Stiles, 44 Vt. 351.

61. Where it appears by the whole record that the verdict was in no part founded upon a defective count, the judgment will not be arrested on account of the defective count, though the verdict be general. Montgomery v. Maynard, 33 Vt. 450.

III. PLEAS.

1. Dilatory pleas and motions to dismiss.

62. Title of plea. By our practice, the title to a plea is of very little importance. It is sufficient if it follows the docket entry, and identifies the suit. So held, as to a plea in abatement. Cleft v. Hosford, 12 Vt. 296.

63. Time of pleading—Waiver. Matter in abatement, simply, must be pleaded at the earliest opportunity, or it is waived;—as, in a justice suit, on the first day of appearance. Martin v. Blodget, 1 Aik. 875. Stone v. Prosecutor, 2 D. Chip. 108.

64. Where a justice suit was postponed by agreement of parties to a future day, without an express reservation of the defendant's right to insist upon dilatory matter;—Held, that such right was thereby waived. Wheelock v. Sears, 19 Vt. 559.

65. So, where a suit by order of the county court was allowed to be entered later than the time fixed by the rules of practice for such entry, and later than the day fixed by the rules for filing dilatory pleas;—Held, that without a reservation, in the order, of the right to file such plea, the right was waived. Dow v. School Dist. Walden 46 Vt. 108.

66. A personal privilege must be seasonably asserted, or it is waived;—this applied to the place of trial. Forbes v. Davison, 11 Vt. 660.

67. Defect of trial venue in the writ is cured by appearance, and trial upon the merits. Stone v. Van Curler, 2 Vt. 115.

68. In an action of book account, before a justice, against the defendant and another, there was no service on the other nor excuse therefor. The defendant entered a general appearance before the justice and went to trial on the general issue. On appeal, the defendant pleaded in abatement the want of service on the other defendant. Held, that the plea was bad, as being out of time, and that the defect was waived. Pike v. Blake, 8 Vt. 400.

69. The objection to a writ, that no minute of the true time of issuing it was entered upon it, as required by G. S. c. 62, must be taken at the earliest opportunity;—as, on the return day of a justice writ; or, at the first term in the county court, under the rule applicable to matters in abatement. Otherwise, the objection is waived. Pollard v. Wilder, 17 Vt. 48. Wheelock v. Sears, 19 Vt. 559. Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178.

70. Where a judgment against the defendant, rendered by default by a justice in an action for a penalty, had been set aside on petition to the county court, and the cause there entered;—Held, in the absence of any rule made as to dilatory defenses, that the court, at the first term, properly entertained a motion to dismiss the action for want of the required minute of the true day, &c., when the writ was signed—that being the defendant's first opportunity. School Dist. Granby v. Austin, 46 Vt. 90.

71. In an action on a probate bond, under G. S. c. 60, s. 2, an objection that the prosecutor's name was not indorsed on the writ, was held waived by continuance and trial on the merits, or on demurrer. Probate Court v. Strong, 24 Vt. 146; and see 32 Vt. 775.

72. A writ not signed by any proper authority, is not absolutely or incurably void, but is confirmed and the defect waived, by the appearance of the defendant and pleading to the merits without objection to the process. The objection is in substance merely dilatory, and must be presented, if at all, at the first opportunity. Huntley v. Henry, 37 Vt. 165.

73. After plea of not guilty, and the commencement of the trial of a liquor prosecution on appeal from a justice, the respondent filed a motion to dismiss, alleging that the justice acted as attorney and counsel for the State upon the trial before himself. Held, that the court properly refused to entertain the motion; (1), because not founded upon any fact or matter of record apparent upon the face of the proceedings; (2), because not seasonably made. State v. Haynes, 35 Vt. 565.

74. The appearance of a foreign corporation by counsel at the first term and suffering a general continuance at that and the next term, are a waiver of all dilatory pleas, and of all objections to the service of the writ. Stanton v. Proprietors of the Haverhill Bridge, 47 Vt. 173.

75. Where a plea in abatement is filed out of time, as after the first term, such objection can be taken advantage of by demurrer. The plaintiff may either sign judgment, move to have the plea set aside, or demur. Jennison v. Hapgood, 2 Aik. 31.

76. Seemle, if the county court sustains a motion to dismiss, and the record shows that the motion was not seasonably filed, the supreme court, on exceptions, will hold it error. Dow v. School Dist. Walden 46 Vt. 108—citing Pollard v. Wilder, 16 Vt. 605, note.

77. Distinction between plea and motion. A motion to dismiss is confined to cases where the defect is apparent upon the face of the record, or papers, on inspection. That which requires proof aliunde, must be presented by plea in abatement upon which an issue can be formed. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bailey, 24 Vt. 465. Waterford v. Brookfield, 2 Vt. 200. Culver v. Balch, 23 Vt. 618. Bliss v. Smith, 42 Vt. 198. Johnson v. Williams, 48 Vt. 565.

78. Generally, causes for dismissing the action, and causes of abatement, 'apparent from the papers on file which constitute the proceedings in the cause, though not of record in the strict technical sense, may be taken advantage of by motion. Peck, J., in Bent v. Bent, 43 Vt. 44. Bennett v. Allen, 30 Vt. 684.

79. Reference to writ. In a motion to dismiss for an apparent defect in the writ, it is not necessary to make such specific reference to the writ as in a plea in abatement,—the writ being under the hand and eye of the court. Barnet v. Emery, 43 Vt. 178.

80. A written motion to dismiss a suit because "no minute of any recognizance," &c., "was made upon the plaintiff's writ," &c., was met by a parol demurrer. Held, that the writ was tacitly referred to, and so as to authorize an inspection of the writ to determine the truth and sufficiency of the motion. Perkins v. Walker, 16 Vt. 240.

81. A plea in abatement which verifies the facts by the record, may be treated as a motion to dismiss, and, as such, be sufficient. Gray v. Flowers, 24 Vt. 533.

82. A plea in abatement, defective in form as such, was held good as a motion to dismiss for want of a recognizance for costs in the writ. Whittaker v. Perry, 37 Vt. 631; and see Barnet v. Emery, 43 Vt. 178.

83. So, where a defective plea showed, by the record, want of jurisdiction in the court. Ferris v. Ferris, 25 Vt. 100.

84. Matter in abatement to be proved by evidence aliunde the record, though (perhaps) allowed to be urged in the form of a motion, must be so presented by averment that a traverse of the averment shall form an issue, the finding of which, either way, will definitely settle the legal right involved. Barrows v. McGowan, 39 Vt. 238. State v. Intoxicating Liquor, 44 Vt. 208.

85. A motion to abate a writ, made returnable to Franklin county court, averred that the plaintiff resided at Buffalo in the State of New York, and the defendant at Cambridge in the county of Lamoille. Held ill on demurrer; because, on a traverse, a negative finding of either or both the issues would not determine the right to bring the suit in Franklin county. Barrows v. McGowan.

86. In deciding the sufficiency of a plea in abatement, the court will not look into the writ and officer's return, unless they are referred to in the plea. Pearson v. French, 9 Vt. 349.

87. But may, if so referred to. Ingraham v. Leland, 19 Vt. 304.

88. Requisites of plea in abatement. A plea in abatement must stand good by itself, and cannot be aided by facts alleged in the writ or declaration, unless expressly referred to. Bowman v. Stowell, 21 Vt. 309.

89. In a plea in abatement for defective service of a writ, an omission to lay traversable facts with time and place, was held not supplied by a general reference to the writ and return. Morse v. Nash, 30 Vt. 76.

90. A plea in abatement cannot be helped by matters alleged in subsequent pleadings; as, a rejoinder. Lincoln v. Thrall, 34 Vt. 110.

91. More than one plea in abatement is not warranted by either the common law, or the statute. Where three such pleas were filed in one suit;—Held, that the plaintiff was not confined to a motion to have all the pleas but one taken from the files, but he might demur generally; and such pleas were held ill for duplicity, on general demurrer. Culver v. Balch, 23 Vt. 618.

92. One prayer of judgment in one plea,—as, in a plea in abatement,—is as good as more. Gray v. Flowers, 24 Vt. 533. Landon v. Roberts, 20 Vt. 286.

93. A plea in abatement which avers matter dehors the record, is defective by having a prayer of judgment both in the commencement and the conclusion of the plea. It should only conclude with such prayer. Smith v. Chase, 39 Vt. 89. Landon v. Roberts.

94. Whether such informality is a fatal defect on demurrer—quære. It seems not. See cases above, and Gray v. Flowers, 24 Vt. 533. Wires v. Griswold, 26 Vt. 97. Morse v. Nash, 30 Vt. 80. Essex v. Prentiss, 6 Vt. 53.

95. In a plea in abatement, a prayer that the writ may be quashed is equivalent to a prayer of judgment of the writ, that it abate. Gray v. Flowers, 24 Vt. 533.

96. All defects in pleas in abatement are reached by a general demurrer. Id. Landon v. Roberts, 20 Vt. 286.

97. A plea in abatement which depends for its support on conclusions which are the result of an inference, or an argumentative demonstration, is fatally defective. Sumner v. Sumner, 36 Vt. 105.

98. An averment in a plea in abatement that the defendant resided "in the town of Burlington, and not elsewhere," was held insufficient, on demurrer, to present the issue that the defendant did not reside in the town of Charlotte. Durand v. Griswold, 26 Vt. 48.

99. An averment in a plea in abatement that the writ was served by A B, "a constable, &c." is merely descriptive of the person, and is not a sufficient averment that A B was constable, or that he served the writ in that capacity. Sumner v. Sumner, 86 Vt. 105.

100. A plea in abatement to the service of a writ, must directly and fully negate any other service, either by the same or any other officer. Morse v. Nash, 30 Vt. 76. 39 Vt. 89.

101. A plea in abatement for defective service of a writ, averring that it does not appear by the officer's return upon the writ, that he left with the defendant a true copy of the writ, &c., was held ill, for stating the fact argumentatively. Hill v. Powers, 16 Vt. 516.

102. So also, where the averment was "although said writ was served by copy, &c." Pearson v. French, 9 Vt. 349.

103. A plea in abatement that H F, "by whom the writ was served, was not at the time of service a person duly authorized and qualified by law to serve the same," was held ill. Crane v. Warner, 14 Vt. 40.

104. A plea in abatement for defect of service of the writ, averred that the writ was served by A B "as first constable of," &c.; and made reference to the writ, and the return thereon which was signed "A B, first constable," and averred that A B was not first constable. Held defective, by not averring that A B did not serve the writ in any other capacity than as first constable, since he might have done it as second constable, sheriff, &c.; and that the addition of his name of office in the signing of his return was not conclusive of the fact that he served the writ in no other capacity. Smith v. Chase, 39 Vt. 89.

105. A plea in abatement averred that J H, "the justice of the peace who signed said writ" "was at the time of signing said writ" "as justice of the peace as aforesaid, and still is related to said defendant within the fourth degree of affinity." Held ill, (1), in not averring, except by way of recital, that the writ was signed by J H; (2), in not averring that the writ was not otherwise signed, at the time of service, than by J H; (3), in not averring the particular relationship which constituted the affinity. Landon v. Roberts, 20 Vt. 286, citing Pearson v. French, 9 Vt. 349.

106. Book account: The plaintiff was described in the writ as of New York and the defendant as of Rutland in the county of Rutland. The writ was returnable to Rutland county court. Plea in abatement, that the defendant did not, at, &c., reside in the county of Rutland, but did reside at Woodstock in the county of Windsor. Replication, that the defendant, at, &c., did not reside in Woodstock, but did reside in the county of Rutland. On issue joined and trial by the court, the court found that the defendant did not, at, &c., reside in the county of Rutland, but did not find where his actual residence was, and thereupon rendered judgment that the writ abate. Held erroneous; and the supreme court reversed the judgment, and rendered judgment that the defendant account, and appointed an auditor. Vanderburg v. Clark, 22 Vt. 185. 13 Vt. 501.

107. In an action by the guardian of an insane person in behalf of his ward, a plea in abatement for the pendency of a former action, &c., was held ill, because it did not aver that the first action was commenced before the plaintiff was placed under guardianship, or that it was commenced by the procurement or assent of the guardian. Lincoln v. Thrall, 34 Vt. 110.

108. A plea in abatement in replevin, averred that the writ was served upon a day named, and that neither before that day, nor after, was any bond taken, &c. Held ill, for not including the day of service. Bent v. Bent, 43 Vt. 42.

109. Where there were three defendants, a plea in abatement averred matter in abatement applicable to but two of them, and prayed judgment that the writ abate as to all. Held, that the prayer was too large, and the plea insufficient. Bliss v. Smith, 42 Vt. 198.

110. To a plea in abatement averring the pendency of a former suit for the same cause of action, the replication denied that the former suit was for the same cause, and concluded to the country. Held, that the conclusion was correct, since the plea contained matter of fact, as well as of law; and that it was not necessary to allege the grounds of difference between the two actions. Merrow v. Huntoon, 25 Vt. 9.

111. In an action of book account, where an issue of fact joined on a plea in abatement was found against the defendant;—Held, that the proper judgment was, that the defendant account. Peach v. Mills, 13 Vt. 501. Vanderburg v. Clark, 22 Vt. 185.

As to matters pleadable in abatement, see ACTION; and the several actions, as ASSUMPSIT, &c.

2. Special pleas in bar.

112. General rules—As to extent. Every plea in bar is to be treated as a plea to the whole declaration, unless it is expressly limited to some particular portion; and to be sufficient as such, it must contain a sufficient answer to all that is alleged as the direct ground and gist of the action. Matters of aggravation merely require no justification. Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 102.

113. A plea is ill which does not contain a sufficient answer to all which it professes to answer. Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 353.

114. A joint plea which is ill as to one defendant, is good for neither. Clark v. Lathrop, 33 Vt. 140.

115. A plea is not ill because not an answer to the whole declaration, or count, if it is good for such part as it professes to answer. In such case, the part not answered stands confessed, and the plaintiff may take judgment, at proper time, therefor. Carpenter v. Briggs, 15 Vt. 84.

116. A special plea in bar must admit the truth of so much of the charge in the declaration as it attempts to avoid, excuse, or justify; as, in an action for an assault, that the assault was committed. Blood v. Adams, 38 Vt. 52.

117. Where a plea averred that the causes of action did not, nor did either of them, accrue within six years, &c., a replication thereto averring that said causes of action, or some of them, without averring which, did accrue within six years, &c., was held insufficient. Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 86 Vt. 593.

118. To an action of assumpsit upon a promissory note, a plea in bar averring a want of consideration, was held ill, as amounting to the general issue. Potter v. Stankly, 1 D. Chip. 243; and see Burton v. Bostwick, Brayt. 195.

119. Conclusion. Whenever new matter is introduced in any of the pleadings, the pleading should conclude with a verification. Joslyn v. Tracy, 19 Vt. 569.

120. Adding a similiter by the plaintiff to a plea concluding with a verification amounts to nothing; it leaves the plea unanswered, closes no issue, and warrants no trial of it. Sherwin v. Bliss, 4 Vt. 96.

121. Special traverse. A special traverse consists of an affirmative not compatible with the adversary's former pleading, and a negative (abque hoc) in direct contradiction to it. It is not unlike some of the eastern forms of speech found in the Holy Scriptures; as, "Thou shalt die and not live;" "He shall see for himself and not another." Day v. Essex Co. Bank, 13 Vt. 97.

122. Pleading former recovery. A plea in bar, averring a former judgment in a suit for the same cause of action, that the defendant recover his costs, was held ill on demurrer, because not averring that the merits were tried. Swaft v. Hamblin, Brayt. 189.

123. A plea in bar that the facts averred in the declaration were pleaded in bar by the present plaintiff in a former suit against him, and that the court adjudged that the plaintiff in that suit ought not to be barred, is not equivalent to an averment that the court found the matters stated in that plea not proved, and therefore adjudged that that plaintiff was not barred. Noyes v. Evans, 6 Vt. 628.

124. Matter of evidence. A contract which varies or contradicts a written contract declared upon, when set up in a plea as a defense, need not be averred to have been in writing. This is matter of evidence, and a demurrer to the plea admits the contract stated. Carpenter v. McClure, 37 Vt. 127.

125. Consideration. The consideration of a contract was averred in a plea as "a valuable consideration, to wit: in consideration of certain valuable securities then placed in their hands as collateral security, &c." Held sufficient on general demurrer. Paddock v. Jones, 40 Vt. 474. See Marshall v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 337.

126. Defense arising after suit. A plea puis darrein continuance, which goes to the plaintiff's cause of action and does not simply affect the remedy, has the effect to waive and strike from the record, by operation of law, all previous pleas, and everything stands confessed except the special matter contested by the plea. Lincoln v. Thrall, 26 Vt. 304. (Changed by stat. 1867, No. 5.)

3. General issue with notice.

127. Special matter may be given in evidence, by way of notice, in all actions and under every general issue; as, under the plea of non est factum. Lawrence v. Dole, 11 Vt. 549. G. S. c. 30, s. 82.

128. The statute, by allowing special matter to be given in evidence upon notice under the general issue, dispenses with the form only, not the substance of a special plea. The facts relied on must be as particularly set forth in the notice as in a plea in bar, though the same technical precision is not required. Bowditch v. Peckham, 1 D. Chip. 144. Barney v. Goff, Id. 304. Herring v. Selding, 2 Aik. 12. Fullerton v. Mack, Id. 415. Nott v. Stoddard, 38 Vt. 25.

129. The statute authorizing a notice under the general issue as a substitute for a special plea, dispenses with the form, but not with the substance of a plea. If the facts alleged in the notice would be defective if set forth in the form of a plea, the evidence under the notice may be objected to at the trial, and, if objected to, should be excluded. Nott v. Stoddard. Rice v. Pollard, 1 Tyl. 230.

130. The notice of special matter of defense alleged a submission to arbitration, and an award, which "was to the effect, that the defendant was not liable to pay to the plaintiff any damage for the injury complained of." Held sufficient, on the face of the notice. Edwards v. Harrington, 45 Vt. 63.

131. In trespass for an assault and battery, the defendant gave notice, under the general issue, that he had recovered judgment against the plaintiff for the identical assault and battery here declared upon. Held, that the notice was incongruous and absurd, and disclosed no defense. Cade v. McFarland, 48 Vt. 47.

132. Where the effect of the evidence is to show that no cause of action ever existed, and is not matter of discharge of a cause once existing, no notice under the general issue is required by G. S. c. 80, s. 82. James v. Aiken, 47 Vt. 23.

133. G. S. c. 33, s. 15. Where a special contract, before a breach of it, is varied as to the manner of performance, performance according to the modified agreement may be shown under the general issue without notice; the statute requiring such notice only in case of "matter operating to extinguish the right of action which once existed." Harlow v. Dyer, 48 Vt. 357.

IV. REPLICATION.

134. Where a declaration consists of several counts and a plea in bar to the whole is pleaded, if the plaintiff has matter good as a replication to the plea so far as pleaded to one of the counts only, he should limit his replication to the plea so far as pleaded to that count, and pray judgment of that count only; otherwise, the replication is ill. Carpenter v. McClure, 38 Vt. 375.

135. In such case, the plaintiff should, by a separate replication, answer the plea in some other way, as respects the other counts. Id. Wood v. Springfield, 48 Vt. 617.

136. G. S. c. 88, s. 16, provides that "the party against whom matter is specially pleaded in confession and avoidance, in answer to matter by him antecedently alleged, may, by a general form of denial, traverse and put in issue all the material facts so pleaded by the other party." This statute allows a party practically to tender a general issue to his adversary's previous pleading, as to a declaration; and as the statute gives, or refers to no particular form of denial;—Held, that a replication denying specifically the several allegations of a plea in the words of the plea, though unnecessarily prolix, was sufficient; and that only the material facts of the plea were thereby put in issue. Austin v. Chittenden, 32 Vt. 168.

137. A general replication de injuria is a sufficient "general form of denial," under the statute, even in an action of assumpsit—certainly, where the defense is only matter of excuse. Paddock v. Jones, 40 Vt. 474.

138. A traverse with de injuria, must conclude to the country. Spencer v. Bemis, 46 Vt. 29.

V. DEMURRER.

139. Confined to the record. Where pleadings close in a demurrer, no fact can be treated as in the case which does not appear from the pleadings, even though conceded on the hearing. Hartland v. Windsor, 29 Vt. 354.

140. How far an admission. A demurrer admits all the facts averred in the declaration, according to their legal effect. It not only admits the substantive facts charged, but also the consequences and results charged, provided these may be fairly considered to be the legitimate results of such facts,—and even the motives charged. Hyde v. Moffat, 16 Vt. 371. Redfield, J., dissents from the application of this doctrine to the case.

141. A demurrer admits only such facts as are well pleaded. Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433.

142. Other remedy. It is no objection to a demurrer to a plea which traverses an immaterial fact, that the party might have moved for judgment as for want of a plea. Marvin v. Wilkins, 1 Aik. 107.

143. Clerical error. A mere clerical error in a plea which is corrected by papers that, by reference, are made part of the plea, may be disregarded on demurrer. Such errors may be amended at any time, on motion. Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 433.

144. Runs through the whole record. On motion in arrest, or on demurrer, the court looks at the whole record, and an informality or an essential omission in the declaration may be supplied by an averment or admission in the plea, or notice. Wood v. Scott, 13 Vt. 42. Probate Court v. Vanduser, 13 Vt. 135. Sanderson v. Hubbard, 14 Vt. 462. Hoyt v. Smith, 32 Vt. 304. Ralston v. Strong, 1 D. Chip. 287.

145. Fastens to the first substantial defect. A demurrer, general or special, reaches back to the first substantial defect in the pleadings; while no defects of form are reached, even by a special demurrer, except such as appear in the particular pleading demurred to, and are specially noted. Adams v. Nichols, 1 Aik. 316. Carlton v. Young, Id. 332.

146. A demurrer to a plea in abatement to the service of a writ, does not reach back to a defect in the declaration. Bent v. Bent, 43 Vt. 42.

147. Where pleadings end in a demurrer to the replication, and judgment goes against the defendant for the insufficiency of his plea in bar, a judgment that "the plea is insufficient" is correct in substance, although, in form, it should have been that "the replication is sufficient." Day v. Essex Co. Bank, 13 Vt. 97.

148. An anomalous case in pleadings:—The declaration was insufficient; that defect was cured by the plea; the plea was bad for all other purposes, and the replication was bad.

Judgment on demurrer to the replication, that the replication is sufficient, and that the plaintiff recover his damages and costs. Probate Court v. Vanduser, 13 Vt. 135.

149. Plea, settlement since suit: Replication, settlement obtained by fraud and void, and concluding with a verification. Rejoinder, settlement fairly obtained and not by fraud, concluding to the country. On general demurrer to the rejoinder;—Held good as an answer to the replication, which should have concluded to the country and as tendering an issue of fact. Hynes v. Pease, 47 Vt. 601.

150. Special demurrer. A special demurrer, in reaching back to any former pleading of the adversary, has only the effect of a general demurrer; and it has only that effect as to the very plea demurred to, except in those particulars wherein it is special. Shaw v. Peckett, 25 Vt. 423.

151. A defective conclusion of a replication is not reached by a general demurrer. Hooker v. Smith, 19 Vt. 151.

152. An objection to a plea that it amounts to the general issue, can be taken only by special demurrer. Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 36 Vt. 598.

153. Argumentativeness in a pleading can be taken advantage of only by special demurrer. Catlin v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 44. Woodward v. French, 31 Vt. 337.

154. Duplicity and argumentativeness in pleading are causes of special demurrer only; and to avail himself of these, the pleader must point out specifically in his demurrer in what the duplicity, or argumentativeness, consists. You must "lay your very finger upon it." Averring that the plea "is double, containing two distinct matters of defense" (Onion v. Clark, 18 Vt. 363); or that "the count is double in that it sets out and attempts to count upon more than one distinct and independent wrongful act or neglect of the defendant" (Buell v. Warner, 33 Vt. 570); or that "the replication is double, because it is two replications to a single plea;" or that "it is argumentative" (Carpenter v. McClure, 40 Vt. 106; S. C., 37 Vt. 127. S. C., 38 Vt. 375), is an insufficient assignment.

For pleadings in different actions, causes of action, and special defenses, see the appropriate special Titles.

POSSESSION.

1. Possession as title. Possession is, of itself, sufficient title against all the world except the true owner. Potter v. Washburn, 13 Vt. 558.

2. The possession of personal property is a sufficient title to enable the possessor to recover full damages for an injury to it, or its value for a conversion; and the wrong doer cannot, ordinarily, defeat the action or reduce the damages by proof of title, or general ownership, in a third person, unless the defendant connects himself with the right and title of the owner, or it appears that the property has gone to the owner's use, or unless the owner interferes to assert his right. Wooley v. Edson, 35 Vt. 214. White v. Bascom, 28 Vt. 268.

3. The possession and use of a chattel as apparent owner, is evidence sufficient, in kind, from which a sale or gift from a former owner may be inferred—to be considered with reference to the length of possession and all the circumstances. Moon v. Hawks, 2 Aik. 890. Bulard v. Billings, 3 Vt. 309.

4. Mere possession of a chattel with consent of the owner will not render it liable to the debts or disposition of the possessor, though reputed owner; but if the possession be fraudulent, and intended to give the person having it a false credit, it may be taken for his debts. Moon v. Hawks.

5. Where a son purchased a farm to furnish a home for his indigent father, and put on tools, stock, &c., and suffered his father there to labor and live;—Held, in the absence of proof of fraud, that the products of the farm, though it was carried on by the father, were not subject to attachment for his debts. Brown v. Scott, 7 Vt. 57.

6. One who is in the actual possession and occupancy of lands under a deed (Hull v. Fuller, 4 Vt. 199),—or by consent of the owner, (Hall v. Chaffee, 13 Vt. 150),—or having a mere equitable title thereto (Hough v. Patriak, 26 Vt. 435), has sufficient title to maintain an action for the wrongful flowing of the land,—this being an injury to the possession. Ib.

7. Where there was a provision in a contract for the purchase of land, that the purchaser should not cut certain timber upon the lot until after certain payments should be made;—Held, that this did not preclude him from maintaining trespass against a stranger for cutting such timber, the vendor not interfering. Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556.

8. In trespass, a prior possession of land under a claim of right, not abandoned, prevailed over a later possession, in McGrady v. Miller, 14 Vt. 128.

9. Where the rights of both parties to lands stand upon mere possession not yet ripened into a perfect title, he who has the prior possession has the best right; but if he abandon and surrender it to the adverse party he cannot afterwards set it up. Austin v. Bailey, 37 Vt. 219.

10. What is possession. Occasional acts of turning in cattle and cutting timber by others, upon land in the exclusive possession of a landlord and his tenants, are only trespassers, and do not give a possession in fact, or in law, nor defeat the prior possession. Swift v. Gage, 26 Vt. 224.

11. The payment of taxes upon unoccupied lands is not an act of possession, but only evidence of claim. Road v. Field, 15 Vt. 672.

12. The record of a survey is evidence of neither title nor possession; and marking trees around a piece of land in the forest is not, of itself, actual possession. Upon such evidence alone, the plaintiff cannot maintain trespass against a stranger to the title. Oatman v. Fowler, 43 Vt. 462.

13. The survey of a lot of land, and the re-marking of the lines of the lot, and the cutting of some small trees and bushes along the line, as convenience required in making the survey, and the recording of such survey, are an evidence of claim of title, but are not acts of possession. They might characterize acts subsequently done upon the premises, as acts of possession, which might otherwise be regarded as but acts of trespass. Kidder v. Kennedy, 43 Vt. 717.

14. Such survey and record do not of themselves constitute color of title, but are only evidence of claim. Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47. Atkinson v. Patterson, 46 Vt. 750.

15. Distinguished from a mere trespass. Under our law, where one enters into possession of land he is presumed to enter and claim in his own right; and if he has a deed of land, this gives character to his acts, and they are to be taken as the acts of an owner, and not a trespasser. McGrady v. Miller, 14 Vt. 126.

16. Any act done upon land by one having a deed of it, or other claim of title, which will fairly bear the construction of an act of ownership, although equally an act of trespass in a mere stranger, shall be considered an act of ownership, and does constitute a possession, or an eviction of the true owner who is seized merely by virtue of his title. Redfield, J., in Spear v. Ralph, 14 Vt. 400, citing Doolittle v. Linsley, 2 Aik. 155. Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 383. Ohlson v. Buttolph, 12 Vt. 281.

17. Where the character of a party's acts of possession of land was in question;—Held, that the fact that his devisor claimed to own the lot, the ground of such claim, as also that the executor claimed it as part of the estate, were admissible evidence tending to give to his acts done under such title, or color of title, the character of acts of possession done under a claim of right. Soule v. Barlow, 48 Vt. 132.

18. Where a witness in his deposition testified that he "occupied" certain land, stating the extent as to time and space;—Held, that this was admissible; that occupancy is not so far a question of law as to render it incompetent for a witness to testify to it in general terms, though without explanation such general statement would often be open to criticism as to the weight of evidence. Kidder v. Kennedy, 43 Vt. 718. Occupation is a fact. The effect of it, when its nature and extent are shown, is a matter of law. Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47. See Stevens v. Dewing, 2 Aik. 112. Hale v. Rich, 48 Vt. 217.

19. Where the plaintiff had full color of title, and was doing continuously such acts of possession under such color as would constitute possession in fact as against a person without title, or better right;—Held, that if the defendant would stand on adverse possession, he must show a better title in order to give his contemporaneous acts efficacy as against the plaintiff. Ames v. Beckley, 48 Vt. 395.

20. In order that the fencing in of a lot of land should avail in making title or possession, it must be for the purpose of inclosing it as one's own, and not merely as a more convenient mode of inclosing the lands connected with it. Soule v. Barlow, 48 Vt. 132.

21. Effect as notice. An open exclusive possession and improvement of land for any considerable time, is sufficient notice, as against an attaching creditor or purchaser, of the possessor's title; as, of an unrecorded deed, &c. Rublee v. Mead, 2 Vt. 544. 23 Vt. 559.

22. A purchaser from the record owner of land is bound to notice the possession of another, and takes subject to the right indicated by such possession. Sellick v. Starr, 5 Vt. 255.

23. It is a general rule, both at law and in equity, that the open and exclusive possession of land is notice to a purchaser, or attaching creditor, of the possessor's title. Pinney v. Fellows, 15 Vt. 525. Grinbold v. Smith, 10 Vt. 454. Wright v. Bates, 18 Vt. 350. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560. Hackett v. Callender, 33 Vt. 97.

24. Where a wife, in conjunction with her husband, had been for years in the open and exclusive possession of land in which she had an equitable estate arising from a resulting trust;—Held, that an attaching creditor of the trustee, in whom was the legal title, was affected with notice of the trust. Pinney v. Fellows.

25. Possession of lands under a license is notice to a subsequent purchaser, or incumbrancer, of whatever title the one in possession may have, whether legal or equitable. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560.

26. The possession of land under a claim of title is notice to a purchaser, of such facts affecting the apparent title of the grantor, as the purchaser could have ascertained upon inquiry. In such case, the purchaser takes the title precisely as his grantor held it. (This applied to the case of an estoppel in pais as against the grantor.) Shaw v. Beebe, 85 Vt. 204.

27. Where one erects a dwelling upon the land of another by parol license and with the right to remove it, and occupies it, how far his possession is notice of claim of title to a purchaser of the land—quære. Powers v. Denison, 30 Vt. 752. But see Wing v. Gray, 86 Vt. 269. Rudles v. Mead, 2 Vt. 544.

28. Constructive possession. Where one purchases a whole lot and goes into possession, though he actually possesses but a part, as one acre, he is, in contemplation of law, in possession of the whole. Pearsal v. Thorp, 1 D. Chip. 92.

29. If a person enters upon a lot or tract of land with visible boundaries, under a deed of the entire tract, his actual occupation and improvement of a part is construed as a possession of the whole. His possession, under such circumstances, is co-extensive with his claim of title. Crowell v. Bebee, 10 Vt. 38. Ralph v. Bayley, 11 Vt. 521.

30. So, if the deed gives definite and certain boundaries to the premises; nor is it essential that the deed be recorded. Spaulding v. Warren, 25 Vt. 316, 322.

31. The same is the law as to a pitch and survey, though not recorded, where the lines are actually run and visibly marked upon the land. So, a deed defectively executed, but showing color of title, is evidence of the extent of a possession under it. Beach v. Sutton, 5 Vt. 209. 88 Vt. 846.

32. Possession of part of a lot, claiming the whole, gives color of possession of the whole, which, in construction of law, is possession itself. It is not necessary that such claim should be by deed recorded, nor even by a deed. It is enough that it be in writing, capable of being produced on request; or even that it be distinctly indicated upon the land by unequivocal monuments, which would not fail to attract the attention of counter-claimants. Redfield, C. J., in Swift v. Gage, 26 Vt. 224.

33. One may have the constructive possession of land as well without written claim of title, as with it. Where the manner of occupying a portion of the land clearly indicates to every observer the extent of the claim of possession, every occasional entry of such possessor will be construed an act of possession, and not a bare trespass—which it would be in one making no claim of title—and this is all that is meant by constructive possession. Buck v. Squires, 28 Vt. 498.

34. In ejectment, the defendant claimed title by possession to a quite small piece of land almost inclosed by his fences, and which would be entirely, by extending his fence a little further in the same direction, upon which parcel his acts of possession had been only occasional and furtive for more than fifteen years. The court charged the jury, that if the fence was so constructed and so far extended towards the disputed land, as to give notice to the public and all concerned that the defendant claimed to exercise exclusive dominion over the disputed land by extending the fence so as to include it, whenever it should be convenient to complete his inclosure, and that it was left open for the time for convenience of use, or because it was not then of sufficient importance to be inclosed, the jury would regard this as sufficient possession. Held correct. Buck v. Squires. But see Hodges v. Eddy, 88 Vt. 327, 348.

35. Where a road was cut leading to some particular portion of a lot, with the apparent and avowed purpose of clearing the land and getting timber, and this was done in connection with a paper claim of title;—Held, that this was an act of ownership and a possession of the lot. Spear v. Ralph, 14 Vt. 400.

36. Where the plaintiff was in the actual occupation of part of a lot, under a written contract of purchase describing the land as "Lot No. 5 in the 12th Range," &c., although such contract was not recorded and was from one who did not appear to have any title, or claim of title, it was held that such possession of part extended by construction to the entire lot, so as to enable the plaintiff to maintain trespass against a stranger for cutting timber on a part of it which was unimproved and uninclosed. Hunt v. Taylor, 23 Vt. 556.

37. The general principle, that where one enters into possession of lands under a deed and actually occupies a part, he is presumed to be in possession of the whole, to the limits defined in his deed, extends to the case of an entire undivided tract, formerly made up of different parcels lying contiguous to each other, with title derived from different sources, although, in the deed conveying the entire tract, the several parcels of which it is composed are separately described. Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465.

38. It is now settled, contrary to the earlier decisions in this country, that where a person, though without title or color of title, enters upon a vacant lot having a definite boundary marked upon the land, and actually occupies a portion of it, such person, by claiming to be the owner to the boundary lines of the lot, has a constructive possession of the whole, and will acquire a title to the whole by such partial occupation for fifteen years; and such entry and claim give him a good prior possession of the whole, which is a good title against all the world, except the true owner of the lot. Poland, C. J., in Hodges v. Eddy, 88 Vt. 327.

39. Constructive possession, defined to be a possession in law, without possession in fact. Id.

40. It is universally held, that the owner of land who enters into and holds possession of a portion of the land covered by his deed, claiming under his deed, is, by construction, and by virtue of his claim under his deed, legally in possession of all that his deed covers, though he has not the actual possession of the whole. While thus in possession, no other person can gain or have a constructive possession of any part of his land, and he can be disseized in no other way than by an actual entry and occupation of another; and an actual occupation of any part of his land by one entering upon him cannot be extended, by construction, beyond the portion occupied. There cannot be two constructive possessions of the same land at the same time. Poland, C. J. Id.

41. Possession under a deed which is vague and indefinite as to extent, cannot be extended by construction beyond the actual possession. Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 100.

42. An actual possession, within and according to the limits of a survey, cannot extend, by construction, beyond the limits of the survey. Owen v. Foster, 18 Vt. 263.

43. The doctrine of constructive possession will not be extended to land in the actual, exclusive, adverse occupation of a disseizor. Stevens v. Hollister, 18 Vt. 294.

44. The doctrine of constructive possession of a whole tract of land by actual possession of a part, applies only to such quantity as may reasonably be supposed to have been purchased and entered upon for purposes of cultivation, and for use; and has no application to a case where a person takes and maintains possession of a few acres in an uncultivated township, especially where the purpose was to gain thereby a title to the entire township by possession, to the exclusion of the rightful owners. Chandler v. Spear, 23 Vt. 868.

45. A constructive possession was held limited to the bounds given in the deed under which the party claimed, and not extended to another line beyond, although, for a part of the distance along that line, he had occupied for more than 15 years. (The necessary indicia of claim, in order to constitute a constructive possession where there is no paper title or claim—suggested.) Shedd v. Powers, 28 Vt. 653.

46. Where the defendant claimed by adverse possession to a line not marked or indicated upon the land so as to be discernible;—Held, that the fact that he had for more than twenty years maintained a fence beyond said line and embracing, with the land in dispute, lands of the plaintiff beyond said line, did not give the defendant a constructive possession to such claimed line, by virtue of his actual possession of other parts of the land. Wood v. Willard, 87 Vt. 877.

47. Restriction of. A party may withdraw his claim to land of which he has a title, as by adopting a wrong line for his boundary; and by this means, although his title may remain, his constructive possession of the part abandoned ceases, and at the same time the constructive possession of another may commence against him. Crowell v. Beebe, 10 Vt. 38.

48. The constructive possession which one would otherwise acquire, coextensive with a recorded survey, by actual possession of a part, may be restricted by his acts and declarations showing that his claim of title is not equally extensive with the survey; as, by pointing out a line within the survey, and recognizing that as his boundary. Possession by construction has never been held to extend beyond the claim of title. Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 357.

49. Where one is in actual possession of part of a lot of land, and has constructive possession of the whole, a subsequent conflicting possession by another cannot be extended, by construction, beyond the actual limits of the actual adverse occupation. Ralph v. Bagley, 11 Vt. 531. Crowell v. Beebe, 10 Vt. 38.

50. The principle enunciated in Davis v. White, 27 Vt. 751, that a prior constructive possession of land must yield to a subsequent actual possession, is not law; except with the qualification, that such subsequent possession has continued for fifteen years. Hodges v. Eddy, 88 Vt. 327.

51. There is but one mode in which the true owner of land can lose his constructive possession of his land, covered by his deed, without being actually dispossessed. Where the owner agrees with an adjoining proprietor on a line of division between them, which is really within the true line, and withdraws all claim to the land lying beyond the agreed line, his constructive possession is limited to that; and the adjoining proprietor, who claims to such line, has his possession extended by construction to the same line; and if such mutual claim and acquiescence are continued for fifteen years, the title becomes fixed to that line upon both sides. Poland, C. J. Id.

52. Where the defendant claimed title to a whole lot by adverse possession for 15 years, the plaintiff put in evidence a deed to the defendant, executed within 15 years, of a part only of such lot. Held, that such deed was evidence against the defendant, as tending to limit the extent of his possession and claim, but was not conclusive as matter of law. Shepherd v. Hayes, 16 Vt. 486.

53. Possession referable to one's claim of right. Possession merely, as a ground of claim of title, must always be referred to the claim of right which the party makes at the time; and if to a deed, which is finally shown to convey no right, it would be rank absurdity to presume another independent grant. Redfield, J., in Smith v. Higbee, 12 Vt. 118; and see Ford v. Flint, 40 Vt. 382.

54. Where one justified his use of water for his mill by right in himself, and also showed an outstanding right in a third person, but did not show that he had succeeded thereto;—Held, that he should be holden to have done the act complained of under his own title, and could not avail himself of the other. Rogers v. Bancroft, 20 Vt. 250.

55. Where both parties claim title from the same person, the title of such person need not be shown; but he will prevail who has the better right from this common source. Brooks v. Chapin, 8 Vt. 281. 29 Vt. 408.

56. A previous naked possession for a short period, unsupported by any color of right, was held not to prevent the application of this rule, but that such possession was merged in the supposed title afterwards acquired by purchase, so that it could not be set up at the trial as an independent claim of title. Id. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

57. The purchaser at a land-tax sale, admitted to be invalid, entered upon the land under a claim of title and cut some timber for the purpose of taking possession of the lot, and afterwards obtained a deed of the lot from the collector. Held, that such sale gave him no right to enter upon the land, certainly not until the time limited for its redemption had expired; and gave him no color of title which would extend his possession constructively beyond the limits of the land actually occupied; and that his colorable title must be restricted to the time of his obtaining the deed. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

58. Where one in the possession of lands without color of title took a deed thereof to his wife;—Held, that his possession thereafter, and that of his wife after his decease, should be referred to the apparent right acquired by such deed, and the color of title given thereby. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

59. A lost deed whose contents are proved by parol, though it give color of title only, is admissible to characterize a possession under it. Oatman v. Barney, 46 Vt. 594.

60. Length and character of possession to give full title. Fifteen years' uninterrupted possession of land, under a claim of title, vests the title in the possessor. Barlow v. Bowne, Brayt. 185. The same as to the right to a water course. Rogers v. Page, Brayt. 169. Id. 201.

61. Fifteen years' adverse possession of lands by a defendant will bar the plaintiff's right, whether the defendant's claim be in his own right, or in right of another; as, a town. Boothe v. Coventry, 4 Vt. 295. 28 Vt. 614-15.

62. It is perfectly well settled, that an actual adverse possession, continued for fifteen years, by one having even no color of title, will divest the true owner of his title to the extent of such adverse possession, even when the true owner is in possession of a portion of the land covered by his title, in such manner that he would have constructive possession of the residue, except for his actual disseisin by the adverse holder. Poland, C. J., in Jakeway v. Barrett, 38 Vt. 828.

63. Title to lands, or any interest therein—as a right of way or other easement—acquired by fifteen years' adverse possession, is as perfect as though derived by deed from the original proprietor. Hence, no verbal transfer, surrender, or declaration, made after the title has so ripened, can affect it. Hodges v. Eddy, 41 Vt. 485. Austin v. Bailey, 37 Vt. 224. Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 520. Perrin v. Garfield, 37 Vt. 304.

64. Adverse possession. If one by verbal contract purchases lands and pays the stipulated price, and goes into possession under such purchase as the present absolute owner, and continues the possession as such owner under such claim for 15 years, his title is thereby perfected. But if, by the contract, he is to have the premises if he pays the price, and never complies with the condition, his possession for 15 years would not ripen into a title, not being adverse, but would enure to the benefit of his vendor. Adams v. Fullam, 43 Vt. 592.

65. A and B made a parol exchange of lands, deeds to be executed when B paid A the difference. Each went into possession according to the exchange, and B occupied for more than fifteen years, set the land in his list and paid the taxes, but claimed no title except according to the contract. B, never having paid the difference, and no deeds having been executed, finally surrendered the land to A, and retook possession of the other land. Held, that B had acquired no title by such possession under the contract, and had no interest in the land after surrender which was subject to execution for his debts, though existing before the surrender. Adams v. Fullam, 47 Vt. 558.

66. Where the property of one man is left upon the premises of another, with the knowledge and assent of that other, so long as he suffers the property to remain upon his premises without objection, or request to remove it [in this case for more than thirty years], exercising no act of ownership and making no claim to it, so long the title remains the same, and is unchanged by mere lapse of time; though such lapse of time might be an element to be considered by the jury in determining the issues submitted. Noble v. Sylvester, 42 Vt. 146.

67. Held, that in order to show that one's possession of lands was under a claim of ownership, he may prove that, while he occupied, he asserted ownership by bringing and prosecuting to judgment an action of trespass for an entry on the premises. Hollister v. Young, 43 Vt. 408.

68. Continuous. To constitute a continuous possession of lands, the occupant need not be on the land continually, and the mere fact that time intervenes between successive acts of occupancy does not necessarily destroy the continuity of the possession, which may be preserved by intention; and as evidence of such intention and claim, and of the adverse character of his possession, the declarations of the occupant made at the time are admissible in his own behalf, whether made on or off the land. Webb v. Richardson, 43 Vt. 465.

69. Non-user is not necessarily an abandonment. This is a question of fact, dependent upon intent. Cong. Society of Halifax v. Stark, 34 Vt. 243.

70. In a case resting upon prior possession, a lapse of 15 years or more between any of the acts of possession, does not, per se, and as matter of law, constitute an abandonment of the first possession. The question of abandonment is one of fact for the jury, and any presumption to be drawn from such lapse of time is a presumption or inference of fact, and subject to be rebutted. Patchin v. Stroud, 28 Vt. 394; and see Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 273.

71. The plaintiff sought to make title to lands by fifteen years' adverse possession, and his evidence tended to show possession and continuous claim. The defendant, not having the legal title, proved that during said fifteen years he entered upon the land and "logged it," and cut off a large amount of pine timber, claiming to own it under deeds exhibited. The court ruled that this interrupted the plaintiff's possession, so as to arrest the running of the statute of limitations. Held erroneous, and that the question should have been submitted to the jury in connection with the plaintiff's evidence, as it is not every trespass upon one's possession that will have that effect, more especially when committed by a stranger to the title. Webb v. Richardson, 43 Vt. 465.

72. Held, that such erroneous ruling, made before the plaintiff's evidence in reply was closed, was not cured by a special finding of the jury that, leaving such interruption of possession out of consideration, fifteen years' adverse possession was not shown in the plaintiff; for the effect of such ruling was to cut off further evidence of the plaintiff on that point. Id.

73. The plaintiff was in possession of lands under claim by a tax deed, when W, under whom the defendant claimed, entered, claiming to own the land and to have paid the tax, and to have a receipt therefor. The plaintiff and

W then agreed, that W was to continue in possession the remainder of that season, and if he did not produce to the plaintiff that receipt he should surrender up the premises to the plaintiff; but W never produced the receipt and that fall abandoned the possession, and made no claim afterwards. Held, that this was no recognition of the plaintiff's right, but a hostile possession during that season, and broke the continuity of the plaintiff's possession, so that he could not tack his prior to his subsequent possession to make out fifteen years' possession. Austin v. Bailey, 37 Vt. 219.

74. Tacking. Acts of possession upon land by one who is under a contract to purchase it, constitute a possession in the vendor; for, until actual conveyance, the vendee stands in the relation of tenant, or quasi tenant, to the vendor. Spear v. Ralph, 14 Vt. 400.

75. Acts done upon land by license, or sub-license, enure to the benefit of the first licensor and claimant. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

76. Actual occupation under a claim of title, although without color of title, will avail a subsequent occupant, claiming under the former occupant, in making out a possessory title in himself. Day v. Wilder, 47 Vt. 583.

77. There is no tenure or privity between a tenant for life, and the remainder man, where each claims under the same devise. Hence the possession of the life tenant will not enure to the remainder man. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

78. Vacant. While the possession of land is vacant, no presumption can arise against the legal title. Appleton v. Edson, 8 Vt. 239. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 201.

79. Notoriety. In this State, all entries under a claim of right, even by strangers, are held to be an actual eviction of the owner of which he is bound to take notice, at the peril of losing his estate after the lapse of fifteen years. Whitney v. French, 25 Vt. 663.

80. To constitute a disclaimer of the owner of uncultivated lands, by the entry and occupation of a party not claiming title, the occupation must be of that nature and notoriety, that the owner may be presumed to know that there is a possession of his land adverse to his title. Hagood v. Burt, 4 Vt. 155.

81. First entry by license. One going into possession of land under a parol gift and remaining quietly in possession for fifteen years, acquires good title by the mere acquiescence of the donor, or owner, whoever he may be. And the possession is regarded as quiet, unless interrupted by a forcible ouster, or legal proceedings for that purpose. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560. 2 Vt. 544. 13 Vt. 150.

82. Possession taken under a license to occupy permanently, either absolutely or upon conditions, gives, in equity, a title to the premises, according to the terms of the license, and a court of equity will, in proper case, decree an assurance of the title stipulated; as, where the contract has been performed on one part, by making permanent erections of value. Id.

83. Possession as evidence of boundary. While evidence of use and occupation alone has no legal tendency to show where a disputed line was, yet if the occupancy was in accordance with the line in dispute, it tends to show where the line was. Beach v. Fay, 46 Vt. 387.

84. Sometimes, the condition of lands and the circumstances accompanying the occupancy of them will rebut the presumption that such occupancy was adverse, or under a claim of right. Thus, where the true line between two adjoining proprietors was a straight line of 180 rods, having well-established permanent boundaries, and corners, and for half that distance there was a straight fence upon the line, and for the rest of the distance there was a slash fence running zig-zag in the general course of the true line, but irregular and varying from the true line, apparently as convenience required in the building over broken and ledgy ground;—Held, in the absence of affirmative evidence to the contrary, that such facts were sufficient to rebut the presumption that the occupation on either side of the zig-zag fence beyond the true line, was adverse. Morse v. Churchill, 41 Vt. 649.

85. —with acquiescence of adjoining proprietor. Possession between adjoining proprietors according to a line which is mutually understood to be an uncertain, or not the true line, under an arrangement that the correct line shall be afterwards ascertained and run, is not an adverse possession, but leaves each in possession according to the deeds, claiming to the true line; and such possession does not establish the incorrect line by acquiescence. Burnell v. Maloney, 89 Vt. 579.

86. As a general rule, an admission by a party of a mistaken line for the true one has no legal effect upon his title; and a mutual recognition of a wrong line by adjoining proprietors, and their acquiescence in such line, unless accompanied by possession of one, or both, according to it, and that continued for fifteen years, are not conclusive as to their respective rights. Crowell v. Bebee, 10 Vt. 88.

87. But such mutual recognition and acquiescence in a given line, accompanied by actual possession of one, or both, for the period of fifteen years, will be conclusive as to their respective rights. Spaulding v. Warren, 25 Vt. 316.

88. A mere acquiescence, for fifteen years, in a line as the dividing line between adjoining proprietors, although but one of the owners, and perhaps neither, is in actual possession, is, we think, sufficient to establish that as the true line of division, if known and claimed by both. Brown v. Edson, 28 Vt. 435.

89. The recognition by the proprietors of adjoining lots of a particular line as their division line, and their acquiescence in this for 15 years, with possession accordingly, either actual or constructive, of both or either of the lots, establishes this as the true division line. Clark v. Tabor, 28 Vt. 232. Childs v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47. Davis v. Judge, 46 Vt. 655. White v. Everest, 1 Vt. 188. Beech v. Parmelee, 9 Vt. 352. Burton v. Lasell, 16 Vt. 158. Ackley v. Buck, 18 Vt. 895.

90. A line thus established was held conclusive, although in fact the original and true line was in a different place, and neither party had actually occupied the strip between the two lines, and no fence had been built on either line. Burton v. Lasell.

91. Where the plaintiff took a deed of land described as bounded on the pitch of another, made a survey conformable to his deed, as he supposed, went into possession, and occupied for about thirty years according to the survey;—Held, in an action of trespass against a stranger in which the declaration described the premises as in the deed, that it was no defense to show that the description given did not cover the land trespassed upon, where the plaintiff's survey and possession extended beyond the line of the pitch upon which the deed was bounded, and in fact covered the place of the trespass. Meacham v. Fay, 6 Vt. 206; and see Burton v. Lasell, 16 Vt. 158.

92. Where A purchased land of B and went into possession and occupied as owner, but without deed, and afterwards sold the land to C, to whom B afterwards conveyed directly;—Held, that the acquiescence of A in a boundary line, during the time of his occupation, was as binding as if the legal title had been in him. Sheldon v. Perkins, 37 Vt. 550.

93. Easements. Rights to easements acquired by long possession ought to stand on the same ground as rights by possession in lands, and the doctrine of the law in the two cases should harmonize—and so held. Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 508.

94. The statute of limitations does not extend to incorporeal rights, but, in analogy to it, the uninterrupted use of an easement, under a claim of right, for the period fixed by the statute as a bar to the recovery of lands held adversely [15 years], gives the person so using the easement a full and absolute right to it, as much as if granted to him. The presumption arising from such long-continued possession, unrebuted, is a presumption of law, and is conclusive. Id. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 204. Victory v. Wells, 39 Vt. 494.

95. It is the general rule, that the enjoyment of an easement is presumed to be adverse unless something appears to rebut that presumption. This is the general rule, where there is no express evidence that the use was accompanied by a claim of right, and no express evidence of a disclaimer of the right. Perrin v. Garfield, 87 Vt. 304.

96. In order to the acquiring of an easement in lands by use, whether notice of such use to the owner of the lands is necessary—quære. Ib.

97. Where one enjoys the use of an easement in a manner otherwise sufficient to gain a right by adverse use, he will not be prevented from acquiring the right, by the owner of the estate in which the right is claimed occasionally objecting or denying the right, but not interfering with or interrupting the enjoyment of it, having the power to do so, where the enjoyment is had in spite of the objection;—the easement being of such a character that the claimant has only to enjoy the use, without other adversary acts on his part. Such permissive use amounts to an acquiescence, which is the same as saying that the possession is uninterrupted. Kimball v. Ladd, 43 Vt. 747. Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 503.

98. Where one claims a prescriptive right in the lands of another, he must show affirmatively an adverse continuous use for fifteen years, under a claim of ownership, or as of right. In absence of any proof or circumstances indicating the contrary, it may do to assume that the use is adverse and under a claim of right. But where the nature of the use is doubtful, the question of adverse use under a claim of right is for the jury, not the court. Plimpton v. Converse, 42 Vt. 712.

99. On the other hand, the prima facie presumption is, that the enjoyment of one's own land is an exercise of his right to so enjoy it; and where another claims a right against the owner by an adverse use which has occasionally been interrupted by the owner, the burden is upon the other to show that such interruptions were consistent with his claim, and not upon the owner to show that they were inconsistent with it. Ib.

100. Non-user. A right arising from a grant, and not from prescription—as, a right of fowling—is not lost by non-user where it cannot be used without encroaching upon the rights of others created by deed; but the use may be resumed whenever such adverse right is extinguished. Mower v. Hutchinson, 9 Vt. 242.

101. Adverse possession as avoiding a conveyance. The statute "to prevent fraudulent speculations, &c.," first passed in 1807, avoiding a conveyance when a third person is in adverse possession (G. S. c. 65, s. 27), was merely a legislative declaration of an established principle of the common law. Robinson v.

Douglass, 2 Aik. 364. University v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 203.

102. It does not apply where the conveyance is by operation of law; as, by levy of execution. Farnsworth v. Converse, 1 D. Chip. 139.

103. Or by an officer of the State or of the United States. Aldis v. Burdick, 8 Vt. 21.

104. Nor does this Statute apply where a trust estate is conveyed to the uses for which it was originally created. Mitchell v. Stevens, 1 Aik. 16.

105. Nor, where a trustee conveys to his cestui que trust—as, an administrator to the heirs of the estate; nor, where chancery would compel a conveyance. Appleton v. Edson, 8 Vt. 239.

106. Nor, where a conveyance is made by the agents of a municipal or public corporation, acting in the line of official duty. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 193.

107. When a trust relation exists between the parties, a conveyance by either, that merges the legal and equitable estates, is not within this statute. Stacy v. Bostwick, 48 Vt. 192.

108. The defendant's possession under a levy of execution against the plaintiff is not adverse to the plaintiff's title, so as to avoid a deed to the plaintiff from a third person. Hall v. Hall, 5 Vt. 304.

109. As between mortgagor and mortgagee, the possession of either does not prevent the other from conveying his title to a third person. Converse v. Searle, 10 Vt. 578.

110. To avoid a deed for adverse possession, the possession must be wholly adverse to the grantor, and the claim of the possessor be to an estate entirely to the exclusion of any right or title existing in the grantor, and under a title adverse to him. Thus, where the possessor claims a life estate under the grantor, though against the will of the grantor, such possession does not avoid the grantor's deed, and such deed conveys whatever title the grantor had. Selleck v. Starr, 6 Vt. 194.

111. P claimed a life estate in land, and S claimed the fee adversely, both claiming under the same devise. P by deed leased the land to the defendant, while S was in adverse possession. Afterwards S deeded the land to W subject to P's life estate, and W conveyed to the plaintiff. Held, that the plaintiff could not avoid the lease from P by reason of the then adverse possession of S. Hibbard v. Hurlburt, 10 Vt. 173.

112. Where the grantor of land remains in possession of the land conveyed, claiming it as his own, to the knowledge of his grantee, this is such an adverse possession and disseisin of the grantee as avoids his deed to a stranger. Stevens v. Whitcomb, 16 Vt. 121. Robinson v. Douglass, 2 Aik. 364.

113. Where one entered into possession of land under a parol contract of purchase, and had performed on his part so as to entitle him to a deed, which was refused, and he so continued in possession, claiming adversely;—Held, that this was such an adverse possession and claim as avoided a deed of his vendor to a third party. Ripley v. Yale, 19 Vt. 156.

114. Contract and deed good between the parties. A contract for the sale of lands of which a third person is in adverse possession, is not corrupt, nor against the policy of the law, nor prohibited by the statute. The only effect of the statute is to render the deed void for the purpose of transferring the legal title; but the equitable title does pass by such deed, and will be protected, in a court of law, against any interference of the grantor. Edwards v. Parkhurst, 21 Vt. 473. 26 Vt. 609. 28 Vt. 364.

115. A conveyance executed when a third person is in adverse possession is void only as to the person in adverse possession, and his privies. It is good between the parties to it, and is a license to the grantee to do any act upon the land which the grantor might do, and enables him to do any such acts, in the name of the grantor, as may be necessary to establish the grantor's title, which title, when established, will enure to the benefit of the grantee. Edwards v. Roys, 18 Vt. 473. University v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 204.

116. Possession a question of fact. Whether there was a possession adverse to the grantor, so as to avoid his deed, is a question for the jury, and is not to be determined by the court upon the question of admitting the deed in evidence. Stevens v. Dewing, 2 Aik. 112.

117. Where the question was whether the defendant's cutting of a tree inside of a fence which the plaintiff claimed as the true division line between him and the defendant, but which was in dispute, interrupted the continuity of the plaintiff's adverse possession for fifteen years up to the fence, the court refused so to rule as matter of law, but left the question to the jury. Held correct. Hale v. Rich, 48 Vt. 217.

118. Chancery. Under the circumstances of the case, an orator obtained a decree who stated his title under a deed from one out of possession, and where the defendant was in adverse possession. Smith v. Blaisdell, 17 Vt. 199.

As to change of possession as affecting sales, see SALES, III.; MORTGAGE, 209, et seq.

POSTMASTER.

1. A postmaster is answerable for the negligence of his clerks and servants in the office who are not his appointed and sworn deputies, whereby a letter is lost. Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 668; and see Danforth v. Grant, 14 Vt. 288.

2. In an action against a postmaster for that he "carelessly and negligently" lost a letter, alleging his negligence in such general terms;—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to a charge that the plaintiff must, in order to recover, "show some particular act of negligence in relation to the letter, and that the loss was the direct consequence of that particular negligence;"—that general proof tending to show that the loss was occasioned by negligence, and which satisfied the jury that the loss was so occasioned, was sufficient to sustain the declaration and the action. Christy v. Smith.

See OFFICER, 7-8.

POUNDS AND IMPOUNDING.

1. Inclosure. Under the statute of 1797 (Slade's Stat. c. 55, s. 3), authorizing the impounding of cattle found damage feasant in the owner's "inclosure";—Held, that the right to impound did not exist unless the locus in quo was inclosed by a legal fence, except such fences as the owner or keeper of the cattle, or the adjoining proprietor, was bound to keep in repair. Mooney v. Maynard, 1 Vt. 470. Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326.

2. The word inclosure, as used in the impounding acts, (Slade's Stat. c. 55, s. 3. R. S. c. 88, s. 4. G. S. c. 100, s. 4), imports land inclosed by some visible or tangible obstruction, such as a fence, hedge, ditch, or something equivalent, for the protection of the premises against encroachment by cattle; and differs from the word close, which embraces land owned by a party, or of which he is in the rightful possession, although inclosed only by the imaginary boundary line which defines its territorial limits. Porter v. Aldrich.

3. Under G. S. c. 100 s. 4, enacting that "any person may impound any beast found in his inclosure doing damage,"—Held, that where the law, under the special facts of the case, has cast upon the owner of the beast the duty of keeping it off the land of another, such land is the inclosure of the owner, whether fenced or not, within the meaning of this statute. Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34.

4. Fences. The remedy by impounding does not extend to beasts found damage feasant upon wild, uncultivated, unimproved and unoccupied lands lying open and common; nor, as between the owner of occupied lands and the adjoining proprietor, where the beasts enter upon such owner's land through his neglect in regard to his portion of the division fence. It is otherwise, as between such owner and persons other than the adjoining proprietor. Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326.

5. Under R. S. c. 88, s. 18, neither of two adjoining proprietors, whose lands were under cultivation and without division fence between them, could impound the cattle of the other, damage feasant. Hooper v. Kittredge, 16 Vt. 677.

6. Pound. Where a town is destitute of a pound, one may impound in his own inclosure, or in that of another person. (G. S. c. 100, s. 3.) Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457.

7. Where a town was destitute of a pound, but the pound-keeper received the beast as pound-keeper and confined it in his private inclosure;—Held, that an action to recover the penalty for not replevying or redeeming the beast, and for the legal charges, must be in the name of the pound-keeper, and not of the impounder. Ib. (G. S. c. 100, s. 10.)

8. A "pound" is some place where beasts are to be confined, kept and fed. Where a party, after lawfully impounding cattle in his own barn-yard, turned them out to graze in his inclosed fields near his barn-yard, during the days, but put them in his barn-yard, nights, he was held to have lost thereby his legal control of them. Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

9. Charges—Appraisal. The impounder of cattle taken damage feasant and regularly impounded, may lawfully detain the same until the payment or tender of the legal charges and expenses of impounding and keeping the cattle, although there has been an irregular appraisal of damages, or no appraisal. Harriman v. Fifield. Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34. Porter v. Aldrich, Ib. 323.

10. One having a right to take up and impound cattle damage feasant, took them to his own premises and claimed to keep them until the damages done on that and previous occasions should be paid. Held, that the taking and detention were unlawful, and that replevin lay therefor. Ladue v. Branch, 42 Vt. 574; and see Holden v. Torrey, 31 Vt. 690.

11. The impounder of cattle taken damage feasant does not become a trespasser ab initio, nor is he prevented from justifying the impounding, in replevin, by a neglect to give notice under the statute for the appointment of appraisers to appraise the damage, nor of the time of the appraisal, nor by an appraisal fraudulently procured. Such an appraisal would be void; and as the appointing of appraisers is only to ascertain the damages, no appointment of appraisers is necessary where the claim for damages is waived. Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34. Moore v. Robbins, 7 Vt. 363. Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

Holden v. Torrey. Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326.

12. Notice of impounding. A party acting in his own behalf, who impounds another's beasts, becomes a trespasser ab initio by neglecting to give the statutory notice of the impounding; and this is part of the impounder's justification, to be by him alleged and proved. Porter v. Aldrich.

13. A mere servant of the impounder of cattle, acting by the immediate request of his employer in the transaction of impounding, does not become a trespasser ab initio by the subsequent neglect of his employer to give the statutory notice of the impounding; otherwise, as to a general agent acting in the absence of his principal. Ib.

14. Limitation. The limit of forty-eight hours, given in G. S. c. 100, s. 10, for the owner of cattle impounded to replevy or redeem the same, must be understood with this qualification,—if the damages can be so soon ascertained, and, if not, as soon as they can be ascertained. Mellen v. Moody, 23 Vt. 674. 31 Vt. 692.

15. Replevin does not lie against a pound-keeper for detaining impounded cattle beyond the forty-eight hours, although no certificate of the appraisal has been received by him, where the damages cannot be ascertained within that time; and before such action will lie against the pound keeper, the owner must first pay the appraised damages, and all just costs. Ib.

16. Certificate of appraisal. An appraisal of the damages made according to the provisions of the statute, and without fraud, is in the nature of a judgment; and the certificate of the appraisers would be conclusive. Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 343. Holden v. Torrey, 31 Vt. 694.

17. Impounder may defend possession. A person engaged in the lawful attempt to impound cattle has the right to defend, by reasonable force, his possession of them for the purpose for which he has taken them in charge, and to the same extent that a sheriff has, to protect his possession of property taken by him on legal process. Barrows v. Fassett, 36 Vt. 625.

18. Time for notice. The twenty-four hours prescribed by the statute for the giving of notice to the owner that his beasts have been impounded, are to be reckoned from the time they are delivered to the pound-keeper. (G. S. c. 100, s. 5.) Moore v. Robbins, 7 Vt. 363.

19. Remedy of pound-keeper. A pound-keeper cannot recover of the impounder, in an action of book account or on an implied contract, for the keeping of the cattle impounded, whether the impounding be lawful, or unlawful. Williams v. Willard, 23 Vt. 369.

20. Penalty. The forfeiture of 17 cents a day to a pound-keeper, where the owner of the cattle impounded does not, after 48 hours' notice, redeem or replevy them (G. S. c. 100, s. 10), is wholly a penalty, and extra the compensation for support of the cattle. Edwards v. Osgood, 38 Vt. 224.

21. The penalty for not replevying or redeeming a beast impounded, and the legal charges for the keeping, are separate claims, but both may be joined in the same suit. Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457.

22. Evidence. The plaintiff's cow was found damage feasant on land of the defendant and his partner, and was by such partner taken up and detained as a mode of recovering the damage done—but unlawfully. Held, that the defendant's acquiescence and consent to the taking and detention of the cow, after this came to his knowledge, was sufficient to charge him in replevin; and that the fact of such partnership relation was entitled to some consideration, as evidence against him, in connection with evidence tending to show such acquiescence and consent. Riley v. Noyes, 44 Vt. 455.

See REPLEVIN.

PRACTICE.

(At law.)

- I. GENERALLY; AND IN COUNTY COURT
- II. IN SUPREME COURT.

- I. GENERALLY; AND IN COUNTY COURT.

1. Appearance. One defendant in an action ex contractu may, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, employ counsel, enter appearance, plead, and defend fully for all. Scott v. Larkin, 18 Vt. 112. 44 Vt. 551.

2. This is limited to the case where the other defendants have had personal notice of the suit. Whitney v. Silzer, 22 Vt. 634.

3. The defendants were partners and, as such, were sued. There was no personal service on the defendant L, who resided out of the State and had no knowledge of the suit until after judgment therein; but the defendant T, who resided in the State and had the management of the partnership business there, was personally served, and employed an attorney for both defendants, and they, by such attorney, appeared and consented to judgment against both, which was rendered, and execution issued. At the next term suit was brought on the judgment, and at a subsequent term the court, on motion of L for that purpose, vacated said judgment as to him, and ordered the cause brought forward upon the docket for trial as to him.

Held, that the county court had the legal power so to do. Franka v. Lockey, 45 Vt. 395.

4. After an appearance and imparlance, all defects in personal service are waived. Coit v. Sheldon, 1 Tyl. 800.

5. Where a party comes in and challenges a process on account of its defects, an appearance for that purpose concludes the party only to that extent. Propagation Society, &c., v. Ballard, 4 Vt. 119.

6. Before the statute of 1807, relating to files lost, &c.,—Held, that the county court had no authority to make a general or special rule, so as to compel the defendant to appear and answer to a new declaration, when the original files were lost. Kinne v. Plumb, 1 Tyl. 20.

7. Death of party. Where a sole defendant died after service of the writ, but before the return day;—Held, not a case for entry, and citing in his administrator to defend, under the then statute as to suits pending. Hyde v. Leavitt, 2 Tyl. 170.

8. Under the probate act of 1821 (Slade's Stat. 345), the administrator of a party who died during the pendency of a suit, where the cause of action survived, could not enter, nor be cited in, to prosecute or defend after the next term of court following the granting of administration. Tyler v. Whitney, 8 Vt. 26. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 12 Vt. 244. (Changed by R. S. of 1839. G. S. c. 52, ss. 21, 22.)

9. Where one party to a suit dies, it is in the discretion of the court, under G. S. c. 52, s. 24, to say how long the suit shall be continued to await the appointment of an administrator; and where the court dismissed such a suit, because of an unwarrantable delay in the appointment of an administrator, the supreme court refused to examine the question. State Treasurer v. Raymond, 16 Vt. 364. 24 Vt. 302.

10. It is not necessary, in the entry of a second administrator to prosecute a pending suit, that it should appear to be by special leave of the court. This is a matter of course which the court could not legally refuse. Steen v. Bennett, 24 Vt. 308.

11. Precedents. Precedents—"as having become incorporated into the common law of procedure in this State." See Burnell v. Dodge, 33 Vt. 465. Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 620.

12. "Not for jury." Where a party sets down a case "not for the jury," this means, by long-settled practice, that he shall show good cause for a continuance, or submit to a judgment against him. Briggs v. Gleason, 32 Vt. 472. Bradley v. Chamberlain, 31 Vt. 468. Chamberlin v. Murphy, 41 Vt. 110.

13. In such case, he is not entitled to have the damages assessed by a jury. He has declared of record, that there is nothing in his case which he claims to have tried by jury. Briggs v. Gleason.

14. In such case, the defendant loses his legal right to a formal trial, either by court or jury, upon any branch of the case, even the damages; and the court might order the damages assessed by the clerk. Chamberlin v. Murphy, 41 Vt. 116.

15. But it is in the discretion of the court to determine the damages in either mode; and if submitted to a jury, exceptions will lie to any error of the court on such trial. Id.

16. In an action upon a promissory note, judgment passed against the defendant on his setting down the case "not for the jury." Held, that the defendant could not show, on the assessment of damages, that the note was given for money lost at play and that the plaintiff had agreed for good consideration to surrender it; and held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the amount appearing to be due upon the note. Sweet v. McDaniels, 39 Vt. 272. See Bradley v. Chamberlain, 81 Vt. 468.

17. Questions as to time and order of proceedings. The time within which a plea in set-off, in an action of book account, shall be filed in the county court, rests solely in the discretion of that court, which cannot be revised by the supreme court. Ainnecorth v. Drew, 14 Vt. 563.

18. A motion to dismiss a new declaration, unless the motion raises a question of jurisdiction, will not be entertained after a plea to the merits has been made to it. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

19. In an action upon a probate bond (G. S. c. 60, s. 2), it is within the discretion of the county court to allow the prosecutor to file a certified copy of the bond and the certificate of permission to prosecute, after the entry of the suit and after a motion to dismiss for lack of such papers. Probate Court v. Niles, 32 Vt. 775.

20. It is within the discretion of a court to allow a non-suit, even after verdict. Squires v. Burgess, 31 Vt. 466. So done, in Dow v. Hinesburgh, 2 Aik. 18.

21. A plea in abatement may be waived after a non-suit entered, or after a judgment upon it for the defendant, and the cause proceed to judgment upon the merits. Egerton v. Hart, 8 Vt. 207.

22. A replender cannot be awarded after judgment upon a material issue. Page v. Walker, 1 Tyl. 145.

23. Discretion. In an action of assumpsit against two, one pleaded and gave in evidence his discharge in bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act of 1841, and there was no evidence against it. The defendants then moved for a non-suit or discontinuance as to him, with a view to using him as a witness. The court refused this. The defendants then moved for a continuance, which the court refused, and the trial proceeded to judgment. Held, no error. Brown v. Munger, 16 Vt. 12.

24. On a judgment rendered by a justice on default, the plaintiff brought an action of debt, summoning a trustee. Pending this suit in the county court, that judgment was vacated on petition and the original suit brought into the county court, so that both stood on the same docket. The court refused, on the plaintiff's motion, to consolidate the two suits, because not identical, but ordered the discontinuance of this suit and the discharge of the trustee, without disclosure, allowing to the defendant one cent cost, leaving the balance of the costs to abide the event of the suit brought upon the docket by petition, and to the trustee his costs. Held correct. Brigham v. Mosseauz, 20 Vt. 517.

25. In an action on note, the defendants claimed to have paid all but a trifling balance. Such payment was disputed, and the plaintiff, after the testimony was closed, offered and proposed to the court that if the jury should find the payment proved they should render a verdict for the defendants; and requested the court so to instruct the jury. The defendants objected to this, and the court refused so to instruct the jury, who returned their verdict for only such small balance. (The effect of a verdict for the defendants would have been, to entitle the plaintiff to a review.) Held, that there was no error. Austin v. Bingham, 31 Vt. 577.

26. Affidavits. In the administration of justice, ex parte affidavits are frequently admitted to bring facts to the notice of the court; as, on motions for a continuance, and for a new trial, &c. The other party usually has the right to produce counter affidavits, and no injury can result, as the court will take care that no unfair advantage is had. Hill v. Hogaboom, 18 Vt. 141.

27. Agreed statement. An agreed statement of facts filed in the county court is subject to the control of that court, the same as the pleadings; and the court may, in its discretion, allow the same to be withdrawn. Fayston v. Richmond, 25 Vt. 446.

28. Specification. A specification, or bill of particulars, filed, is treated and considered as incorporated with the declaration, and the plaintiff is not allowed to give any evidence out of them. Under counts for money had and received, and on an account stated, the plaintiff filed a bill of particulars specifying, as his claim, two promissory notes particularly described. Held, that it was not competent to give evidence of, and recover upon, the pre-existing debt, or original consideration. Bank of U. S. v. Lyman (U. S. C. C.), 20 Vt. 666.

29. A bill of particulars or specification of the plaintiff's demand under a general count, is not to be regarded as a part of the declaration for the purposes of the subsequent pleadings, but only as a limitation upon the plaintiff's proof. Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26; and see Phelps v. Conant, 80 Vt. 277.

30. A specification is only a bill of particulars to advertise the defendant of what he is to meet; and it is not important that it be determined to which particular count the claim applies. Hicks v. Cottrill, 25 Vt. 80.

31. The particularity or minuteness required in a specification under the general counts, there being no variance, is matter of practice and discretion, and not ground of error. Hodges v. Rut. and Bur. R. Co. 29 Vt. 220.

32. The plaintiff is not precluded by his specification from recovering upon a cause of action not included therein, where it is embraced in the declaration and would be proper matter for specification, and grew out of the subject matter of the specification actually filed, in a case where the defendant admits such cause of action on trial. The purpose of a specification is to prevent surprise. Greenwood v. Smith, 45 Vt. 87.

33. In an action of general assumpsit, where a specification, describing the claim substantially, was filed, and the testimony was offered and received without objection;—Held, that after the close of the plaintiff's testimony, it was too late to object for a variance between the testimony and the specification. Phelps v. Conant, 80 Vt. 277.

34. The plaintiff did certain mechanical work for the defendant, agreeing to furnish his own tools. In fact he used the defendant's tools, and credited the defendant therefor in his specification. The defendant did not expect to charge for such use, but this was unknown to the plaintiff. On the trial, the plaintiff sought to withdraw such credit, but the defendant insisted upon it. Held, that, as in justice and equity the credit ought to be allowed, the plaintiff should be held to the credit he had given in his specification, either in abatement of so much of his claim, or as a counter-claim. St. Martin v. Thrasher, 40 Vt. 460.

35. Paying into court. The county court may provide by a general, or special rule, for the paying of money into court, conditioned that the plaintiff accept it and discontinue his suit, or proceed at his peril as to further costs. Redfield, C. J., in Sanborn v. Chittenden, 27 Vt. 171.

36. The sum paid in must include the costs up to that time. Goslin v. Hodson, 24 Vt. 140.

37. The defendant paid into court a sum of money sufficient to satisfy any damages which the plaintiff could recover under his declaration, and the costs to that time, which sum the plaintiff took, but did not discontinue his suit. He afterwards, by leave of court, filed a new count, but for the same cause of action, enlarging his right of recovery under a new rule of damages. Held, that under the new count he could recover the excess. Hill v. Smith, 84 Vt. 535.

38. Evidence subject to objection. Receiving evidence subject to objection is a reservation of the right to point out the objection at a future stage of the trial. If not so done, the objection is waived, or, rather, not made. Hills v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 648.

II. IN SUPREME COURT.

39. By act of Nov. 18, 1824 (Slade's Stat. 118), the authority of the supreme court to try issues of fact was virtually taken away, and they were required to be tried in the county court. Bishop v. Bothwell, 2 Aik. 281.

40. Original papers. There is no rule requiring a party to file in the clerk's office original papers used by him at the trial below. The excepting party must see to it, at his peril, that he has copies for the court, and, for that purpose, may have access to such papers on application to the opposite party or his counsel. If a personal inspection of original papers becomes necessary in the supreme court, the party having them must produce them on reasonable notice. Pingry v. Watkins, 16 Vt. 513.

41. Ex parte hearing. Where the defendant excepted and the plaintiff failed to appear in the supreme court;—Held, as matter of practice, that the plaintiff should not be treated as having become non-suit, but the defendant should be heard ex parte on his exceptions. Winn v. Sprague, 35 Vt. 248.

42. Order of argument. Where a case is before the supreme court on demurrer, the demurring party will open the argument, whichever party may have excepted and brought the case up. State Treasurer v. Merrill, 14 Vt. 557.

43. Upon a memorial to the court, after verdict against a corporation upon a scire facias to vacate its charter, showing reasons why, in equity and good conscience, the charter should not be declared vacated;—Held, that the memorialist was entitled to open the argument. State v. Bank of Windsor, 14 Vt. 562.

44. Where exceptions are taken on both sides, the plaintiff is generally entitled to open and close the argument. Lampson v. Hobart, 27 Vt. 784.

45. Where exceptions are taken on both sides, and the plaintiff's exceptions are to a decision which affects his right to recover some portion of his demands, the practice of the supreme court is to allow him to open the argument on his own exceptions, and then to have a general reply; but where his exceptions are only to the rule of damages adopted, and the defendant's exceptions go to the entire right of recovery, the defendant is allowed to open on his own exceptions, and to have a general reply. Peters v. Farnsworth, 15 Vt. 786. McFarland v. Stone, 16 Vt. 145.

46. Reading of authorities. It is not considered regular to read authorities in the closing argument, unless it be to explain those read upon the opposite side. The party who merely refers to cases in his opening argument, without reading, is understood to acquiesce in such authorities not being read; and unless they are read by the opposite side, he is not strictly entitled to take them up again. Cutter v. Thomas, 24 Vt. 647.

47. Making points. It is the practice of the supreme court to require counsel in the opening argument to make the points on which they rely, so that the opposing counsel can have an opportunity to reply. Where some new points were started in the close, the court declined to consider them. Edwards v. Leavitt, 46 Vt. 126.

48. Question not raised below. The practice of raising objections in the supreme court which were undiscovered and unheeded in the trial below,—censured, as “a deviation from professional propriety and duty,” by Redfield, J. Sequin v. Peterson, 45 Vt. 255.

49. Such questions not specified and shown by the record to have been raised below, will not be revised, nor noticed. Sargeant v. Butts, 21 Vt. 90. Dana v. Lull, Id., 388. Bingham v. Hutchins, 27 Vt. 569. State v. Preston, 48 Vt. 12. Hathaway v. Nat. Life Ins. Co., Id. 385. See VARIANCE.

50. In a case of partition, Royce, J., says: Some of the points now made in the defense have no connection with the question on which the case turned in the court below. We are at liberty, nevertheless, to notice these additional grounds, because, if it appears upon any view of the case that the plaintiff cannot legally sustain his petition, it will follow that the result of the trial was right, and the judgment should not be disturbed. Hawley v. Soper, 18 Vt. 320.

51. Instances. Where a declaration in offset, clearly bad on demurrer and, perhaps, on motion in arrest, was not objected to below, but the general issue was pleaded thereto, and a trial had;—Held, that any objection thereto was not properly before the supreme court. Keyes v. Waters, 18 Vt. 479.

52. A plea in set-off had the common counts only, under which a recovery was had for the use of a carriage hired, and damages sustained to it by negligence in the use. No objection having been raised, in the county court, to a recovery for such damages on the ground that the count therefor should have been special;—Held, that the objection could not be raised in the supreme court. Thompson v. Congdon, 43 Vt. 396.

53. Where an action of general assumpsit has been tried upon its merits, the supreme court will not entertain an objection that the declaration should have been special, where the judgment, if affirmed, will protect the party in reference to the matter actually litigated, unless the objection was raised in the county court. Lamphere v. Cowen, 42 Vt. 175.

54. During the pendency of a suit in the county court, the plaintiff died, and the suit was further prosecuted by his administrator to judgment, and the cause passed to the supreme court upon exceptions by the defendant. The defendant then, for the first time, filed a motion to dismiss the suit, on the ground that the cause of action did not survive. Held, that this was not like the case of a want of jurisdiction in the court; that as the question was not raised and decided in the county court, the supreme court would not entertain the motion, as there was nothing to revise. Dana v. Lull, 21 Vt. 388.

55. If the certificate of “willful and malicious” is made in a proper case in the county court, an affirmance of the judgment by the supreme court extends to the certificate also. But where no such adjudication was made below, an original motion for such adjudication and certificate can not be entertained in the supreme court. Nichols v. Packard, 16 Vt. 147. Dodge v. Carpenter, 18 Vt. 509.

56. Death of party. Where a party dies between the judgment in the county court and the hearing in the supreme court, the practice is to affirm or reverse the judgment, nunc pro tunc. Adams v. Newell, 8 Vt. 190.

57. Former decision in same case. A decision once made by the supreme court is to be held conclusive and final upon the point decided, and to be the law of that case; and no re-argument of the question can be had in the same case. Herrick v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 673, 699. Ross v. Bank of Burlington, 1 Aik. 48. Dana v. Nelson, 1 Aik. 252.

58. The supreme court will not revise a former decision of the same court, made in the same cause, upon substantially the same state of facts. Stacy v. Vt. Cent. R. Co., 33 Vt. 551. Barker v. Belknap, 39 Vt. 168.

59. Whether case shall be remanded, or be finally disposed of. All cases once brought into the supreme court on exceptions are finally disposed of there, unless a jury trial becomes necessary, or unless, by the decision, the case is placed in such a state that either party has a right to a trial by jury. In that event, only, is the cause remanded. Peach v. Mills, 13 Vt. 501.

60. A case is never remanded from the supreme to the county court, but is finished in the supreme court, unless some issue to the jury stands closed upon the record, which is to be tried before the case can be further proceeded with. Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344. 24 Vt. 646.

61. Whenever a judgment of the county court has been found to be erroneous, and it could be ascertained by computation what the judgment ought to have been, the practice of the supreme court has been to make the correction, without sending the case back for a new trial. Chandler v. Spear, 23 Vt. 388, citing Sutton v. Burnett, 1 Aik. 209. Paris v. Vail, 18 Vt. 284-6.

62. Where judgment was rendered in the county court under a rule that, in case of reversal by the supreme court, it should enter judgment for the other party;—Held, that such rule, though binding upon the parties, was not necessarily imperative upon the court; and that, if the case turns upon points not anticipated when the rule was made, and, in the opinion of the court, requires the further action of the jury, it will be remanded for a new trial;—and it was so done. Foster v. Collamer, 10 Vt. 466.

63. As to final judgment on reversal. Where the judgment below is found erroneous and is reversed, it is then the settled practice of the supreme court to look into all the issues standing upon the record, and to render such a judgment as the county court should have rendered. Wires v. Farr, 24 Vt. 645. G. S. c. 42, s. 4.

64. Where all the facts are found and reported, the supreme court, after a reversal, renders such judgment as the law requires upon the facts. Bank of Newbury v. Richards, 35 Vt. 281.

65. Where the judgment below is reversed on exceptions taken by one side, it is then the duty of the court to examine the whole case, and render such judgment as the county court ought to have rendered, and thus correct the errors made against the other party, though no exception was taken thereto. But where the judgment is not reversed upon the exceptions so taken, the court cannot revise a decision against the other party to which he took no exception. Wheelock v. Moulton, 18 Vt. 430. Cummings v. Fullam, Id. 434. Clark v. Clark, 21 Vt. 490.

66. Where the supreme court reverses a judgment upon exceptions taken by one party only, and is then required to render such judgment as the county court ought to have rendered, the whole case is open to render the proper judgment; and an error against the right of the non-excepting party may be corrected, so far, at least, as relates to any question raised in the county court. But where the judgment below is not reversed, any decision not excepted to is not open to revision. Wakefield v. Merrick, 38 Vt. 82.

67. Rulings of the county court, not excepted to, are not open for consideration in the supreme court, in the first instance. But where the whole case is before the court—as, on the report of auditors—inasmuch as, in case of a reversal upon the exceptions taken, the court will render such judgment as the county court should have rendered, the party not excepting is entitled to argue provisionally the points decided against him in the county court. But unless the excepting party prevails on his exceptions, the judgment will be affirmed of course. Davis v. Partridge, 19 Vt. 481.

68. Upon an auditor's report, the county court allowed some items and disallowed others of the plaintiff's account. The defendant excepted as to some of the items allowed, and prevailed as to these in the supreme court. The supreme court, on reversing the judgment below, proceeded to render such judgment as the county court ought to have rendered, by allowing to the plaintiff some of the disallowed items, although he had not excepted. Burton v. Norwich, 34 Vt. 345.

69. Where a judgment is more favorable to a party than he is entitled to have it, he cannot have it reversed on his own exceptions; and, it not being opened on his exceptions, the other party, unless he excepted, is not entitled to have it corrected in his favor. Erwin v. Stafford, 45 Vt. 390.

70. A judgment was reversed on the plaintiff's exceptions, although he recovered one dollar damages and his exceptions were not to the ruling upon the question of damages. Wood v. Shurtleff, 46 Vt. 325.

71. The supreme court will not look into the record to discover an error not excepted to, nor correct such suggested error, unless the judgment below is reversed upon the exceptions taken and a new judgment rendered upon the whole record. Yates v. Pelton, 48 Vt. 314.

72. Retaining case after reversal. The reversal of a judgment of the county court opens such issues only as were affected by the errors for which the judgment is reversed. If these were issues of law, upon demurrer, and the judgment below is reversed and a repleader awarded, strictly speaking the case should be retained in the supreme court until, by the new pleadings, some issue of fact is joined, when it should be remanded. Kinsman v. Paige, 24 Vt. 656.

73. A repleader was awarded in the supreme court, after a reversal of the judgment, in Parkhurst v. Sumner, 38 Vt. 588.

74. On exceptions to a judgment for the penalty of a probate bond, rendered on demurrer to the declaration, the supreme court reversed the judgment, and rendered judgment that the prosecutor become non-suit. Probate Court v. Brainard, 48 Vt. 620.

75. The supreme court reversed a judgment rendered on the report of an auditor to the county court, and, because the facts were too indefinitely found and stated, referred the case to auditors appointed by the supreme court. West v. Cutting, 19 Vt. 536.

76. In an action of book account, after reversing a judgment of the county court that the writ abate, the supreme court rendered judgment that the defendant account, and appointed auditors. Peach v. Mills, 18 Vt. 501. Vanderburg v. Clark, 22 Vt. 185.

77. Remanding after reversal. It is the common practice of the supreme court, where they reverse a judgment upon the facts as found and reported by the county court, to proceed and render final judgment, such as the facts found warrant; but in this case, the court, on reversing the judgment, granted a new trial. Smith v. Hill, 45 Vt. 90.

78. Instance of reversing a judgment upon a referee's report, and remanding the case to the county court for recommitment to find further facts. Davis v. Davis, 48 Vt. 502.

79. Instance of correcting the judgment below, on reversal, by reference to the trial judge's minutes. Sherman v. Champlain Transportation Co., 81 Vt. 162.

80. Reversal pro forma. Judgment (for plaintiff) reversed pro forma;—it appearing that an affirmance might embarrass the plaintiff in pursuing a just claim, but in a different form of action; but costs were allowed as in case of an affirmance. Lassell v. Burton, 16 Vt. 188.

81. The supreme court refused to reverse a judgment pro forma and allow the plaintiff to amend his declaration, where such amendment had been suggested in the county court and the plaintiff declined it. Denison v. Tyson, 17 Vt. 549.

82. Report direct to supreme court. In a case referred in the supreme court, the court refused to hear any exceptions to the report except such as showed partial and corrupt conduct of the referees. Koeler v. Beers, Brayt. 215. Webber v. Ives, 1 Tyl. 441.

83. A party was allowed the usual time, under the rule, for filing exceptions to a report of auditors made to the supreme court, in a cause there referred, after his motion to recommit had been disposed of. Cummings v. Fullam, 15 Vt. 787.

84. Testimony—Special rules. Where petitions for new trials, entering appeals, &c., are continued, it is customary to make rules, if desired, for taking the testimony in vacation, upon notice. Blowens v. Hyde, 16 Vt. 188.

85. Affidavits. Ex parte affidavits ought not to be received in the supreme court, as to loss of papers, &c.; certainly not, unless filed in time to allow the opposite party to take counter affidavits. Fish v. Field, 19 Vt. 141.

86. Simple affidavits, taken on notice to the adverse party, are admissible on the trial of matters of fact in the supreme court. The provisions of the statute relative to the taking of depositions in civil causes, do not apply in such cases. Briggs v. Green, 83 Vt. 565.

PREScription — PRESUMPTIVE GRANTS.

1. Twenty years' quiet enjoyment of flowing adjoining lands by the waters of a mill-pond secures the right by prescription, or rather affords the presumption of a grant of the easement. Hulburt v. Leonard, Brayt. 201. Fifteen years is sufficient. S. C., Id. 202. Mitchell v. Walker, 2 Aik. 266.

2. In analogy to the statute of limitations, a prescriptive right to an incorporeal hereditament arises from fifteen years' possession and use adverse to the owner—that is, under a claim of right—the right acquired being absolute, or qualified, according to the use and claim. Id. 19 Vt. 161.

3. If a party prescribing for a right has, within the fifteen years of use, acknowledged the superior right of the other party, although under a mistake of facts and of their relative rights, the presumption of a grant is rebutted. Mitchell v. Walker. 2 Aik. 266.

4. The doctrine of presumption arising from use, as of a grant of a right, or easement in land, is founded in analogy to the statute of limitations, and is applicable to cases for which the statute has not provided; and the evidence in support of such presumptive right must at least be sufficient to have established the legal right, provided the statute had extended to the case in judgment;—that is, the use must be adverse, uninterrupted, and for the period limited by the statute. Shumway v. Simons, 1 Vt. 58.

5. The doctrine of presumptive grants applies only to those cases which are not strictly within the statute of limitations. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165.

6. Indeed, I hold it not competent for the court to raise a presumption, from mere lapse of time, against one who, by positive provision of the statute of limitations, is exempted from its operation. Phelps, J., in Wells v. Morse, 11 Vt. 9. 32 Vt. 191.

7. No principle is better settled, than that the extent of the presumed right is determined by the use upon which the presumed grant is founded, the right granted being only co-extensive with the right enjoyed; and if the enjoyment [as of the use of water] has been limited as to times of use, or of quantity, the right is thus limited. Shrewsbury v. Brown, 25 Vt. 197.

8. The extent of a right which is acquired in the land of another by a use of it for 15 years, is to be determined by the claim of the party using it, and the acquiescence of the other party. Arbuckle v. Ward, 29 Vt. 43.

9. If the use originated in a contract, and has been consistent therewith, reference should be had to the contract for determining the extent of the right claimed and acquiesced in. Id.

10. Where no contract is shown, and the use was known to the adverse party, or was so open and notorious that such knowledge would be presumed, the use will be presumed to have been under a claim of right, unless the contrary is shown. Id.

11. That a use began by permission of the land owner is not alone sufficient to defeat a prescription. For, if the permission was a perpetual or unlimited gift, or permission to use, and has been continued for 15 years, this is not a "precarious enjoyment," and the right is perfected. Id.

12. In cases not within the statute of limitations, grants are presumed or proved by mere length of possession and without auxiliary circumstances. University of Vt. v. Reynolds, 8 Vt. 542. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 205. Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 503. Victory v. Wells, 39 Vt. 488.

13. Adverse possession alone, unaccompanied by other circumstances, for any period less than the time required by the statute to bar the adverse party's right, is no ground for presuming a grant, or for supplying by presumption a deficiency in a title. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 188. Wells v. Morse, 11 Vt. 9.

14. Where a conveyance or release is presumed from lapse of time, this presumption is made in favor of the legal estate, and to quiet, always, but never to disturb a possession. Such presumption is never made in favor of a stranger, or of a vacant possession, or against the legal title—as, in behalf of a stranger and where there had been a vacant possession, against a mortgagee, that the mortgage debt had been paid. Appleton v. Edson, 8 Vt. 239. 32 Vt. 202. 38 Vt. 201.

15. A deed is sometimes presumed to quiet a possession, but not to extend title; possession being the indispensable basis upon which all such presumptions must rest. Brown v. Edson, 28 Vt. 435. 32 Vt. 214; citing Appleton v. Edson, 8 Vt. 239. Williams v. Bass, 22 Vt. 352.

16. In cases within the statute of limitations, mere length of possession, unaccompanied by other circumstances, is not sufficient to raise the presumption of a grant. But where there has been a long and uninterrupted possession consistent with the grant to be presumed, and there are other circumstances which make it reasonable to believe that such grant was actually made, but through great lapse of time, or other causes, the proper evidence of such grant cannot be found and is probably lost or destroyed, the jury may, upon such evidence, find that a grant has in fact been made. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 188.

17. This presumption, in such case, is one of fact and not of law. Id. Hazard v. Martin, 2 Vt. 77. Doolittle v. Holton, 28 Vt. 819.

18. The circumstances relied upon in aid of a long possession must be consistent with such possession, and with the fact to be presumed. Townsend v. Downer. Wells v. Morse, 11 Vt. 9. Sellick v. Starr, 5 Vt. 255.

19. If a deed conveying an entire tract or several different parcels is sought to be proved by presumptive evidence, possession by the grantee of a part of the tract, or of some of the parcels, claiming under the deed, is evidence to prove its existence in a suit in which the title to a portion of the tract, or to a separate parcel, comes in question, although there has been no actual possession of the portion or separate parcels sued for. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 188; citing Hazard v. Martin, 2 Vt. 77. Doolittle v. Holton, 28 Vt. 831. Coicester v. Culver, 29 Vt. 115.

20. A lease for the life of the lessee may be presumed from long possession [18 years], and other circumstances, as well as any other estate. Sellick v. Starr, 5 Vt. 255.

21. Where there was a surrender of a New Hampshire charter and a confirmatory grant taken from the Royal Governor of New York;—Held, that acceptance and long acquiescence alone of the New Hampshire proprietors would be construed as a waiver of the former grant, and confirmation of the latter. Paine v. Smead, 1 D. Chip. 56. 8 Vt. 560.

22. In the year 1781, a charter was obtained from the State granting to certain persons a township of land, reserving one-seventieth part for the use of a seminary, or college. The proprietors under the charter made no division, nor successfully asserted their claim, but the whole town was settled and occupied by other persons, none of whom held or claimed under the charter grantees. The University of Vermont, which became entitled to the part so reserved, brought ejectment against the defendant who had been in possession for thirty-eight years, holding adversely. Held, that although the statute of limitations, by force of the exception therein, did not apply to the case, yet the long continued possession of the defendant afforded evidence that his possession commenced under a lawful title, and that the jury might and ought to presume, in favor of such possession, an antecedent grant to the inhabitants of the town, or an abandonment and extinguishment of the charter title, or a surrender of the same and a subsequent grant to the persons in possession. University of Vt. v. Reynolds, 8 Vt. 542.

23. In the charter of the town of Victory, granted by the State in 1781, one share or right was specified "to be and remain for the purpose of settlement of a minister and ministers of the gospel in said township forever;" and this "minister right," with two others named, were, "with their improvements, rights, rents and profits to remain inalienably appropriated for the uses and purposes for which they were assigned, and to be under the charge, direction and disposal of the inhabitants of said township forever." The lot in question was drawn to this right as "first minister's right," but had never been appropriated, accepted, or any right to its use acquired under the terms of the charter, by the settlement of any minister of the gospel. It did not appear when the town was organized. It was unorganized as late as 1842. The defendants purchased the lot, in 1825, from a former occupant, paying a full consideration therefor, and taking a deed in which the lot was described as drawn to the right of the first settled minister, and had held possession and occupancy thereof as a home stead farm continuously and adversely to all the world down to the commencement of this action of ejectment brought in 1865, without any pretence of countervailing claim interposed earlier than 1858. Held, that this right was not granted to the proprietors, nor to any one else, but was reserved from the grant for the use named; that the trusteeship contemplated by the words, "the inhabitants of said township," was in the organized municipal corporation; and until such organization, or settlement of a minister, it was competent for the State to assume the control and disposition of the right so reserved, and, through the legislature, to grant it to any person or purpose it might deem fit; and hence, it was proper to leave to the jury, in favor of so long a possession under the circumstances, to find as matter of fact, and the jury were fully warranted in finding, that the defendants and their grantors were holding under some valid grant from the State, although there were some circumstances tending to show that such grant was not made; and the ruling below to this effect, and that such possession was prima facie evidence that it was originally under legal title by grant from the legislature, was sustained. Victory v. Wells, 39 Vt. 488. See University of Vt. v. Reynolds, 8 Vt. 542. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 188. Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 503. Bush v. Whitney, 1 D. Chip. 369. Williams v. Goddard, 8 Vt. 492.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

I. THE RELATION—HOW CONSTITUTED AND EVIDENCED.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SURETIES.

1. As respects the creditor.
2. As respects the principal.
3. As between the sureties.

I. THE RELATION—HOW CONSTITUTED AND EVIDENCED.

1. Mode of signing—Form and effect.

The legal presumption arising upon an instrument signed by one, and then by others with the word surety added to their names, is, that, as between themselves, the first is principal, and the others sureties for him. Lathrop v. Wilson, 30 Vt. 604.

2. But such presumption is not conclusive, and the real relations of the signers may be shown, notwithstanding the form and manner of the signatures. Id. Keith v. Goodwin, 31 Vt. 268. Adams v. Flanagan, 36 Vt. 400.

3. Where several signers of a note, "each as principal," promised to pay;—Held, that, as to the payee, they must be treated as principals, and though one was in fact a surety and this was known to the payee, yet he was not released by a contract for delay of payment made by the payee with the other signers. Claremont Bank v. Wood, 10 Vt. 582. 26 Vt. 34. 30 Vt. 717. 31 Vt. 258.

4. Held otherwise, in like case, except that the word surety was added to his signature. People's Bank v. Pearsons, 30 Vt. 711.

5. Where there are several signers to a promissory note, the true relations of the signers and the real nature of the contract, as between themselves, may be shown by parol evidence. Though all appear to be joint principals, it may be shown that some are principals and some sureties. An apparent principal may be shown to be a surety; an apparent surety, a principal; and an apparent co-surety, to be surety for the other sureties. Adams v. Flanagan, 36 Vt. 400. Lapham v. Barnes, 2 Vt. 220. Keith v. Goodwin, 31 Vt. 268. Lathrop v. Wilson, 30 Vt. 604. Pitkin v. Flanagan, 33 Vt. 160. Harrington v. Wright, 48 Vt. 427.

6. Where the plaintiff by a separate writing guaranteed the payment of a note signed by the defendant and others, all apparently principals, but the defendant in fact a surety;—Held, that, prima facie and without proof that the plaintiff expected to stand as a general surety, the undertaking was for the other signers jointly, and not jointly with them, and that he was entitled to recover of the defendant the whole sum paid by him upon the guaranty. Keith v. Goodwin, 81 Vt. 268.

7. Where different persons successively indorse accommodation paper before it goes into circulation, for the mere purpose of obtaining a discount for one of the parties, they should, prima facie, be held to have undertaken for the same thing; that is, that the party obtaining the discount shall repay it, and, if not, that, upon proper demand and notice, they undertake, either jointly or severally, to pay it. In either case, as among themselves, they will be held as co-sureties only. And the order of the indorsement, in such case, raises no presumption of any obligation among themselves different from what grows out of the other facts in the case, and is of no importance either way. Pitkin v. Flanagan, 23 Vt. 160.

8. Sureties signed with their principal a note drawn to raise money upon, and made payable to H, or order, at a certain bank. H indorsed the note for the accommodation of the principal, and he afterwards got it discounted elsewhere. Held, that H, upon the face of the contract, was an indorser and not a co-surety; and, there being nothing in the case to show that the real relation of the parties was different, that he was not liable to the sureties for contribution. Briggs v. Boyd, 87 Vt. 584.

9. One not in fact a joint or sole principal in a contract, but a surety merely, may so stipulate at the time of entering into the obligation as not to be liable to contribution with the other sureties, who have signed before him. The form of doing this is not important, nor that this should appear upon the contract; nor is it important, where he has signed without privity with such sureties as have signed before him, that they should know the terms upon which he signed. Keith v. Goodwin, 81 Vt. 268. Adams v. Flanagan, 86 Vt. 400.

10. The plaintiff signed a note as surety, upon the erroneous supposition, springing from the deceit of the principal and in no way imputable to the defendant, that the defendant would sign as a co-surety with him. The principal then took the note to the defendant, with the name of the principal, and of the plaintiff as "surety," signed to it, when the defendant, in good faith, and without any knowledge of what the plaintiff supposed as to his signing, signed the note, adding to his signature the word "surety," upon the distinct and express understanding with the principal and the payee that he signed as surety for the plaintiff, and not as co-surety with him. Held, that the defendant did not become a joint surety, and therefore was not liable for contribution. Adams v. Flanagan.

11. Consent. One cannot make himself surety for another, as between themselves, without the latter's request or knowledge. Lathrop v. Wilson, 80 Vt. 604. Peake v. Dorwin, 25 Vt. 81.

12. After the execution of a note by A, B signed it as surety without the request or knowledge of A. Held, that A's subsequent assent and recognition of the act was equivalent to a contemporaneous request, and made B his surety. Little v. Keyes, 24 Vt. 118.

13. Implied authority. If one signs a note as surety and intrusts it to his principal, he thereby gives an implied authority to obtain either additional sureties, or joint makers, or guarantors, indefinitely, until the note is fairly launched in market as a security having two distinct parties. Keith v. Goodwin, 81 Vt. 268.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SURETIES.

1. As respects the creditor.

14. How paper may be used. It is no defense for a surety upon a promissory note drawn for the purpose of raising money upon it, that the principal got it discounted by a party other than the one to whom it was drawn payable, and different from the party ageed upon with the surety. Briggs v. Boyd, 87 Vt. 584. Bank of Burlington v. Beach, 1 Aik. 62. Keith v. Goodwin, 81 Vt. 268. Bank of Montpelier v. Joyner, 88 Vt. 481. Bank of Middlebury v. Bingham, 88 Vt. 621. Bank of Newbury v. Richards, 35 Vt. 281. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Humphrey, 86 Vt. 554.

15. It is no defense for a surety upon a promissory note, against a holder for value taking it before due, that he signed and delivered it to his principal upon the condition and agreement that it should not be used until a certain other person should also sign it, and that it was put in circulation without the procuring of such signature, unless the holder had knowledge of such condition and agreement when he received the note, although he knew that the defendant was a surety. Pass. Bank v. Goss, 81 Vt. 815. Dixon v. Dixon, 1b. 450. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Humphrey. See Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Hathaway, 86 Vt. 539.

16. Where a bank advanced its money in reliance upon notes and drafts on which the defendant was a known surety, and relying upon his liability;—Held, in the absence of all fraud and concealment on the part of the bank, that it was no defense, that the bank used the paper in a different way from what the defendant supposed when he signed. Farmers' Bank v. Burchard, 83 Vt. 846.

17. The defendant signed a note of $150 as surety for O, the principal, payable to the plaintiff bank in common form for discount, and not negotiable, under an agreement with O that O should get it discounted and bring him $125 of it to apply on O's indebtedness to him, and retain the balance. O offered the note for discount at the bank, which was declined, and thereupon, meeting A, he informed A of his having the note and of his inability to get it discounted, saying that he had tried to get the money on the note in order to pay a certain note of $150 at another bank on which A was surety for O, and which was past due. Thereupon A proposed to take the note, indorse it himself, get it discounted and apply the proceeds upon a debt that O was owing him. O assented to this, and A took the note, wrote his name on the back of it, got it discounted at the plaintiff's bank, and applied the proceeds on his debt against O, as agreed. When the note fell due it was protested as against him, and he paid it and took it up, and then brought this suit upon the note in the name of the bank, but for his own benefit, against the defendant. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover of the defendant, a surety. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Hathaway, 86 Vt. 589.

18. The defendant signed a note with and as surety for S, made payable to a bank, ten days from date. S passed it to the bank to hold as collateral security for not only his present indebtedness, but for any future advances. This arrangement was unknown to the defendant, and the bank knew him to be a surety. Held, that it was a perversion of the defendant's obligation to turn it into a continuing guaranty, and that he was not liable on the note to meet advances to S made long after the maturity of the note. Bank of St. Albans v. Smith, 80 Vt. 148. See Harrington v. Wright, 48 Vt. 427.

19. J gave P his note with sureties, made payable to a bank, for P to get discounted and to apply the proceeds upon J's indebtedness to him; and if not discounted, to return the note to J. The sureties knew nothing of this agreement. P, being unable to get the note discounted, left it with the bank as collateral security for a debt he owed the bank, and so informed J. Held, that this was not a misappropriation of the note, and that P, having paid the bank, could recover upon the note, in the name of the bank, against both J and the sureties. Bank of Montpelier v. Joyner, 33 Vt. 481; distinguished from Bank of St. Albans v. Smith.

20. The defendants executed a negotiable promissory note to A, a manufacturing corporation, for $1000, part of the signers being in fact sureties for the others, but this not indicated by the note. The note was made to enable the principals to obtain cloth of A, on credit, to the amount of the note. The general purpose of making the note, and the suretyship of the sureties were known to A. The principals obtained of A upon the note, to part of its amount, as much cloth as he was able to furnish, and then, by understanding with A, they procured other cloth of the plaintiffs upon the credit of the note and of its remaining with A for their benefit, A agreeing to pay the plaintiffs the balance if the note should be paid to A at its maturity. The defendants paid A the amount advanced by A, and after the note had fallen due A indorsed the note for the balance to the plaintiffs. Held, that the plaintiffs could recover the balance, as indorsees of the note, against the sureties as well as against the principals. Lyman v. Sherwood, 20 Vt. 42.

21. Where the defendant signed a note as surety, under an agreement with his principal that it was given as a general security for a particular unliquidated debt of the principal to the plaintiff, but the principal delivered the note to the plaintiff and assented to its standing as a security for that and also for a further indebtedness to the plaintiff;—Held, that unless the plaintiff knew of such agreement, or understood that the defendant so understood it, the note stood as a security for both debts. Burton v. Blin, 23 Vt. 151.

22. Force of surety's obligation. A surety to a promissory note is an original maker, and is primarily and absolutely liable, as much so as the principal, to any party lawfully holding the paper; and where the holder is not chargeable with want of good faith and fair dealing, the surety has no advantage over the principal in respect to immunity from liability, except in the instance of a contract with the principal for delay of payment. Bank of Newbury v. Richards, 85 Vt. 281.

23. Where principal and surety are bound by the same instrument for the performance of an act of the principal, the same act, or neglect, which charges the principal charges the surety. Seaver v. Young, 16 Vt. 858.

24. Agency. The payee of a promissory note may make the surety thereon his agent to collect it of the principal. In such case, a payment of it by the principal to the surety discharges the principal. Williams v. Baldwin, 7 Vt. 508.

25. Action. A recovery cannot be had against a surety upon a promissory note, under the count for money had and received, if he prove that he was a mere surety, and did not have the money. Redfield, C. J., in Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26.

26. In equity. Parties at a receiver's sale of the assets of an insolvent bank, purchased, at a reduced price, a claim for indemnity which the bank held against a surety. Quare, whether, under the circumstances, the surety should not be relieved in equity, on the payment of such sum as would reimburse and indemnify the purchasers. Loomis v. Fay, 24 Vt. 240.

27. A mortgage of indemnity given by a debtor to his surety, creates an equitable lien and trust for the benefit of the creditor, to which he is entitled in equity; and held, that where the surety had voluntarily assigned such security to the creditor, the creditor took the same benefit therefrom, as if the assignment had been made under a decree in chancery. Paris v. Hulett, 26 Vt. 308.

28. Matters of defense. The sureties upon a State treasurer's bond were held not relieved by the mere fact that they signed the bond, relying upon the report of the State auditor that the treasurer had fully accounted for all moneys received by him, as treasurer, in previous years, whereas in fact he had embezzled such monies. State v. Bates, 36 Vt. 387.

29. Where the defense of the principal in a promissory note is altogether of a personal character, as infancy, or coverture, this is not a defense for the surety. So held, where the principal was a married woman. St. Albans Bank v. Dillon, 30 Vt. 122.

30. Discharge. A discharge, by the creditor, of the known principal, discharges also the known surety on the same debt. Ellis v. Allen, 48 Vt. 545. Paddleford v. Thacher, 48 Vt. 574.

31. Payment. C gave the plaintiff his note for interest due upon other notes, agreeing to secure such note by mortgage. The plaintiff, relying upon such promise, indorsed upon the other notes the interest as paid. C failed to give the mortgage, and the plaintiff gave up to him the interest note. In an action against a surety upon the original notes;—Held, that the indorsement was prematurely made, and that the transaction did not amount to payment of the interest. Hayward v. Billings, 48 Vt. 355.

32. The plaintiff and H signed a note with K, as his sureties, at which time K gave the plaintiff, as his indemnity, a note against the defendant payable to K, or bearer. This last note was mere accommodation paper as between K and the defendant, but the plaintiff had no knowledge of that fact. K paid part of the first note, and the sureties paid the balance. For the part paid by the plaintiff, K gave him a new note payable in six months. Held, that this transaction did not operate to release the defendant, but that he remained liable upon his note to the extent of the payment made by the plaintiff on the first note. Pinney v. Kimpton, 46 Vt. 80.

33. Where the principal debtor tenders payment of the debt for which a surety is obligated, and the creditor declines to receive it, he thereby discharges the surety. Joslyn v. Eastman, 46 Vt. 258.

34. Effect of release. The release of the principal cuts off all collateral remedies for the principal thing released. The release of the principal by the creditor releases the surety; and the release of the principal by a surety cuts off his claim against a co-surety for contribution. Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 581.

35. As to securities. An act of the creditor impairing the securities of a surety, done without his consent and operating to his prejudice, discharges the surety. Smith v. Day, 23 Vt. 656.

36. Where a creditor has security placed in his hands by the principal on account of the debt, on which security the surety has a right to rely, the creditor has no right to part with it or appropriate it to any other purpose, without consent of the surety. If he does so, he thereby discharges the surety to the amount of the value of such security. Hurd v. Spencer, 40 Vt. 581.

37. The plaintiff having in his hands property of his debtor as security for two demands, for one of which the defendant was surety, promised the defendant to retain from the proceeds of the sale enough to satisfy such demand; but, after the sale, he paid over to the debtor what he had so promised to retain. Held, that the defendant was discharged. Strong v. Wooster, 6 Vt. 536.

38. If, by any positive and willful act, the creditor releases, or renders unavailing any of his securities against the principal debtor, to that extent he thereby relieves the surety;—as, where he refused on the request of the surety to present his claim to the commissioners on the estate of the principal, and took active measures to prevent its being presented, whereby it became barred as against the estate. Clark v. Hill, cited in McCollum v. Hinckley, 9 Vt. 143. Bank of Manchester v. Bartlett, 13 Vt. 315.

39. Where a creditor merely neglects to present his claim against the estate of the principal debtor, whereby his debt, as against the estate of the principal, is released or barred, we think sound policy would require that the surety should be released to the amount which might have been realized out of the estate of the principal; and, where there is actual fraud, that at law he should be wholly released. Redfield, J. McCollum v. Hinckley. But quære as to the first statement. See Bank of Manchester v. Bartlett.

40. Where the payee of a promissory note, with sureties, surrendered it to the principal for him to exhibit in a trustee suit as evidence that it had been paid, and the principal exhibited it to his sureties as evidence that he had taken it up and paid it, believing which the sureties had omitted to secure themselves and would so suffer loss;—Held, that the sureties would be thereby discharged. If one supply another with the means of perpetrating a fraud in his name against one person, and the fraud be perpetrated by the same means, but against other parties, he is to be held liable. Wilson v. Green, 25 Vt. 450. 85 Vt. 486.

41. Where the goods of the principal had been seized and sold on execution, and the creditor had obtained judgment against the sheriff for not paying over the avails;—Held, that this was no bar to a recovery against the surety, for that the creditor was entitled to pursue his several remedies until he obtained actual satisfaction. Bank of Rutland v. Thrall, 6 Vt. 287.

42. One of several principals in a promissory note, who had agreed with the others to indemnify them against it, delivered to the payee notes against other persons to apply upon this note when collected; but afterwards, by agreement with the payee, they were differently applied,—the payee not knowing of the agreement to indemnify. Held, that this was no defense to an action against the other makers. Pinney v. Bugbee, 13 Vt. 638.

43. Where a creditor, upon his own motion, brought suit and secured his debt by attachment of the property of the principal debtor, and afterwards released the attachment, and the principal became insolvent;—Held, that this did not discharge the surety where he had not requested such attachment to be made, nor that the property attached should be applied on the debt, and where the creditor acted in good faith and with a view to his own interest, and there was no evidence that the attachment was given up in fraud of the rights of the surety. Baker v. Marshall, 16 Vt. 522. Montpelier Bank v. Dixon, 4 Vt. 587.

44. A creditor may give up such security as he may have obtained of the principal at his own suggestion and without any assistance from the surety, and not thereby release the surety; provided he acts in good faith, and only with reference to his own interests. Hebard, J., in Crane v. Stickles, 15 Vt. 252.

45. Where one of several judgment debtors was surety only upon the original debt, and the property of his principals, attached upon the writ, had become discharged of the lien by neglect of the creditor to take it in execution, and the principals had since become insolvent;—Held, that these facts afforded no ground for relief at law; as, to set aside on audita querela an execution and levy upon the surety's property. Herrick v. Orange Co. Bank, 27 Vt. 584.

46. Where a fictitious or forged bond, held by a creditor as a supposed security, was surrendered by the creditor to the principal debtor;—Held, that as the paper was worthless and of no possible use to the surety except as a matter in terrorem, this did not furnish a ground in equity for the release of the surety. Loomis v. Fay, 24 Vt. 240.

47. Where a note was by mistake of facts given up to be cancelled, but before it fell due the payee notified the makers of the mistake and that he still looked to them for payment;—Held, that he could recover thereon, as well against the surety as the principal,—it not appearing that the condition of the surety had been affected by the surrender of the note, or by the delay in giving notice of the mistake. Blodgett v. Bickford, 80 Vt. 781.

48. It is no defence to a surety upon a note, that when he signed it the principal was actually insolvent and was afterwards adjudged a bankrupt, and the security he took to indemnify him was taken from him by the assignee in bankruptcy, though the principal procured him to sign upon the suggestion of the payee, but without fraud on his part. Noble v. Scofield, 44 Vt. 281.

49. Surety indemnified. A surety who signs a note with his principal for his accommodation, where the principal has placed funds in his hands to indemnify him, stands on no more favorable ground for defence against the note, than the principal himself. Thrall v. Benedict, 18 Vt. 248.

50. Judgment as a merger. A judgment upon a note operates as a merger of the note, and, at law, is so far conclusive upon the parties to it, as to exclude a defense [thereafter arising], growing out of the relation of principal and surety which existed between the defendants in the judgment, prior to its recovery. Marshall v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 827. 27 Vt. 586. Dunham v. Downer, 31 Vt. 249. Questioned by Poland, J. 81 Vt. 267.

51. Relief in equity. It is otherwise, in equity. Dunham v. Downer.

52. The orators gave a note with and for A, as his sureties, to M, upon which M obtained a judgment against all the signers, and assigned the judgment to D, who knew that the orators were only sureties upon the note. D then made a parol agreement with A, upon good consideration, to extend the time of payment of the judgment, and did so extend it. D afterwards brought suit on that judgment in the name of M, and it was held in that suit (Marshall v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 827) that the judgment was conclusive, and at law excluded the defense offered; and judgment passed against all the parties to the first judgment. The orators then brought their bill in equity, and, upon these facts, obtained a decree perpetually enjoining the enforcement of the judgment. Id.

53. The orator alleged that he signed a note to the defendant as surety for C, upon the condition and assurance of the defendant that if not paid at maturity he would immediately collect the note out of C's property; that the orator relied upon such assurance, and therefore took no measures to secure himself; that the defendant neglected to take measures to collect the note for a year or more after it matured, during all which time it might have been collected of C; and that the orator had no notice of such neglect until C had failed and the orator could obtain no security—the orator being out of the State and not in circumstances to keep himself informed of C's pecuniary condition. Held, that such facts would be an equitable estoppel to a collection of the note from the orator. Hickok v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 35 Vt. 476.

54. Delay—Agreement to give time. A creditor is not bound, on the request of a surety, to secure his demand by attachment of the property of the principal. Crane v. Stickles, 15 Vt. 252.

55. A creditor is not obliged, on the request of a surety, under any circumstances of urgency, to sue and collect the debt of the principal, nor to make good to the surety any loss by a refusal so to do. Hickok v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 35 Vt. 476. Hogaboom v. Herrick, 4 Vt. 131. Hubbard v. Davis, 1 Aik. 296.

56. A surety who has ample collateral security in money or property from his principal, is precluded from taking advantage of any enlargement of the time of payment, by arrangement between the creditor and the principal. Smith v. Steele, 25 Vt. 427. See Wilson v. Wheeler, 29 Vt. 484.

57. A change made in the contract of suretyship between the creditor and the debtor, without the assent of the surety, whether prejudicial to him or not, discharges the surety. Bennett, J., in Bank of St. Albans v. Smith, 80 Vt. 151.

58. If the creditor, without the assent of the surety, makes a binding contract with the principal to extend the time of payment of the debt, the surety is thereby discharged. It is not necessary, that the contract should be such as would prevent the creditor from sustaining an action at law on the debt, until the enlarged time of payment; but it is sufficient, if the contract be such as to give the principal a legal remedy upon it. Austin v. Dorwin, 21 Vt. 88.

59. Such is the effect of the contract, although made after the debt is overdue. Turrill v. Boynton, 23 Vt. 142.

60. An agreement to delay that shall release a surety, must be such a contract as the principal can enforce against the creditor by action, or in the way of defense. Wheeler v. Washburn, 24 Vt. 298.

61. The postponing of the payment of a debt by agreement between the creditor and the principal debtor, without consideration, though without the knowledge of the surety, does not release the surety. A void agreement will not have the effect to release him. Joselyn v. Smith, 18 Vt. 353. Hogaboom v. Herrick, 4 Vt. 131.

62. A valid agreement between the creditor and principal debtor for an extension of the time of payment, without the assent of the surety, will release the surety, although he may be secured, or be promised indemnity by another who is also surety. Peake v. Dorwin, 25 Vt. 28. Wilson v. Wheeler, 29 Vt. 484.

63. Where one becomes surety for another at the request of the creditor and without the knowledge of the principal debtor, the creditor is, nevertheless, bound by all the rules respecting sureties, although the principal is not bound to the surety for the want of a privity of contract between them; and the surety will, in such case, as in other cases, be released by a valid agreement between the creditor and the principal to give further time of payment without the assent of the surety. Peake v. Dorwin.

64. Consideration for such agreement. The payment in advance of interest, or of usurious interest, or the payment of part of a debt, before it falls due, is a sufficient consideration to sustain an agreement with the principal to give further time of payment, such as to discharge a surety, when done without his consent. Austin v. Dorwin, 21 Vt. 88. Turrill v. Boynton, 23 Vt. 142. Whittle v. Skinner, 23 Vt. 531. Marshall v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 382. 31 Vt. 255. People's Bank v. Pearsons, 30 Vt. 711.

65. A simple executory agreement to pay usury is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise to delay the payment of a debt, and will not discharge a surety, although, after the expiration of the time agreed upon for delay, such usurious agreement may have been performed. Burgess v. Dewey, 33 Vt. 618.

66. A separate promissory note given for the usury is treated as such executory agreement. Smith v. Hyde, 36 Vt. 303.

67. Collateral security. The mere receipt of a collateral security payable at a future day, given to secure the payment of an antecedent debt, but not given for and on account of the original debt, does not imply an agreement to give time upon the original debt, so as to release a surety thereon (overruling, on this point, Atkinson v. Brooks, 26 Vt. 569, and Mich. St. Bank, v. Leavenworth, 28 Vt. 209). Austin v. Curtis, 31 Vt. 64. Redfield, C. J., dissenting. Ripley v. Greenleaf, 2 Vt. 129.

68. Reserving right to sue. A surety on a note is not discharged by a contract giving time to the principal, where there is a reservation of the right to call for payment, or of proceeding against the surety. Viele v. Hoag, 24 Vt. 46. Moree v. Huntington, 40 Vt. 488.

69. Statute. Under G. S. c. 80, s. 80, the discharge of one or more of the principal obligors discharges the debt, in the proportion that the number of principals discharged bears to the whole number of principals. The discharge of a surety does not discharge the principal, but, in an action against the other sureties, operates as a discharge of that portion of the debt which would belong to that surety to pay, as between him and the other sureties, according to the number of the sureties. Alford v. Baxter, 36 Vt. 158.

70. Reinstating debt. The liability of a surety, once discharged, cannot be reinstated by any reinstating of the debt against his principal, unless the surety assents thereto. Gibson v. Ritz, 32 Vt. 824.

71. Where one, at the request of the principal upon a note, pays it, or furnishes him money to pay it, this furnishes no right of action against the surety upon the note for the money so paid. Lapham v. Barnes, 2 Vt. 218. Rolfe v. Lamb, 16 Vt. 514.

72. One principal debtor cannot set up an agreement with the creditor to throw the debt upon a surety, or the bail of the surety, in any form; as, by claiming and enforcing a security of the creditor. Pierson v. Catlin, 8 Vt. 272.

2. As respects the principal.

73. How far alike chargeable. In an action against principal and surety upon a promissory note;—Held, that the admissions of the principal were evidence against the surety, although made when the principal was in fact insolvent, and although he had afterwards obtained his discharge in bankruptcy, and had pleaded it in the action. Brown v. Munger, 16 Vt. 12.

74. The admission of the principal upon a promissory note that it is due and unpaid, is evidence against the surety. Wilson v. Green, 25 Vt. 450. (Changed by G. S. c. 63, s. 23, as respects the statute of limitations.)

75. That a party swore out of jail on an execution, is evidence against him of his insolvency, and is equally evidence against his surety. Richardson v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 757.

76. The plaintiff's wife, with his consent, sold her land to A, and executed to him her sole deed, for which A gave her his promissory note, payable to her or bearer, with B as his surety, all the parties supposing that she had conveyed a good title. The wife died and all her estate passed to the plaintiff. A became insolvent and after the note had fallen due, discovered the defect in the deed, and, without the knowledge of B, applied to the plaintiff to perfect the title, which he did by giving his quit-claim deed to A. In an action upon the note;—Held, that this was a ratification of the contract of sale and of the security, and that neither A nor B could thereafter question the consideration of the note. Campbell v. Moulton, 30 Vt. 667.

77. A surety upon a guardian's bond, or one analogous, cannot become a party to the accounting of his principal, either in the original proceeding in the probate court, or by way of petition for revising such accounting and the judgment and orders of the court upon it. In re Scott's account, 36 Vt. 297.

78. Surety's right of retainer. A surety to whom his principal has given a counter security for his indemnity, is entitled to hold the same until he is fully indemnified, or relieved, though the original obligation may turn out to be usurious, unless the surety was privy to the usury. Spaulding v. Austin, 2 Vt. 555.

79. Where A conveyed to B real estate as security for having become surety for A's debts, and B had gone into possession;—Held, that the rents were not recoverable of B until he was discharged of his liability as surety. Sellick v. Munson, 2 Aik. 150.

80. Nor could A recover of B any balance, so long as B remained liable to be sued for A's debts, though B had promised A to pay them. S. C. 2 Vt. 13.

81. —and of indemnity. Where judgment by default had been rendered against A and B for a claim which, as between them, belonged to B to pay, and A had been compelled to pay a part thereof;—Held, that B was liable to A therefor, although the first suit might have been successfully defended. Forbes v. Webster, 2 Vt. 58.

82. A surety may recover of his principal the amount of the debt and costs paid for him, and all expenses incurred in good faith in litigating the claim. Douner v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467. Hulett v. Soullard, 26 Vt. 295.

83. The rule of full indemnity is not confined to cases of covenants for title and for quiet enjoyment, or indeed to covenants or contracts of indemnity against suits, loss or damage, but extends to all cases of suretyship, where the claim was in its nature disputable, or unliquidated; and has generally been extended to costs recovered against a surety, in all cases, and to costs incurred by the surety in making defense, where such defense was bona fide, and with reasonable probability of success. Redfield, C. J., in Duxbury v. Vt. Central R. Co., 26 Vt. 751.

84. In an action by a surety against his principal in a promissory note, to recover for money paid within six years before suit brought, in satisfying the note;—Held, that the statute of limitations was not a bar, although the money was paid more than six years after the note fell due, where the legal liability of the surety was in good faith all the while maintained—as, by giving security where the rights of the defendant were not prejudiced thereby—although this was done without the actual knowledge of the defendant; that the continued liability of the surety carried with it the relation of principal and surety, with the obligation to reimburse the surety. Norton v. Hall, 41 Vt. 471.

85. The plaintiff signed a note as surety for B and C. Before the note fell due B absconded. The plaintiff knowing that fact, but not disclosing it to C, called upon him and induced him to execute a second note to take up the first, agreeing to get B also to sign it. The plaintiff signed this last note and paid it at maturity. B did not sign it. Held, that by reason of the plaintiff's original suretyship he could recover of C the sum paid, although C was only a surety for B upon the first note. Warner v. Hall, 5 Vt. 158.

86. A principal and his surety were sued upon a disputed claim, and, pending the suit, the surety compromised, as to his own liability, by paying a certain sum which was to apply on the debt to that extent. Held, that the surety could recover that sum of the principal, the claim having passed into judgment against both, and the principal being entitled to application of the sum so paid. Bancroft v. Pearce, 27 Vt. 668.

87. The plaintiff and M, partners, agreed between themselves that M should pay the defendant for a yoke of oxen which they had purchased of him. M accordingly sent his note to the defendant in payment, but the defendant declined to accept it, and demanded and received payment of the plaintiff. The plaintiff and defendant at that time agreed that the defendant should hold M's note, and not let it be known that he had been paid for the oxen, and if M ever paid anything on the note the defendant would pay over to the plaintiff. M was then indebted to the plaintiff, and so remained. M afterwards paid $85, on the note, not knowing that the plaintiff had paid for the oxen. Held, that such agreement made the plaintiff the surety of M, and that, as such, he became entitled to the $85, paid upon the note, and that the defendant was liable to him therefor. Field v. Hamilton, 45 Vt. 35.

88. What is payment. If a surety in any way pays the debt of his principal, so as to extinguish it—as, by a set-off of his lands on execution—this is equivalent to the payment of money for the benefit of the principal and at his request, and a recovery can be had under the count for money paid. Hulett v. Soullard, 26 Vt. 295.

89. Joint principals. If one stands as surety for several joint principals, and one of them dies, the surety, having paid the debt, may claim a dividend from the estate of the deceased upon the whole debt, notwithstanding he may hold collateral security. The security being merely collateral, equity will not compel its application for the purpose of reducing the dividend, unless the debtor stands in the relation of a co-surety. West v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 408.

90. Joint sureties. If two joint sureties pay the debt of their principal out of their joint funds—as, where they give their joint note in payment of such debt—they can maintain a joint action for reimbursement against their principal (Whipple v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 65); or for contribution against their co-surety, and this, although another of their co-sureties signed the new note with them, but only as a surety for them. Prescott v. Newell, 39 Vt. 82.

91. It is essential to this end that the payment be made out of their joint means. Where each paid from his own individual resources, and in unequal sums;—Held, that a joint action would not lie, although it was understood between them, that they would stand together, and share and discharge the burden equally. Prescott v. Newell.

92. Surety a creditor. A surety, by virtue of the implied undertaking of the principal to indemnify him, acquires such an equity, that a subsequent payment by him will be referred to the original undertaking of suretyship, so as to make him a creditor as of that date to the extent of overriding any counter equities of a subsequent date. Barney v. Grover, 28 Vt. 391; and see Strong v. Mitchell, 19 Vt. 644. Beach v. Boynton, 26 Vt. 725.

93. The plaintiffs were liable as sureties for the defendant, partly as joint sureties and partly as sureties severally with others, though these obligations had not matured; and the defendant was indebted to the plaintiffs severally. The defendant gave the plaintiffs jointly his promissory note, covering but not exceeding these several amounts, upon which the plaintiffs brought suit and attached his property, which suit was defended by a subsequent attaching creditor. Held, (1), that the note was upon good consideration, the law implying an agreement of the sureties to apply the avails of the note to those debts, and an assumption of them to the extent of the note; (2), that the transaction might be regarded as a mode of making an assignment of personal property through the intervention of an attachment—and was valid. Haggood v. Polley, 35 Vt. 649.

94. Relief in equity. After a debt has become due, the surety may resort to chancery to compel the principal to exonerate him from all liability by the payment of the debt. Bishop v. Day, 18 Vt. 81.

95. The orator gave his note to S. The defendants afterwards gave the orator their bond, conditioned to pay the note to S and save the orator harmless therefrom. This they neglected, and S sued the orator upon the note and recovered judgment. Held, that by this arrangement the defendants had made the note their debt to pay, and, as between them and the orator, they stood as principals and the orator in the nature of a surety; and a decree was ordered for the orator, that the defendants pay the judgment. Ib.

96. Subrogation. In equity, a surety who pays a debt may be substituted to all the rights of the creditor which are collateral to the main contract, but cannot, as a general rule, be put in place of the creditor in the principal contract; for by payment, that is discharged. This cannot be done at law. Redfield, J., in Pierson v. Catlin, 18 Vt. 77.

8. As between the sureties.

97. Contribution. Where five sureties of an insolvent principal confessed a joint judgment, and four of them were committed on the execution and gave separate jail-bonds, and then procured the property of the fifth to be sold to satisfy the execution;—Held, that he could maintain a separate action against each of the four, and without demand, to recover the one-fifth part of the sum so paid by him. Poster v. Johnson, 5 Vt. 60.

98. The plaintiff, being co-surety with the defendant in a promissory note, took a lease from the principal containing no covenants on the lessor's part, and therein covenanted to pay the note. He was afterwards evicted by suit by the lessor's mortgagee under a paramount title, and at that time paid the note. In an action for contribution;—Held, that such eviction released him from his covenant to pay the note; that such payment must be presumed to have been made by reason of his original liability as surety; and that the defendant was liable for contribution. Prindle v. Page, 21 Vt. 94.

99. M, as principal, and A, F and P, as sureties, executed their promissory note payable to a third person for the purpose of raising money to pay a debt of M on which P was sole surety of M, and the note was delivered to P for him to get it discounted. Before getting the note discounted, and on the faith of it, P from his own funds paid the first debt. Held, that P was not afterwards bound to cancel or surrender to his co-sureties the note in question, but might use it for his indemnity. Flanagan v. Post, 45 Vt. 246.

100. Measure of damages. In an action for contribution, a surety may recover of a co-surety his proportionate share of the taxable costs paid by the former upon a judgment against him upon the contract, where such co-surety was equally in fault in not paying the debt without suit. Briggs v. Boyd, 37 Vt. 584.

101. So, he may recover the proportionate share of the expenses incurred in defending a suit upon the contract, where the defense was made under such circumstances as to be regarded reasonable, hopeful and prudent. Ib. 541. Marsh v. Harrington, 18 Vt. 150. Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 593; and see Hulett v. Souillard, 26 Vt. 295. Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467.

102. If a surety has no notice of a suit against his co-surety, he is not bound by the judgment rendered. Briggs v. Boyd, 37 Vt. 584.

103. Sharing securities. If one of two sureties receives property from the principal which he gives his co-surety to understand is security for their joint liability, and the co-surety relies upon this assurance, such surety cannot, even with the assent of the principal, afterwards apply the security to a separate liability, to the injury of his co-surety. Hinsdill v. Murray, 6 Vt. 186.

104. Persons subject to a common burden—as co-sureties—stand in their relation to each other upon a common ground of interest and of right, and whatever relief, by way of indemnity, is furnished to either by him for whom the burden is assumed, inures equally to the relief of all the common associates. Miller v. Sawyer, 30 Vt. 412. Hinsdill v. Murray, 6 Vt. 186. Whipple et al. v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 65.

105. And equity, in behalf of one surety, will follow such indemnity in the hands of the other, or in the hands of a third person where it can be done without injury to such person; and the surety receiving such indemnity cannot divert or appropriate it to his individual benefit. Hinsdill v. Murray. Whipple et al. v. Briggs.

106. Where one of several sureties takes from his principal a security for his own indemnity, this inures in equity to the benefit of all the sureties; and in a joint action by the sureties for money paid for the principal as such sureties, the sum realized from the security so given to one is applicable to the joint claim. Whipple et al. v. Briggs.

107. Where one was sole surety for another in some cases, and joint surety with others for the same party in other cases, and he received from his principal a security expressed to be "for his liability on notes and other matters";—Held, that the proceeds of such security, by the very fact of being received, became appropriated, by way of reimbursement, to the several claims paid by such surety, or by the joint sureties, in the order of time in which such payments had been made, the same as if the payment had been made by such surety alone. Whipple v. Briggs, 30 Vt. 111.

108. A security given by the principal to one of several, his joint sureties, inures to the benefit of all such sureties, like a payment, and cannot be controlled in its effect by the intent, or expressed purpose of the principal, that it shall go only for the benefit of one of the sureties. Fuller v. Hapgood, 39 Vt. 617.

109. Release. Where certain sureties released their principal "from all liabilities" to them resulting from their suretyship;—Held, that the effect was to discharge, both at law and in equity, all claim for contribution from their co-sureties; and this, although such release was executed before they had made any payment, and was given upon a nominal consideration, and only for the purpose of enabling the principal to become a witness in a suit against them as such sureties, and although the release was more broadly expressed than was necessary for that purpose, but not in ignorance of the facts. Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 581.

See JUDGMENT, 57 et seq.

PRIVATE WAY.

1. A right of way in the land of another cannot arise from mere necessity, independently of the implication of a grant or reservation of such right; as, in case of some former unity of ownership of the two parcels. Tracy v. Atherton, 35 Vt. 52.

2. If a right of way be appurtenant to close A upon close B, and both closes become united in the same person, the right of way, as well as all other subordinate rights and easements, is extinguished by the unity of possession. Plimpton v. Converse, 43 Vt. 717.

3. The owner of a tract of land conveyed to A a strip running through it, reserving to himself, his heirs and assigns, the right of a road across such strip to his quarry lot, which was part of the whole tract. He afterwards conveyed all his right, title and interest in the quarry lot to B. It appearing that such right of way was not necessary to B's enjoyment of the quarry lot;—Held, that it was not an appurtenance to the quarry lot, nor right in it, and did not pass by the deed of the lot to B. Smith v. Higbee, 12 Vt. 118.

4. A deed conveyed a house, and a right to a pass-way to the rear of the premises "so as to give room to pass of the width of a common cartway for all necessary and ordinary household purposes." The pass-way was then in existence, having a turn in it nearly at a right angle, and requiring (perhaps) at that point more room to turn than twelve feet, which was proved to be the width of an ordinary cartway. Held, that to effect the object of the grant, applying it to the subject matter, the way must be of such width as to be available, and capable of practical use for the purposes named, and was not limited to an absolute width of twelve feet. Walker v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 94.

5. Where a party grants a private way, he is not bound by implication to construct or keep in repair the way granted. Id.

6. A way must start from a fixed point and lie along a definite course to another fixed point; and, to acquire a right of way by adverse use, the party must have used the same within its defined limits, uninterruptedly, openly, notoriously, and adversely to the other party's rights and use, for fifteen years. Plimpton v. Converse, 44 Vt. 158.

7. Where an alley ran between several village lots, and the owner of a lot lying upon the alley claimed, by prescription and adverse use, a private right of way in the alley for access to his lot;—Held, that the fact that the proprietors of other lots upon the alley had so used it, could not be taken into the account in aid of his claim. Dodge v. Stacy, 39 Vt. 558.

8. Where one claimed, by long continued use, a right of way to his lot over an alley owned by another;—Held, that to maintain the right he must prove a continuous use for fifteen years under a claim of right, with the acquiescence of the owner of the alley; that the acts and declarations of such owner were evidence in his own favor, as well as against him, on these points, showing his understanding of the claim; and that such want of acquiescence could be indicated otherwise than by instituting legal proceedings against the use, or by placing any actual obstruction in the way, or actually preventing such use. Id.

9. All parties who create an obstruction to a private way by the ordinary occupation of premises, as well lessor, lessee, sub-lessee and assignee, are jointly liable for the obstruction. Rogers v. Stewart, 5 Vt. 215.

10. It is no defense to an action for obstructing the plaintiff's private way, that there were other obstructions not complained of; and the plaintiff may recover his full damages for the obstruction complained of, and this will be a bar to any other action for obstructing the same way during the same period. Id.

III. PROBATE BONDS; EMBEZZLEMENT.

I. JURISDICTION AND AUTHORITY.

I. Generally—Special cases.

1. Special and limited. The probate court is a court having special and limited jurisdiction, deriving all its authority from the statute; and where it exceeds the authority given it by law, its decrees are not erroneous merely, but a nullity and void; as, where the court assigned to a widow, as dower, the one-half in fee of the real estate. Hendrick v. Cleveland, 2 Vt. 329. 31 Vt. 673.

2. The probate court in the matter of appointing guardian for insane persons, spendthrifts, &c., in cases not connected with the settlement of estates, is a court of special and limited jurisdiction; and in setting up the appointment in such cases, the pleading must state such facts as show that the court had jurisdiction to make the appointment. Holden v. Scanlin, 30 Vt. 177.

3. Exclusive in the first instance. Courts of probate in Vermont have the entire and exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of estates, to the same extent that the jurisdiction of other matters of contract or tort, inter vivos, is given to the common law courts. Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50. Boyden v. Ward, 38 Vt. 628.

4. The probate court has exclusive jurisdiction, in the first instance, of the settlement of the accounts of executors and administrators. Probate Court v. Slason, 23 Vt. 306. Probate Court v. Vanduzer, 13 Vt. 135. Bank of Orange Co. v. Kidder, 20 Vt. 519. Probate Court v. Chapin, 31 Vt. 373. 38 Vt. 638. 42 Vt. 328.

5. So, as to the settlement of a guardian's account. Probate Court v. Slason.

6. Partition among devisees, &c. By the probate act of 1821, the probate court was the proper court to order partition among devisees and not the supreme court, as under previous statutes, although the testator died in 1793. It was competent for the legislature to change the tribunal, or mode of remedy, not thereby affecting the right. Bull v. Nichols, 15 Vt. 329.

7. Under this act, although not so specially provided, it was no objection to the jurisdiction of the probate court to make partition among heirs, or devisees, that some of them had alienated their interests before the commission was applied for. The practice was, in such case, to make the partition directly among the heirs or devisees, leaving the shares so set out, subject to the effect of the alienation. Id.

8. The probate court has no jurisdiction to make partition of lands where an estate is no longer in course of administration, and none of the original heirs retain their interest in the land. Cox v. Ingleston, 30 Vt. 258.

9. The jurisdiction of the probate court in the settlement of the estates of deceased persons exists and continues so long as there is any occasion for its exercise, and until there has been a full and complete settlement and distribution of the estate; as, to determine who are entitled under the provisions of any will, and to what they are entitled; also, who are the heirs at law, and the proportion to which they are respectively entitled. Keeler v. Keeler, 39 Vt. 550. See McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165. Chamberlin v. Chamberlin, 16 Vt. 532.

10. A testator devised lands to his daughter for her life, and after her decease "to my male heirs at law who may then live in South Hero." After the death of the daughter, the executor brought his petition to the probate court for a distribution of this part of the estate, according to the will. All the debts had been paid, and all other parts of the estate had been divided and passed over by the executor during the life of the daughter to the parties entitled under the will. Held, that this land was to be treated as part of the estate in the hands of the executor undistributed; and as it could not be determined, until the death of the daughter, who were the parties entitled to take under the will, the probate court had jurisdiction to determine this question, and to make distribution accordingly. Keeler v. Keeler.

11. Power to imprison. The probate court has no authority under G. S. c. 48, ss. 14, 15, or otherwise, to enforce by imprisonment a final decree for the mere payment of money; as, that an administrator shall pay over to his successor the balance found due from him on the settlement of his account. Such a warrant of imprisonment was held void, and the party imprisoned was discharged on habeas corpus. In re Bingham, 32 Vt. 329.

12. Equitable powers. The probate court necessarily possesses a portion of equitable powers. So far, at least, as the right of judging extends, it is not confined to the technical rules of common law in opposition to established chancery principles. Robinson v. Swift, 3 Vt. 283.

13. Supreme court. Since the revised statutes (1840), the supreme court has no general jurisdiction in probate matters to re-hear and determine them upon their merits, but sits merely as a court of error, the same as in cases at common law. Holmes v. Holmes, 26 Vt. 586. Boyden v. Ward, 38 Vt. 628.

As to the auxiliary jurisdiction of Chancery, see CHANCERY, I., 8.

2. To correct its decrees.

14. In general. The court of probate, on petition for that purpose, may correct errors, irregularities and mistakes in former decrees, after any lapse of time short of twenty years. Smith v. Rix, 9 Vt. 240.

15. The probate court has power to re-open and revise a former decree, so far as to charge an administrator with advancements and assets not mentioned in the decree; and has power, and it is its duty, upon proof of fraud, accident or mistake, in the adjustment of any items in a former account, to alter and correct it in such manner as to make it what it ought to have been. Adams v. Adams, 31 Vt. 162. 24 Vt. 407.

16. It is now considered that the probate court, so long as the matter is pending either in that court, or in the common law courts, on the administrator's bond, has full power to re-examine any of its former decrees in the premises, and to correct all errors, irregularities and mistakes; and, possibly, this power of re-examination extends even beyond this. Redfield, J., in French v. Winsor, 24 Vt. 407, citing Rix v. Smith, 8 Vt. 365. S. C., 9 Vt. 240. Adams v. Adams, 21 Vt. 162. But see infra.

17. Qualification. The opening and modifying of former decrees of the probate court, so far as sanctioned by the supreme court, were all cases of decrees upon the settlement of administrator's accounts. They are based upon very questionable grounds of policy, and ought not to be extended beyond similar cases in all respects. Redfield, C. J., in Stone v. Peaseley, 28 Vt. 716.

18. Limitation. A decree of distribution of an estate when once executed, vests the property, and puts it out of the control and appropriate jurisdiction of the probate court; and quære, whether it is susceptible of modification thereafter. Id.

19. A decree of distribution of real estate exclusively to the heirs of full blood, not noticing those of the half blood who were equally entitled, was held not susceptible of modification, on petition of the excluded heirs, after possession had been taken by the others under the decree, so as to effect a new distribution. Anon. Cited by Redfield, C. J., in Stone v. Peaseley, 28 Vt. 720.

3. Conclusiveness of decrees.

20. In general—Presumption. A decree of the probate court acting within the sphere of its jurisdiction, not appealed from, is conclusive upon those to whom the right of appeal is given; and where it has jurisdiction of the subject matter, the previous proceedings must be presumed to have been regular. Collard v. Crane, Brayt. 18. 15 Vt. 348. Judge of Probate v. Fillmore, 1 D. Chip. 420. Lawrence v. Englesby, 24 Vt. 42.

21. Decrees of the probate court will be presumed to have been made upon proper notice and formal proceedings, although such previous proceedings do not appear of record. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

22. To what extent conclusive. A decree of the probate court is conclusive as to all matters which appear from the records to have been adjudicated upon, and binds that court itself, until by some proper application its action is called directly to annulling or correcting its decree. But such decree is not necessarily conclusive as to the result, or ultimate balance, of an accounting, but only of the items adjudicated. Rix v. Smith, 8 Vt. 365.

23. Instances. An administrator settled his account in 1820. In 1882 he settled a subsequently accruing account, from which last settlement and decree an appeal was taken. Held, that the correctness of the first decree was not involved, and it could not be overhauled in this proceeding. Id.

24. In an action upon a probate bond for the default of an executor in not having rendered a true account and fully administered;—Held, that nothing which had been passed upon and decided by the probate court on the settlement of his account could be contested, nor could such settlement be impeached as fraudulent, where the parties in interest had been notified; but that the settlement was not conclusive as to property received by the executor and belonging to the estate, for which he neglected, either through accident or design, to render an account. Probate Court v. Merriam, 8 Vt. 284.

25. Probate proceedings and the adjudications of probate courts are in rem, and bind all the world; but an adjudication is only conclusive upon matters directly passed upon by the court; not upon a matter which is only collaterally in issue. Thus, in the settlement of an executor's or administrator's account, the decree as to the proper distribution of the estate, is conclusive; but where the payment of legacies, or debts, is credited to his account, the legatees and creditors are not concluded as to the fact of payment. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41. Probate Court v. Vanduser, 13 Vt. 185.

26. The jurisdiction of granting administration, assumed and exercised by the probate court, cannot be collaterally attacked. Driggs v. Abbott, 27 Vt. 580. Abbott v. Coburn, 28 Vt. 663.

27. An order of the probate court, not appealed from, assigning to the widow a certain sum for her support, which was paid by the administrator in his administration account, was held, on settlement of his account, to be conclusive, and not open to inquiry as to its reasonableness. Richardson v. Merrill, 82 Vt. 27.

28. A final decree of the probate court in the distribution of an estate is conclusive, both at law and in equity. Robinson v. Swift, 8 Vt. 283.

29. The final allowance of an administrator's account, in which he is credited for the payment of the debts, is equivalent to a decree of distribution to that extent, and is conclusive. It cannot be impeached collaterally, by alleging fraud even. The decree can be corrected only by application to that court to re-examine the account. Probate Court v. Vanduser, 18 Vt. 135.

30. Decree of distribution—Notice. In order to bind parties interested in the distribution of an estate by proceedings in the probate court ordering such distribution, or changing a former order of distribution, notice, actual or constructive, must be given. Stone v. Peasley, 28 Vt. 716.

31. Where division was ordered by the probate court of the lands of an estate held in common with a third person, under Slade's Stat. c. 44, s. 84 (see G. S. c. 57, ss. 7-14), and the committee gave him notice of their proceeding to make division, and they made division and their report was accepted by the court, and no appeal was taken;—Held, that he should be considered as having waived the want of notice required by the statute to be given before the issuing of the order of partition, and that he was bound by the decree,—the court holding, nevertheless, that this requirement of the statute was not merely directory. Corliss v. Corliss, 8 Vt. 373. (Wrongly stated in 9 Vt. 77 and 21 Vt. 113.) 35 Vt. 631.

32. Effect. A decree of the probate court, unappealed from, assigning the real estate to the devisees, or heirs, divests the executor or administrator of all title therein. Stone v. Griffin, 8 Vt. 400. Tryon v. Tryon, 16 Vt. 318.

33. A decree by the probate court of partition between heirs and devisees is conclusive as to the mode and matter of the division, but concludes nothing as to title. The question of estate and title is assumed—the court having no jurisdiction to determine that. If none exists, the proceeding goes for nothing. Hence, after and notwithstanding partition, an heir or devisee may set up paramount title in himself to the part set to the others. Gries v. Randall, 23 Vt. 239.

II. SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES.

1. By the heirs.

34. Without administration. It is competent for all the heirs to an estate, if of age, to settle and pay the debts of the estate and divide the property among themselves, without any administration; and neither creditors nor debtors of the estate have a right to complain of this. Taylor v. Phillips, 30 Vt. 238. Babbitt v. Bowen, 32 Vt. 437.

35. Where the defendant, in settlement of his debt to an estate, gave his note therefor to the person primarily entitled to administration;—Held, that the appointment of such person administrator after the commencement of the suit and before trial, and his ratification of the settlement, removed all ground of defense to the note for want of authority in the payee, if any such defense existed before; and, semble, that without such appointment, and where the settlement of the estate had been assumed by all the heirs, such defense would not prevail where the circumstances of the estate were such that there could be no reasonable apprehension that the settlement would be called in question. Taylor v. Phillips.

36. Direct descent to heir. An heir of an intestate has, immediately on the death of his ancestor, a vested interest in the estates which he may convey by deed or which may be attached or taken on execution. Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280. Hubbard v. Ricart, 3 Vt. 207. Austin v. Bailey, 37 Vt. 219.

37. Lien of administrator. But his grantee holds, as the heir did, subject to the administrator's lien, for payment of debts, if any. Austin v. Bailey.

38. Statute of 1821. One son who, by a family arrangement, remained in possession of the real estate after his father's decease, without administration granted or division made by the probate court among the heirs, or conveyance by them, was held prohibited by s. 68 of the probate act of 1821 from bringing ejectment. Boardman v. Bartlett, 6 Vt. 631. Modified by R. S. c. 48, s. 11. (G. S. c. 52, s. 14.) See Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484.

39. Presumptive discharge of lien. The statute requiring an assignment by the probate court of lands among heirs and devisees before they can maintain trespass or ejectment (Slade's stat. p. 346. s. 63), applies only in cases where there must at some time be a division, and where the administrator has a lien upon the lands for the payment of debts. Such lien will be presumed satisfied after a lapse of time. Hubbard v. Ricart, 3 Vt. 207. Abbott v. Pratt, 16 Vt. 626. Cushman v. Jordan, 13 Vt. 597.

40. Such presumption was allowed in behalf of one heir to whom the others had conveyed, after two years from the death of the intestate (Hubbard v. Ricart); as, against an administrator in his suit against a grantee of some of the heirs, after 60 years (Cushman v. Jordan); in favor of a grantee of a devisee against a stranger, after seven years (Abbott v. Pratt); in favor of the grantee of an heir in possession after nine years (Austin v. Bailey, 87 Vt. 219). After 30 years, the heirs being in possession, the probate court has no authority to make partition. Cox v. Ingleston, 30 Vt. 258. Fifteen years is an absolute statute bar against claims. Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 319.

2. By regular administration.

41. Representation of insolvency. The property of a deceased person is not subject to be taken in execution, though attached on the original writ, where the estate is represented insolvent. Such representation has relation back to the time of the death. Smith v. Holmes, Brayt. 188. (Note. All estates are now settled as insolvent estates, without representation of insolvency.)

(a.) Commissioners of claims—Proceedings and effect.

42. Presentation—Absolute claims. All absolute claims against an estate represented insolvent, whether due or to fall due, must be presented to the commissioners for allowance, or they will be barred; and such claims payable in future are to be allowed at their then present value. Atherton v. Flagg, 2 D. Chip. 61.

43. Contingent claim. Before R. S. (1840), claims against the estate of a decedent were to be settled as they existed on the day of the decease, and contingent claims could not be allowed by the commissioners; as, an annuity to fall due in future, dependent upon the life of the annuitant. Blackmer v. Blackmer, 5 Vt. 355.

44. A claim contingent and uncertain cannot be allowed by the commissioners, and hence is not barred by not presenting it, but may be prosecuted, where it becomes absolute, against the administrator or heirs, having assets. Lowry v. Stevens, 6 Vt. 118. Brayt. 118. Jones v. Cooper, 2 Aik. 54. (Since changed by statute.)

45. What is. A contingent claim, under G. S. c. 58, is where the liability depends upon some future event which may or may not happen, and therefore makes it now wholly uncertain whether there ever will be a liability. Poland, C. J., in Sargent v. Kimball, 87 Vt. 321.

46. Held, that the bond of an administrator is not a contingent claim to be allowed as such against his estate, the breach being the non-payment of debts under an order of distribution. This is an absolute claim. Id. 320. See Sherman v. Abell, 46 Vt. 547.

47. So, also, the bond of a guardian, a breach being claimed. Waterman v. Wright, 36 Vt. 164.

48. A claim in behalf of a surety against the estate of a deceased person, contingent at the time of such decease but become absolute by payment by the surety before presentment for allowance, must be presented to the commissioners for allowance as an absolute debt, and not to the probate court for allowance as a contingent claim. (G. S. c. 58, s. 45.) Lytle v. Bond, 89 Vt. 388.

49. A libel for divorce was continued at a term of the supreme court, and a decree for temporary alimony and to maintain the litigation was made, to be paid in installments. Before any payment became due the libellee deceased. Held, that this claim could not be allowed as a debt against his estate. Nary v. Braley, 41 Vt. 180.

50. Claims in behalf of estate. Commissioners have no jurisdiction of claims in behalf of an estate, except as offsets to adversary claims; and if such claims are abandoned by the claimant before final judgment, the offset cannot become the basis of a separate judgment. Allen v. Rice, 22 Vt. 338.

51. Equitable claims. Commissioners have no jurisdiction to adjust and allow claims of a purely equitable character. Brown v. Sumner, 31 Vt. 671. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41. Herrick v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 674.

52. Hence, such are not barred by a neglect to present them. Id.

53. Limitation of inquiry. The jurisdiction of commissioners of claims against the estate of a deceased person extends only to the determination of the validity of the claims. They have nothing to do with the assets, nor their distribution, nor with any question arising out of the solvency, or insolvency, of the estate. University of Vt., &c., v. Baxter, 43 Vt. 645.

54. Claims not presented, barred. Claims in esse against the estate of a deceased person, not presented to the commissioners, are forever barred, whether the creditor resides within the jurisdiction, or not; nor can chancery grant relief from the statute bar. McCollum v. Hinckley, 9 Vt. 148. Burgess v. Gates, 20 Vt. 326. 41 Vt. 130-1.

55. In order to bar a claim against an estate because not presented to the commissioners, it must appear that the commissioners appointed times and places of meeting to examine claims and gave due notice thereof, as the statute prescribes. Roberts v. Burton, 27 Vt. 396.

56. A claim against the estate of a deceased person, not presented to the commissioners, cannot be allowed as a set-off under G. S. c. 53, s. 17, in a suit brought by the administrator, unless such suit is brought before the commissioners have acted; but such claim, by section 14, is barred. Ewing v. Grincolt, 48 Vt. 400. Soule v. Benton, 44 Vt. 309.

57. In an action on an administrator's bond for non-payment of a claim allowed by the commissioners;—Held, that a claim in favor of the estate, not presented for allowance and adjudicated, could not be set off. Probate Court v. Gale, 47 Vt. 473.

58. Report. Commissioners of an estate certified a claim presented to be just, but did not ascertain the amount due. Held, not a legal allowance. Lowry v. Stevens, 6 Vt. 113.

59. Where there were three commissioners of claims, and only two acted in a particular case, the third not having reasonable notice of the meeting and not acting, the probate court rejected the report of the two. Held correct. Hodges v. Thacher, 23 Vt. 455.

60. Semble, a judgment rendered against an estate on appeal from the probate court, and certified back, may be treated as a claim allowed, and need not go before the commissioners. Waterman v. Wright, 36 Vt. 164.

61. Statute exception. G. S. c. 53, s. 57, providing that if the appointment of commissioners to allow claims shall be omitted, a creditor of the deceased shall not thereby be prevented from prosecuting his claim against the administrator, &c., does not authorize the prosecution of a claim barred by proceedings in the probate court, nor one against the executor or administrator who has fully administered, nor against the heirs, devisees or legatees who have received no part of the estate. Boyden v. Ward, 38 Vt. 628.

62. The adjudication conclusive. Claims allowed by the commissioners, when reported and approved by the probate court, are treated as judgment debts, and as merged therein. In an action on such allowance, the merits of the original claim cannot be inquired into, nor does the six years provision of the statute of limitations apply. Doolittle v. Hunsden, Brat. 41. Atherton v. Flagg, 2 D. Chip. 61. Lowry v. Stevens, 6 Vt. 113.

63. The decision of commissioners of claims does not become an adjudication, in contemplation of law, until their report has been returned to the probate court, and has been accepted and recorded as such; and until such record made, the probate court has a judicial discretion to inquire as to the genuineness, identity and regularity of the report, and to accept, reject or re-commit it; and this discretion is not limited to matters apparent upon the report. Hodges v. Thacher, 23 Vt. 455. 32 Vt. 739. 33 Vt. 559.

64. The surety of an administrator having deceased, his bond was presented to the commissioners and was allowed for the amount of the default of his principal. Held, that the judgment of the probate court thereon, not appealed from, was conclusive. Sherman v. Abell, 46 Vt. 547. See 37 Vt. 320.

65. A commissioner's report signed by but one commissioner, the other having deceased, was returned to the probate court, and the court, on consideration of the subject, found that the requirements of the law had in all respects been complied with by the commissioners, and therefore accepted the report and ordered it recorded. No appeal was taken from this order, nor from the allowance of any claim. Afterwards the administrator presented for allowance his account, in which he credited himself the whole amount of the claims so allowed, which account was allowed as presented, and was recorded, and no appeal was taken. The administrator paid all the claims so allowed, except the plaintiff's, and refused to pay that because only one commissioner signed the report. Held, that the objection came too late, and that it was foreclosed by the adjudication accepting the report, not appealed from. Whitcomb v. Hutchinson, 43 Vt. 310.

66. The plaintiff's intestate and the defendant entered into a joint enterprise of buying sheep, &c., on commission for one R, such commissions to be equally divided, and that the intestate's share should be applied on his debt due to a firm of which the defendant was a member. The whole commissions were received and detained by the defendant. Said firm presented to the commissioners their claim against the estate of the intestate, giving no credit for such commissions, and the claim was allowed in full. In an action of account by the plaintiff as administrator;—Held, that such proceedings before the commissioners were a waiver of the defendant's right to insist on that agreement as a defense to this action. Newell v. Humphrey, 37 Vt. 265.

67. Void allowance. The allowance of a claim by commissioners after the expiration of their commission, is wholly nugatory as a judgment. Probate Court v. Gale, 47 Vt. 473.

68. As to claims. A debtor domiciled in New Hampshire there deceased, and his estate there was there administered. The plaintiff, a creditor there resident, failed to present his claim there for allowance, whereby, by the law of New Hampshire, as held (Mattocks, J., dissenting), such claim became "forever barred," and extinguished. Held, that he was not entitled thereafter to have such claim allowed by commissioners in this State, under an administration here granted. Hunt v. Fay, 7 Vt. 170. 9 Vt. 146. 17 Vt. 321. 20 Vt. 280.

69. Where the principal administration is in another State, and an ancillary administration in this, it is only creditors resident in this State who are entitled to have their claims allowed here. Churchill v. Boyden, 17 Vt. 819. Hunt v. Fay. (Changed by G. S. c. 53, ss. 36, 37.)

70. In cases of ancillary administration upon the estate in this State of one who died domiciled elsewhere, foreign creditors may prove their debts here, and share pro rata with the domestic creditors in the distribution, unless it appear that the deceased left property out of this State. The proviso to G. S. c. 53, s. 37, does not apply to such case. Prentiss v. Van Ness, 31 Vt. 95. Barrett, J., dissenting.

71. Where the principal administration is taken in another State, but administration is also taken in this State, the rights of parties living in this State to present and pursue their claims to allowance and satisfaction in our probate court, are the same as if the administration was only in this State; and held, that, in such case, the statute of limitations does not run between the death of the intestate and the appointment of the administrator in this State, according to G. S. c. 63, s. 16. Hicks v. Clark, 41 Vt. 188.

72. Place and mode of settlement. In case of an ancillary administration in this State, the probate court here has jurisdiction to require a settlement of the account of the administration in this State, although proceedings to this end have been previously commenced against the administrator, and are pending, in the State of principal administration. Jennison v. Haggood, 2 Aik. 31.

73. In case of a secondary administration, all expenses not incident thereto, and all estate not there received, should be adjusted in the court of principal administration. Haggood v. Jennison, 2 Vt. 294. 6 Vt. 275.

74. Where a principal administration is granted in another State, and an ancillary administration in this State, it appertains to the authority of our courts to settle and adjust the accounts of the administrator for effects received in this State; and it is discretionary with them to order distribution here, or to remit the effects to the place of the principal administration for that purpose. Although the latter is the usual course, still it will not be adopted where the rights of those entitled to the estate would be endangered by it. Porter v. Heydock, 6 Vt. 374. 17 Vt. 322.

75. Barrett, J.: Ordinarily, as matter of law, it is the duty of the probate court having in hand the ancillary administration, to remit the assets within its jurisdiction, not needed for debts and legacies within the State, to the principal administration for distribution. It is competent for the probate court so to do, and unless, in the particular case, it be made to appear that loss or injustice will likely be suffered by parties not living within this State by so doing, the law requires that it should be so done. Probate Court v. Kimball, 42 Vt. 323.

76. Where the probate court, in case of an ancillary administration in this State, ordered the administrator to pay over to the administrator in the State of principal administration the balance found due in his hands;—Held, that a creditor of the estate in the State of principal administration, who had there proved his debt, had no such interest as entitled him to become prosecutor in an action on the probate bond. Probate Court v. Brainard, 48 Vt. 620.

(c.) Sale of real estate.

77. The probate court may order the sale of real estate to pay the debts of an estate, when enough appears on the record to show the necessity of a sale, although before a settlement of the administrator's account. Maack v. Sinolear, 10 Vt. 103.

78. A fell heir to one undivided third of the real estate of a decedent, after which B, a creditor of A, levied his execution upon such share. A then was appointed administrator of the decedent's estate, and procured a license from the probate court to sell the real estate of the decedent for the benefit of the heirs, without representation that the real estate was needed for the payment of the debts, and it was not needed nor was resorted to for such purpose. A sold the real estate in pursuance of the order, and received pay for the same. Held, that the sale of A's share in the land, not being for the purposes of administration, but upon his own application and consent as an heir, was substantially his own act, and that the land after the sale remained, as before, subject to the levy; and that, as B's rights were not prejudiced by the sale, he had no such interest in the avails of the sale as entitled him to be heard on the question of their distribution by the probate court. Swift v. Kennison, 39 Vt. 473.

79. By statute, the personal estate of the deceased is first made chargeable with the payment of debts and expenses of administration, and the heir has nothing therein except his right in the surplus. Until such personalty is exhausted, the purchaser of the heir's interest in the real estate cannot be compelled to contribute to the payment of the ancestor's debts. Sherman v. Abell, 46 Vt. 547.

(d.) Assignment to widow.

80. The probate court assigned to a widow such portion of the personal estate of her late husband, to be selected by her from the inventory at the prices named in the inventory, as would amount to the sum of $350. Held, that the decree was not illegal by reason of according this selection to the widow. Phelps v. Phelps, 16 Vt. 78. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

81. Under G. S. c. 51, s. 1, part 2, a widow is entitled to a reasonable allowance from the estate of her deceased husband for her maintenance during the settlement of the estate, although she has no children, and has other sufficient means of subsistence. The amount of the allowance only is left to the discretion of the probate court. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 245.

82. It is not indispensable, nor usual, that an allowance to a widow and children should be made by the probate court in advance of the expenditure. If made by the administrator, a reasonable sum therefor may be afterwards allowed in his account. Id.

83. To entitle the widow of a person who left no issue, to the shares given her under G. S. c. 56, s. 1, and the 6th clause of c. 51, s. 1 (i. e., $1000, and one-half the residue of the estate), it is not necessary that she should waive the provisions of the law in her behalf under c. 55, s. 6; nor is her right to such shares affected by the first provision of c. 51, s. 1, unless, at her option, she claims an assignment under it. Such shares pass to her by descent, and not by appointment of law. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 249.

84. Held, that of the articles left by a deceased officer of the U. S. Navy, the following passed to his widow under the term "wearing apparel of the deceased," viz.: a bosom pin and epaulets; but that the following did not pass, viz.: a regulation sword and belt, a finger ring, a watch and its chain, cord and seals, although these articles were usually worn by the deceased. (Redfield, C. J., dissenting as to these last, except as to the watch and its appendages.) Id.

85. Independent of G. S. c. 51, s. 1, the right of a widow to one-third of her intestate husband's estate is absolute, and vests in her subject to the charges of debts, funeral charges and expenses of administration, on the instant of her husband's decease. It is governed by the same rules as is the share which passes by law to the heir. It is her share; vests in her by law; does not depend upon the discretion of the probate court. Johnson v. Johnson, 41 Vt. 467. Thayer v. Thayer, 14 Vt. 120. Holmes v. Bridgman, 37 Vt. 38. Frost v. Frost, 40 Vt. 625.

86. This statute, directing an assignment by the probate court of not less than one-third, does not alter or prejudice this right, but confers a discretionary power to assign more than the one-third. As to such excess, the right is personal to the widow herself, and if she dies before action upon it by the probate court, the right dies with her and does not pass to her representative. Johnson v. Johnson.

87. Under the 4th subdivision of s. 1, c. 51, of G. S., providing that the probate court may assign the whole estate to the use of the widow, &c., if it does not exceed $300;—Held, that this is not imperative, but is left to the discretion of the probate court. Frost v. Frost, 40 Vt. 625.

See DOWER.

(a.) Division and distribution.

88. Advancement, what. Held, by a majority, that the expenses of a college education might be treated as an advancement, if the father thought proper so to charge it. Robinson v. Robinson, Brayt. 59.

89. Receipt not a bar. A receipt executed by a son to his father for a certain sum, expressed to be in full of his share in his father's estate, was held not to bar him as heir, but was only evidence of an advancement to that amount. Id. 3 Vt. 283. Approved in matter of Kettell's estate, Franklin Co., Jany. T. 1877.

90. How evidenced. No particular form of words is required to be used in a charge of advancement. An entry on the books of the intestate of property delivered to a child, made in such manner as to exclude the idea of a debt, is evidence that it was intended as an advancement; as, where the entry of a father was upon a book other than the one on which he charged his accounts of debt and credit, of "property delivered" to such child. Brown v. Brown, 16 Vt. 197.

91. And it was so held, under special circumstances, where the articles were charged under the head of "Dr." Weatherhead v. Field, 26 Vt. 665.

92. The statute prescribes the evidence of an advancement;—as where, in the gift or grant, it is expressed to be in advancement or for the consideration of love and affection; or where the estate is charged as such by the deceased in writing. In either case, the intent is to be gathered from the face of the papers, and parol testimony is not admissible; as, the declarations of the intestate. Id.

93. A deed of lands for a pecuniary consideration expressed, cannot be made an advancement by showing that it was in fact executed upon the consideration of love and affection. Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50. Newell v. Newell, 18 Vt. 24. 26 Vt. 665.

94. Changed to gift. An advancement may be converted into an absolute gift by the intestate, by surrendering the evidence thereof to be cancelled. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 47 Vt. 687.

95. Excess of advancement. Any excess of advancement to a child and heir above his share of the estate on a first distribution, should be carried forward and taken into account on a subsequent distribution. French v. French, 46 Vt. 357.

96. On a division of an estate between heirs, the probate court ascertained the amount of advancements, which was stated in the warrant of the commissioners. As to one of the heirs, that amount exceeded the value of his share, so that he took nothing on that division, and the commissioners so reported, but also undertook to report the amount of such excess, making it larger than it was. On a subsequent division of the reversion of the widow's dower;—Held, that the report was not binding in this respect, and that such excess should be reckoned at the true sum. Id.

97. Rules of descent and distribution. Under sec. 81 of the probate act of 1797 (1 Tol. St. 182), the estate, personal as well as real, of one dying intestate and without issue, passed to his brothers and sisters surviving, equally to those of each class, but so that a brother took a share double that of a sister. Auger v. Taylor, 2 Tyl. 260.

98. Under the statutes of inheritance and distribution, brothers and sisters of half blood are entitled as next of kin. Brown v. Brown, 1 D. Chip. 360.

99. By our statutes, no distinction whatever is made, in the descent or distribution of estates, in consequence of the manner in which the property was obtained, whether by purchase or inheritance; and kindred of the half blood, whether through a common father, or a common mother, inherit equally with those of the whole blood, in the same degree. Hatch v. Hatch, 21 Vt. 450.

100. Where one died leaving no widow, issue, father, mother, brother, or sister, living, but leaving surviving him children of his deceased brothers and sisters, and also grandchildren of deceased brothers and sisters, the parents of such grandchildren being dead;—Held, that the case came within the 4th and not the 5th rule of descents of G. S. c. 56, s. 1, and such grandchildren were held not entitled to share in the estate. Id.

101. S died intestate, Feby. 18, 1864, leaving no kindred in the direct line, either ascending or descending. There survived him one sister and several nephews and nieces, children of two other sisters who had died in his lifetime, and also several grandchildren of these deceased sisters, among whom were the appellants, the only children of a daughter of one of these deceased sisters. The mother of the appellants survived her mother, but died in the lifetime of S. Held, that under the 4th canon of descent (G. S. c. 56, s. 1), the appellants were the legal representatives of their deceased grandmother, the sister of the intestate, and were entitled to inherit, in the distribution of the estate, the share which their mother would have received if she had survived the intestate. Gaines v. Strong, 40 Vt. 354.

102. At common law, there was no restriction or limitation upon representation in the collateral line, when called or admitted to the succession, but it ran on ad infinitum, as in the direct line. Kellogg, J. Id.

103. Representation and heirship, though they may produce the same result, are not the same thing; and one need not be the heir of another in order to be his representative. Heirship is the result, while representation is but a process through which that result is produced. Representation is not predicated of the person dying seized, but of the next line of takers from him; and they are the representatives of a deceased person, who would have inherited from him, if he had died seized of the estate at the time when the descent was cast. Id.

104. Special act. Under a special act of the legislature, A was made heir-at-law of S "in as full and perfect a manner as if she had been the daughter of S, born in lawful wedlock." S died, and afterwards M, a brother of S, died, from whom S would have inherited if S had survived him. Held, that the act did not make A an heir-at-law of M, and that A could not, by representation through S, share in the estate of M, as a lineal descendant of S might. Moore v. Moore, 35 Vt. 98; and see Bacon v. McBride, 32 Vt. 585.

105. Mode of distribution. Decree of distribution reversed for six causes named, viz.: For not ascertaining and declaring: (1), who were entitled as heirs; (2), the advancements and value; (3), what lands were held in common, or jointly—with whom and in what proportions; (4), the land by the committee to be divided; (5), the shares and proportions and value to be set to each person entitled; and (6), for want of proper notice before the order to the several persons interested. In re Robinson's estate, 1 D. Chip. 357.

106. A division of an estate made by a committee which was accepted and recorded by the probate judge, was long acquiesced in, and recently recognized, though quite informal and such as would have been set aside on appeal, was held sufficient on a plea that there was no record of such division. Nichols v. Bates, 6 Vt. 308.

107. Partition. In making partition among heirs or devisees under the probate act of 1821, the land was to be appraised at its then present value, and division made accordingly, without allowing for betterments made by one of the share owners while the land was held in common. Bull v. Nichols, 15 Vt. 329.

108. Where a certain number of acres off the north side of a certain lot of land, without other designation, was devised to one person, and the residue of the lot to another, and one of the devisees died before any division in fact made;—Held, that it was a proper case for the appointment of a committee by the probate court to set off and divide the land; and that in making such division the terms of the devise should be followed, without regarding a previous agreement of the parties which had not matured into a right by lapse of time. Chamberlin v. Chamberlin, 16 Vt. 532.

109. In an action on a bond given on an appeal by the defendant, claiming under a dowress from the appointment by the probate court of commissioners to make partition of lands among heirs after the death of the dowress, where such appeal delayed the partition;—Held, that rents and profits, accruing after the appeal taken, were not recoverable as "intervening damages," named in the condition of the land; that the heirs were entitled to possession immediately on the death of the dowress, and could have recovered the rents and profits in ejectment without partition, and so their remedy therefor was not impaired nor suspended by the appeal. Stockwell v. Sargent, 37 Vt. 16.

III. PROBATE BONDS; EMBEZZLEMENT.

110. Probate bond. G. S. c. 59, s. 2, providing that the bond of a trustee appointed in any will may be sued whenever the court of chancery upon proper application shall so order, is not exclusive, but a like power is vested in the probate court under G. S. c. 60, s. 2. Robinson v. Stanley, 38 Vt. 570.

111. The probate court cannot, per se, move in the prosecution of a probate bond. The prosecutor is the real plaintiff; and he must be one who bears such relation to the breaches complained of as to be injured thereby; and his right to prosecute must so appear in the declaration. Probate Court v. Brainard, 48 Vt. 620.

112. Embezzlement. Where the property claimed by an estate was taken away openly and without concealment, under a bona fide claim of right and without the intent of wrongfully abstracting it;—Held, that this was not a case of embezzlement under G. S. c. 51, s. 10. Batchelder v. Tenney, 27 Vt. 578.

113. In an action by an administrator under G. S. c. 51, s. 10, to recover double the value of property of the estate embezzled, where part of the property had been restored before suit, and part after;—Held, that damages were recoverable only for the property restored after suit brought, and were limited to once that value. Spaulding v. Cook, 48 Vt. 145.

III. JUSTIFICATION UNDER PROCESS.

IV. PROCESS AGAINST THE BODY, UPON AFFIDAVIT.

I. FORM.

1. Signing of writ.

1. A member of the executive council, being by the constitution a justice of the peace for the whole State, has authority to sign a county court writ which may run to any county in the State. Sinclair v. Gadoomb, 1 Vt. 32.

2. It is no objection to a writ returnable to the county court, that it is signed by a justice who is interested in the event of the suit. Graham v. Todd, 9 Vt. 166; or by the county clerk, who is but the mere instrument of the court, and may sign even his own writs. Insurance Co. v. Cummings, 11 Vt. 503.

3. An averment that a writ was signed by A B, the "clerk of Chittenden county," instead of Chittenden county court, was held good on general demurrer. Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 438.

4. A signature only to the recognizance at the foot of a writ is not a signing of the writ. For such defect the writ was dismissed upon motion. Andrus v. Carroll, 35 Vt. 102.

2. Minute of recognizance.

5. A minute of recognizance upon a writ which contains the name of the person recognized and the amount, and intelligibly expresses the object of its being taken, is sufficient. All other defects may well be supplied by the record of the recognizance, when finally made up. Corey v. Gale, 18 Vt. 639. 10 Vt. 525. 11 Vt. 590.

6. The minute of recognizance upon a writ, "Needham & Dennis recognized," &c., was held sufficient on motion to dismiss. Perkins v. Walker, 16 Vt. 240.

7. A minute of recognizance in which no sum is stated, is of no force and does not answer the statute. Sisco v. Hurlburt, 17 Vt. 118.

8. For the purpose of issuing mesne process, the authority signing the writ is the sole judge of the sufficiency of the security he takes by way of recognizance, and this cannot be questioned under a plea in abatement. Adams v. Davis, 1 Tyl. 8. See 43 Vt. 159. Chipman v. Pearl, 2 Tyl. 267. Start v. Robinson, Brayt. 17.

9. A recognizance, or debt of record, acknowledged by an infant in court, or before a magistrate, is in no case to be adjudged void, but voidable only. Hence, it is no cause for the abatement of a writ, that the party recognized for costs is an infant. Patchin v. Cro-mach, 18 Vt. 330.

8. Discretion.

10. A writ directed to the high bailiff, acting as sheriff, need not state the cause of its being so directed. Buck v. Marsh, Brayt. 125.

11. If a writ is directed to an officer who may and does serve it, it is no cause of abatement that it was not more broadly directed, according to a statute form, so as to embrace other officers. Cooper v. Ingalls, 5 Vt. 508.

12. The authority of an officer to serve a writ does not depend upon the direction. The writ may be served by a proper officer, though erroneously directed. Stewart v. Martin, 16 Vt. 397. Chadwick v. Divol, 12 Vt. 499.

4. Authorization.

13. The authority issuing an execution may authorize some one specially to serve the same, as well against a town, as against a natural person. Walter v. Denison, 24 Vt. 551. See INFANT, 4, 5.

14. No person is authorized to serve process unless particularly named in such process. A direction "to any indifferent person," without naming him, is insufficient. Moffat v. Moffat, 10 Vt. 432. 27 Vt. 786. Allyn v. Davis, 10 Vt. 547. Spafford v. Spafford, 16 Vt. 511.

15. Otherwise, nub modo, as to a subpoena to a witness. Smith v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 133. West v. Walworth, 33 Vt. 167. Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 498.

16. An authorization upon a justice writ was in this form: "I authorize A B to serve and return this according to law"—omitting the word writ, after the word "this," as is in the statute formula. Held sufficient, on plea in abatement. Fullerton v. Briggs, 20 Vt. 542. Davis, J., dissenting.

17. The authorization for service of a justice writ must be upon the back of the writ, as required by the statute. An address in the body of the writ to an indifferent person, named, following the form of a deputation in a county court writ, is not sufficient. Edgerton v. Barrett, 21 Vt. 196. 31 Vt. 621.

18. The justice form of authorizing one to serve a writ does not confer authority to serve a county court writ. Washburn v. Hammond, 25 Vt. 648. Howard v. Walker, 39 Vt. 163.

19. A county court summons directed to and served by a deputized person, was held good, although the general direction omitted to mention some of the officers who would regularly serve it, and the special direction was "for want of such officer seasonably to be had." Bell v. Chipman, 2 Tyl. 423.

20. An authorization in a county court writ, "to C. H. Harding, an indifferent person, to serve and return," was held sufficient. Bliss v. Smith, 42 Vt. 198. Culver v. Balch, 23 Vt. 618.

21. The appointment of a person to serve a writ, being a judicial act, cannot be done by proxy. If signed in blank upon a writ filled up, or made in full upon a blank writ, and such blanks are afterwards filled by a person other than the magistrate signing the writ, no authority is conferred, and service under it is void, and those acting under it are trespassers. Kellogg, ex parte, 6 Vt. 509. Kelly v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261. 19 Vt. 392. 21 Vt. 203. Ross v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 265. Rebee v. Steele, 2 Vt. 314.

22. Where an indifferent person is authorized by a justice to serve a writ, his authority cannot be extended by extending the return day of the writ, without the concurrence of the justice. The authorization is functus officio when the time for service expires according to the writ as it was when the authorization was made. Carr v. Tyler, 28 Vt. 783.

23. A writ returnable to the county court, signed by a justice, was directed to "E. K. Gladding, constable of Granville," and was served by Gladding out of the town of which he was constable. Held, that such service was void, and could not be cured by a subsequent amendment in the direction by the justice, describing Gladding as an indifferent person. Dolbear v. Hancock, 19 Vt. 388. 21 Vt. 203. 23 Vt. 620.

24. It is not matter of abatement, that the person specially authorized to serve a writ was related to the plaintiff; nor need the authorization state that such person was indifferent. Miller v. Hayes, Brayt. 21.

II. SERVICE.

1. Extent and limitations of authority to make service.

25. A person specially authorized to serve a writ has all the powers of a sheriff in serving such writ, except that he is not to be recognized or obeyed as a sheriff, or known officer, but must show his authority and make known his business, if required by the party who is to obey the same. Burton v. Wilkinson, 18 Vt. 186.

26. Until he makes his authority known, or until it is known to those with whom he is dealing, he can claim no respect, consideration or obedience, but may be resisted as a trespasser in what he attempts to do under the writ. Leach v. Francis, 41 Vt. 670.

27. A writ in favor of a corporation, served by a constable who was a member of the corporation, was for this cause abated. Dunmore Mfg. Co. v. Rookwell, Brayt. 18.

28. Before the act of 1850 (G. S. c. 85, s. 6.), an officer could not serve a writ in favor of or against a town of which he was a rated inhabitant, or in which he was rated and taxable; nor, if the sheriff was so interested, could such writ be served by his deputy. Such service was not void, but only voidable by plea in abatement. Essex v. Prentiss and Holmes v. Essex, 6 Vt. 47. Charlotte v. Webb, 7 Vt. 88. Fairfield v. Hall, 8 Vt. 68. Everts v. Georgia, 18 Vt. 15. Lyman v. Burlington, 22 Vt. 181; and see Shaw v. Baldwin, 33 Vt. 447. Huntley v. Henry, 37 Vt. 165—overruling Windsor v. Jacob, 1 Tyl. 241.

29. G. S. c. 12, s. 26, providing that "no sheriff or deputy sheriff shall be allowed to make any writ, declaration, &c.," does not extend to a person, not a public officer, who is specially deputized to serve the writ by the authority signing it. Wakworth v. Farwell, 41 Vt. 212.

30. But it does extend to constables; and a writ filled up by a constable is void, although so done at the request of the plaintiff's attorney and under his supervision; and will be dismissed on motion in the county court after an appeal, though no objection was made before the justice. Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198.

31. It does not extend to the erasure by the officer, at the request of the plaintiff, of the name of the place set for trial in a writ already perfect, and inserting the name of another place. This not the making of a writ. Hunt v. Viall, 20 Vt. 291.

32. A writ so made by a sheriff, &c., is good, unless avoided by plea or motion by the defendant in the process. Sevell v. Harrington, 11 Vt. 141.

33. Held, by a majority, that a person regularly authorized by a justice to serve a writ might serve it in another county than the one to the sheriff of which it was directed. Clark v. Washburn, 9 Vt. 302.

34. Formal defects in the process or the return, unless objected to in abatement, are waived; but want of authority in the person serving the process is not so waived and may be otherwise taken advantage of by a party interested to defeat the process. Kelly v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261.

35. Where a lack of authority in the person who has undertaken to serve a writ appears upon the face of the process, the defect may be taken advantage of either by a motion to dismiss, or by a plea in abatement. Houard v. Walker, 39 Vt. 168. Bliss v. Railroad Co., 24 Vt. 428. Washburn v. Hammond, 25 Vt. 648.

2. Mode of service.

36. A writ of summons cannot be served by reading without copy. Chase v. Davis, 7 Vt. 476.

37. A writ of attachment, served as a summons, will operate as a summons and be sufficient to hold the defendant to trial. Brown v. Story, 2 Vt. 281.

38. A writ improperly issued as an attachment against the body, but served as a summons, or by the attachment of property, is not for that cause abatable. Langdon v. Dyer, 13 Vt. 278. Bowman v. Stowell, 21 Vt. 309.

39. A citation, or order of notice to appear and show cause why a certiorari should not be granted in a highway case, is not required to be served as process. Such service of the notice is not regulated by statute, but by the rules and usages of the court. Lyman v. Burlington, 22 Vt. 181.

40. Service upon absent party. In order to bring one into court as a party defendant, the process must be served upon him according to the statute; publication, or notice, without previous service of the writ, is of no avail. Propagation Society, &c., v. Ballard, 4 Vt. 119. Skinner v. McDaniel, 4 Vt. 418.

41. The service of process by an officer of this State by leaving a copy thereof with the defendant in another State, without a special order of the court, gives no jurisdiction of the defendant, and is void. Notice so given may be safely disregarded. Davis v. Richmond, 35 Vt. 419.

42. A party is to be regarded as "being out of the State," with respect to notice of process served by copy at his last and usual place of abode, where he has commenced a journey leading out of the State, and has progressed so far, although not beyond the State limits, as that notice of the suit could not probably overtake him. Marvin v. Wilkins, 1 Aik. 107.

43. In the service of process against a defendant not residing in this State, where he has no known tenant, agent or attorney, and such service is made by the attachment of real estate by copy left in the town clerk's office, an additional copy, with the officer's return thereon, must be left for the defendant in such office, in order to complete the service of the writ (G. S. c. 83, s. 87), Washburn v. N. Y., &c., Mining Co., 41 Vt. 50.

44. Where, in case of the service of process by copy left at the last usual place of abode of the defendant, notice of the pendency of the suit is required before the rendition of judgment, notice before service of the process, though the officer giving the notice has then the process in his hands for service, is of no avail; and where the statement in a justice's record is equivocal, and consistent with either hypothesis, viz.: that such notice was given before, or after the service, held, in an audita querela to set aside the judgment, that the question was for the jury upon the whole evidence. Johnson v. Murphy, 42 Vt. 645.

45. —as to time. If an officer serves a justice writ more than 60 days before the time therein appointed for trial (G. S. c. 81, s. 84), such service is void, and he acquires no right by such service—as, e. g., against a subsequent attachment. Nelson v. Denison, 17 Vt. 78. 25 Vt. 847. Questioned in McKenzie v. Ransom, 22 Vt. 324.

46. A writ dated April 22, 1855, was made returnable to the county court to be held "on the 4th Tuesday of June next," and was served Dec. 19, 1855, and entered at January term, 1856. Held irregular, and the suit was dismissed on motion. Blodgett v. Brattleboro, 28 Vt. 695.

47. —Sunday. A citation to a petition served after sunset of Saturday, was abated for this cause, but the court retained the petition and issued an order of notice returnable at the next term. Cavendish v. Weathersfield T. Co., 2 Vt. 531.

48. If the service of process be begun before the setting of the sun on Saturday, it may be completed afterwards. Fifield v. Wooster, 21 Vt. 215. Pearson v. French, 9 Vt. 849.

49. Where an officer made an attachment on Thursday, which was relinquished on Friday, and on Saturday was agreed by the parties to be reinstated, and after sundown of that day the officer took possession again of the property, which was understood and intended, by consent of all the parties to the process, to be a resumption of his previous possession;—Held, that the service of the writ should not be treated as made after the setting of the sun on Saturday, and so void, but as a continuation of the service begun on Thursday. Fifield v. Wooster.

50. Process against town. A writ, process or citation against the overseers of the poor of a town is, in effect, against the town, within the meaning of the statute requiring 80 days for service. Guilford v. Jamaica, 2 D. Chip. 104.

51. G. S. c. 83, s. 19, prescribing the time of service of every writ against any town, &c., embraces every species of process returnable to the county or supreme court. Peacham v Weeks, 48 Vt. 73.

52. —against sheriff. The provision of the judiciary act of 1797 requiring 18 days for service of process against a sheriff, &c., for misfeasance, &c., in office, controls the justice act of 1797 requiring that every writ shall be served at least six days before the day appointed for trial. Butler v. Lowry, 3 Vt. 14.

53. In an action against a sheriff or other officer, unless the right arises out of the official neglect or misfeasance of the defendant, the statute requirement of service at least 18 days before court does not apply; as, in trespass or trover for taking the plaintiff's property upon process against another party. Johnson v. Rice, 14 Vt. 391.

54. So, for taking on process against the plaintiff, property which is exempt from such process. Sanborn v. Hamilton, 18 Vt. 590.

3. Return.

55. As the statute requires that the manner of the service of a writ shall be particularly expressed in the return, a plea in abatement for an insufficient return may be good without averring defect in service. Sweetland v. Stevens, 6 Vt. 577.

56. Where an officer's return of service of process was headed with the name of the State and county, it was held, that the various acts of service set forth, not mentioned as performed elsewhere, were set forth as performed in such county; and so as to base upon it an action for a false return, where the service was in fact made out of the State. Davis v. Richmond, 35 Vt. 419.

57. —non est. In a suit against two or more, a non est inoventus return of the process as to one or more of the defendants, is equivalent to the common law outlawry, and the cause may proceed against those upon whom the process has been served. Cole v. Seeley, 25 Vt. 220.

III. JUSTIFICATION UNDER PROCESS.

58. In trespass de bonis against an officer who has attached property, he may justify by the writ without showing any return, where such writ is not made returnable until after the suit against him has been commenced. Judd

v. Langdon, 5 Vt. 231; and see Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 438.

59. Where an officer acts and justifies under several processes, some of which are valid and some invalid, he is liable if it appears that, to the injury of the plaintiff, he has done more than he was justified in doing by the valid processes; otherwise he is not liable. Wilson v. Seavey, 38 Vt. 221.

60. A process good upon its face is a sufficient justification to the officer who executes it. Every reasonable intendment is to be made in favor of its legality, and the officer has the right to presume that it issued in a case where such process was proper, if there might be such a case; as, that an execution returnable in 60 days was issued in a case proper for such return. If it might be good for aught that appears upon its face, the officer is to be justified in its execution. Gage v. Barnes, 11 Vt. 195.

61. Process, regular in form, is a full justification for acts done according to its precept and to the extent of the authority apparent upon its face; and cannot be impeached collaterally, nor be resisted, upon the ground of an unlawful purpose in employing it. State v. Buchanan, 17 Vt. 573. Wakefield v. Fairman, 41 Vt. 339.

62. An execution issued upon a joint judgment against A and B was settled by B, and was surrendered to him by the creditor as evidence of payment. B then, by the advice and aid of C who knew the facts, returned the execution to the magistrate, and without the knowledge or consent of the creditor, sued out an alias, and caused A to be committed to jail thereon. Held, that B and C did not so connect themselves with the process as to be entitled to protection under it, and that they were liable to A in trespass for false imprisonment. Pierson v. Gale, 8 Vt. 509.

63. An officer is always protected when he serves a process issuing from competent authority, or, more properly, when from the face of the precept the officer cannot perceive a want of jurisdiction. Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661.

64. Where an execution for a fine imposed by court-martial was regular upon its face, and the court had jurisdiction;—Held, that the officer executing it was protected, notwithstanding an irregularity in the previous proceedings. Darling v. Bowen, 10 Vt. 148. 15 Vt. 173.

IV. PROCESS AGAINST THE BODY UPON AFFIDAVIT.

65. Preliminary affidavit. Where a court has not jurisdiction of the process in the particular case, the process is void. Thus, where a writ issues against the body in a case not authorized by law—as, without a preliminary affidavit duly filed, or upon an insufficient affidavit, where the law requires such preliminary affidavit—the writ is void, and an arrest under it is illegal. Aikens v. Richardson, 15 Vt. 500. Whitcomb v. Cook, 39 Vt. 585. Adams v. Whitcomb, 46 Vt. 708.

66. Under the statute authorizing process against the body upon filing an affidavit that the debtor was about to abscond from the State;—Held, where the affidavit was that the debtor “was about to leave” the State, that it did not warrant the issuing of a capias. Aikens v. Richardson.

67. The writ of ne exeat, as at present used in this country, is a meane process from the court of chancery, to hold a party to equitable bail that he may not depart from the jurisdiction of the court, but be present with his body to answer its decree against him, and can be properly issued only in those cases where the person of the defendant can be touched by the decree, either by attachment, or on execution. Hence, by G. S. c. 33, s. 75, such writ cannot issue against a female, in a case founded upon contract; but such process in such case is void, and the party procuring the writ and causing an arrest thereon is liable for false imprisonment. So held. Adams v. Whitcomb, 46 Vt. 708.

68. Filing of affidavit. Under G. S. c. 33, s. 76, requiring “the filing with the authority issuing” a capias on affidavit, &c., something more is required than the bare placing of the affidavit upon the premises of the magistrate, where it may or may not subsequently come to his knowledge; it must be left with the magistrate subject to his control, and be permanently deposited with him for the inspection of all concerned. Parkhurst v. Pearsons, 30 Vt. 705. Phillips v. Wood, 31 Vt. 322. Whitcomb v. Cook, 39 Vt. 585.

69. Where such affidavit was made and a writ, signed by a justice in blank, was filled as a capias, and the creditor's attorney, who had made the affidavit and writ, slipped the affidavit under the door of the office of the justice in his absence from town, and it was found by the justice only upon his return, and after the service of the writ;—Held, that the affidavit was not “filed,” within the meaning of the statute, and that the creditor was liable for false imprisonment for the arrest made upon the writ. Whitcomb v. Cook.

70. A knowledge of the affidavit must be brought home to the magistrate, before he issues such writ against the body. Held, that an arrest after such affidavit was made, but not filed with the justice nor brought to his knowledge until after the arrest, was irregular and void, and that the bail could avail himself of the defect on scire facias. Muzzy v. Howard, 42 Vt. 23.

71. Form of affidavit. Where an affidavit for an arrest on civil process was made by one as president of the plaintiff corporation;—Held, on habeas corpus, that this was sufficient prima facie evidence that he was such president. Sargeant, ex parte, 17 Vt. 425.

72. An affidavit for a capias, under G. S. c. 88, s. 76, which follows the language of the statute, is sufficient without stating more definitely that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff, or the amount of the property sequestered, except as being "sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand." Davis v. Dorr, 30 Vt. 97.

73. Held, that an affidavit for a capias was sufficient, which was, that the affiant had "reason to believe, &c." instead of "good reason, &c.," and that the defendant had "goods, chattels or money, &c.," instead of "money, or other property, &c.," that it was not necessary to specify wherein the property consisted. Phillips v. Wood, 81 Vt. 322.

74. An affidavit was held sufficient to warrant a capias against a citizen of another State, temporarily and openly in this State, which alleged that he was to "abscond or remove" from this State, &c. Bank of Vergennes v. Barker, 27 Vt. 244. Id. 298.

75. So, in like case, where the allegation was that the debtor was about to "leave this State." McLeran v. Shearer, 38 Vt. 290. (Acts of 1851 and 1852.)

76. Where the writ in an action on contract issued as a capias, and the defendant was arrested;—Held, that a plea in abatement on account of the writ having been so issued and served, is insufficient, which does not negative the filing of the affidavit prescribed by statute. Bank of Rutland v. Barker, 27 Vt. 298. See Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43.

PROPRIETARY DIVISION.

1. A proprietary division under the statute can be proved only by the proprietors' records. McKenzie v. Putney, N. Chip. 11.

2. It is the better way for the proprietors' clerk to insert the warning of a meeting in his records, and that the same was published according to law; in which case it will be presumed to be so, prima facie; but if omitted, the publication may be proved by parol. Id.

3. Proprietary divisions are valid so far only as they are made in conformity to the statute. Britton v. Lawrence, 1 D. Chip. 108.

4. Proprietors cannot under the statute divide the lands of the town unequally, as to quantity, among the proprietors; and no length of acquiescence will cure such irregularity. Hodges v. Parker, Brayt. 54.

5. The doings of a former proprietors' meeting, and divisions made in consequence thereof, cannot be legalized by a subsequent vote. Pomeroy v. Taylor, Brayt. 169.

6. A proprietary division of the lands of a town into severalty, and the vote or allotment of them to particular individuals, do not create or confer a title thereto in behalf of one, not an original proprietor, or who has no conveyance of the right of such proprietor; nor is acquiescence in such division and allotment any evidence of his title. Smith v. Meacham, 1 D. Chip. 424.

7. Where both parties claim the same land under the same proprietary division, the legality of the division cannot be disputed; but where a certain lot in a certain division is claimed, a division in fact must be shown; otherwise it cannot appear that there is any such lot. Bown v. Bean, 1 D. Chip. 176. Bush v. Whitney, Id. 369.

8. Where the plaintiff in ejectment shows title to a proprietary right in the town, the defendant, if a stranger, cannot object to the division shown; and he does not become entitled to question the division, or the plaintiff's title, by taking a conveyance of a proprietary right after the commencement of the suit, where he conveys it away before trial. Hodges v. Parker, Brayt. 52.

9. No stranger can call in question the legality of a proprietary division; nor can a proprietor, unless his rights have been violated thereby, nor, even in that case, if he has submitted to and acquiesced in the division made. Wells v. Brewster, 1 D. Chip. 147. Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9.

10. In the allotment and survey of a town, the boundary lines of lots 28 and 29, adjoining and of equal size, were actually surveyed out and marked by the proper surveyor, except the divisional line between them; and, as to this, the surveyor made survey bills of the lots describing a divisional line, but not running it, which bills were recorded. The land thus embraced in the outside boundaries of the two lots fell short of the quantity allotted to both. Held, that the line must be so run as to divide the lots equally, and that the divisional line described in the survey bills, but not actually run, was not controlling. Doolittle v. Peck, Brayt. 51.

11. An ancient charter of a township which contained no description of any land, but referred to a survey thereafter to be made, was held admissible in ejectment, without production of the original survey, with evidence of an actual location and division among the proprietors long acquiesced in. Robinson v. Gullman, 8 Vt. 168.

12. The division of a town into lots, though without actual survey, and though not in other respects made conformably to law, was held made good by long acquiescence. Stevens v. Griffith, 3 Vt. 448.

13. A division in fact, though imperfect, evidenced by a plan, or even by parol, acquiesced in by the proprietors, is always held as a good division binding on them, and clearly is good against strangers. Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 383.

14. A division in fact made by the proprietors of a town, although before the date of the charter, where it had been subsequently treated and acted on as the division of the lands of the town, and no proprietor had ever questioned its legality, was held good, and that the book of records of such division was evidence thereof. Hubbard v. Austin, 11 Vt. 129.

15. A division of common land among the proprietors, however informal, if acquiesced in for 15 years, has always been considered in this State equivalent to a legal division. But this must be a division of the land in fact, either by visible lines and monuments, or by possession, under claim, of distinct and clearly defined parcels. Booth v. Adams, 11 Vt. 156.

16. Infants and married women owning proprietary rights in townships, are bound by the acts of the proprietors at legal meetings in making a division, or by subsequent acquiescence in a division. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183.

17. A field-book of a division of lands among proprietors, long recognized as such, is pregnant evidence of two necessary facts—survey in fact, and an acquiescence under it. Hart v. Gage, 6 Vt. 170.

18. It appeared from the proprietors' records, that the proprietors voted to divide their land into lots of 100 acres each, and that the committee appointed for that purpose made and reported their survey according to the vote, and that this report was accepted and recorded. Held, that the presumption was, that the survey and division were in fact made as stated in the report; and that the burden of proving that the actual survey and division were different from those so reported, was upon the party claiming it. Beach v. Fay, 46 Vt. 337.

19. A pitch made by an original proprietor of the town in 1839, was held not referable to a vote of the proprietors in 1795, considering the lapse of time, and that the pitch did not purport to have been made in pursuance of such vote, &c. House v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 172.

PROPRIETORS.

Proprietors of common and undivided lands cannot appoint an agent to prosecute suits, or employ counsel, unless by vote at a meeting duly warned for that purpose; but the doings of such agent, through irregularly appointed, may become binding upon the proprietors, as a corporation, by acquiescence. Woodbridge v. Addison, 6 Vt. 204.

Q.

QUO WARRANTO.

1. The writ of quo warranto is the appropriate mode in which to try any alleged usurpation of offices or franchises, inconsistent with the State sovereignty. State v. Boston, &c., R. Co., 25 Vt. 433.

2. Quo warranto proceedings, though criminal in form, are but civil in their nature, and are addressed to the judicial discretion of the court. State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 266.

3. The court dismissed a petition for a quo warranto to remove a justice of the peace, who was a postmaster when elected justice, on these grounds: (1), because the office is of very small importance; (2), because of the shortness of his term of office, which had then partly run; (3) because no other person claimed the office; (4), because the objection was of no considerable practical importance. State v. Fisher, 28 Vt. 714.

4. Motion by State's attorney for leave to file an information, and for a writ of quo warranto against a village corporation de facto, and its officers, was granted, on proof that the act of incorporation was not accepted by a legal majority vote, as required by the act; and judgment was rendered dissolving the corporation, and of ouster against the officers. State v. Bradford, 32 Vt. 50.

5. Proceedings of quo warranto are brought in the name of the State by the State's attorney, but the name of a relator is always brought upon the record in the English practice, and should be here, probably. In such case, costs might be awarded against the relator. State v. Bradford, 32 Vt. 50; qualifying State v. Boston, &c., R. Co., 25 Vt. 445.

6. Upon an information in the nature of a quo warranto, and rule to show cause why the defendants had exercised an office;—Held, notwithstanding the form of the issue (the defendants being in possession, and so presumed rightfully), that the prosecutor should go forward in the proof and argument. State v. Hunton, 28 Vt. 594. (Ruled contra on hearing of State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 266.)

7. In this State, the proceeding for a writ of quo warranto is commenced by an application in behalf of the relator to the supreme court, wherever in session, for an order upon the adverse party to show cause at some subsequent stated term of that court in the county of lawful venue, which is the county where one of the parties resides, why an information praying for such writ should not be filed, and for an order as to the manner of making up the evidence to be used upon such showing of cause. This application may be made without notice, and is granted, as matter of course, if proper ground and reason are shown by the application. The granting of these orders does not determine nor affect any question of legal right either as to subject matter, or procedure. All such questions stand without prejudice, to be raised, heard and determined by the court before which the order for showing cause is returnable. State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 14.

8. Where leave is granted to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto, it is the duty of the court to fix some time, ordinarily during the same term, for the respondents to appear and plead; and if they do not voluntarily do so, their appearance will be compelled by due process of law. A judgment of ouster will not be awarded as a matter of right, or as of course, upon leave granted to file the information on failure to show sufficient cause why it should not be filed. S. C. 48 Vt. 266. [Proceedings by quo warranto, prohibition and mandamus are now regulated by Stat. 1876, No. 74.]

I. GENERAL POWERS UNDER CHARTER.

1. Public use. It is well settled, that there is no implied contract by the State, in the charter of a turnpike or other private corporation, that their property, or even their franchise itself, shall be exempt from the common liability of the property of individuals to be taken for the public use; that it may be taken on proper compensation being made; that a railroad is an improved highway, and that property taken for its use, by authority of the legislature, is property taken for the public use, as much as if taken for any other highway; and that the legislature may delegate such power to a railroad corporation. White River T. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 21 Vt. 590. 27 Vt. 379.

2. Extending road beyond terminus. A corporation chartered for the purpose of constructing a railroad between certain termini, was, on the application of a stockholder, enjoined from applying its present funds or income of the road, and from pledging its credit, for extending the road beyond its terminus. By Bennett, chancellor. Stevens v. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., 29 Vt. 545.

3. The Rutland & Burlington R. Co. was incorporated by an act of the legislature (1848), for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad from some point at Burlington southwardly, &c., to Connecticut River. This road the company constructed under their charter, and the legislature then (1850) passed an additional act authorizing them to extend their road "from their present terminus in Burlington, northwardly, &c., to any point or points in the town of Swanton, in the county of Franklin." This act was accepted by the directors and by vote of the corporation as an amendment to the charter, and they were proceeding to carry out its purpose by extending their road. The orator, a stockholder, dissented from such vote and action of the company, and brought his bill in chancery to enjoin the company from building the proposed extension. Held, that the proposed extension was a fundamental change from the original purpose and scope of the incorporation and organization of the company, to a participation in which the orator could not be bound, against his consent, by the additional act of the legislature and the acceptance of it by the directors and a majority of the stockholders; and that he was entitled to an injunction, which was granted in the terms above stated; but leaving the company at liberty to build the extension with any new funds which they might obtain for that specific object. Id.

4. Special case. A railroad corporation of New York was authorized by its charter and articles "to contract for the transportation and delivery of, and to transport and deliver, persons and property conveyed over its road, at any place beyond the termini of the road, within or without the State, &c." Held, that its purchase of a steamboat, designed for the transportation of freight and passengers from its terminus in Plattsburgh, N. Y., to Burlington, Vt., to connect with another railroad there, was not ultra vires, and that a promissory note given by the corporation on such purchase was binding. Shavmut Bank v. Plattsburgh, &c., R. Co., 81 Vt. 491.

5. Enlarged powers and acceptance. Where a general law was passed authorizing railroad corporations to make certain contracts, which they were not in fact authorized by their original charters to make;—Held, that the subsequent making of such contracts by the direct action of a stockholders' meeting should be regarded as an acceptance of such enlarged powers, as a part of the organic law of the corporation. Vt. & Can. R. Co. v. Vt. Cent. R. Co., 84 Vt. 2.

6. Forfeiture. Under an act providing that if a certain railroad corporation should not complete and put in operation a certain connecting line by a time named, "then this corporation cease, and the charter thereof be void";—Held, that this was only prescribing a cause of forfeiture, and that, to effect a forfeiture, it must be declared such by competent authority in some form of proceeding in behalf of the public. Id.

7. Exemption from taxes. By the charter of the Vt. Central R. Co. it was provided, that "the stock, property and effects of the company shall be exempt from all taxes, &c." Held, that only such lands as were taken or used for railroad purposes and such as the company would have been authorized to take by proceedings in invitum, were so exempt. All others are subject to taxation. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Burlington, 28 Vt. 193.

8. And to levy of execution. Eldridge v. Smith, 84 Vt. 484.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, I.

II. STOCK AND SUBSCRIPTIONS.

9. A railroad corporation may properly stipulate for the payment of interest on sums paid on stock subscriptions until the road is completed and put in operation, payable whenever the surplus earnings shall enable it properly to do so. Richardson v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 44 Vt. 618. Rutland & Bur. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536.

10. Subscriptions to the stock of a railroad corporation were made under a corporate vote, that all subscribers be allowed interest "on all sums paid by them" up to the time when the road shall be completed and put in operation. These were $100 shares and were fully paid. Afterwards stock was authorized, issued and sold at $75, and, again, at $50 per share, to be of equal rank and value with the other stock. The corporation afterwards issued certificates for interest unpaid upon all the shares alike, at the nominal par of $100. Held, that the 75 dollar and the 50 dollar shares were not entitled to interest equally with the first, but that the certificates should be reduced to the sums actually paid. Richardson v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co.

11. A railroad subscription was conditioned upon the extension of the road to Derby Line. Whether by this term, as used, was intended the north line of the town of Derby, or a village known as "Derby Line," situate on such town line, was in fact ambiguous. The company's agent procured the defendant's subscription by representing that the terminus intended was Derby Line village. Held, that the company was bound by such representation, whether or not made fraudulently. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Baxter, 32 Vt. 805.

12. A contract for the future delivery of stock of a railroad corporation is not affected by the subsequent exercise of the right, under the charter, to mortgage the road, property and franchise, or to issue new or additional stock at a less nominal value, or to unite with another corporation. Noyes v. Spaulding, 27 Vt. 420. Loody v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 24 Vt. 660.

13. Jany. 19, 1869, the defendant, a resident of Montpelier and one of the commissioners for receiving subscriptions to the stock of the plaintiff corporation, subscribed for $10,000 of its stock. Dec. 20, 1869, at a legal meeting of the commissioners, the defendant, in the presence of the commissioners and with their consent, annexed to his subscription the following written condition: "Condition that good and responsible individuals in Montpelier subscribe $50,000 within one year from above date, and a list of subscribers, and amount of each, given me Jany. 19, 1870." Held, that the defendant's subscription should be reckoned towards the $50,000 named in the condition. Montpelier & Wells River R. Co. v. Langdon, 45 Vt. 137.

14. The charter of a railroad corporation required that the directors should give notice of assessments upon subscriptions to the capital stock, and of the time and place of payment, in certain newspapers. In an action for such assessments;—Held, that without proof of search and inability to find such newspapers, it was error to admit the testimony of a witness that he had examined such newspapers and that they contained the notices, and to state the contents of the notices. Seemle, that where several publications are required, the production of one copy of the paper, with parol evidence that the same was published the requisite number of times, would be sufficient. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536.

See CORPORATION, I.

III. OFFICERS, AGENTS AND SERVANTS.

15. Directors. By vote of the directors of a railroad company, their general services were to be performed without pay; but for special services required of them which should call them from home, they were to be allowed not exceeding $2.00 per day, and expenses. Held, that this limitation applied only to that class of services which could be rendered only in the capacity of a director, and did not apply to the superintendence of the construction of a part of the road, making purchases therefor, settling land damages, &c., by a director as a special agent, Henry v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 27 Vt. 435.

16. But held, that this limitation did apply to all services as one of an executive committee of the directors, and in negotiating the bonds of the company;—all such services being performed as a director. Hodges v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 29 Vt. 220.

17. By G. S. c. 65, s. 3, a corporation is empowered to convey its real estate "by an agent appointed by vote for that purpose." Held to apply to our public municipal corporations which have no public officer, or officers, clothed by law with a sufficient authority to act for them; but as to our ordinary business corporations, like banks and railroad companies, whose charters provide for a board of directors in whom the entire management and control of all the business and affairs of the corporation are vested, the statute is satisfied by a vote of the directors merely, without a vote of the stockholders, or corporation itself. Arms v. Conant, 36 Vt. 744, citing Conant v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. Id. 748.

18. A mortgage of the property of a railroad corporation, to secure a debt of the corporation, which was executed by an agent appointed by vote of the directors for that purpose, without any vote of the stockholders, was held good, though such vote was passed at a meeting of the directors held without this State;—this not being properly a corporate act, the directors not acting as the corporation, but as the agents and on behalf of the corporation. Id.

19. Lessee. Under the statute making a railroad "corporation and its agents" liable for all damages occasioned by want of fences and cattle guards;—Held, that a lessee, operating the road, was liable as such "agent." Clement v. Canfield, 38 Vt. 302.

20. The corporation is also liable for such damage, though the road is operated by a lessee. Nelson v. Vt. & Canada R. Co., 26 Vt. 717.

21. Receiver. In an action against the defendants who were managers of a long line of railroad and held themselves out as common carriers, for the loss of goods delivered to them as such for transportation;—Held, that it was no defense at law, that they were running and managing the line of railroad as receivers under an appointment of the court of chancery. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402.

22. Operator. Any person in possession of a railroad and employing the franchisees of the railroad corporation in operating it, either as a trustee, lessee, receiver in chancery, or an intruder even, is liable to passengers and the owners of freight, who may employ him, to the same extent precisely as the corporation would be, while conducting the same business. Sprague v. Smith, 29 Vt. 421.

23. Conductor. Under C. S. c. 26, s. 52, authorizing the conductor of a railroad train to put a passenger refusing to pay his fare "out of the cars at any usual stopping place the conductor may elect";—Held, that this impliedly negated the exercise of such right at any other place. Stephen v. Smith, 29 Vt. 160.

24. Servants. The servants of a railroad company are its mere instruments, and their acts are regarded as the acts of the corporation, and trespass lies therefor against the corporation. Sabin v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 363. 23 Vt. 372.

25. A declaration against individuals in the possession, use and occupation of a railroad, that they by their servants so carelessly, negligently and improperly drove their locomotive along the railroad that through such carelessness, &c., the locomotive ran against and killed the plaintiff's cattle, shows a good cause of action at common law, and was held sufficient. Cooley v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 394.

26. —of contractors. A railroad company was held not liable for the acts and negligence of the servants of the contractors in building the road. Clark v. Vt. & Canada R. Co., 23 Vt. 103.

27. Where the plaintiff forbade the hands engaged in the construction of a railroad upon his land from working on the same until his damages were settled;—Held, that this was not notice to the corporation. McAuley v. West, Vt. R. Co., 33 Vt. 311.

IV. MORTGAGES AND LEASES.

28. Power to mortgage. In order to uphold a lease or mortgage of a railroad, it is not necessary to hold that the franchise of the railroad company to be a corporation is a subject of sale or transfer. The right to build, own, manage and run a railroad and take the tolls thereon, is not of necessity of a corporate character, or dependent upon corporate rights. It may belong to and be enjoyed by natural persons, and there is nothing in its nature inconsistent with its being assignable. Bennett, J., in Bank of Middlebury v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 190. 86 Vt. 494.

29. A railroad corporation may mortgage its "road and its franchise." These terms embrace only such rights and privileges as are involved in the owning, maintaining and operating of the railroad, and in the receipt and enjoyment of the income and emoluments of so doing. This does not touch the franchise of being a corporation. Miller v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co., 86 Vt. 452. Eldridge v. Smith, 84 Vt. 484.

30. A railroad corporation has legal competency to pledge its credit for the procuring of rails for its road, and to secure payment by a mortgage of its road, franchises and property, provided it be not restricted by statute in this respect. Miller v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co.

31. Interpretation. The Vt. Central R. Co., for the purpose of securing payment of its bonds, conveyed in trust and mortgage its "railroad and franchise and also its station houses, engine houses (&c., &c.), and other appendages, with all the lands thereto belonging, and intended for the use and accommodation of said road, &c." Held, that only such land of the corporation passed under the mortgage, as was intended for the use and accommodation of the railroad at the date of the mortgage, and such as was so connected with and used by the corporation for the railroad, as that the corporation would have been authorized to take it compulsorily; but whether so taken, or by purchase, was not material. Eldridge v. Smith, 84 Vt. 484.

32. A railroad mortgage conveyed, among other things, "all other personal property belonging to said company as the same is now in use by said company, or as the same may be hereafter changed or renewed by said company." Held, not to embrace machinery afterwards added for "burnetizing" timber and ties, where nothing of the kind existed when the mortgage was given, and the articles took the place of nothing which was covered by the mortgage. Brainerd v. Peck, 84 Vt. 496.

33. A railroad had been located between the two general termini and put under contract for construction and was in process of construction, but was in no part completed as a railroad ready for use, and the corporation had not acquired the right of way to a considerable part of the line. Being in this condition, the corporation made a mortgage of its "road and franchise." Held, as against the corporation and subsequent mortgagees, that the mortgage was designed to take effect upon the road as it should exist, under the rights of the corporation, at the time the mortgagees should succeed to the rights of the corporation by virtue of the due enforcement of the mortgage; and such effect was given to it upon the completed railroad, including changes of location at different points, and an addition of two miles beyond the terminus as located when the mortgage was given. Miller v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co., 86 Vt. 452.

34. The road then in the process of construction, with the rights and privileges of the corporation in it as a road completed, was the thing mortgaged. The accessions to it, by way of completing it, are not susceptible of being regarded as after acquired property, in the sense of the cases upon that subject. Barrett, J. Ib. 496.

35. Equitable mortgage. A deed intended to be executed as the mortgage of a railroad corporation by the president of the corporation, who had full authority so to do, but by mistake of form executed as his own deed, was held to be the equitable mortgage of the corporation, and a decree of foreclosure was rendered thereon, without a preliminary decree for reformation of the deed—all the facts having been set forth in the bill. Ib.

36. Notice to trustees. Actual notice of a prior existing equitable mortgage, to the trustees of bondholders under a subsequent railroad mortgage, at the time of taking it, will bind such bondholders where such trustees are clothed with the trust of holding the title as security, and of enforcing and administering such security according to the provisions of the trust, both express and by law implied. Ib.

37. Confirmation by receipt of proceeds. Where a railroad corporation receives the benefit of money borrowed, it cannot avoid liability upon the mortgage given to secure its payment by denying the authority of those who contracted the loan on its behalf. Ib.

38. Mortgage executed before act authorizing it. Where a statute authorized railroad corporations to secure their loans or debts by mortgage;—Held, that such mortgage made and recorded before the act and delivered to the trustees to secure bonds in their hands, but which bonds were not so issued as to become operative and obligatory as contracts until after the passage of the act, would fall within the act. Ib.

39. Coupons. A railroad company issued its bonds payable to bearer, with interest payable on presentation of the interest coupons attached, which coupons were payable to bearer, and the bonds were secured by a mortgage. On the question of the distribution of certain net income of the road, as between the bondholders and the holders of detached coupons;—Held, that the coupons, though detached, were part of the mortgage debt in the hands of the holder; and, this not being a final distribution and it not appearing that there will be any final deficit, that it must be presumed to have been the intention of the bondholders separating and negotiating the coupons, that these should be first paid and in the order in which they should fall due; and it was so decreed. Sewell v. Brainerd, 88 Vt. 364.

40. In such case, on the final distribution of the proceeds of the whole mortgage property, the holder of the coupon is entitled to share pro rata. Miller v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co., 40 Vt. 399.

41. Substitution. A holder of railroad bonds under a first mortgage signed, with many others, a compromise agreement to give up his bonds and take therefor bonds under a consolidated third mortgage of $955,000 proposed to be issued. Such third mortgage was issued, but for the amount of $1,200,000. Held, that this was a substantial departure from the agreement, and that he was not obliged to any exchange of his bonds, but could hold his security under the first mortgage. Id.

42. Unauthorized lease — Subsequent assent. The contracts of lease between the Vt. & Canada R. Co., and the Vt. Central R. Co., of Aug. 24, 1849, and July 9, 1850, not provided for in the charters nor yet prohibited, were not unlawful in the sense of being in violation of some public law, or contrary to public policy; and the validity of those contracts having been assented to by these corporations;—Held, that a bondholder under a mortgage made in express subjection to those contracts, could not object to their validity on the ground of a want of legal capacity to make them. Vt. & Can. R. Co. v. Vt. Cent. R. Co., 84 Vt. 2.

43. Trustees. Held, as to trustees for the bondholders under a railroad mortgage after a forfeiture and strict foreclosure, that their trust was not a mere nominal, naked, dry trust for the benefit of the cestui que trust, but that they were still clothed with active powers and duties, and had, under the circumstances stated in the case, power to lease the road for ten years, terminable at the end of one year upon request of the majority of the bondholders made within 90 days; and such lease was sustained against the bill of such majority to set it aside, it being held to be judicious under the circumstances. Sturges v. Knapp, 81 Vt. 1. Barrett, J., dissenting, and Bennett, J., in part.

44. The trustees of a railroad mortgage leased the railroad after foreclosure. Certain of the bondholders, against the will of the others, brought a bill against the trustees and the lessees to set aside the lease, and procured an injunction and a receiver, upon giving an injunction bond. The bill was afterwards dismissed and the lease established, and the injunction damages assessed at a certain sum to the trustees, and a certain other sum to the lessees, both sums largely exceeding the sum actually recoverable, which was only the penalty of the injunction bond. The damages of the trustees were only the loss of the rent of which the lessees were relieved while kept out of possession. Held, that the true rule of apportionment of the injunction damages was a pro rata distribution upon the sum assessed to the lessees, on the one hand, and the share of the rent assessed to the trustees, on the other hand, which would have belonged to and been received by those innocent bondholders who did not participate in the prosecution of the suit on the part of the orators, if no injunction had been granted. Sturges v. Knapp, 86 Vt. 489.

45. Act unconstitutional. The act of 1857, No. 16, providing for an annual meeting of the mortgage bondholders of a railroad in the hands of the trustees under a mortgage, the election of trustees, and their confirmation by a chancellor on summary proceedings, and the transfer of the property to the trustees so elected, and forming the new trustees into a corporation with powers of management, &c., was held unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of the contract under which the trustees of the second mortgage bondholders of the Rut. & Bur. R. Co. held said road—changing it, and affecting the interests under it of the parties not consenting to the proceedings; as, the corporation; the bondholders under the several mortgages; and the trustees personally. Fletcher v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 39 Vt. 633, in chancery. Bennett, Ch.

V. TAKING LANDS AND MATERIALS; AND RIGHT IN LANDS TAKEN.

46. What may be taken. A railroad company chartered in New Hampshire may purchase and hold lands in this State connecting with their road at the State line, and necessary for the accommodation of the road. State v. Boston, &c., R. Co., 25 Vt. 438.

47. So also a bridge company. Claremont Bridge v. Royce, 42 Vt. 730.

48. An establishment for the manufacture of railroad cars is not to such extent a legitimate railroad necessity, as that the corporation could properly condemn land on which to erect one. Eldridge v. Smith, 84 Vt. 484.

49. So, as to dwelling houses to be rented to the employees of the corporation. Ib.

50. Otherwise, as to land necessary for the piling of wood. Ib.

51. Under the charter of the Vt. Central R. Co.;—Held, that the right of the corporation to take outside materials for constructing its road could be exercised by a contractor for building it; that the commissioners had jurisdiction to assess damages for all acts which the corporation might lawfully do by its "engineers, agents or workmen," including such contractor; and that for such materials taken the commissioners need not assess the damages until after taken. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Baxter, 22 Vt. 865. 25 Vt. 871. 28 Vt. 805.

52. Where lands are lawfully taken by a railroad corporation for a legitimate railroad use, the judgment of the proper officers of the corporation, acting bona fide, as to the necessity for such appropriation and the extent of the land needed, unless clearly beyond any just necessity, is regarded as conclusive. Eldridge v. Smith, 84 Vt. 484. Hill v. West. Vt. R. Co., 82 Vt. 66.

53. Mode of taking. The charter of the Vt. Central R. Co. provided for the taking of lands by the company upon the appraisal of damages by commissioners, and that upon payment of the awarded damages, or depositing the same in bank, &c., "said company shall be deemed to be seized and possessed of all such lands, &c.;" and provided that the company might change the location of such parts of their road as they should deem proper. The company had surveyed and located the route of their road across the plaintiff's land, and had caused his damages to be appraised, and the survey and the award of the commissioners to be recorded; but afterwards, and before paying or depositing the sum awarded, the company changed their line, thereby wholly avoiding the plaintiff's land. In an action of debt on the award;—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover; that the payment or deposit of the award was a condition precedent, not only to the acquisition of the legal title to the land, but also to the right to enter upon the land to construct the road or exercise any act of ownership over the land; that the change of location operated as an abandonment of the former survey and of all rights under it; and that, as the company had acquired no rights, the plaintiff was not entitled to the damages awarded. Stacey v. Vt. Central R. Co., 27 Vt. 39.

54. According to our general railroad statutes and the special statutes in this State, the payment or deposit of the land damages, assessed or agreed, is a condition precedent to the vesting of the title, or of any right in the company to construct their road, and that if they proceed in such construction without this, they are trespassers; and this has been repeatedly so held by this court. Redfield, C. J., in McAuley v. West. Vt. R. Co., 88 Vt. 811.

55. But payment is a fact resting in pais, and being so, although a condition precedent, it may be waived by the party in whose favor it exists, and this by parol merely. Ib. 828.

56. In these great public works, the shortest period of clear acquiescence, so as fairly to lead the company to infer that the party intends to waive his claim for present payment, will be held to conclude the right to assert the claim in any such form as to stop the company in the progress of their works, and especially to stop the running of the road. Ib. 821.

57. We adopt and reassert the doctrine propounded in the case of McAuley v. West. Vt. R. Co., 88 Vt. 811, that if the land owner foregoes his right to have his damages ascertained and paid before the making of the railroad over his land is commenced, and, under some arrangement as to the subsequent ascertainment and payment of his damages, consents that the work may proceed before the damages are to be ascertained and paid, he cannot thereafter interpose and prevent the work in progress, nor prevent the use of the road; nor unless, at least, there is some special and binding contract to that effect, can he assert a lien on the land taken and occupied for the road, in the nature of a mortgage for the purchase money, or value of the land. Knapp v. McAuley, 89 Vt. 275.

58. The survey and location of a railroad is what constitutes the taking of the land over which it is laid, and when so taken it is the duty of the company to cause a certificate of the survey to be recorded in the town clerk's office, and to pay the damages to the land owner before they take possession. But if the land owner agrees upon the compensation, and permits the company to take possession and construct their road, it is too late for him to take advantage of the omission to record. Troy & Boston R. Co. v. Potter, 42 Vt. 272.

59. Assessment of damages. Commissioners for assessing damages for lands taken by a railroad company, are to assess such damages "as are as likely to arise,"—that is, from a proper construction of the road; and are not presumed to have taken into account damages otherwise occasioned;—as, by negligence. Clark v. Vt. and Canada R. Co., 28 Vt. 108. 25 Vt. 69.

60. Railroad corporations, under the statutes of this State, are not liable for consequential damages to lands not taken, arising from a prudent construction and operation of their road; but are liable for such damages only by reason of negligence or want of care.

Hatch v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 49. S. C. 28 Vt. 142. Richardson v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 465.

61. In the award of commissioners for the appraisal of damages for land taken by a railway company, "and for all damages that may occur to the land owner by reason of the location of the railroad over his premises," everything must be regarded as having been considered and included, which the land owner would suffer by the construction of the road in a prudent and reasonable manner, and all the damages that would be likely to accrue to him by the continuance of the road, managed and taken care of with reasonable care and prudence. Waterman v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 30 Vt. 610.

62. Where railroad commissioners were required to appraise to the land owner all damages which he should be likely to sustain by the occupation of his land for a railway;—Held, that the appraisal included the damage done to the land adjoining that taken for the road, by fragments of rock thrown upon it in blasting rocks in the proper construction of the road way, and the damage done the land by going upon it to remove such fragments; but that the appraisal did not include damage for a cart way upon the adjoining land, used during the construction of the road. Sabin v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 368.

63. Where lands are conveyed to a railroad company for the purposes of constructing their road, their rights are co-extensive with what they would have been if the lands had been taken by compulsory process; and the estimate of damages likely to arise from the contemplated use of the land must be presumed to have been taken into account in the price, in the one case, as well as in the appraisal in the other. Norris v. Vt. Central R. Co., 28 Vt. 99.

64. Where railroad commissioners awarded land damages upon the basis that the road was to be constructed in a particular way, as represented by the agent of the company, but without fraud, and the road was constructed differently;—Held, that an action at law did not lie to recover increased damages occasioned by the alteration, since the award stood in force, not appealed from, or otherwise vacated. Butman v. Vt. Central R. Co., 27 Vt. 500.

65. Where a railroad was laid over and along a plank road and the road destroyed, and the franchise of the plank road company was sequestered, and the company disorganized;—Held, (1), that the land did not thereby revert to the owner so as to entitle him to damages beyond the increased burden imposed by taking it for a railroad; (2), that the loss of the use of the plank road, being a loss in common with the whole public, was not an element of damages;

but (3), that for the construction of a private way from his buildings to the public highway, made necessary by the substitution of the railroad for the plank road, the land owner was entitled to damages. Brainard v. Missisquoi R. Co., 48 Vt. 107.

66. Appeal. On an appeal to the county court from the appraisal of damages for land taken by a railroad company under its charter;—Held, that neither party was entitled to have the damages assessed by a jury; that such mode of assessment was not implied in the provision, that "the decision of the county court shall be final." Gold v. Vt. Central R. Co., 19 Vt. 478.

67. In the assessment of land damages on the laying of a railroad, the commissioners act judicially, and the claim for damages becomes res adjudicata, and, if not appealed from, the award is conclusive upon the parties, like a judgment, and cannot be collaterally impeached. Butman v. Vt. Central R. Co., 27 Vt. 500.

68. Where there were conflicting claims to lands taken by the Vt. Central R. Co., and the company by order of the Chancellor, on petition under G. S. c. 28, s. 21, had deposited the appraised damages in bank subject to the future order of the Chancellor, and afterwards, on petition of a claimant with notice to the company, the money was ordered to be paid to him;—Held, that no appeal from such order lay in behalf of the company. Haswell v. Vt. Central R. Co., 23 Vt. 228. 26 Vt. 100.

69. Supreme court. Proceedings to assess land damages, where land is taken for a railroad, are in the nature of sessions proceedings, not according to the course of the common law, and cannot be brought before the supreme court by exceptions. Courser v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 476.

70. Notice to owner. In proceedings to condemn real estate to the use of a railroad, notice, appraisal, and payment of damages to the occupant, avail nothing as against the rights of the true owner. Hagar v. Brainerd, 44 Vt. 294.

71. Right in land taken. A railway company must, from the very nature of their operations, in order to the security of their passengers, workmen, and the enjoyment of the road, have at all times the right to the exclusive occupancy of the land taken, and to exclude all concurrent occupancy by former owners, in any mode and for any purpose. The right of the company to the exclusive occupancy must be, for all the purposes of the road, much the same as that of an owner in fee. Redfield, C. J., in Jackson v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 25 Vt. 159. Isham, J., in Hurd v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 25 Vt. 121. Aldis, J., in Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Holton, 32 Vt. 47. Troy & Boston R. Co. v. Potter, 42 Vt. 265.

72. The company may maintain trespass for all entries and acts of the adjoining land owner upon the land taken, which may in the least degree embarrass the use of the road for the purposes for which it was built—as, for cutting and carrying away turf from between the fences; for building a new farm crossing; and for crossing the track with teams at another point than the established crossing. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Holton, 32 Vt. 43; and for cutting and carrying off the herbage. Troy & Boston R. Co. v. Potter.

73. Where a railroad company has taken land by survey and location, under and according to the power and authority conferred by its charter, a parol reservation by the land owner of the herbage which should grow outside of the track of the road, which was taken into account in the fixing of the land damages, cannot be claimed against another company which has purchased the entire rights of the first company and taken a lease of the road without knowledge of, or anything to indicate the existence of such reservation. 42 Vt. 265

74. A railroad company, owning one undivided moiety of land in fee and the life estate of A in the other moiety, and being in exclusive possession, duly located their road thereon and appropriated the whole land to the ordinary, necessary and legitimate purposes of the road, and continued to use and possess the same after the termination of the said life estate, to the exclusion of the remainder-man, and without the appraisal or payment of land damages under the statute, or otherwise. Held, that the remainder-man could not maintain ejectment against the railroad company to be let into a joint possession of the premises, but must resort to the statute to recover his damages for his interest so appropriated. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

75. When subject to execution. A railroad company acquires only an easement in the lands taken, or conveyed to it, for the purposes of road bed and depot accommodations. This is not such an estate as is subject to levy of execution. Hill v. West. Vt. R. Co., 32 Vt. 68.

76. Under the Vermont Central Railroad charter, provision was made for the condemnation of lands for the use of the road, and also that the corporation "may take and hold all such grants and donations of land and real estate as may be made to the company." Certain lands were conveyed to the corporation in common form as in fee, which were occupied by it for road bed and depot purposes, and afterwards such use was permanently abandoned, the location being changed. Held, that the lands did not revert, but were held by the corporation in fee, and were subject to levy of execution against the corporation.

77. Station house. A railroad company, by erecting and opening their station houses to the public, impliedly license all to enter. Still, such license is revocable as to all except those who have legitimate business there growing out of the road, or with the officers, or employees of the company. As to persons having no business at the stations, the company have the right to direct them to depart, and, on their refusal to do so, may remove them. Harris v. Stevens, 31 Vt. 79.

78. Any person desiring to go upon the cars has the right, within a reasonable time before the expected departure of his intended train, to enter the station house for the purpose of procuring a ticket and getting on board, and to remain there until the departure of the train, then soon to leave, which he intends to take; and this, whether he has purchased a ticket, or not, unless the rules of the company require the purchase of a ticket before entering the cars. What is such reasonable time of coming and stay depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. Id.

79. This right may be forfeited by improper conduct, or by the violation of the rules and regulations of the company. Id.

80. If, after being requested to leave, he intends to rely upon his right to stay, it is but reasonable that he should make known his intent, if not otherwise known, to the person making the request. Id.

VI. CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD.

81. Rights and duties as to adjoining lands. A railroad company in constructing their railroad made an excavation upon their own land, but so near the line of the plaintiff's land adjoining, that the soil of the plaintiff's land, without any artificial weight being placed thereon, slid into the excavation. Held, that the company was liable in an action therefor. Richardson v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 465; and see Beard v. Murphy, 37 Vt. 99. 25 Vt. 63.

82. —stream of water. A railroad company is liable for stopping or diverting a stream of water, to the injury of a neighboring proprietor. Hatch v. Vt. Central R. Co. 25 Vt. 49.

83. —surface water. A railroad company may, as a question of care and prudence, as well be required to have regard to the prevention of damage to a land owner by the accumulation of surface water merely, as by a running stream, where the geographical formation and surrounding circumstances are such as to make it apparent to reasonable men that such precautions are necessary; and, ordinarily, what is a reasonable performance of duty in this respect, under a given state of circumstances, is a question of fact, and not of law. Waterman v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 80 Vt. 610.

84. —dam. A railroad company was held liable for damages occasioned by the breaking away of an embankment and dam across a stream, by reason of its imperfect construction by the company, which was designed and built for the track of the road, although at the same time, by arrangement with the land proprietors, designed for the purpose of creating a reservoir for the use of mills upon the stream;—the work being primarily for the purpose of making a road way, and at the same time cheaper for the company, and the stockholders not objecting. Jones v. West. Vt. R. Co., 27 Vt. 399.

85. —highway. A railroad company, in the prudent and reasonable mode of constructing their railroad, raised a high embankment crossing a highway and made a cut upon their own land, all near to and in front of the plaintiff's house, so as to obstruct and render difficult any passage between the house and the highway. In an action to recover for such consequential damage;—Held, that under a charter requiring compensation to be made for lands taken, the company was not liable for damage to lands merely injuriously affected; and, there being no evidence that the plaintiff was in fact owner of the fee of the highway, held, that the plaintiff could not recover. Richardson v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 465; and see Hatch v. same, 25 Vt. 49.

86. A requirement in a railroad charter, that the company shall, in crossing a highway, restore the highway to its former state of usefulness, as near as may be, and to the acceptance of the selectmen, is not a condition precedent to the right to cross. Richardson v. Vt. Central R. Co.

87. Held, that a declaration against a railroad corporation alleging that the defendant in constructing its railway across a highway made a deep cut across the same, and had neglected and refused to build any bridge or construct any crossing whatever for the accommodation of said highway and the persons wishing to travel over the same, whereby the plaintiff is wholly cut off from all approach to and from his farm and farm buildings, over and by means of said highway, discloses no cause of action; shows no positive injury to the plaintiff, but a non-feasance merely. Buck v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 42 Vt. 370.

88. The liability of the railroad company for such default is, under the statute, to the town. Ib.

89. Railroad companies, under the right of crossing a highway, acquire no right to build their station houses in the highway. State v. Vt. Central R. Co., 27 Vt. 103.

90. —fences. Under the charter of the Vt. Central R. Co., which contained no provision as to the obligation to fence the road;—Held, that such obligation rested primarily upon the company, both as part of the compensation to land owners and as a necessary precaution to running the trains with safety; and that an action lay for a neglect to fence the road, by means whereof the plaintiff's cattle straying upon the road were injured. Quimby v. Vt. Central R. Co., 28 Vt. 387. 27 Vt. 148. Trow v. Vt. Central R. Co., 24 Vt. 487.

91. A railroad company, after they have opened the fields of an adjoining landholder for work and have begun constructing their road, are bound to use all reasonable and prudent means to restrain the cattle of the land owner from straying from his land upon the railroad track, and to prevent the irruption of other cattle into his lands from their line of road. (Whether they are bound to fence their track, before or as soon as they begin constructing their road, was not decided.) Holden v. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., 30 Vt. 297.

92. Under the statute requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks, they are bound so to do, at least, as soon as they commence running their road. Clark v. Vt. & Can. R. Co., 28 Vt. 103. 30 Vt. 306.

93. The duty of a railroad company, under the statute requiring them to build and maintain a sufficient fence upon each side of their road, is satisfied by their putting up and maintaining bars at a farm crossing; and where the land owner refused to have bars put up, insisting that there should be gates, and so the crossing remained unfenced, whereby his cattle passed upon the track and were killed;—Held, that the escape of the cattle was his fault, and not that of the company; and held, that if, as he insisted, there was an agreement that the company should put up gates instead of bars, his action should be upon the contract to recover his damages. Hurd v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 25 Vt. 116.

94. The obligation of a railroad company to fence the margins of their railroad track, extends only to the owner or rightful occupier of the adjoining fields, and to cattle rightfully in such adjoining fields, and not to mere trespassers there. Jackson v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 25 Vt. 150. Morse v. same, 27 Vt. 49. Bemis v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 42 Vt. 375.

95. The plaintiff's horses escaped from his pasture, situate a mile or a mile and a half distant, and got upon the defendant's railroad near the depot where the railroad was not fenced, and were there run over by the defendant's train, without negligence in the running of the train. By the defendant's charter, it was required "to build and maintain a sufficient fence upon each side of its railroad, through the whole route thereof." Held, that the plaintiff could not recover. Jackson v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. 25 Vt. 150.

96. A railroad company was properly enjoined from planting willow trees along the margins of their railroad line, for the purpose of a fence, which would by their roots and shade injure the adjoining land—no strong and controlling necessity being shown for such mode of fencing the road. Brock v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 35 Vt. 373.

97. Contracts for construction—Constitutional question. G. S. c. 28, s. 72, making railroad companies liable to day laborers, employed by the contractors for building it, for labor actually performed, upon giving a specified notice, is not unconstitutional as to contracts thereafter made, though there was no such provision in the special charter previously granted, and no reservation therein of power to control, alter or amend;—and such provision extends to laborers under sub-contractors, and covers the use of the laborer's horse and cart used by him. Brannin v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 31 Vt. 214.

98. Reference to engineer. A contract for work in constructing a railroad had a provision authorizing the company to retain in their hands, for the payment of the laborers, such an amount of the monthly estimates as the engineer might deem proper for that purpose, and to adopt measures for its disbursement, such as he might consider judicious;—Held, that the contractor could enforce no claim against the corporation except for the balance due after sufficient had been retained to pay the laborers, under the decision of the engineer; and that the money so retained was not the property of the contractor, nor subject to be taken by trustee process, but was held by the corporation in trust for the laborers;—and so held as to a sub-contract made subject to the provisions of the principal contract with the corporation. Joslyn v. Merrow, 25 Vt. 185.

99. The provisions of a contract between a railroad company and a contractor for building the railroad, that "the engineer shall be the sole judge of the quantity and quality of the work specified, and from his decision there shall be no appeal," and that, in case of alterations, "such allowances or deductions shall be made therefor as the engineer may deem fair and equitable to both parties," constitute the engineer the sole umpire; and, unless the company fail to furnish a suitable engineer, no recovery can be had for work done under such a contract, without or beyond his estimates, unless upon the most irrefragable proof of mistake in fact, corruption in the engineer, or positive fraud in the company in procuring an under estimate. Vanderwerker v. Vt. Central

R. Co., 27 Vt. 130. Herrick v. Belknap, Ib. 673. Ib. 700.

100. A provision in a contract for constructing a railroad, that estimates should be made by "the engineer," was held to apply to other engineers—as, the resident engineer—and not exclusively to the chief engineer. Herrick v. Belknap.

101. The provision in a contract for the construction of a railroad was, that it should be done to the acceptance of the engineer. Held, that this referred, as to a final acceptance, to the chief engineer of the company; and, when the company had no such officer, that payment for the work done could be claimed without an award of acceptance. Barker v. Troy & Rut. R. Co., 27 Vt. 766.

102. A contract providing for monthly estimates of the contractor's work done, to be made by the engineer, according to which estimates the contractor is to be paid, imports an accurate measurement and final estimate for each month, and not a mere proximate and conjectural estimate. Herrick v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 673. Barker v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 700.

103. Where the defendants, a railroad company, had made a contract in writing with B for the construction of their railroad, and B had sub-let to the plaintiff a part of the work, and the plaintiff, under the direction of the defendant's engineer, had done some extra work beneficial to the defendants;—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover therefor against the defendants—the engineer having no authority under his general duties as engineer, or otherwise, to bind them by any contract, and there being no evidence that the defendants consented to have the work done on their credit, and the defendants' contract being with B, and not the plaintiff; that the plaintiff's remedy, if any, was against B. Thayer v. Vt. Central R. Co., 24 Vt. 440. Vanderwerker v. same, 27 Vt. 125, 139. Herrick v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 673. Ib. 777.

104. A court of equity has jurisdiction of a claim for work done above the estimates of an engineer under a contract which makes the award of the engineer final, if the award was fraudulent, or procured by undue influence. Herrick v. Belknap, Ib. 700.

105. "Per mile." A contract to construct a railroad between certain termini at so much per mile, was held to include side tracks and turn outs, so that the contractor could not charge extra therefor. Barker v. Troy & R. R. Co., 27 Vt. 766.

106. Measure of damages. Where the plaintiffs sued a railroad corporation to recover for the building of its railroad, but the road was not completed by the time stipulated in the contract, but was finally accepted;—Held, that the defendant could not claim against the plaintiff the interest paid or allowed to its stockholders, agreeably to its by-laws, upon their assessments, between the time set in the contract for the completion of the road, and the time when it was actually completed. Id.

107. The plaintiff, by his contract with a railroad corporation for building its railroad, was to receive a certain part of his compensation in the stock of the corporation. Upon finishing the work, the plaintiff demanded payment, which the defendant refused, because, as the fact was, the contract had not been fully performed according to its terms, and because the plaintiff demanded more than was due him. The stock was then worth but 33 per cent of its par value. It being determined that the plaintiff, upon equitable grounds, was entitled to recover, though a less price than that stipulated;—Held, that, on like equitable grounds, the recovery for that portion of the claim payable in stock should be only for the value of the stock at the highest market price between the commencement of the suit and the judgment; or, the plaintiff could take a present delivery of the stock, at his election. Id.

VII. RIGHTS, DUTIES AND LIABILITIES IN MANAGEMENT OF ROAD.

1. As carriers.

108. —of merchandise. A railroad company, chartered with power to transport both "persons and property," are liable as common carriers in the transportation of cattle and live stock, where they have undertaken such transportation for hire for such persons as choose to employ them, although this is not their principal employment, but only incidental and subordinate. Kimball v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 26 Vt. 247.

109. Special agreement. Common carriers may, by express agreement, change their relations and become private carriers, pro hac vice. The defendant, a railroad company, for a given reasonable reward or hire, proffered to transport cattle as common carriers; and for a less sum, to supply the necessary means of transportation, using all reasonable care and diligence, the owner assuming all other risks of the transportation. An express contract of this latter kind was upheld and the company held not liable as common carriers for injury to the cattle during transportation. Id.

110. In an action against a railroad company for not delivering the plaintiff's goods by the time fixed by a special parol agreement, the defendant set up, against proof of the agreement, a written receipt enumerating the articles, price of freight and that it was prepaid; which receipt the plaintiff took on delivering the goods and paying the freight. To this receipt was added a stipulation to forward the goods, but subject to a printed condition indorsed that the company would not guaranty any special dispatch, "unless made the subject of express stipulation in writing." Held, that if the plaintiff, not reading the paper before the departure of his goods nor knowing of this provision, understood the paper to be merely a receipt or voucher to show that the freight had been prepaid, and in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary judgment and understanding in the transaction of business, had a right, from what was said and done at the time, so to understand it, then the taking and keeping of the paper was not conclusive evidence of the contract, but the true contract could be shown by parol; that there was one element lacking to make the paper operative as a binding contract, viz.: a mutual understanding that the paper was delivered and accepted as a contract. King v. Woodbridge, 34 Vt. 565.

111. Notices, &c. The general liability of a common carrier can be restricted or diminished by an express or special contract; but a general notice by a carrier to the public, limiting his obligations as a common carrier, affords no evidence of such contract, even if the existence and contents of the notice are brought to the actual knowledge of the party; for the implication is as strong that the owner intended to insist upon his rights and the duties of the carrier, as it is that he assented to their qualification. Kimball v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 26 Vt. 247. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 23 Vt. 186.

112. But such notice, when its terms are reasonable and just and are assented to by the owner, may limit the liability as carrier, but not to exempt the carrier from liability for negligence. Kellogg, J. 38 Vt. 410. 23 Vt. 206. 40 Vt. 326.

113. A railway company cannot, by their printed notices, receipts and regulations, even when brought to the notice of the shipper, so limit their responsibility that they can carry freights for a reward, and at the same time not be liable for a failure to exercise ordinary care in carrying them. Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 326.

114. Delivery to connecting road. A box of goods marked and directed to B at Boston, was delivered to a railroad company at Saratoga Springs for transportation over their road on its way to Boston. The company gave a receipt as follows: "Received, Saratoga Springs, Sept. 17, from B, &c., one box, to forward to Castleton for B, Boston, Mass., &c." Castleton was the terminus of this road, which there connected with another road, and that with others, forming a line from Saratoga Springs to Boston. Held, (1), that the legal duty of the company, as carrier, was not only to carry safely to Castleton, but there to deliver the box to the next connecting road in the line; (2), that the non-arrival of the box in Boston, and its loss, were sufficient prima facie evidence of negligence to throw upon the company the burden of proving the delivery to the next carrier at Castleton. Brintnall v. Sar. & Whitehall R. Co., 82 Vt. 665.

115. Where liability as carrier ends. The responsibility of the carrier of goods, as a common carrier, continues after the arrival of the goods at the place of destination, until they are ready to be delivered at the usual place of delivery, and the owner or consignee has had a reasonable opportunity, during the hours when such goods are usually delivered there, of examining them so far as to judge from their outward appearance of their identity and whether they are in a proper condition, and to take them away; and it is the duty of the owner, or consignee, under the contract of carriage, to take notice of the course of business at the station of delivery, and of the time of the arrival of the train when his goods may be expected at the place of delivery, and to be ready to receive them in a reasonable time after their arrival and when in the common course of business they may be fairly expected to be ready for delivery. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402. 42 Vt. 705.

116. This reasonable opportunity is not to have reference to the peculiar situation and circumstances of the consignee, but is to be such as would give to a person residing in the vicinity of the place of delivery, and informed of the usual course of business in the matter of the unloading and delivery of goods of that character, and also informed of the time when the goods may be expected to arrive, suitable opportunity, within the usual business hours for delivering such goods after they had been placed in readiness for such delivery, to come to the place of delivery, inspect the goods, and take them away. Id.

117. After the goods are ready for delivery, and the owner or consignee has had a reasonable opportunity, during the hours when such goods are usually delivered, to examine and remove them, it then becomes the duty of the carrier, if the goods are not called for, to store and preserve them safely and in readiness for delivery when duly called for; and then the carrier is released from his responsibility as a common carrier, and becomes liable as a warehouse-man. Id.

118. Where the goods arriving by railroad had remained in store ready for delivery to the consignee for seven days, and were then stolen;—Held, that the responsibility of the railroad company, as common carrier, had ceased before the theft. Id.

119. Negligence—Burden of proof. In an action against a railway company for neglect to carry goods through to their destination with proper dispatch, the case rested upon the question of the exercise by the defendant of ordinary care and diligence. Held, that the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove the want of such care and diligence; but that an unusual and unexplained delay and failure to deliver the goods according to the general course of business were sufficient prima facie evidence of such want of ordinary care. Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 326; and see Day v. Ridley, 16 Vt. 48. Brintnall v. Sar. & W. R. Co. 82 Vt. 665.

120. Carriage beyond their own road. Railroad companies, as common carriers, may make valid contracts to receive freight at, or to convey it to, points beyond the limits of their own road, either by land or water, and thus become liable for the acts and neglects of other carriers, not under their control. Noyes v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 27 Vt. 110. Form. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 28 Vt. 186. Morse v. Brainerd, 41 Vt. 550.

121. Such contract may be express or implied. Vermont courts have not gone to the extent of holding, with the English courts, that the receipt of goods destined and directed to a point beyond the line of their own road, imports an obligation of the company to deliver at the place of destination; but only to transport and deliver to the next connecting road; unless there is a stipulation express or implied to deliver at a point beyond. Morse v. Brainerd.

122. A contract so to transport safely and deliver was implied from the circumstances of this case, viz.: That the several connecting railroads had a business arrangement by which they constituted one line of transportation; that property was sent through without change of cars, and at a single through price, fixed at the place of departure and paid in gross at either end of the route; and that the property was billed through as "from Swanton, Vt., to Medford, Mass.," and was so upon the way-bill, &c. Id.

123. The station agent at Ludlow on the defendant's railroad billed the plaintiff's goods through to Charlestown, Mass., a point upon a connecting railroad, and gave a receipt of payment for "transporting the goods from Ludlow to Charlestown." This was the usual course of business upon the defendant's road. Held, that these facts were properly submitted to the jury as tending to prove a contract to transport the goods through to Charlestown. Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 326.

124. A railroad company received for transportation a box of goods directed to a place beyond the terminus of its own road, and gave and signed a receipt therefor, as follows: "Vermont Central Railroad Co., Burlington, Sept. 13, 1866. (Mark and Numbers, W. R. Lewis, Brooklyn, Iowa.) Received from W. R. Lewis 1 Box, weight 850, numbered and marked as above, which the company promises to forward by its railroad, and deliver to ——— or order, at its depot in ——— he or they first paying freight for the same, at the rate customary per ton of 2,000 pounds. N. B. If merchandise be not called for on its arrival, it will be stored at the expense and risk of the owner." Held, by a majority, that the receipt constituted a contract to carry the box to its ultimate destination, Brooklyn, Iowa; but Barrett, J., contending, that the contract would be performed by transporting the box to the terminus of the defendant's railroad, and that the duty of the defendant would then be to deliver the box for further transit according to the established rules and usages of the business. Cutts v. Brainerd, 42 Vt. 566.

125. A carrier of passengers by railroad rightfully running his cars over the railroad of another, but over which he has no control beyond that of running his own cars upon it, is not liable for an injury to a passenger upon that road, occasioned without his fault or that of his own servants, but caused by the misconduct or negligence of the servants of that road over whom he had no control. Sprague v. Smith, 29 Vt. 421.

126. Different rules of liability of railroad companies as carriers of freight, and of passengers, beyond the line of their own road, considered. Id.

127. Through ticket. Where the plaintiff at Boston called for and purchased a through railroad ticket from Boston to Troy, which route passed over several connecting railroads, and, by a common arrangement, through tickets were sold at a less price (which the plaintiff knew) than separate tickets for the same distance, and the ticket was stamped "Boston to Troy—Good for this day and train only," and the plaintiff had used it for a part of that distance only;—Held, that one of such connecting roads could lawfully refuse to carry the plaintiff upon said ticket, offered on a subsequent day and occasion, over the remainder of the route to Troy. Shedd v. Troy & Boston R. Co., 40 Vt. 88.

128. The plaintiff bought a ticket over (among others) the defendant's railroad, with checks attached, reading: "Good for one first-class passage only on presentation of this ticket with checks attached." On his route over defendant's road the conductor detached and retained one of the checks, and gave him instead a conductor's check, which was equivalent. Before arriving at the point where the conductor's check would take him, another conductor took the train, and called for his fare, or the production of the check. The plaintiff had lost the conductor's check, and could not produce it, and so informed the conductor, and refused to pay his fare, whereupon the conductor ejected him from the cars. Held, that he was lawfully ejected. Jerome v. Smith, 48 Vt. 280.

129. Arrival of baggage. In regard to passengers' baggage which has reached its final destination by railroad, it is the duty of the company, upon its arrival, to have it ready for delivery upon the platform at the usual place of delivery until the owner can, in the use of due diligence, call for and receive it; and the owner must call for it within a reasonable time. If he does not within a reasonable time call for it, the liability of the company as carrier ceases. The company should then put it in their baggage room and keep it for the owner, and their custody of it then is only that of warehouseman. Ouimit v. Henshaw, 85 Vt. 605. (See Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 88 Vt. 402).

130. The usual course of business and practice of a railroad company as to the delivery, transfer or storage of baggage, is a most important element in determining when the transit ends. Ouimit v. Henshaw.

131. A passenger arriving with baggage by cars at a railroad station, is justified in regarding the man who handles and takes charge of the baggage on the arrival of that train, as the agent of the company which has brought the passenger there, the baggage master of the station; and notice by the passenger to him while handling the baggage, in regard to the destination of the baggage, is notice to the company. Id.

132. What is baggage. A box containing a bed, pillows, bolster and bedquilts, all of small value, belonging to a poor man, and which accompany him while moving with his wife and family by railroad conveyance, may properly be called baggage. Id.

2. For negligence.

133. Negligence of fellow servant. The plaintiff's intestate, who was an engine driver on the defendant's railroad, was killed by an explosion of the locomotive which he was running, such explosion occurring in consequence of the neglect of the defendant's master mechanic to keep the locomotive in proper repair, it being his duty to inspect, superintend and direct all such repairs. The defendant's directors were not guilty of any neglect in furnishing the road with suitable machinery and men and means for repairs, and were ignorant of any defect in the locomotive, and the master mechanic was skillful and competent. In an action by the administrator to recover damages, under the statute, for the death;—Held, that the defendant was not liable. Hard v. Vt. & Canada R. Co., 82 Vt. 478.

134. It is the duty of a railroad company to see to it that the road is equipped with sufficient, suitable and safe engines, all requisite machinery and materials, and of the necessary quality, and men of the knowledge, skill, care and capacity necessary for the full, perfect and faithful discharge of all the duties that appertain to the positions they severally occupy. For the faithful discharge of this obligation, the company is holden to each and every person whom it employs in the business of running the road. Having done this, there is no implied warranty, towards its servants, that each shall faithfully discharge his duty—as, to keep the machinery in its original safe condition;—and the company is not, in such case, liable to one of its servants for injuries occasioned to him by the carelessness or unfaithfulness of a co-servant, where both are engaged in the same general business—as, in running the trains upon the road—although the servant in fault is superior in employment to the one injured. Ib.

135. The defendants, a railroad company, had an agreement with the R. & W. R. Co., for their mutual interest and convenience, that the R. & W. R. Co. might run their engines and trains over a section of the defendants' road, upon which there was a side track leading into a gravel pit, and a switch, of which the defendants had the exclusive management and control. The plaintiff, an engineer of the R. & W. R. Co., in running his engine over this road, was turned upon the side track and thrown off and injured, by reason of a misplacement of the switch through the negligence of the defendants' servants. Held, that the plaintiff was lawfully upon and in use of the defendants' road, and that the defendants' owed towards him, as such, the duty of protection from their negligence; and that he was entitled to recover. Sawyer v. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., 27 Vt. 370.

136. Held, also, that the plaintiff and the defendants' switch tender were not fellow servants. Ib. (2 Law Rep. Ex. 30.)

137. Cattle, &c., wrongfully on road. A railroad company is responsible for recklessness, want of common care, or wanton injury to persons or property, though unlawfully upon the railroad. Jackson v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 25 Vt. 150. Bemis v. Conn. & Pass. R. Co., 42 Vt. 375. Trow v. Vt. Central R. Co., 24 Vt. 487. Morse v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 27 Vt. 49.

138. In an action against a railroad company for negligently running their engine whereby the plaintiff's horse was injured upon the track;—Held, that it was not incumbent on the plaintiff, in opening his case, to prove that according to the ordinary rules and customary management of railroads, the defendants were guilty of want of ordinary care, but if the defendants desired the benefit of the rules of engineering for their exculpation, they might show the custom; and if not unreasonable, of which the jury must judge, it would avail them. Quimby v. Vt. Central R. Co., 23 Vt. 387.

139. In an action against a railroad company for injury to the plaintiff's horse by the running of a locomotive engine, the court charged that the defendants were bound to the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, "such, for instance, as a man of ordinary prudence would use who was the owner of both the road and the horse." This illustration is in most cases just, but not entirely applicable to such a case. The defendant, however, has no reason to complain of it, but only the plaintiff. Ib.

140. The plaintiff's oxen lying upon a railroad track which ran through the plaintiff's farm, were run over and killed by a passing train. Upon these facts alone,—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence to charge the railroad company, and this could not be presumed. Lyndsay v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. 27 Vt. 643.

141. Where an animal is wrongfully on a railroad track as a train is approaching, the first and paramount duty of the company and its servants, when danger is apprehended from such obstruction, is towards the safety of persons and property on the train, or otherwise lawfully on the track; and as to such, the law demands the highest degree of care and diligence. The next object of attention is the safety of their own property. While discharging these higher obligations and duties, they are to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to the trespasser; but such ordinary care does not require nor allow them to run any risk to life or property on the train, but must be consistent with such higher obligations. Bemis v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 42 Vt. 375.

142. Railroad companies are not bound to regulate the general speed of their trains on the assumption that the track will be unlawfully obstructed. Ib. 379.

143. If an engineer uses such means as are usually sufficient to drive cattle from the track without unnecessary injury, the company should not be held liable for injury to cattle unlawfully upon the track, though he misjudged as to the best means to be used. Ib. 381.

144. If the train is running at its usual speed, the mere fact that its speed is not checked while approaching the animal, or the mere fact that the engineer does not see it until so near that he cannot avoid the accident, does not tend to prove want of care as to the animal; and whether the engineer should stop the train, check its speed, or even increase the speed, depends upon what the safety of the passengers and train requires, and whatever this requires, is allowable as to property wrongfully on the track. Ib.

145. In an action for running over and killing the plaintiff's bull by the defendants' engine, the court charged the jury that the defendants were bound to exercise due care in the speed of their train, to use due vigilance while running the train in looking out for obstacles on the track, and due diligence in checking the speed if animals were seen wrongfully on the track; and that if, by the exercise of such degree of diligence, the engineer would have perceived the animal in a position where danger should reasonably have been apprehended, he should have so checked his speed as to avoid the accident, if in his power. Held, that the charge was calculated to mislead the jury and was erroneous, and judgment for the plaintiff was reversed. Ib.

146. Mutual negligence. Where the plaintiff suffered his horse to run in the highway near a railroad crossing, and the horse getting upon the track was killed by a passing train, and there was no evidence of negligence in the manner of running the train at the time;—Held, as matter of law, that the plaintiff was guilty of such negligence that he could not recover, although the defendant company was guilty of negligence in not having fenced its road—this being a case of mutual negligence of equally remote degree. Trou v. Vt. Central R. Co., 24 Vt. 487.

147. Remote cause. In an action against a railroad company for neglect to keep a fence along their track, whereby the plaintiff's horse escaped from his pasture upon the track, and thence into a rocky pasture where he got hurt and lamed upon a rock, the court charged, that "if the jury were satisfied that there was a clear connection between the escape of the horse and the injury received, then the plaintiff could recover," &c. Held erroneous, for not distinguishing between a direct and a remote connection between the defendants' neglect and the injury; that the defendants were liable only for the natural and direct consequences of their neglect, and whether the consequence in this case was a natural and direct, or a remote and accidental consequence, was a question of fact for the jury upon the circumstances of the case. Holden v. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., 30 Vt. 297.

148. In such case, if the defendants, in the exercise of such care and judgment as a prudent owner of the horse would have used, ought to have foreseen that the horse escaping might reasonably be expected to get into such a pasture and so get injured, this would be the direct and immediate consequence of the defendants' neglect, and they would be liable; but if the probability of an injury from such causes was so remote as not to be reasonably expected by any one in the exercise of such prudence, then the result would be properly attributable to chance and accident, and they would not be liable. Ib. 304; and see Saxton v. Bacon, 31 Vt. 540.

149. Ringling bell. G. S. c. 28, ss. 55, 56, requiring the ringing of the bell or blowing of the whistle of locomotive engines for at least 80 rods from road crossings, imposes a duty towards all persons who, being lawfully at or in the vicinity of the crossing, may be subjected to accident and injury by the passing of the engine at that place, though such persons be not approaching, or in the act of passing, the crossing;—as, where the traveler had passed the crossing and was driving his team on the highway near to and parallel with the railroad track and 85 rods distant from the crossing, and his horses took fright from an approaching train, whose approach was not duly signaled, and ran and were injured. Wakefield v. Conn. & Pass. R. Co., 37 Vt. 380.

150. There may be cases where, under this statute, the railroad company would be justified in omitting to ring, or to blow, as where to do so would increase the peril to the traveler. In order to excuse the omission, it would not be enough to show that the engineer exercised an honest good faith and intention, but, as matter of defense, the company must show that the omission in the given case, in view of the actual condition of things at the time, was in fact reasonable and prudent. Ib.

151. Communicating fires. In an action against a railroad company for damage from fire communicated by their locomotive engine, the plaintiff put in evidence "that engines of proper construction and suitable repair would not scatter fire so as to endanger property;" and the defendant had put in evidence "that an engine [of theirs] was never suffered to go on a trip when not in good condition, or when defective in the ash or fire-pan and dampers, or in the screen or smoke-stack, which are the only places where the fire can escape." Held, that it was competent for the plaintiff then to prove "that on or about the time of the fire the engines used by the defendant, running past the buildings which were burned, generally and habitually scattered fire from the ash pans and smoke-stacks." Cleveland v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 42 Vt. 449.

152. In an action on the case against railway managers for setting fire to the plaintiff's timber lands in the running of the trains, it is no objection to the declaration, on special demurrer, that it sets forth a deed, under which, as claimed, the managers assumed the risk of all such fires, the declaration averring that the defendants so negligently and carelessly managed their engines that said timber lands were thereby set on fire. Sargent v. Birchard, 48 Vt. 570.

153. A quære. Whether any different rule of law applies to cases of injuries upon railroads from those applicable to injuries upon highways, viz.: as to affirmative proof of due care by the plaintiff; and as to whether the question of negligence is one of law, or one of fact, in the particular case—quære. See Swift v. Newbury, 36 Vt. 359. Hill v. New Haven, 37 Vt. 509.

154. Platform. The plaintiff was rightfully at a railroad depot in the evening for the purpose of taking passage on the cars. Beside other approaches to the platform, there were stairs at the north end leading to the street, which were open at the top as if for use. These stairs and a platform at the bottom of them, about four feet from the ground, had been constructed by the express company for its sole use, but were on the premises of the railroad company and under its control. The plaintiff, in attempting to pass down these stairs in the dark to the street, without fault on her part, fell from this lower platform to the ground, but striking beyond the limits of the railroad premises, and was injured. Held, that the railroad company was liable. Beard v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 48 Vt. 101.

VIII. SUITS BY AND AGAINST.

155. Residence. The residence of a railway corporation, for the purpose of its bringing suits, is the county and town upon the line of its road where its principal office is situated, as the centre of its business operations. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Cooper, 30 Vt. 476.

156. Agent for service of process. Held, that an agent appointed by non-resident railroad trustees for the receiving of service of process, under G. S. c. 28, s. 118, continued such where his appointment had not been revoked, although his certificate had not been annually renewed as required by the statute. Hamilton v. Wilder, 31 Vt. 695.

157. Jurisdiction. The courts of Vermont, as well as of Massachusetts, have jurisdiction of a railroad corporation which exists and operates its railroad under and by virtue of acts of the legislature of each State, and where the road is a continuous line located wholly within the two States, being partly in each. Richardson v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 44 Vt. 613.

158. Indictment. An indictment cannot be sustained against a railroad corporation for the obstructing of a highway by its cars, while the railroad is under the sole management of a receiver in chancery, over whose acts the corporation has no control. State v. Vt. Central R. Co., 30 Vt. 106.

159. Under a statute prohibiting certain offenses against the property of "any railroad corporation," an indictment alleged the acts as committed against "the Vermont Central Railroad Company." Held insufficient, for that the expression "railroad company" does not ex vi termini import a corporation more than a voluntary association. Nor is this aided, in pleading, by the fact that the charter of the "Vermont Central Railroad Company" declares it to be a public act. State v. Mead, 37 Vt. 722.

160. Suit on bonds and coupons. Railway bonds and coupons are held to be negotiable, and, like promissory notes, bills of exchange and bank bills, when received as money, are treated as money, and form the basis of a recovery upon the common money counts. So held as to railroad bonds. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Newell, 31 Vt. 384.

161. Pleading. In an action against a railroad company, the declaration, after alleging the duty and neglect of the defendants to maintain a fence along their track, averred that "for want of such fence a horse of the plaintiff escaped from his pasture and went at large, and, by means of going at large as aforesaid, the horse was greatly injured, &c." Held, that though this declaration might have been ill on demurrer for its generality and uncertainty, it was sufficient on motion in arrest. Holden v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 30 Vt. 297.

162. A declaration against certain individuals to recover damages for cattle killed by an engine which the defendants were running upon the Vt. & Canada railroad, of which road they were in the possession, use and occupation, by reason of the want of cattle guards and fences which they had neglected to build, did not allege that the defendants were a corporation or the agents of a corporation, or trustees, lessees or mortgagees, or in what capacity they were running the railroad. This was held ill on demurrer;—that the facts alleged did not impose upon the defendants the legal duty to make or maintain fences or cattle guards; and that the averment in the declaration, that by reason of so using the railroad the defendants were bound to make and maintain fences and cattle guards, was not an allegation of a fact, but an attempt to draw a legal conclusion from what was previously alleged. Cooley v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 894. G. S. c. 28, s. 47.

REAL PROPERTY.

1. Severance—Manure. Manure is not necessarily real estate. It may be real, or personal, according to the circumstances in which it is placed. When lying upon the soil where it was first dropped, without severance, it is a part of the soil, like a clod of earth, loose stones, or fallen and decaying vegetation, and is real estate. When severed from the soil, gathered up and secured for use elsewhere, it is merely a personal chattel. Wheeler, J., in French v. Freeman, 48 Vt. 95.

2. So of other articles severed from the land and designed for removal and use elsewhere. Stone v. Proctor, 2 D. Chip. 114. Noble v. Sylvester, 42 Vt. 146. Yale v. Seely, 15 Vt. 231.

3. The owner of a farm sold all the manure upon it, agreeing to collect it and put it in a heap for the purchaser upon another part of the farm. He did so collect and deposit the manure, and received part payment therefor. Before the removal of the manure by the purchaser, the farm owner sold and conveyed the farm without reservation, and without any knowledge on the part of the grantee that the manure had been sold. Held, that the manure was not an appurtenance which passed with the farm, but had become a personal chattel and was at the time of the conveyance the property of the purchaser of the manure. French v. Freeman, 48 Vt. 93.

4. Fixtures. Whether fixtures remain personal property or become part of the realty, should be determinable and should plainly appear from an inspection of the property itself, taking into consideration their nature, the mode and extent of their annexation, and their purpose and object, from which the intention would be indicated. Hill v. Wentworth, 28 Vt. 428. Sweetser v. Jones, 35 Vt. 322.

5. A chattel does not lose its identity as personalty by annexation to the freehold, unless substantially annexed in a manner which will not permit it to be separated without material injury to itself, or to the freehold. Nailing a case of drawers to the wall of a building, does not change their character as personalty. Cross v. Marston, 17 Vt. 533. Hill v. Wentworth.

6. Buildings erected for temporary use by persons other than the owner of the soil, and not intended for permanent fixtures, may in some cases be considered and treated as personal property; but, as between vendor and vendee, heir and executor, mortgagor and mortgagee, all buildings which enhance the value of the estate, and are designed to be occupied by the owner thereof, agreeably to the principles of the common law, become a part of the realty and pass with it by deed, or by descent. Leland v. Gassett, 17 Vt. 403. Preston v. Briggs, 16 Vt. 124. 30 Vt. 756.

7. Where the defendant's son, at his own cost, erected buildings upon land of the defendant and by his license, and under an agreement that the son might occupy the same, and that the defendant would at some time convey the land to him;—Held, that such buildings became real estate, and that the administrator of the son could not maintain trover for the buildings, upon the defendant's refusing to allow the administrator to occupy them, or to remove them, and refusing to pay for them. Leland v. Gassett.

8. The question whether a structure [as a house] is to be regarded as part of the freehold, or not, is [as to a purchaser] to be determined by its character and manner of erection, and not by the fact that it was erected and is owned by some one other than the owner of the soil, and that such other person has the right to remove it. Powers v. Dennison, 30 Vt. 752.

9. A dwelling erected under a parol license upon the land of another, over a cellar partially dug and stoned, is part of the freehold, and passes by a deed of the land to a purchaser having no notice of the license. Id.

10. Where the defendant for his own use erected a building upon the land of another by his parol license, but to be removed upon notice of the latter, and the building was so erected as to become affixed to the freehold;—Held, that for the removal of the building he was liable in trespass to a mortgagee of the land, who had taken his mortgage after such erection and without notice of such license, when the building was removed after the expiration of a decree of foreclosure of the mortgage and the plaintiff had entered into possession under his decree. Id.

11. Double windows and window blinds made to be used in a house, but not actually put in place and fastened, nor otherwise annexed to it, and not known of by the purchaser of the house, were held not to pass by deed of the house. Peck v. Batchelder, 40 Vt. 233.

12. Where a farm was leased on which was a hop-yard, but no hop-poles, and the tenant purchased poles and set them in the ground for his crop;—Held, that as against the landlord and him who had taken a deed of the farm while the tenant was so in possession, he had a right, during his term, to take up and remove and appropriate the poles to his own use. Wing v. Gray, 36 Vt. 261.

13. Potash kettles set in brick arches in an ashery, in the usual way for use, with chimneys to the arches, and capable of being taken out without any essential injury to the brick work, are chattels. Wetherby v. Foster, 5 Vt. 136.

14. Carding machines in a woolen factory, connected by a band with other wheels in motion, and which remained stationary by their own weight without fastening, were held, as between mortgagee and creditor of the mortgagor, to be chattels, although the machines could not be removed without taking them in pieces. Tobias v. Francis, 3 Vt. 425.

15. Machinery in a woolen factory, affixed to the building in the usual manner, some parts with nails, some with spikes and screws, and some with cleats, was held, as between mortgagee and creditor of the mortgagor, to be chattels. Sturgis v. Warren, 11 Vt. 433.

16. If articles of machinery, used in a factory for manufacturing purposes, are only attached to the building to keep them steady and in their place, so that their use, as chattels, may be more beneficial, and are attached in such a way that they can be removed without any essential injury to the freehold, or to the articles themselves, they still remain personal property. Hill v. Wentworth, 28 Vt. 428. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 452. Bartlett v. Wood, 32 Vt. 372. Sweetzer v. Jones, 35 Vt. 317.

17. An iron boiler of a paper-mill, set in brickwork laid on a stone foundation placed upon the ground, the floor of the building laid up to it, but in no other way attached; engines in the same mill for grinding rags into pulp, fixed in large oval tubs, in the usual way—the tubs standing on timbers, and the floor of the building scribed up to them, and the engines operated by a band connecting with the iron shafting which communicated the motive power; and other articles of machinery which, although placed and used in the mill, and designed to remain there permanently, and necessary and usual for manufacturing paper, were attached to the building and kept in place only by nails, spikes, screws, nuts, or cleats, were held, as between mortgagee and creditor of the mortgagor, to be chattels. Hill v. Wentworth.

18. Shafting in a mill for the purpose of turning and putting in motion the machinery, put up by means of hangers of iron bolted to the beams and sills of the building, is a constituent part of the mill as realty, as a water wheel would be. Id. So, as to shafting and pulleys. Harris v. Haynes, 34 Vt. 220.

19. The steam boilers of a mill, set in brick work, and the arch mouth and grate, the engine, and the shafting and pulleys, all annexed to the mill for the purpose of furnishing motive power to the machinery of the mill, were held to be part of the realty, as between mortgagee and the purchaser from the mortgagor. Harris v. Haynes; and as between mortgagee and creditor of the mortgagor. Sweetzer v. Jones, 35 Vt. 317.

20. Where machinery to be used for a mill is sold upon the condition that it shall remain the vendor's property until paid for, but it is understood that it is to be put to use in advance of the payment of the price, and to be so annexed to the realty as to become apparently parcel thereof and it is thereafter so annexed;—Held, that the same will pass to a subsequent mortgagee of the mill and machinery as against the conditional vendor, where such mortgagee advances his money and takes his mortgage after such annexation, without notice of such claim of the conditional vendor. Davenport v. Shants, 43 Vt. 546.

21. But as to other parts of the machinery not so annexed until after such mortgage;—Held, that the conditional vendor has the superior equity. Id.

22. Recaption. The right of the owner of a chattel to reclaim it, when wrongfully taken from him or appropriated, does not exist where it has lost its identity, or has been annexed to the freehold. Jackson v. Walton, 28 Vt. 43.

See DEED OF LANDS, 74 et seq.

RECOGNIZANCE.

- I. IN GENERAL.
- II. ON APPEAL FROM A JUSTICE.
- III. ON PETITION: REVIEW; ERROR.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Authority to take. The power to take a recognizance, with any legal condition, is incident to every common law court of record. Young v. Shaw, 1 D. Chip. 224.

2. It is incident to every court having criminal jurisdiction, not only to bring the offender before them, but to take bail for his appearance in such form as shall secure the object intended, to wit: the appearance of the accused at all times when required. State Treasurer v. Rolfe, 15 Vt. 9.

3. Irregular and void. A recognizance taken for a purpose not authorized by law, or where the court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter, or authority to act, is void. State Treasurer v. Wells, 27 Vt. 278. Same v. Danforth, Brayt. 140.

4. A recognizance given in a criminal case, where the justice omitted to make a minute of the time when the complaint was exhibited, was held void. State Treasurer v. Cook, 6 Vt. 282. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

5. Although by statute, judgment for costs may be rendered against the plaintiff when the proceedings are dismissed for want of jurisdiction of the subject matter, yet held, that the recognizance taken in such case for costs, &c., was void, and no recovery thereon could be had for the costs. State Treasurer v. Wells, 27 Vt. 278.

6. A recognizance taken by a judge conditioned for the appearance of a prisoner to the county court, where the case had already passed to the supreme court on exceptions, was held void, although the supreme court afterwards remanded the case to the county court for a new trial. State Treasurer v. Seaver, 7 Vt. 480.

7. A recognizance for the appearance of a respondent at a time when no term of the court was to be holden, where there was nothing in the record itself to aid an intendment that the proper term was intended, was held void; as, where it was returnable to the last Tuesday save one "in 1840," and the true term was the last Tuesday save one in August, 1840. State Treasurer v. Merrill, 14 Vt. 64.

8. A recognizance for one's appearance to the county court to answer for a violation of the license law of 1846, was required to be taken to the State treasurer. Where taken to the county treasurer, although the penalty went to the county treasurer, an action was held not to lie upon it in the name of such treasurer. Treasurer of Chittenden Co. v. Mitchell, 23 Vt. 181.

9. Informal. Under statutes authorizing the taking of a recognizance for the "appearance" of a party accused, or a witness;—Held, that adding to the word "appear," the words: and remain from day to day and time to time, and abide the order of the court in the premises, and not depart without leave of the court, did not avoid the recognizance, for that such was its legal effect; and that the recognizance to "appear" remains in force until discharged by order of court, or until the prosecution is ended. State Treasurer v. Rolfe, 15 Vt. 9. State Treasurer v. Woodward, 7 Vt. 529. (So now by G. S. c. 124, s. 28.)

10. A recognizance in a criminal case was taken in vacation before a judge of Franklin county court. The venue in the margin was, "State of Vermont, Franklin county, ss.;" and, in the body of the recognizance, it was stated that the principal was confined in jail "in St. Albans," and that both recognizors personally appeared before the subscribing authority. Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the recognizance was entered into in Franklin county, within the local jurisdiction of the magistrate taking it—the court taking judicial notice that St. Albans was in Franklin county. State Treasurer v. Bishop, 39 Vt. 358.

11. It was objected to a recognizance in a criminal case, that it did not show when and where the offense was committed. Held sufficient in this case, and that it is not necessary to recite in detail all the proceedings before the justice, and that their regularity would be intended. Id.

12. Return to county court. The original recognizance taken by a justice on binding up to the county court for trial is not required to be returned to the county court, but only a copy, as part of his record. State Treasurer v. Pierce, 2 D. Chip. 106.

13. A recognizance taken of a prisoner in jail by a judge in vacation, becomes, on being returned and filed in the county court, part of the record, and requires no enrollment by the clerk. Upon an issue of nul tiel record, an inspection, in the same court, of the original recognizance is the proper evidence. Blood v. Morrill, 17 Vt. 598.

14. A recognizance taken in a criminal case in vacation, is not defeated by a neglect of the judge to return it to the county court "before the next succeeding term," as required by G. S. c. 124, s. 14, where it is returned during such term, and such neglect has not operated, and could not operate, to the recognizer's prejudice. This provision is designed for the convenience of the State, and not for the benefit of the recognizer. State Treasurer v. Bishop, 39 Vt. 353.

II. ON APPEAL FROM A JUSTICE.

15. By what person given. Under a statute requiring the party claiming an appeal to become recognized with sufficient surety, a recognizance entered into in behalf of such party is sufficient, though not joined in by such party. Chittenden v. Catlin, 2 D. Chip. 22.

16. The security by way of recognizance to be given by a party appealing from a justice's judgment (G. S. c. 81, s. 66), must be the recognizance of some person other than the appellant. A recognizance in this form, "J M [the appellant], as principal, and $50 cash deposited with the court as surety, recognized, &c.," is insufficient. Cheney v. McLellan, 43 Vt. 157. Wheeler, J., dissenting.

17. The condition. The condition of a recognizance for an appeal, "that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and pay all intervening damages, and additional costs in case of failure," is, in legal effect, the same as prescribed by the statute. Way v. Swift, 12 Vt. 390.

18. A justice's record of a recognizance taken on an appeal granted, was expressed to be "for the prosecution of the appeal in due form of law." Held sufficient, as embracing the statute conditions by implication. McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 562.

19. Minute not a record. A declaration in scire facias upon a recognizance for an appeal, setting out the condition in the words of the statute, is not sustained, upon a plea of nul tiel record, by a record of the usual minute made by the justice upon allowing the appeal,—as, A B recognized, &c., for the prosecution of the appeal in due form of law. Such a minute is not a record that can be declared upon as a record of recognizance. Brackett v. McLeran, 28 Vt. 90.

20. Liability of recognizer. The bail for an appeal from a justice judgment, where the appellee finally recovers, is liable on his recognizance for all costs following the appeal, and so much of the debt as is lost by the delay occasioned by the appeal. Hubbard v. Davis, 1 Aik. 296.

21. In an action on a recognizance for an appeal, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, as "intervening damages," the value of his chance of collecting his debt which he has lost by the appeal, and he is to be made as well off as if no appeal had been taken. To estimate this, the state of the appellant's property at and from the time of the appeal until final judgment, is to be considered. McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 562;—although such property was out of the State, and, by afterwards disposing of it, the appellant had qualified himself to take the poor debtor's oath. Richardson v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 757.

22. In an action against the surety in a recognizance for an appeal, to recover intervening damages;—Held, that the fact that the principal had, at a previous date, given in property to be set in his list at $600, tended to prove that he then had property to that amount; and that this act of the principal was equally evidence against the surety. Id.

23. The recognizance to pay "intervening damages" and costs occasioned by an appeal from a justice, in a case under Stat. of 1797 for wrongfully holding over demised premises, does not embrace the rents and profits accruing during the pendency of the appeal. Drew v. Chamberlin, 19 Vt. 578.

24. It is no bar to a scire facias upon a recognizance given on an appeal, that the plaintiff has a remedy for the intervening damages and costs against the sheriff who attached the appellant's property on the original writ. Holmes v. Woodruff, 20 Vt. 97. 1 D. Chip. 388.

25. But in such case, held, that the defendant could use in mitigation of the intervening damages, the probable value of the claim which the plaintiff had against the sheriff, for having suffered the property of the principal, attached by him upon the original writ, to be eloiigned—the attachment being the prior security. Holmes v. Woodruff.

26. Where, on an appeal from a justice, judgment was recovered in the county court by the appellee, and upon that judgment a second judgment was recovered, and the debtor was committed to jail thereon, but the judgment was not satisfied;—Held, that the bail for the appeal remained still liable on his recognizance. Hubbard v. Davis, 1 Aik. 296.

27. A feme sole administratrix gave a recognizance for an appeal, in which the defendant joined as surety. Held, that her marriage before the appeal was entered in court did not affect the defendant's obligation upon the recognizance. Burnham v. Bass, 5 Vt. 463.

28. Where a suit is discontinued by the death of the defendant and the appointment of commissioners, the recognizance taken on the defendant's appeal is discharged. Peaks v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 317.

29. Otherwise, where no commissioners are appointed and the administrator enters to defend, in a case where the cause of action survives. Mott v. Hazen, 27 Vt. 208.

30. Where an appeal from a justice judgment is carried up by neither party, the suit is discontinued, and no action lies on the recognizance taken on the appeal. Love v. Estes, 6 Vt. 286. 35 Vt. 27. (By Stats. 1865 and 1866 an appeal only suspends the judgment.)

31. Action. In order to maintain an action upon a recognizance given for an appeal, it is not necessary that an execution should have been taken out upon the judgment rendered on the appeal. Page v. Johnson, 1 D. Chip. 388. 20 Vt. 103.

32. In an action on a recognizance of bail for an appeal, it is not necessary to aver that the judgment against the original debtor, or the intervening damages, or costs, remain unsatisfied. If paid, that is matter of defense. Way v. Swift, 12 Vt. 390. (Contra to Page v. Johnson, 1 D. Chip. 388.)

33. A judgment of forfeiture of a recognizance is conclusive in a scire facias brought to enforce the recognizance. State v. Nichols, 43 Vt. 91.

34. Assessment by jury. After judgment by default upon a recognizance, taken for an appeal, the court denied the motion of the plaintiff to have the sum due assessed by the jury. Held erroneous. Benham v. Sage, 1 D. Chip. 247. (G. S. c. 30, s. 68.)

III. ON PETITION; REVIEW; ERROR.

35. On petition. A recognizance taken by a judge upon a petition to the county court to set aside a justice's judgment, becomes a security in the principal action, if a new trial is granted; and becomes a record in the supreme court, if the suit is finally determined there. (G. S. c. 38, s. 9.) Shumway v. Sargeant, 27 Vt. 440.

36. On review. A recognizer for a review becomes absolutely liable for the costs occasioned by the review to the extent of his recognizance; and to charge him, no execution need be issued against the principal debtor, nor any effort be made to collect the judgment of him. Though property was attached, the result is the same, since the remedies of the creditor, as well as the liabilities of the officer and of the recognizer, are distinct and independent. Held, that a receptor, taking an assignment from the judgment creditor, might in the creditor's name recover of the recognizer upon his recognizance. Smith v. Ingraham, 22 Vt. 414.

37. The mere affirmance of a judgment reviewed is not a breach of the recognizance for a review. The condition of the recognizance is not broken, unless intervening damages have been sustained, or additional costs recovered; and in an action on the recognizance, such fact must be averred in the declaration. Brown v. Clark, 28 Vt. 690. S. C. 27 Vt. 576.

38. In scire facias upon a recognizance given for a review, where the reviewer was wholly destitute of property at the time of the review, and so continued;—Held, that as no damage had accrued from the loss of any part of the debt, the plaintiff could not recover the accrued interest as "intervening damages." Roberts v. Warner, 17 Vt. 46.

39. Extra expense in procuring witnesses, and of employing counsel, and time and money necessarily expended in defense of a suit, are not "intervening damages," within the meaning of those words in a recognizance for a review. Peasey v. Buckminster, 1 Tyl. 264.

40. Bail for a review was held not discharged by the death of the reviewer, where the suit proceeded to judgment against his administrator. Hoy v. Herrington, Brayt. 36.

41. The county court has the power to change the bail taken for a review, and the substituted bail will be held for the cost and intervening damages accruing from the time the review was granted; but the exercise of this power is discretionary, and not the subject of exception. Colgate v. Hill, 20 Vt. 56.

42. Appeal to supreme court. A declaration upon a recognizance entered into in the supreme court, in a cause where the court had appellate jurisdiction only, was held good on demurrer, though it was not averred that the cause came to that court by appeal. Treasurer v. French, Brayt. 140.

43. In error. Bail on a writ of error, recognized that the plaintiff in error shall prosecute his writ to effect "and answer all damages and costs if he shall fail," &c., is liable only for the actual damages occasioned by the delay, and the costs. Brace v. Squire, 2 D. Chip. 49.

44. The condition of a recognizance for the prosecution of a writ of error is satisfied by a reversal of the judgment on error, although the defendant in error may again recover in the original action, and suffer damage by the delay. Smith v. Keyes, 2 Aik. 77.

See PROCESS I., 2.

RECORD.

1. Authority to make record. One who has been county clerk has no authority, after the expiration of his office, to complete a record commenced by him while in office. Such authority is annexed to and passes with the office, being a trust of a public rather than of a personal character. Perrin v. Reed, 33 Vt. 62.

2. In general, it is the right of the clerk of a town or other municipal corporation while having the custody of the records, to make any record according to the facts; and this, although he may have been out of office and restored again. But he cannot alter or amend a record upon the testimony of third persons, ordinarily, and ought not to do it upon his own recollection, unless in very obvious cases of omission or error. Such amendments should ordinarily be made by the original documents or minutes. Mott v. Reynolds, 27 Vt. 206.

3. If the clerk who made the record were out of office, or were a party to the suit, such amendment might be improper. Hadley v. Chamberlin, 11 Vt. 618. 27 Vt. 208.

4. Docket entries. The docket entries in a cause showed a verdict for the defendant, exceptions allowed and execution stayed, without showing, in express terms, judgment on the verdict. Held, that such entries showed the practice of the court to have been, as in some other county courts, not to make any formal entry of judgment on verdicts, but to treat all verdicts, left to stand, as having judgment rendered on them, and to have the records made up accordingly; and, in this view, held, that such entries showed a verdict and judgment thereon for the defendant. Armstrong v. Colby, 47 Vt. 359.

5. Devise of lands. The constitution of 1777 and the statute of 1779, requiring "all deeds and conveyances of lands" to be recorded, were held not to embrace a devise of lands, but only conveyances inter vivos. Smith v. Perry, 26 Vt. 279.

6. What is a recording. The indorsement by a town clerk upon a paper left for record: "Received into record"—is not a recording of the paper. That is to be done by transcribing the paper into a book kept for that purpose. Pawlet v. Sandgate, 17 Vt. 619; and see Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 175, 184.

REFERENCE.

- I. UNDER RULE FROM THE COUNTY COURT.
- II. UNDER RULE FROM A JUSTICE
- III. UNDER RULE FROM PROBATE COURT.

I. UNDER RULE FROM THE COUNTY COURT.

1. Likeness to arbitration. A reference under a rule of court stands upon the same general principle as do all arbitrations, the mere agreement of the parties; and the power of the arbitrator extends to just what the parties have agreed to submit, and no more; and if he undertakes to try and award of other matters not submitted, the award is invalid. Poland, C. J., in Cook v. Carpenter, 34 Vt. 126.

2. The court has no power to enlarge a rule of reference without consent of the parties, each enlargement being in effect a new reference. Rice v. Clark, 8 Vt. 104. Baxter v. Thompson, 25 Vt. 505. Luell v. Houghton, 32 Vt. 579.

3. A report of referees was set aside because they refused evidence of an agreement that they should exercise chancery powers. Bellows v. Ingham, 2 Vt. 575.

4. Where a submission is to three or more referees, by rule of court, and the rule is silent as to the number that must agree, all must concur in the report; but where the rule authorizes all or a majority to make report, only a majority need agree in the report; yet, as the submission is to all of them, all must be present and hear the parties. But if the parties mutually agree to dispense with the attendance of one of the referees, and, in pursuance of such agreement, they appear and submit to a hearing before the others, the absence of such referee is no objection to the report of the others. Howard v. Conroy, 2 Vt. 492.

5. Scope and effect—Waiver. All questions affecting the mere form of the suit, and all questions of variance merely between the declaration and proof, are waived by a reference; and every matter which could properly have been introduced by way of amendment to the declaration will be considered as added, or its absence waived or cured, by the reference, provided it sufficiently appears that the matter set up as the ground of recovery before the referee is the same real cause of action for which the plaintiff sued. Waterman v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 30 Vt. 610. Laport v. Bacon, 48 Vt. 176.

6. Where a pending action is referred by agreement of parties under a rule of court, though the rule be, that the case be heard and decided according to law, it is the cause of action which is referred, and not the particular form of the declaration or any particular issues formed, and the referee is not bound thereby, but may try the case upon its merits and award upon the subject matter embraced in the submission; and judgment will be entered upon the report whenever, without changing the nature of the action, the declaration or pleadings could be so amended as to accommodate them to the facts found by the referee. Cook v. Carpenter, 34 Vt. 121. Eddy v. Sprague, 10 Vt. 216. Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 620. Maxfield v. Scott, 17 Vt. 684. Davis v. Campbell, 23 Vt. 286. Briggs v. Oaks, 26 Vt. 138. Briggs v. Bennett, 26 Vt. 146. Sumner v. Brown, 34 Vt. 194. Ladd v. Lord, 36 Vt. 194. Windham Proc. Inst. v. Sprague, 43 Vt. 502. Hicks v. Cottrill, 25 Vt. 80. Spaulding v. Warren, 25 Vt. 316. Barker v. T. & R. R. Co. 27 Vt. 766.

7. It seems, that where a case is referred, although with the stipulation that it is "to be decided according to law," it will not be fatal to the plaintiff's right to recover upon a report in his favor, that the form of action was misconceived,—since the power of amendment extends even to changing the form of action; as, from trespass to case. Briggs v. Oaks. Briggs v. Bennett.

8. But where no such amendment would be allowed, as where it would change the form of action, or introduce a new cause of action, or different from the one declared upon or sought to be recovered for, then such facts, not embraced in the declaration, are outside the submission and the authority of the referee. Cook v. Carpenter, 34 Vt. 121. Sumner v. Brown. Id. 194.

9. The insufficiency of the declaration is no objection to the acceptance of a report of referees. Jewell v. Catlin, Brayt. 215.

10. Where a cause was referred by rule of court and the defendant died before hearing;—Held, that his administrator had the right to take out the rule and proceed with the reference. Williams v. Cook, Brayt. 112.

11. Where the defendants were sued as a corporation, and appeared by the name by which they were sued, and put in no plea of misnomer, nor denied their corporate existence, and the cause was referred;—Held, that such objections could not be taken before the referees. Stone v. Berkshire Cong. Socy., 14 Vt. 86.

12. In an action brought originally in the county court and referred by rule of court to a referee mutually chosen by the parties, it cannot be objected before the referee, or on his report, that the action was not, by reason of the amount claimed, within the original jurisdiction of the court. Such objection is waived by the reference. Maxfield v. Scott, 17 Vt. 684. 26 Vt. 144.

13. So, on an appeal from a justice, it cannot be objected, after such reference, that the justice had not jurisdiction by reason of the amount in controversy, and so the county court no appellate jurisdiction. Reed v. Stockwell, 34 Vt. 206.

14. Limitations. The statute of limitations may be used in defence before a referee, without having been pleaded in bar. Carter v. Howard, 39 Vt. 106.

15. Award. A failure to plead in bar an award which operates to discontinue a suit, and consenting to a reference of the suit, are not a waiver of the defense before the referee. Babcock v. School Dist. Guilford, 35 Vt. 250.

16. Set-off. Demands in set-off, not before pleaded in set-off, cannot be urged before a referee. Fulton v. Wiley, 32 Vt. 762.

17. The objection that a plea in set-off was not filed in season, was held waived by a reference, and could not be taken before the referee. Swift v. Harriman, 30 Vt. 607.

18. How far referees are bound by legal rules of decision. If auditors err in point of law, it is fatal; but as to referees and their reports, the rules are those which obtain in chancery upon awards of arbitrators. Sawyer v. Doane, 1 Aik. 138. 27 Vt. 633.

19. Referees, being judges of the parties' choice, are not obliged to decide upon the strict principles of law, but may disregard them altogether, and adopt certain principles of equity or justice to govern their decision. But if they attempt to decide according to law, and mistake the law in their decision, and so produce a result different from what would have been produced if they had correctly decided the law, their report may be set aside. So, a mistake made by them on the principles they adopt for their decision—as, mistaking a fact, or an error in computing or stating an account—may be a reason for setting aside their report. Hazeltine v. Smith, 3 Vt. 535. Johns v. Stevens, 3 Vt. 308. 8 Vt. 83. 21 Vt. 255.

20. The referee, as the report stated, considered that the plaintiff "in a legal point of view" was not entitled to recover. From the facts stated it appeared that his decision was contrary to law, and, it thus appearing that he meant to follow the law, the report was set aside. Johns v. Stevens.

21. Though referees, intending to follow the law, make a mistake on a doubtful point, yet this is not always a reason for setting aside their report, unless the mistake evidently led them to a wrong conclusion on the whole case. Bliss v. Rollins, 6 Vt. 529. 8 Vt. 83.

22. Referees are not bound to proceed by legal principles strictly; and where they proceed upon equitable principles, and are not misled in the application of them, their report will not be set aside. Downer v. Downer, 11 Vt. 395.

23. What the report must show—as to law. Unless it appear from the rule of reference that a referee was required to decide the case upon strictly legal grounds, or, from his report, that he intended so to decide, his report will not be set aside though he may have mistaken the law. Steen v. Wardsworth, 17 Vt. 297.

24. Under a general reference, no question can be raised in regard to any question of law decided by the referee, unless it appears from the report that he intended to decide according to the rules of law. Cutting v. Stone, 23 Vt. 571.

25. In order for the court to revise the decision of a referee in matter of law, he must either refer that question to the determination of the court in such a manner as to make the result of his finding depend upon the determination of such questions of law as arise upon the report, or else it must appear to the court that the referee, intending to follow the law, has mistaken it, whereby he is brought to a different result from that which he would have reached had he known what the law was; and this mistake must be obvious, or be clearly made to appear to the court. White v. White, 21 Vt. 250.

26. Where a referee does not state in his report that he intended to decide according to law, and does not refer the question of law to the court, his decision will not be reversed unless it is apparent that he has violated some principle of right whereby injustice is done. Park v. Pratt, 38 Vt. 545; and it may be taken, unless it appears to the contrary, that he decided the case, as a referee may, entirely upon equitable grounds. Smith v. Sprague, 40 Vt. 43.

27. Where a referee states in his report that he intended to decide according to law and to have his decision revised by the court, this can only have reference to matters of law and not of fact; and statements of fact in the report, or inferences of fact from the facts before stated, if what is so previously stated warrants such inference and finding as a matter of fact, must be so treated. If the referee could so legally find, his finding is not erroneous. Riley v. Noyes, 44 Vt. 455.

28. The court refused to set aside the report of referees where they received incompetent testimony, although they reported that they intended to decide according to law, where such testimony had no tendency to mislead them, and it did not appear that they were misled thereby. Learned v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 79.

29. —as to items of account. A referee is not required to state in his report the items allowed, and those disallowed, unless requested so to do. McDaniels v. McDaniels, 40 Vt. 340.

30. —as to facts. In case of a reference, the county court can only pronounce the law upon the facts found by the referee. It cannot add to the facts so found from evidence reported. Fuller v. Adams, 44 Vt. 543.

31. The county court cannot, upon the report of referees, infer facts from other facts reported, as they may sometimes do upon the report of auditors. Kimball v. Baxter, 27 Vt. 628.

32. Where a referee reports such facts as constitute an agency, the county or supreme court can find the agency, as matter of law, without any express statement of such conclusion by the referee. Alexander v. Bank of Rutland, 24 Vt. 222.

33. Errors on hearing. Where a party submits to a decision of a referee which requires him to testify, it is no objection to the report that he was improperly required to testify; but the testimony so given may be treated as the party's admission. Mattocks v. Owen, 5 Vt. 42.

34. In order for a party to avail himself of his objection to the admission of improper evidence before a referee, he must file exceptions to the report for such error, and interpose it by way of objection to the acceptance of the report, or by motion to set aside or recommit it. The question cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court. Graham v. Stiles, 38 Vt. 578.

35. Regularity presumed. The proceedings of referees are presumed to be correct, both in matters of fact and of law, and the burden is upon the party seeking to set them aside, to show error. Martin v. Wells, 43 Vt. 433. Hogaboom v. Herrick, 4 Vt. 131. Haggood v. Burt. Id. 161. Stevens v. Pearson, 5 Vt. 503. Bliss v. Rollins, 6 Vt. 529. Learned v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 79. White v. White, 21 Vt. 250.

36. It would be unsafe to permit a statement made by one of a board of referees to have any effect on the question of accepting or rejecting their report. Wellman v. Bulkley, 6 Vt. 299.

37. Amendment and recommitment of report. Referees having drawn up their report and handed it to the attorney of the recovering party, discovered an error in computation, and thereupon made a supplementary report correcting the error, requesting that it be made a part of the former report. Both being filed, and exceptions taken to the whole, the supreme court treated the additional report as part of the first. Haseltine v. Smith, 8 Vt. 535. Hutchinson, J., dissenting.

38. It is not error to allow a referee to amend his report; or to recommit it to him for the correction of errors, and for the further statement of the facts on which his findings were based, and to report at the same, or the next term. Smith v. Sprague, 40 Vt. 43.

39. Where a report of referees is recommitment for amendment, it is only for the purpose of having the referees do what they intended to do. This gives them no new powers, nor extends their powers, nor authorizes any further hearing of the parties. Rice v. Clark, 8 Vt. 104. Baxter v. Thompson, 25 Vt. 505.

40. Where a report of referees was subject to be set aside only in part, the court refused to discharge the rule of reference, and recommitment the report for amendment. Baxter v. Thompson.

41. The supreme court refused to recommit the report of a referee for additional findings, where the sum in controversy was trifling. Congdon v. Darcy, 46 Vt. 478.

42. A party cannot present to a referee his open account alone, placing his claim exclusively upon that, and taking his chances of recovery upon it, and afterwards, in court, resort to a settlement to enlarge his recovery. Rowell v. Marcy, 47 Vt. 627.

43. Discretion. An exception to the report of referees, that the rule and form of report did not follow the agreement to refer, is addressed to the discretion of the county court, and is not revisable by the supreme court. Wellman v. Bulkley, 6 Vt. 299.

44. A judgment rendered on report of referees will not be reversed for matters extrinsic,—as, questions of discretion in dealing with the report in the county court, as to recommitting it, the finding of facts, the taxing of their own fees by the referees, &c.,—but only for matters of law apparent upon the report. Fuller v. Wright, 10 Vt. 512.

II. UNDER RULE FROM A JUSTICE,

45. Under a rule of reference issued by a justice under Slade's Stat. c. 9, s. 31, the submission need not be in writing; the matters submitted must appear in the rule, but the amount of the claim need not; and the justice acts judicially in determining to what court the rule shall be made returnable. (See G. S. c. 31, s. 58 et seq.) Barnett v. Peck, 6 Vt. 456.

46. An enlargement of a rule of reference issued by a justice, under G. S. c. 31, ss. 58-60, can be made only by the justice and by consent of the parties, and the report of the referee is not the proper evidence of this. If attempted to be enlarged by the referee by consent, it becomes a mere arbitration and no judgment can be rendered on his report. Lasell v. Houghton, 32 Vt. 579.

III. UNDER RULE FROM PROBATE COURT.

47. Under Sec. 69 of the probate act of 1821, the only competent parties to a reference were the executor or administrator on one side, and a creditor or debtor of the estate on the other. Boynton v. Boynton, 10 Vt. 107.

48. The probate court has jurisdiction to revoke, while pending, an order of reference made by it under the statute upon the petition of a party interested, though not a party to the reference; and upon a refusal, such party interested may appeal. Lathrop v. Hitchcock, 38 Vt. 496.

RELATION.

As a general principle, where there are divers acts concurrent to make a conveyance of an estate, the original act shall be preferred, and to this the other acts shall have relation; but this rule is so modified, that this relation by fiction will not have place, where it will prejudice the rights of third persons who are neither parties nor privies to the conveyance. Bennett, J., in Pettibone v. Burton, 20 Vt. 302. (This was said in a case where land had been sold by an administrator and the deed was executed some time thereafter; and the question was, when the purchaser's title first accrued.)

RELATIONSHIP.

1. Kinds. Consanguinity is the having of the blood of some common ancestor. Affinity arises from marriage only, by which each party becomes related to all the consanguinei of the other party to the marriage, but in such case these respective consanguinei do not become related by affinity to each other. In this respect, these modes of relationship are dissimilar. That by consanguinity is in its nature incapable of dissolution, but relationship by affinity ceases with the dissolution of the marriage which produced it. Blodget v. Brinsmaid, 9 Vt. 27. 12 Vt. 666. See Clapp v. Foster, 84 Vt. 580.

2. Degrees. Degrees of relationship by Vermont law are to be computed, not according to the canon law, but the civil law, and the half blood are to be included. By this law, the degree of relationship between two men is computed by reckoning from one up to the common ancestor, and then down to the other. Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661.

RELEASE.

1. A general release of all demands, executed after the time in which an award was to have been performed, was held, prima facie, as a discharge of the covenant to perform the award. Bridgeman v. Eaton, 3 Vt. 166.

2. A receipt in full of all "demands, notes and accounts" was held, by natural interpretation of its terms, not to include a pending suit. Learned v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 79.

3. A receipt "in full of all demands" does not embrace a right to future support, depending upon contingencies. It must be understood to refer to subsisting debts, or such as are due and susceptible of liquidation. Austin v. Austin, 9 Vt. 420.

4. A written receipt for one dollar, expressed to be in full of a certain note, is, prima facie, in legal effect, a receipt for the final balance which completed the payment, and not merely a receipt for so much to apply. Paige v. Perno, 10 Vt. 491.

5. In case of a settlement, sometimes called a jumping settlement, understood and intended to be in full of all demands, and a release or mutual releases are executed, each party takes on himself the risk of any misunderstanding or want of recollection as to the true state of the claims; and such, in the absence of fraud, is the legal effect, and bars a recovery for any claim omitted. Blackmer v. Wright, 12 Vt. 377. Holbrook v. Blodget, 5 Vt. 520.

6. A release to one of two joint tortfeasors, like a satisfaction by one, is a discharge of both. Brown v. Marsh, 7 Vt. 320.

7. The release by two of three joint vendees of their right of action against the vendor for fraud in the sale, was held to operate as a release of the right of the other vendee, and to entitle him to share in the consideration received for such release. James v. Aiken, 47 Vt. 28.

REPLEVIN.

- I. TO TRY THE RIGHT OF PROPERTY.
- II. OF GOODS ATTACHED.
- III. OF BEASTS IMPOUNDED.
- IV. PROCEDURE.

I. TO TRY THE RIGHT OF PROPERTY.

1. Statute action. Replevin cannot be sustained as an adversary suit at common law to try the right of property, and is sustainable only in cases authorized by statute. Bulkley v. Smith, Brayt. 88. Taggart v. Hart. Id. 215. Glover v. Chase, 27 Vt. 533. Bennett v. Allen, 30 Vt. 684. Eddy v. Davis, 35 Vt. 247. Sprague v. Clark, 41 Vt. 6. 47 Vt. 415.

2. Justices' jurisdiction. Under C. 8. and before 1853, a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction in a replevin suit, except for beasts distrained or impounded. Glover v. Chase, 27 Vt. 533. But by the act of 1853 and G. 8. c. 31, s. 18, a justice has jurisdiction in replevin for goods and chattels unlawfully taken or detained, except where the value thereof exceeds the sum of $20. Tripp v. Leland, 89 Vt. 68.

3. Title of plaintiff. Either a general or special property in goods is sufficient title to sustain replevin. Cushenden v. Harman, 2 Tyl. 481.

4. It seems, that where goods bailed, though for a definite time, are attached upon the debt of some third party, either the bailor or bailee may, under G. S. c. 35, s. 13, replevy them from the custody of the officer, though not at common law. Wilder v. Stafford, 30 Vt. 899.

5. Replevin of goods may be maintained by the person "entitled to the possession thereof" (G. S. c. 35, s. 13), although conveyed to a third person by a bill of sale absolute in terms, but in fact made as security for a debt; or where the bill of sale contains a stipulation that the vendor may retain possession so long as the vendee should think best. Wills v. Banister, 36 Vt. 220.

6. The term "goods," as so used in the statute, includes both animate and inanimate movable property. Eddy v. Davis, 35 Vt. 247.

7. To maintain replevin under G. S. c. 35, s. 13, it is only necessary that the plaintiff should be entitled to possession as against the defendant; and it is only when the defendant is entitled, under Sec. 16, to a judgment for a return of the goods, that the defendant can prevail; and that can be only where his right is superior to that of the plaintiff. Sprague v. Clark, 41 Vt. 6.

8. Other remedy. Replevin of attached property lies in favor of the debtor against the attaching officer, where he becomes a trespasser ad initio, notwithstanding trespass or trover might lie for the value—the statute giving this remedy where goods are "unlawfully taken, or unlawfully detained." Briggs v. Gleason, 29 Vt. 78.

9. Parties. The owner of property attached in a suit against another, may maintain replevin therefor against the attaching creditor and the attaching officer jointly, where the creditor assisted the officer in taking and removing the property, and had it in his actual custody when it was replevied. Esty v. Love, 32 Vt. 744.

10. Under like circumstances, and where the creditor claimed to own the property and the attachment was made for the purpose of getting possession of it, it not appearing that the attaching officer had any other liens upon it;—Held, that the owner could maintain replevin against the creditor without joining the officer. Tripp v. Leland, 42 Vt. 487.

11. An officer is liable for taking chattels upon a writ to replevy goods as attached, where there has been no attachment in fact, but the party from whom replevied holds them, not under process, but as owner. Driscoll v. Place, 44 Vt. 252.

12. Taking and detaining. The plaintiff and defendant had been husband and wife, and had occupied a dwelling house owned by the wife. She petitioned for a divorce, and the judge assigned her a separate part of the house for her sole occupancy pending the litigation. She obtained a divorce. Instead of vacating the premises at once, as was his duty, the plaintiff continued in possession of the other part of the house and kept his goods therein. While the plaintiff, on an occasion, was out of the house the defendant closed and fastened the doors and would not permit him to enter, but told him that any property he had in the house, that he would call for, she would put out for him. The plaintiff did not call for any, and forbade her putting any of his property out of the house. Held, that this was not such a taking or detaining of the plaintiff's goods as would sustain replevin. Bent v. Bent, 44 Vt. 638.

13. Pleadings. In replevin, the defendant in his plea alleged that the property belonged to his minor son, and that he, as natural guardian of his son, was bound to keep the custody of it, and did so. On traverse of the plea, the plaintiff offered proof of title by purchase from such minor and the defendant. Held, that the defendant could rebut this by proof of fraud in the purchase, although there was no sufficient, or no allegation of fraud in his plea. Bliss v. Badger, 36 Vt. 838.

14. General issue. In replevin under G. S. c. 35, s. 13, not guilty is the proper general issue, and such plea puts in issue every material fact, as well the property in the thing replevied as the taking and detention. Plainfield v. Batchelder, 44 Vt. 9. Under it, the defendant may show anything which will defeat the plaintiff's right to recover on matters alleged in the declaration; as, a justification under legal process. Loop v. Williams, 47 Vt. 407.

II. OF GOODS ATTACHED.

15. Replevin by a debtor of his goods attached is not an independent, original action, or suit, but a part of, or appendage to, the original action, and should not be entered on the docket like ordinary cases. (G. S. c. 35.) It is not a suit inter partes. There is neither plaintiff nor defendant. It is a proceeding merely for the compulsory receipt of property attached. Green v. Holden, 35 Vt. 315. Driscoll v. Place, 44 Vt. 252.

16. Sureties. An officer serving a replevin writ in behalf of a debtor to regain possession of property attached, is bound to take sureties on the replevin bond who are at the time actually responsible for its amount. It is not enough that the surety is apparently responsible, but he must be really so; but if really good at the time the bond is taken, the officer will not be liable, though the surety become unable to satisfy a judgment upon the bond. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 38 Vt. 414.

III. OF BEASTS IMPOUNDED.

17. Avowry and pleadings. An avowry in replevin that the beast was taken damage feasant and impounded in a public pound, need not give the name of the pound-keeper, nor set forth the avowant's title to the close, further than to state that he was "seized and possessed as of his own close;" nor need he give the bounds, or description. Gipson v. Bump, 80 Vt. 175. Bennett, J., dissenting.

18. An avowry in replevin justified the taking and impounding, by reason that the beast was taken damage feasant in the defendant's close. The replication to the plea to the avowry described the place where, &c., as lands occupied by the plaintiff and defendant in common. Held, that the replication was a departure from the avowry, Hurlburt v. Goodwill, 30 Vt. 146.

19. This replication, further, set up a right to impound arising from a breach of the plaintiff's duty to maintain part of a division fence. This was held to be repugnant and ill on demurrer. Ib.

20. An avowry in replevin set forth the impounding of the cattle, and averred that "within twenty-four hours thereafter the defendant gave legal notice of the said impounding to, &c.,"—without further stating the manner in which the notice was given. Held sufficient on general demurrer. Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34.

21. An avowry in replevin averred the taking of the cattle "in a field and inclosure used and improved," * * "the soil and freehold of the defendant," &c. The plea to the avowry averred, that the defendant "did not find said cattle in any field of the defendant inclosed with a legal fence," and concluded to the country. On special demurrer, the plea was held ill, for its conclusion; that the terms of the averment of the avowry do not require proof that the field and inclosure was surrounded by [what the statute makes] a legal fence; and that it is not competent to make an issue, in the form of a simple traverse concluding to the country, by using terms that would require the other party to make different proof from what would be required, if the traverse had been in the terms of the averment. Ib.

22. Damages. In the replevin of cattle taken damage feasant and impounded, the defendant can recover only such damages as were done by the cattle upon the occasion when they were taken to be impounded; since they could not be impounded for any former damage done, nor unless then actually upon the land doing damage. Holden v. Torrey, 31 Vt. 690. (G. S. c. 35, s. 6.)

23. In such case, although the defendant has neglected to have his damages appraised, he is entitled at least to nominal damages and costs; but whether, where he has so neglected, he is entitled to recover beyond this, quære. Ib.

IV. PROCEDURE.

24. Recognizance. In the action of replevin, the security for costs is in the bond taken, and no recognizance is required to be entered upon the writ. Dunshee v. Stearns, 1 Aik. 149. Stoddard v. Gilman, 22 Vt. 568.

25. Bond. One surety in a replevin bond, in addition to the plaintiff or some one in his behalf, is sufficient in any case of replevin. Bent v. Bent, 43 Vt. 42.

26. Not taking a replevin bond, such as is required by law, is cause for dismissing the action on motion; as, where the bond was "in the penal sum of double the value of the goods to be replevied," without naming the sum. Bennett v. Allen, 30 Vt. 684.

27. A writ of replevin, brought as an adversary suit under G. S. c. 35, s. 13, was dismissed on motion, where the only bond given was the one prescribed for replevin of goods attached and replevied by the defendant, under G. S. c. 35, s. 8. Campbell v. Morey, 27 Vt. 575. Thurber v. Richmond, 46 Vt. 395.

28. A replevin bond, with condition as prescribed for the replevin of goods attached, is a mere nullity in a case where there was no attachment. Driscoll v. Place, 44 Vt. 252; and so, vice versa, where the bond is not applicable to the process; nor can it be sustained at common law as a voluntary bond. Frothingham v. Howard, 1 Aik. 139.

29. An objection to the writ that no bond was required by it and that no bond was given, is of a dilatory nature, and, whether by plea or motion to dismiss, must be made at the earliest opportunity. Wilder v. Stafford, 30 Vt. 399.

30. In replevin, the writ was defective in not requiring, as a condition of the bond to be given, the return of the property; and the bond returned was signed by the plaintiff only. Held, that these irregularities did not make the proceedings void, and that they could be waived; and that by omitting to take advantage of them by motion or plea within the time limited by the rules of court for filing dilatory pleas, and also by pleading to the merits, the defendant did waive them, and was not entitled, of right, to take advantage of them afterward. Tripp v. Howe, 45 Vt. 523.

31. Service and return. Under a statute directing writs of replevin to be directed to the sheriff or his deputy ;—Held, that service by a constable was void. Balston v. Strong, 1 D. Chip. 287. S. C. Brayt. 216.

32. Where property held by a sheriff on execution was taken out of his hands by his deputy on a writ of replevin ;—Held, that although such service was irregular and was subject to abatement, yet it was not void, and that the sheriff would not have been justified in resisting the service ; and that the replevin was a sufficient excuse for not retaining the property and selling it on the execution. Shaw v. Baldwin, 38 Vt. 447.

33. A writ of replevin issued as a writ of summons, must be served as such. Delivery of a copy to an agent of the defendant, the latter being out of the State, is not a good service. Gaffield v. Avery, 43 Vt. 668.

34. The officer's return on a writ of replevin stated that the appraisers "upon their oaths" appraised the property, &c. Held sufficient. Miller v. Cushman, 38 Vt. 598.

35. The same return stated that "he proceeded to appoint appraisers according to law," and gave their names, but did not state that they were "disinterested and discreet." Held sufficient. Ib.

36. The same return stated that the officer "replevied" the property, had it appraised, took a proper bond, and delivered the property to the plaintiff. Held sufficient, and that it sufficiently appeared that the bond was taken between the taking and the delivery of the property—the word "replevied" not being used in its strict technical sense. Ib.

37. The bond may be referred to as a part of the proceedings in the cause, to show its invalidity. Bennett v. Allen, 30 Vt. 684 ; or, as part of the record, to help out the officer's return, when not sufficiently full. Miller v. Cushman, 38 Vt. 598. 43 Vt. 45.

38. Effect of abatement. When in replevin, upon an abatement of the suit, there is judgment for a return merely, such judgment is only a decision that the property was irregularly taken, and that the possession shall be restored, leaving matters in statu quo, with the question of title undecided. Collamer v. Page, 35 Vt. 387.

39. Where the action was dismissed upon the defendant's motion, because brought in the wrong county ;—Held, that the defendant was entitled to judgment for a return without plea, or avowry, or proof of title, and the plaintiff was not allowed to prove title in himself. Ib.

40. But held, in such case, that the defendant was not entitled to recover damages for the taking and detaining. Ib. (Changed by G. S. c. 85, s. 26. See Thurber v. Richmond, 46 Vt. 895.)

41. Reciprocal judgments. Where part of the goods were properly replevied and part unlawfully, the verdict must be for the plaintiff for damages and costs as to that portion for which he sustains his replevin, and for the defendant for a return of that portion for which the plaintiff fails to sustain his replevin, with damages to the defendant for its detention and costs. The judgment must follow the verdict, and the costs must be apportioned and set off according to equity. Poor v. Woodburn, 25 Vt. 284.

42. In replevin for the taking and detaining of several articles, the jury rendered a verdict of not guilty, and added a clause for the return to the defendant of a certain part of the articles replevied. The plaintiff moved to set aside the verdict. That motion being overruled, he moved in arrest of judgment, but judgment was rendered upon and according to the verdict. Held, that the first paragraph of the verdict was all that was necessary under the issue ; for that, under G. S. c. 85, s. 26, the court would adapt the judgment to the rights proved ; that the rest was not incongruous or inconsistent with the first paragraph, and did not tend to the injury of the plaintiff. Judgment affirmed. Hotchkiss v. Ashley, 44 Vt. 195.

43. Action on bond. In order to any remedy upon a replevin bond for not returning the property replevied, the defendant must first have a judgment for a return. Collamer v. Page, 36 Vt. 396.

44. Where a replevin suit was dismissed for a defect in the bond, but there was no judgment for a return of the property ;—Held, that the plaintiff was under no obligation to return the property to the defendant, and that while it remained in his possession he could not maintain a new action of replevin to establish his title to it. Way v. Barnard, 36 Vt. 366.

45. A declaration against the surety in a replevin bond given for goods attached, was held good on demurrer, though not containing any averment of a demand of the property on the execution, or notice of the execution. Wetherbee v. Colby, 6 Vt. 647.

46. Where a return of the property has been awarded, no special demand is necessary to an action on the bond. Cushenden v. Harman, 2 Tyl. 488.

REVIEW.

1. A review is not allowed from a judgment rendered on a writ of error. Enos v. Boardman, 2 Tyl. 271.

2. Upon the review of a cause decided on demurrer, the court will not prohibit the arguing of the cause again upon the same pleadings. Hazen v. Smith, 2 Tyl. 59. Chipman v. Sawyer, Id. 61.

3. Statutes authorizing a review in appealed cases where a set-off is pleaded, considered. Bloss v. Kittridge, 4 Vt. 272.

4. In an action of book account brought to the county court, where the defendant files in set-off matter of contract, neither party is entitled to a review of the issue upon the plea in set-off. Hall v. Hall, 24 Vt. 687.

5. The defendant filed a plea in set-off, but, at the first trial, offered no evidence in support of it and the plaintiff recovered judgment for his whole claim. The defendant entered a review, and on the second trial sustained his set-off, and the plaintiff again recovered judgment, but for a less sum than before. Held, that the cause was the same, and that judgment having been "rendered in the cause twice for the same party," the plaintiff was not entitled to a review. Cheesman v. Lane, 17 Vt. 88.

6. A review lies from a judgment on a scire facias upon a probate bond. Aldrich v. Williams, 10 Vt. 295.

7. Under the statute allowing a review in "civil causes;"—Held, that a petition for partition was not reviewable. Nichols v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 228.

8. One defendant in an action of tort may review the case, although the judgment is final as to the other defendants; and this will not have the effect to carry the case forward as to those who do not review. Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554. 22 Vt. 480. 28 Vt. 737.

9. The plaintiff in ejectment against two defendants, recovered at the first trial against one only, and he reviewed; and the plaintiff reviewed as to the other defendant. On a second trial, the verdict was for both defendants. Held, that in this action, the plaintiff's title being an entire thing to be tried, he was not entitled to review as to the defendant against whom he recovered at the first trial. Frost v. Philbrook, 28 Vt. 736.

10. In an action of tort against several, the plaintiff on trial voluntarily entered judgment in favor of one of the defendants and then used him as a witness, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the other defendants. The plaintiff thereupon entered a review as to all the defendants, and, at the next term, the defendant in whose favor the plaintiff had voluntarily entered judgment moved to set aside the review as to himself. The court refused so to do, and on a second trial there was a verdict against that defendant, and in favor of the others. Held, that there was no error in the proceedings, the plaintiff not having waived his review. Lyndon v. Cook, 19 Vt. 35.

11. On a trial upon review after one judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant gave evidence of payment, except a trifling sum which he admitted. Such partial payment the plaintiff denied, and offered and proposed to the court that if the jury should find against him on this point, they should render a verdict against him, though there would still be a small balance due; and requested the court so to instruct the jury. [The effect of a verdict against the plaintiff would have been to entitle him to a review.] The court refused. Held, no error. Austin v. Bingham, 31 Vt. 577.

12. Review on nominal bail. The review of a case by consent of the plaintiff on nominal bail, does not affect the liability of the attaching officer, or the receiptman. Howes v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 508.

13. Repeal. Note. All statutes allowing a review in civil causes were repealed by stat. Nov. 9, 1855, No. 5.

14. Writ of review. The statute providing for a writ of review in case of an absent defendant (G. S. c. 31, ss. 50 et seq.), applies as well to actions commenced by trustee process, and actions brought by a collector of taxes under G. S. c. 84, s. 34, as to others. Allen v. Seaver, 38 Vt. 673.

15. In a writ of review brought by the original defendant, where the original action was commenced by trustee process and there was judgment against him and against the trustee, which the trustee paid;—Held, that it was not necessary in the writ of review to allege the judgment obtained against the trustee. Id.

I. THE CONTRACT.

1. Generally.
2. Executory; future delivery.
3. Sale executed so as to pass title; delivery; acceptance.
4. Rescission; acceptance as a waiver of objections.
5. Stoppage in transitu.

II. WARRANTIES.

1. What constitutes a warranty—implied; express; particular warranties.
2. Effect of breach and remedy.

III. VALIDITY OF SALE AS AGAINST CREDITORS.

IV. CONDITIONAL SALE.

V. OFFICIAL SALE.

B. SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

A. SALE OF PERSONAL CHATTELS.

I. THE CONTRACT.

1. Generally.

1. The parties. The characters of vendor and purchaser of the same article at the same time are inconsistent, and cannot be united in the same person. Chandler v. Moulton, 83 Vt. 248.

2. Consent. Where one writes to another that he will buy certain property of him at a certain price, and the other replies that he might have the property at that price, "if he would come for it," these letters do not on their face purport a sale. Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 845.

3. Misdescription. The validity of a sale of personal property is not affected by a misdescription, in a written memorandum of the sale, of the locality of the property, and the identity of the thing sold may be proved by parol. Rugg v. Hale, 40 Vt. 188.

4. Mistake. In order to constitute a defense at law to a contract of sale, on the ground of mutual mistake as to the state of the subject matter at the time, the property must be so changed as not in any sense to answer the purpose for which the contract was made. This goes upon the ground that if the party buys one thing, or a thing in one state, he is not bound to take a different thing, or the same thing in a different state. But an accidental occurrence, not directly affecting the state or quality of the thing sold, but only its market value, will have no such effect. Faulkner v. Hebard, 26 Vt. 452.

5. The plaintiff contracted to sell certain shares of railroad stock to the defendant for certain property of the defendant, the plaintiff representing that the stock was worth a certain sum per share. The directors of the company had recently, and without the knowledge of either party, issued new and additional shares of stock at a reduced price per share, the effect of which was to reduce the value of the shares. Held, that this was not such a change in the state or quality of the stock, being only a matter affecting the market value, as authorized the defendant to repudiate the sale. Held, also, that if this act of the directors was legal, it was a contingency which the defendant was bound to take into account; if illegal, then the defendant, as a stockholder, could resist it. Id.

6. Where the plaintiff purchased of the defendant a quantity of cheese, &c., which was then represented to be, and was by both parties supposed to be, in store at Whitehall where the plaintiff desired to receive it, whereas the property was then in Boston, and it did not come to the use of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had paid part towards the purchase;—Held, that the mutual mistake of the parties as to the situs of the property was so material, that the plaintiff was not bound by the sale; and that, after demand, he could recover the money paid towards it, in an action at law for money had and received. Ketchum v. Catlin, 21 Vt. 191.

7. Sale on credit. Where there is a sale upon credit, the purchaser agreeing to give his note therefor with surety, no action, as for goods sold, lies, until the expiration of the agreed term of credit. For refusal to furnish the security within the term, the action must be upon the special agreement. Martin v. Fuller, 16 Vt. 108. Scott v. Montague, 16 Vt. 164. Eddy v. Stafford, 18 Vt. 235. 28 Vt. 724. 32 Vt. 240.

8. Where the purchaser of property agrees to furnish a security for the price, or a part of it, payable at a future day, and neglects to furnish the security agreed, an action may be immediately maintained against him counting specially upon the promise to furnish the security; and in such action he cannot claim the benefit of the stipulated credit, and the rule of damages will be the sum agreed to be paid. Asoutney Bank v. McK. Ormsby, 28 Vt. 721.

9. Where, upon a sale, a term of credit is offered to those who give notes with surety, the credit is conditional upon the giving of the note with surety, the security being the consideration for the credit. If the security be not given, the purchaser is liable as on a sale without credit. Rice v. Andrews, 32 Vt. 691.

10. This rule of construction is different, generally, where the purchaser is only required to give his own note, and especially where he has an election as to the term of credit, and has not been asked to make an election. Ib. Scott v. Montague, 16 Vt. 164.

11. One acting as agent for the owner sold a house standing upon the agent's land, at a price agreed, the house to be moved off the premises where it stood. The purchaser did not pay the price, the agent saying, that would make no difference. It being claimed by the owner in an action of trespass against the purchaser for moving off the house before payment, that this was a sale upon credit and so not within the authority of the agent;—Held, that this was not a sale upon credit, no time having been given for payment of the price, nor leave given to remove the house without payment. Riley v. Wheeler, 42 Vt. 528. S. C. 44 Vt. 189.

12. Lien for price. In this case, the owner, as soon as he learned that the house had been sold, repudiated the sale and forbade the purchaser removing the house, he already having taken possession for the purpose of removing it. Held, that the purchaser had no right to remove the house without payment, or tender of payment, and, having done so, he was liable in trespass to the owner. Ib.

2. Executory ; Future delivery.

13. Where A, by contract not in writing, agreed to purchase goods of B, and to take delivery and pay for them at a future day named, and paid earnest money, and B, before the day named for delivery, sold the goods to a third party so as to pass the property;—Held, that A was entitled, under the money counts, to recover the earnest paid, without tender of performance on his part and whether such breach of contract by B was known to A, or not. Packer v. Steward, 34 Vt. 127; and (by Kellogg, J.), if after such sale A had, before the expiration of the time limited, tendered performance on his part, he could have recovered damages for such breach of contract. Ib. 183.

14. In executory contracts of sale, it seems, that if neither party be ready by the appointed time, and both are in default, the contract is at law ipso facto dissolved, and that the deposit is recoverable, unless the time has been prolonged by consent. Packer v. Button, 35 Vt. 188.

15. Where the plaintiff contracted to purchase the defendant's wool at a certain price, to be taken and paid for by Feby. 1, and paid part as earnest money, and the plaintiff was prevented by inevitable accident—a storm—from appearing and taking and paying the balance for the wool until the morning of Feby. 2, when he found the defendant delivering the wool to another party to whom he had sold it the day before;—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover damages for the refusal to deliver the wool, but could recover the earnest money paid, and that without a special demand. Ib.

16. In an executory contract for the sale of property to be taken and paid for at a stipulated time, the purchaser, in order to entitle himself to a performance by the seller, must offer to receive the property and pay the price at the time stipulated, and nothing, not even inevitable accident, will excuse him from so doing, except that the seller has put it out of his own power to perform. Ib.

17. If the seller has put it out of his power to perform, and this is known to the purchaser and for this cause he omits to make what he knows must be a wholly useless offer to perform, he may hold the seller liable. Ib.

18. Where a purchaser pays a part of the price in advance, but fails to pay the residue according to the contract so as to entitle him to performance, and the seller is in no fault, what has thus been paid cannot be recovered back. Ib.

19. This rule is universal, and applies to contracts of sale of real estate, though by parol—the statute of frauds not rendering such contracts void, but only not enforceable by action. The vendor in such case being ready to perform, part payment cannot be recovered back. Cobb v. Hall, 29 Vt. 510. (S. C. 33 Vt. 239.) 29 Vt. 507. Shaw v. Shaw, 6 Vt. 69. Smith v. Smith, 14 Vt. 440.

20. The defendant sold to the plaintiff all his dairy of cheese then made and to be made by a day named, to be delivered at a future time and place named, and received fifty dollars in part payment, the balance, at a certain price per pound, to be paid on delivery. The defendant performed on his part, but the plaintiff failed to appear, at the time and place specified, to receive and pay for the cheese. The defendant thereupon, in reasonable time, resold the cheese at a less price, leaving in his hands, with the $50, no excess above the contract price. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover either specially upon the contract, or upon the general counts for the money paid. Jones v. Marsh, 23 Vt. 144.

3. Sale executed so as to pass title.

21. Essentials—Delivery, etc. To constitute a valid sale of chattels, it is necessary there should be a transfer and change of property. Without a delivery of the goods by the vendor, the price not having been paid, the property is not divested, and the vendee cannot seize it or maintain trover for it. An undertaking to pay at any other time, accepted and relied upon by the vendor, may have the same effect as payment at the time. Towsley v. Dana, 1 Aik. 344. See Riley v. Wheeler, 42 528. Miller v. Cushman, 38 Vt. 598.

22. Where A agrees to purchase property for B, but B furnishes no funds, and A has no general agency for B, and A makes the purchase in his own name, although with the purpose of delivering the property to B, this does not vest the title in B; and if he takes the property forcibly, he is liable to A therefor; as, in trover. Paige v. Hammond, 26 Vt. 875.

23. Where the plaintiff contracted to purchase the defendant's farm, and to pay, in part, in a certain yoke of steers, but afterwards declined to complete the purchase;—Held, that the defendant was liable in trover for afterwards taking away the steers without the consent of the plaintiff. Nye v. Taggart, 40 Vt. 295.

24. An agreement to procure and deliver to the defendant, for a sum named, an article of property belonging and understood to belong to a third person, though procured and offered, cannot be declared upon as a sale. Bruce v. Bishop, 48 Vt. 161.

25. Where a contract is to deliver at a future day property not in esse, but to be thereafter produced, as by the cultivation of the earth, or to be manufactured, the property does not pass by a simple tender or delivery to the purchaser according to the terms of the contract, but to this end he must accept the same; and without such acceptance an action for goods sold and delivered, or an action on book for the price, cannot be maintained. Rider v. Kelley, 82 Vt. 268. Latham v. Lewis, cited in Carpenter v. Brainerd, 87 Vt. 147, and in Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 81 (overruling Mattison v. Westcott, 18 Vt. 258). Allen v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 711.

26. If the party contracting for the property wrongfully refuses to receive it, the action must be upon the contract for such refusal; in which case the rule of damages would be, not the value or contract price of the property, but the difference between the contract and the market price. Id. Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74. Boardman v. Keeler, 21 Vt. 78.

27. Sale differs from an exchange. A sale and an exchange are, legally, different contracts; and, in strictness, an averment of one is not supported by proof of the other. Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457.

28. Where property is transferred, and other property with some money is received therefor, a sale, rather than an exchange, may justly be inferred from the fact that the trade was governed by a fixed price for the property—an agreed price being essential to a proper sale, but altogether needless in the case of a mere exchange. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520.

29. The plaintiff agreed to sell her farm to the defendant for $1,200 and to take for it the farm of one G at the same price,—which it was agreed that the defendant should purchase—if the defendant could not induce G to take a less price. The defendant purchased the G farm for $1,050 and falsely represented to the plaintiff that he had been obliged to pay $1,200. Upon this the deeds were exchanged, the plaintiff saying at the time that she was not swapping farms, but buying and selling. In an action of assumpsit to recover for land sold;—Held, that this was a sale at the price of $1,200, and not an exchange without reference to any agreed price, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the difference. Jordan v. Dyer, 84 Vt. 104.

30. —from a lease. The lessor of a farm for three years covenanted by his lease to furnish ten cows, to be kept on the farm for the use and benefit of the lessee, the lessor to risk the cows against all unavoidable accidents and to pay the taxes upon them—the lessee covenanting to deliver to the lessor, at the end of the term, the same ten cows, or those worth as much in all respects. Held, that this was a lease, and not a sale of the cows—the lessee having the right to supply the loss chargeable upon him as not “unavoidable,” by substituting other cows of equal value. Smith v. Niles, 20 Vt. 315. 22 Vt. 351.

31. Something remaining to be done. If anything remains to be done to property by the seller before delivery, no property passes to the buyer, even as between themselves—as, to complete the burning of a coal-pit, and then to measure out the coal. Hale v. Huntley, 21 Vt. 147.

32. In a contract of sale, if any thing remains to be done by one or both of the parties before delivery, the title does not pass. And even where the property has been delivered, if anything remains to be done by the terms of the contract before the sale is complete, the title still remains in the vendor. To effect a completed sale, the contract must be executed. Gibbs v. Benjamin, 45 Vt. 124.

33. The defendant had purchased of the plaintiff absolutely a yoke of oxen, and took possession of them. He afterwards executed a writing to the plaintiff, acknowledging the receipt of the oxen to enable him to do a job of work for the plaintiff, and containing a condition that when the job was done, or at any time, if the plaintiff should choose, he should have a right to take the oxen by paying the defendant for what he had done towards the job. The defendant, before the completion of the job, sold the oxen. In an action of trover therefor;—Held, that this contract did not have the effect of a re-sale of the oxen to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff under it had no right to the oxen without first paying the defendant for what he had done towards the job. Walker v. McNaughton, 16 Vt. 388.

34. The plaintiff sold the defendant a lot of wool unsacked, at a certain price per pound, for cash or sight drafts. The plaintiff afterwards sacked the wool in sacks furnished by the defendant, and then weighed it and shipped it to the defendant. Held, that as the sacking preceded the delivery of the wool, the plaintiff could not recover for his services in sacking the wool, in the absence of an express contract of the defendant to pay therefor. Cole v. Kerr, 20 Vt. 21.

35. Terms of payment. While the terms of payment remain to be settled as between vendor and vendee, the sale is not complete. Miller v. Cushman, 38 Vt. 593.

36. The plaintiff bought of G a mare, supposed to be with foal, and agreed to give therefor the colt at four months old which the mare should bring. The mare brought no colt while the plaintiff possessed her, which was for nearly three years, when the defendant attached her, as the property of G. The plaintiff had in no way paid for the mare. Held, that by the contract the title to the mare vested in the plaintiff; that although the mode of payment agreed upon had become impossible of performance, he was liable to pay in some other way; and that if G might have rescinded and claimed a return of the mare, yet as he had acquiesced, the defendant could not step in and set aside the contract. Reed v. Canady, 34 Vt. 198.

37. Measuring. It is not necessary that an article should be measured before the sale is complete, if it is the intention of the parties that the property shall pass before that time, and that the amount shall be subsequently determined by a measurement of the product of the article when changed in form. Fitch v. Burk, 38 Vt. 683.

38. Actual removal not always essential—Instances. As between the parties to a sale of a chattel, the title may pass without delivery, all the other elements of a valid sale existing. Fletcher v. Howard, 2 Aik. 115; and held, where the plaintiff purchased of the defendant a heifer and paid the price, the defendant agreeing to keep the heifer for the plaintiff until foddering time, and the defendant afterwards refused to deliver the heifer on demand, that he was liable in trover therefor. Bemis v. Morrill, 38 Vt. 153.

39. Where property is in the possession of a third person, a sale of it by the owner and payment therefor, with an agreement that such third person shall be notified of the sale, transfers the title as between the parties. Woolley v. Edson, 35 Vt. 214.

40. A sale of lumber lying at different places in a river, the purchaser agreeing to take it where it lies, is an executed contract and requires no other delivery to transfer the property. A subsequent destruction of part of the property by strangers will not excuse the purchaser from payment of the purchase price. Evarts v. Butler, Brayt. 216.

41. Sufficiency of delivery. The plaintiff purchased plank and timber, a part being in the vendor's bark-house and a part in his shop, and took possession of that in the bark-house, and the vendor agreed to leave the shop key with a third person so that the plaintiff could come and get the property there at his convenience, and he did so leave the key. The defendant afterwards bought the timber in the shop of the same vendor, and procured the key from such third person and removed the timber. Held, that there was a sufficient delivery to the plaintiff to enable him to sustain trespass for the taking. Chappel v. Maroin, 2 Aik. 79.

42. C contracted to buy of D all the potatoes D should raise the next season, taking them in the field after they were dug and laid in heaps. D gave notice when he should commence digging, and kept C advised from time to time that more potatoes were dug and were ready. C drew away a part and then stopped drawing, and the potatoes lay there and became frozen. Held, that the title to all the potatoes so delivered in heaps passed to C, and that he was liable for the whole in an action on book, as for goods sold and delivered. Carpenter v. Dole, 18 Vt. 578.

43. H contracted with T to deliver, at a place named, from 800 to 1000 cords of wood before a day named. H from time to time delivered the quantity of wood as agreed, but a flood came and carried it off before it had been measured by T. It would have been measured but for T's neglect. Held, that the title became vested in T by the delivery, and that he was holden to pay for the wood in an action on book, as for goods sold and delivered. Hunt v. Thurman, 15 Vt. 386.

44. In the sale of articles of bulk—as, two and a half tons of straw by estimate—all that is necessary to constitute a delivery, so as to sustain the action for goods sold and delivered, or book account, is that the contract of sale should be complete, the particular portion be set apart by itself, nothing more remain to be done on the part of the vendor, and that the vendee should agree to take the goods as they are, and where they are. Chamberlain v. Farr, 28 Vt. 265.

45. Where standing trees are sold by a parol contract, and the purchaser has cut the trees, although left upon the land, the contract has become executed, and the timber cut is the property of the purchaser. Yale v. Seely, 15 Vt. 221. 27 Vt. 166. 32 Vt. 39. 43 Vt. 97.

46. A and B owned a quantity of cheese in individual shares, A having a lien for his security upon B's share, and a right to receive the whole proceeds of the sale of the cheese and to account to B, on settlement of accounts, for his share. B, by contrivance with C, in order to obtain the pay for his share and thus embarrass A in enforcing his lien and securing his accounts, pretended to sell his share of the cheese to C, and going with C to the property, then in the hands of a carrier for the market, looked at it, saying, "I deliver this to you"—without doing any thing more, or notifying the carrier. Held, that C acquired no right thereby against A. Shepard v. Briggs, 26 Vt. 149.

47. A contract to deliver a cow to the defendant, is not satisfied by putting the cow in the defendant's barn-yard in his absence. Bruce v. Bishop, 43 Vt. 161.

48. First possessor. Where the same chattel is sold or mortgaged, to two different persons by conveyances equally valid, the one who lawfully acquires the possession will hold it against the other. Fletcher v. Howard, 2 Aik. 115. Coty v. Barnes, 20 Vt. 78.

49. Where the second mortgagee of a chattel allowed it to be in the joint possession of himself and the mortgagor;—Held, that the first mortgagee might take it into his own possession and thus complete his title. Coty v. Barnes.

50. Acceptance—What is, and its effect. What constitutes a delivery and acceptance of goods so as to transfer the title, considered and discussed. Redington v. Roberts, 25 Vt. 686.

51. The use or sale of a part of the property delivered upon a contract, although the party may not be bound to accept it, is evidence of an acceptance of the whole under the contract, and may be a confirmation of the contract as claimed by the other party, notwithstanding accompanying declarations to the contrary. Bliss v. Granger, 6 Vt. 340.

52. Where the defendant contracted to take of the plaintiff 20,000 feet of lumber to be delivered at a place and by a day named, and while the plaintiff was drawing the lumber the defendant notified him that he (defendant) should not want the full quantity, without specifying how much he did want and what quantity he would accept, and the plaintiff continued to deliver and did deliver the whole quantity contracted for, and the defendant used a part;—Held, in an action on book, that the defendant was holden to pay for the whole. Id.

53. The defendant contracted with the plaintiff for all the lumber on 12 acres of land, to be sawed and delivered by the plaintiff on the defendant's premises. The plaintiff sawed and delivered the lumber into the possession of the defendant, and it was placed where the defendant directed. The defendant used all except the basswood lumber, which the defendant refused to take at the plaintiff's measurement. Held, that the title to the basswood lumber passed to the defendant, the plaintiff so electing, and that an action on book lay for the price. Carpenter v. Brainerd, 37 Vt. 145, citing Hunt v. Thurman, 15 Vt. 386.

54. Held, also, that the contract was entire, and the actual acceptance and use of a part was an acceptance of the whole. Id., citing Bliss v. Granger, 6 Vt. 340. Carpenter v. Dole, 18 Vt. 578.

55. The defendant and one M, made a contract by which the defendant was to procure to be sawed from logs of the defendant certain boards, the logs being then selected and marked with the initials of M's name; the boards to be received by M, at the mill, at the sawyer's measurement, at a certain price per thousand feet; M not to take the boards from the mill yard, until he had paid for them. But from time to time, as the boards were sawed and measured by the sawyer, M, in the absence of the defendant, drew them away from the mill yard, some six or eight rods, and piled them up in an open space near a building in part occupied by him, expressing dissatisfaction with the sawyer's measurement, and repeatedly declaring that he would not take them at that measurement. Held, that the defendant was entitled to prove, as tending to show that M had not accepted the boards, so as to transfer the title to him, that upon being called on for payment he replied "that when the defendant furnished lumber according to the contract, he would pay for it." Fletcher v. Cole, 23 Vt. 114.

56. Where the owner of goods in the possession of his bailee proffered to sell them to the bailee, and the bailee thereupon proceeded to use and sell them as his own;—Held, that he was liable as for goods sold. Jones v. Hard, 32 Vt. 481.

57. Election. The plaintiff let the defendant have, under a written contract, a yoke of oxen "to work and use well and run all risk of accident, sickness and death for one year, for $115, and interest." If returned, the defendant was to pay $12 for the use of the oxen; and if he paid $115, and interest, in one year, he was to own them. Near the end of the year the defendant informed the plaintiff that he should not return the oxen, and he continued to use them until after the end of the year, and until one of them died. In an action for goods sold;—Held, that the defendant, by his notice, had elected to become the purchaser, and that the bringing of the suit was an affirmation by the plaintiff of such election. Fuller v. Buswell, 84 Vt. 107.

58. The plaintiff's intestate (Roberts) and the defendant (Mann) made the following written agreement: "Springfield, March 22, 1865. Received of G. H. Roberts $800 on a lot of assorted fur skins, billed at $847.25. This money is to be applied in payment for the skins if we can agree on the prices; otherwise, the skins are to be returned to Brattleboro, Vt., by Roberts, and I am to return the $800. Gilbert H. Mann." The defendant having refused after more than three days to receive back the skins, Roberts sold them in market for less than $800, and brought this suit to recover the difference. Held, that the written contract contemplated a future agreement supplementary to the written contract as to price, and that it was competent for the defendant to testify, that immediately after the execution of the written contract, at the same interview, Roberts agreed to notify the defendant in three days whether he would keep the skins and pay the price for them or not. Field, Admr., v. Mann, 42 Vt. 61. Held (Peck, J., dissenting), that this evidence tended to prove a sale at the price named, if Roberts did not within the three days notify the defendant whether he would take the skins at the price named or not. Id.

59. To sell or return. The plaintiffs left with K, a trader, goods "to sell or return on demand" at prices set in the bill receipted, K's commission, or compensation, to be what he could sell the goods for above the prices named. The defendant attached the unsold goods as the property of K. Held, that he was liable to the plaintiffs in an action of trespass. Shloss v. Cooper, 27 Vt. 623.

60. Special cases. Where A agreed to build a barn for the plaintiff by a specified time, for which the plaintiff was to furnish timber standing in his woods;—Held, that the timber drawn and sawed into boards by A, for that purpose, remained the property of the plaintiff and was not subject to attachment as the property of A. Gallup v. Josselyn, 7 Vt. 384.

61. I agreed to cut and draw for P a quantity of wood which P had a right to cut upon the land of a third person, and by the agreement I was to "own and possess" the wood until he should be paid for cutting and drawing. I cut and drew the wood and deposited it in the highway and on land belonging to R, by consent of all parties, where it was attached by a creditor of P, as his property. After the attachment, I sold the wood to the defendant. The wood was then sold on the execution against P to the plaintiff. After this, the defendant drew away the wood. P had paid nothing towards the cutting and drawing of the wood. In trespass, held, that I under his agreement with P, had a special property in the wood binding against P, and, upon these facts, against his creditors, which passed by the assignment of I to the defendant and that the plaintiff could not recover. Hammond v. Plimpton, 30 Vt. 333.

4. Rescission—Acceptance as a waiver of objections.

62. Right to rescind. In case of sales, assumpsit will lie for breach of warranty, or an action of deceit for fraud in the sale; and, in some cases, the purchaser may, for fraud in the seller, rescind and demand back the consideration paid. In such case, he may rescind the contract, or affirm it, at his election; as, by bringing his action for damages. If he would put an end to the contract and recover back the consideration, he must, in due time, offer to rescind and demand a repayment of the consideration. Warner v. Wheeler, 1 D. Chip. 159.

63. Where one purchased goods upon credit, upon the recommendation of a third person to whom the buyer had referred the seller for information;—Held, that the buyer was responsible for the representations made, the same as if made by himself, on the common principles of agency; and, the recommendation which induced the credit being materially false and this known to the buyer, that the seller upon obtaining knowledge of the falsehood could rescind the sale, and recover the goods from the buyer, or his attaching creditor. Fitzsim- mons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129. 25 Vt. 234. 31 Vt. 109. 36 Vt. 198. 42 Vt. 111.

64. The mere insolvency of the purchaser of goods, together with a consciousness on his part of inability to pay for them, does not amount to such a fraud as to enable the seller to avoid the contract of sale and reclaim the goods. Redington v. Roberts, 25 Vt. 686.

65. The plaintiff sold the defendant certain teas at a price named, as and for good teas, but not by sample, nor was there any fraud, nor warranty. The defendant received the teas, whose quality was ascertainable on inspection, and sold part thereof, and within five or ten days after the receipt of the teas, but before discovering their inferiority, gave his note for the price. In an action on the note;—Held, that the inferiority of the teas, they not being worthless, was no defense to the note, in whole or in part. Henderson v. Ward, 27 Vt. 432.

66. Acceptance as a waiver. Waiver of condition in a contract, and of objection to quality of goods purchased, by receiving part, and use and payment. Cole v. Champ. Tr. Co., 26 Vt. 87.

67. A person contracting for the purchase of articles to be in good condition, is bound to pay the price stipulated, although they were in bad condition and depreciated, if he has accepted them with knowledge of their condition and without objection. Cram v. Watson, 28 Vt. 22.

68. The plaintiff sold the defendant a horse for which the defendant agreed to pay a wagon worth $60, to be delivered at a future day named, and $10 in money. Held, that the value of the wagon was an essential part of the contract, and not matter of description merely; and that the delivery and acceptance of a wagon worth only $25, in consequence of defects not known to the plaintiff, and which he could not have discovered on careful inspection at the time of his acceptance, should count as but $25 towards the $60. Brown v. Sayles, 27 Vt. 227.

69. Time to rescind. Where the right to rescind a purchase of varnish, on trial of the article, was reserved in the contract;—Held, that the using of it to a greater extent than was necessary to test it, barred the right to rescind. Mayer v. Duinell, 29 Vt. 298. 32 Vt. 182.

70. Acceptance of an article by non-return after expiration of time given for trial. Waters Heater Co. v. Mansfield, 48 Vt. 378.

71. Where the right of rescinding a sale exists it must be exercised within a reasonable time, or the property becomes the purchaser's and he must pay for it according to the contract, subject to the right of recoupment for fraud. Tilton Safe Co. v. Tisdale, 48 Vt. 83.

72. Where goods of a specific description are ordered, and when received they do not answer the description, if the party giving the order would avail himself of the right to return the goods, he should do so as soon as he has time and opportunity to ascertain the fact. Boughton v. Standish, 48 Vt. 594.

73. In an action for a false warranty on the exchange of horses, the defendant cannot object that at the time of the exchange there existed a lien upon the horse he received, in behalf of a former conditional vendor for part of the purchase price, where such lien has been discharged before the trial, the defendant never having been disturbed in his title or possession, and never having offered to rescind the contract. Clayton v. Scott, 48 Vt. 553.

74. Case of duress. Where a party had made sale of property by duress and taken the purchaser's note for a sum which included that and other matters, and gave notice that he repudiated the trade and all of the note which embraced it;—Held, that it was not necessary to offer to return the note in order to such repudiation—he never having offered to collect or negotiate the note, and bringing it into court. Brownell v. Talcott, 47 Vt. 243.

75. Articles agreed to be manufactured. Where an article is to be manufactured to order, and the contract is silent as to quality of the material to be used, it is implied that the material shall, at least, be of an ordinary quality as to goodness. Brown v. Sayles, 27 Vt. 227.

76. Where the plaintiff under a written contract had, at the time and place specified, delivered articles of the number and description agreed to be manufactured, and the defendant used a part of them, and paid part of the price, and promised to pay the balance;—Held, that this was such an acceptance of all, that he could not object on account of any apparent defects in them. Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214. 18 Vt. 581.

77. The purchaser of an article manufactured for him at a stipulated price, under an order specifying style, quality, &c., may reject it, if not made according to the contract, and give notice of non-acceptance, and bring his action for non-performance of the contract; but if he accepts it, there being no warranty or fraud, he becomes liable to pay the stipulated price. He cannot accept it, and impose conditions, and sue for non-compliance with such conditions. Gilsom v. Bingham, 48 Vt. 410.

78. Where articles are manufactured and delivered, inferior or different in some respects from those contracted for, and the sale is not repudiated by notice of non-acceptance within a reasonable time, this will be a ratification of the sale. Esty v. Read, 29 Vt. 278.

79. The acceptance of an article manufactured to order, which the purchaser supposes to be without defects, is not conclusive upon him if the defect could not be ascertained by careful inspection, or there was no opportunity to inspect it. In such case, the purchaser is not liable for the contract price, but for what the article was worth. Brown v. Sayles, 27 Vt. 237.

80. A manufactured a pump for B, under an agreement that if the pump was not a good one he should have nothing for making it. The pump was put in B's well, and B paid part of the price of the pump. On trial, the pump proved not to be a good one, not being constructed on an approved plan, and answered its purpose but imperfectly. A tried to fix the pump several times, and not succeeding, B several times requested him to take it away. Held, that the pump never became B's property; that no acceptance of it could be presumed, under the circumstances, and that A could not recover either for the pump, or for his labor in fixing it. Sias v. Bates, 18 Vt. 579.

5. Stoppage in transitu.

81. The right. Where goods are purchased and paid for by the order, note, or accepted bill of a third party, without any indorsement or guaranty of the purchaser, the vendor has no right of stoppage in transitu for the insolvency of such third person. Eaton v. Cook, 32 Vt. 58.

82. Where the transitus ends. Goods sold and shipped at Troy, N. Y., were directed to the vendee at Vergennes, and were landed on the wharf at Vergennes, which was half a mile from the vendee's place of business. This wharf was the usual place of the vendee's receiving such goods, and, after landed, neither the wharfinger, nor any one for him or for the carriers, had any charge of the goods, and they would in the usual course of business have been taken away by the vendee without any claim for payment of freight. Held, that the wharf was the place of ultimate destination named by the consignor, and that when the goods passed from the hands of the carrier they came into the constructive possession of the vendee, and that the right of stoppage in transitu had ceased. Sawyer v. Joslin, 20 Vt. 172. 28 Vt. 212. 30 Vt. 552.

83. When goods are delivered at a place where they will remain until a fresh impulse is communicated to them by the vendee, the transitus is at an end, and the vendor's right of stoppage in transitu is ended. Guilford v. Smith, 30 Vt. 49. 40 Vt. 149.

84. P, residing at Burlington, Vt., purchased flour on credit of G at Toronto, Canada, and ordered it shipped to F at Ogdensburgh, N. Y., who was P's agent for the purpose of receiving the flour there and forwarding it as directed by

P. The bills of lading described F as consignee, Ogdensburgh, "to be forwarded to P, Burlington." The flour arrived by steamer at Ogdensburgh, whence there was a railroad to Burlington, run in connection with the steamers. The freight and government duties being unpaid, the flour was placed, subject to the provisions of the U. S. warehousing system, in a warehouse of the R. R. Co., but under the charge of the owners of the steamers, from which warehouse it could not be moved until the freight and duties were paid, or the latter were secured according to U. S. laws. The flour in the warehouse was held subject to the special direction of F, and would not be forwarded without his direction. P having become insolvent, his assignees notified F of the assignment, and directed him to hold the flour subject to their order. F thereupon went to the warehouseman and countermanded a previous order to forward the flour, and gave directions to have it remain in the warehouse for further orders. Held, that the transitus was ended, and that G, the vendor, could not thereafter, by paying the freight and complying with the U. S. customs regulations, exercise the right of stoppage in transitu. Id.

85. Where goods purchased in N. Y. arrived on the railroad cars at R, in Vt., their place of destination, subject to charges, but before unloading or delivery and while in the hands of the carriers as such, they were attached by a creditor of the purchaser and removed on payment of charges;—Held, that the transitus was not ended; that the unpaid vendor had the right of stoppage in transitu, and that after demand, he could recover in trover against the attaching creditor. Kitchen v. Spear, 30 Vt. 545.

86. Where goods are sold to A, who, before delivery, resells them to B, and this being known to the first vendor, he consigns them to B, this new destination is a final and irrevocable delivery, and the right of stoppage in transitu is gone. Eaton v. Cook, 32 Vt. 58.

II. WARRANTIES.

1. What constitutes a warranty; implied; express; particular warranties.

87. Implied warranty of title. If one affirms that he has an interest in a chattel, and releases that interest upon a sale, when in fact he has none, he is liable as for a warranty, whether he sells the chattel itself, or his interest, right or title in it. Strong v. Barnes, 11 Vt. 221.

88. In the conveyance of personalty there is always an implied warranty of title, unless it be the vendor's title, and not the thing itself, which is intended to be conveyed; and a subsequently acquired title in the vendor will inure to the benefit of the vendee. Sherman v. Champlain Transportation Co., 81 Vt. 162.

89. A warranty of title is implied upon an exchange, the same as upon the sale, of chattels. Patee v. Pelton, 48 Vt. 182.

90. —of genuineness. The defendant assigned by writing to the plaintiff a promissory note, describing the paper as "a note signed by," &c. Held, that this was an express warranty that the note was a valid note, and that the signer had sufficient capacity to make it. A warranty to this extent would probably be implied from the sale itself. Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202.

91. Sound price not a warranty. A sound price is not per se a warranty of the soundness of an article sold, and the seller is not liable for defects or unsoundness without an express warranty, or unless guilty of fraud. Penniman v. Pierson, 1 D. Chp. 394. 1 Aik. 272.

92. In an action for the agreed price of a patent right sold without warranty or fraud, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the full price, if the patent is of any value. Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266.

93. It is no defense to an action to recover the price of a cow sold, that the cow was so diseased as to be worthless, where the sale was without fraud, or warranty. Bryant v. Pember, 45 Vt. 487.

94. Sale for a particular use. Where an article is bought, and sold, for a particular known use, the sale ordinarily implies a warranty that the article is fit for that use. Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114.

95. The plaintiff purchased of the defendant, for a sound price, cheese made by the defendant, and for the purpose, made known to the defendant, of sale in a foreign market. The cheese was maggoty and so unfit for market, which was from a fault of the manufacture and was a latent defect. Held, that the defendant was liable upon an implied warranty that the cheese was fit for the purpose stated. Pease v. Saben, 88 Vt. 482.

96. Particular terms. The terms "good cooking stoves" in a contract of sale were held not to imply a warranty of quality. Barrett v. Hall, 1 Aik. 269.

97. The plaintiff bargained and sold to the defendant, at a specified price per pound, "old potash kettles," which, as the plaintiff knew, the defendant intended to melt up and use in his business of manufacturing stoves. There was no express warranty of the quality; the plaintiff knew of no defect and was guilty of no fraud. The defendant had an opportunity to examine the kettles, knew that they had been used in the manufacture of potash, and received them without objection. On breaking them up for melting, one-half the entire weight was found wholly unfit for use, by reason of their having been badly burned in the manufacture of potash. Held, that here was no implied warranty of fitness for use, and that the defendant was liable for the full price agreed. Stevens v. Smith, 21 Vt. 90.

98. The plaintiffs, manufacturers of safes, sent the defendants a safe answering the terms of their written order, viz.: "A No. 4 safe with combination lock of their make." Held, that there was no implied warranty as to the merit or usableness of the lock. Tilton Safe Co. v. Tisdale, 48 Vt. 88.

99. The words, in a bill of sale of a horse, "considered sound," were held not to be a warranty of soundness, but only a representation of soundness, bearing upon the question of deceit practiced. Wason v. Rowe, 16 Vt. 525.

100. A warranty that a horse is "sound and right," means that the horse is right in conduct and behavior, as to all matters materially affecting its value, as well as in physical condition. Such a warranty covers a case of "cribbing," whether or not that be a physical unsoundness. Walker v. Hoisington, 48 Vt. 608.

101. Representations constituting a warranty—Question of intent. Where the declarations of the vendor as to the character and quality of the thing sold, form the basis of the sale, such declarations are ordinarily to be regarded as a warranty. They should be submitted to the jury, unless it is apparent that they were understood by the parties at the time as nothing more than recommendation and matter of opinion, leaving the purchaser to understand that he must examine and judge for himself. Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114.

102. A simple affirmation made in the sale of property as to soundness or the like, is not a warranty, nor can it be held such by the court, unless it is found by the triers of fact that it was intended and understood by the parties as a warranty. Bond v. Clark, 85 Vt. 577. Foster v. Caldwell, 18 Vt. 177. Beeman v. Buck, 8 Vt. 53.

103. In an action for the breach of warranty as to the quality of butter sold, the referee reported what was sold by the parties during the negotiations for the sale, and found that "the language used imported that the butter should be of the best quality, &c.; that both parties so understood it, and intended it to make a part of the contract as to the quality of the butter;" and reported, as a conclusion of law, that such language amounted to a warranty. Held (with hesitation), that this was a finding of a warranty as matter of fact, and the report was confirmed. Houghton v. Carpenter, 40 Vt. 588.

104. Apparent defects—Special warranties. The rule excluding from a general warranty of soundness such defects as are known to the purchaser, only applies to such as are perfectly obvious to the senses, and the effects and consequences of which may be accurately estimated, so that no purchaser would expect the seller intended to warrant against them. Such general warranty embraces all other defects, though apparent to some extent, but still equivocal and doubtful in their character, whether they are permanent, or temporary, or whether they are mere harmless blemishes, or but partially developed unsoundness. Poland, C. J., in Hill v. North, 34 Vt. 615; and embraces those apparent defects, to understand the true nature and extent of which requires the aid of skill, experience or judgment. Wilson, J., in Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 641.

105. This rule as to general warranties has no application to the case of a special warranty against a specified defect; for the seller may warrant against a defect which is patent and obvious, as well as against any other. Ib.

106. Thus, where the declaration counted upon a special warranty that the sheep purchased had not the foot-rot, and averred a breach that they had the foot-rot;—Held, that on proof of the special warranty and breach, the plaintiff was entitled to recover without any regard to whether the existence of the disease was obvious and discoverable, or was discovered and known by the plaintiff when he made the purchase. Pinney v. Andrus.

107. Where the parties to a sale of sheep settled the terms of the trade, agreeing upon the price and the time and place of future delivery, and a part of the purchase price was paid, and as part of that agreement the seller warranted the sheep to be sound, and on the next day the purchaser went to pay the balance for the sheep, and then discovered that the sheep were unsound, and offered to rescind the trade, when the seller repeated his warranty made on the first day;—Held, that the two interviews were to be regarded as parts of the one trade and sale, and whatever was said or done at either interview, in relation to the trade, was part of the contract. Ib.

108. In an action for breach of warranty of a horse, the declaration averred a warranty of soundness of the horse except a bunch on one hind leg, and averred that the horse was unsound in other particulars specified; but did not aver that the bunch, in its effects upon the horse, was other than and beyond what was obvious, and what the defendant warranted. The court below charged, that if the horse was sound "except so far as that bunch made him unsound," then there was no breach of the warranty, "even if the bunch made him lame." Held correct. Morrill v. Bemis, 37 Vt. 155.

109. Limited warranty. Assumpsit lies upon a limited warranty of soundness—as, sound so far as the warrantor knows—the declaration averring his knowledge of the unsoundness. Parlin v. Bundy, 18 Vt. 582.

2. Effect of breach, and remedy.

110. Effect. A breach of warranty in the sale of goods, where there was no fraud nor agreement for a rescission, does not entitle the purchaser to rescind the contract, but only to claim a deduction from the agreed price, or damages for a breach of the warranty. Mayer v. Duinell, 29 Vt. 298. West v. Cutting, 19 Vt. 586. 27 Vt. 282. Matteson v. Holt, 45 Vt. 336.

111. Where property is bought upon inspection, with warranty as to quality, no duty is imposed upon the purchaser to give notice of the defect, or to offer to return the property, in order to entitle him to an action for breach of warranty. Nor has he generally a right in such case to return the property; but he has, if there was fraud in the sale. But when the property is not bought upon inspection, but the sale is executory, and the seller, contracting to furnish goods of a particular quality, forwards them, and they do not answer the contract, the buyer may return them; and if he neglects to do so, but keeps and appropriates them to his own use, it is often held that the objection to the quality is thereby waived. Houghton v. Carpenter, 40 Vt. 588.

112. In the sale of chattels, or of an article manufactured to order, if there be a warranty or fraud, an action by the purchaser will lie therefor, though the property be retained by him. Gilson v. Bingham, 43 Vt. 410.

113. Action—Pleadings. In an action for breach of warranty of soundness of a horse, it is sufficient to assign the breach in the negative of the terms of the contract, without alleging wherein the unsoundness consisted. Dictum contra, in Martin v. Blodgett, 1 Aik. 875, denied. Wheeler v. Wheelock, 33 Vt. 144. Parlin v. Bundy, 18 Vt. 582.

114. In an action on the case for a false warranty, in the common form—warrantie et ando vendidit,—alleging a scienter of the falsity of the warranty, the plaintiff may recover on proof of the warranty and its breach, without proof of the scienter; or if he fails in proof of the warranty, but proves the scienter, he may recover for the deceit; and if he proves the warranty and the scienter, his right of recovery on both grounds is made out. Beeman v. Buck, 3 Vt. 53. Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457. Goodenough v. Snow, 27 Vt. 720. Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 681.

115. Evidence. A declaration in assumpsit counting upon an express warranty of soundness in a sale, was held not sustained by mere proof of fraud in this respect. Shepherd v. Worthing, 1 Aik. 188.

116. Where a contract of sale is in writing containing no warranty, parol proof of a warranty is excluded. Bond v. Clark, 85 Vt. 577.

117. This extends to an ordinary bill of sale, describing the property sold and receipting for the price. Reed v. Wood, 9 Vt. 285.

118. Recoupment. A purchaser upon warranty is entitled to a deduction from the agreed price when the article is inferior to the warranty, unless he has waived his claim upon the warranty; as, by accepting the article unconditionally. Mayer v. Duinell, 29 Vt. 298.

119. Damages. Where an unsound horse was sold on warranty of soundness, and the buyer, acting with common prudence and discretion, resold the horse, it was held, in an action for the false warranty, that the price obtained should be deemed the proper measure of the value of the horse; and that the difference between such price and what the horse ought to be worth by the warranty, was the actual loss, and was recoverable, although the buyer did not, before such resale, offer to return the horse. But he could not recover special damages beyond this—as, for the keeping of the horse—unless he had previously offered to return the horse. Woodward v. Thacher, 21 Vt. 580.

120. In estimating the damages for a breach of warranty of the quality of property sold, the price paid may be taken, in lack of other evidence, as what its value would have been had it been as warranted; and the difference between the price paid in such case, and the actual value, is the measure of damages. Houghton v. Carpenter, 40 Vt. 588.

121. In an action for breach of warranty of the character of goods sold, the general rule of damages is the difference between the value of the property as it was warranted to be, and the value as it in fact was. Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 681. [The charge in this case, as to the damages, was held to be too general; and as embracing too remote damages, and such as were not covered by the declaration.]

III. VALIDITY AS AGAINST CREDITORS.

122. The rule as to change of possession. As between the parties to a sale, property in personal chattels may pass by a bargain and sale, for a sufficient consideration, without delivery; but as against every one but the vendor, there must be a delivery of possession. Fletcher v. Howard, 2 Aik. 115.

123. Fraud per se—Fraud in law. Such sale without change of possession is usually termed a fraud in law. It is not complete as to creditors till there is a change of possession; and this must be a visible, substantial change, so that the possession will no longer give a credit to the former owner. Hutchinson, J., in Mott v. McNeil, 1 Aik. 162.

124. If he who purchases personal property permits him who sells it to remain in possession after such sale, it is a fraud in law, and such possession is a fraud per se. This is the settled law of the land, from which "we are not disposed to recede a jot, nor to advance a whit." Matlocks, J., in Farnsworth v. Shepard, 6 Vt. 521; and see Durkee v. Mahoney, 1 Aik. 116. Boardman v. Keeler, Id. 158. Weeks v. Weed, 2 Aik. 64. Batchelder v. Carter, 2 Vt. 168. Moore v. Kelley, 5 Vt. 84. Judd v. Langdon, Id. 231. Fuller v. Sears, Id. 527. Gates v. Gaines, 10 Vt. 346. Kendall v. Samson, 12 Vt. 515.

125. No stipulation in a contract of sale that the vendor shall remain in possession, will take the case out of the rule requiring a change of possession, except in certain special cases, where the purpose of the conveyance and the nature of the transaction require the vendor to continue in possession. Weeks v. Weed, 2 Aik. 64.

126. A rule of policy. All the cases in Vermont treat the matter of fraud in law, constructive fraud, predicated upon a lack of possession, as originating in policy, and limited to creditors and bona fide purchasers without notice. In favor of such, the law adopts a kind of conclusive estoppel in pais, when the former owner continues in the possession and use of the property in a manner consistent with his continuing still to be the owner of it. Barrett, J., in Daniels v. Nelson, 41 Vt. 161.

127. Pledge—Mortgage. Neither a mortgage, nor pledge of personal property, nor a lien upon it, can prevail against a subsequent attachment, without taking and retaining possession. Russell v. Fillmore, 15 Vt. 180.

128. A sale or pledge of chattels, which from their nature or situation it is not impracticable to move, will, if not accompanied by a manifest and substantial change of possession, be voidable by attaching creditors. Houston v. Howard, 89 Vt. 54.

129. The ostensible nature and purpose of the possession of chattels pledged, as well as its duration, should be considered in determining whether it was so manifest and substantial as to be unprejudiced by the pledgee's allowing the property to return to the control of the pledgor. Id.

130. If one sells and delivers property absolutely, and the parties afterwards attempt to make the transaction a conditional sale, or to create a lien upon the property in behalf of the vendor, a change of possession becomes necessary in order to protect the property from attachment by the creditors of the vendee. Wright v. Vaughn, 45 Vt. 369.

131. The defendant, a blacksmith, ironed

Scott's sled and asserted his lien thereon for his pay; whereupon it was agreed that the sled should be the defendant's till he was paid, but Scott took and kept possession of the sled, yet always recognizing the defendant's ownership. Held, that the defendant's lien for repairs was lost by parting with the possession; and that the conditional sale, by reason of Scott's possession, was not good as against Scott's attaching creditors. Barrett, J., dissenting. Kitteridge v. Freeman, 48 Vt. 62.

See MORTGAGE 209 et seq.

132. How far the change must be apparent. The change of possession, necessary to perfect a sale as against attaching creditors of the vendor, is only such a divesting of the possession of the vendor as any man, knowing the facts which could be ascertained upon reasonable inquiry, would be bound to know and to understand was the result of a change of ownership; such an one as he could not reasonably misapprehend. Redfield, J., in Stephenson v. Clark, 20 Vt. 624.

134. When chattels are in the possession of a third person when sold, a subsequent attaching creditor of the vendor is put upon inquiry as to the ownership, and is not allowed to rest content with mere observation that there has been no visible change of possession; but in case of an apparent concurrent possession of vendor and vendee, he is not bound to inquire, but it is sufficient if he carefully observe, and if a careful observer would be at a loss to determine which had the chief control, it is a joint possession. Aldis, J., in Flanagan v. Wood, 33 Vt. 332. See Parker v. Kendrick, 29 Vt. 388.

133. In respect to the question how apparent and observable the change of possession of goods purchased must be, in order to protect them from attachment for the debts of the vendor, I think it correct to say, that on the one hand, the purchaser must see to it that he so conducts with the property as to indicate by the appearances to an observer a change in the possession; and on the other hand, the creditors of the vendor are bound to see what others can see, and judge and act upon it with that prudence that is required of men in business affairs. Peck, J., in Stanley v. Robbins, 36 Vt. 488.

135. How far exclusive. A concurrent possession in the vendor and vendee after the sale of a chattel, renders the sale void as to the vendor's creditors, as a fraud per se; but to have that effect, it must appear that the possession and use of the property by the vendor was of the same description as that of a joint owner in using, occupying or disposing of it; and the important inquiry in such case is, who was at the head, controlling the business;—and if a careful observer would be at a loss to determine, this would be a joint possession. Allen

v. Edgerton, 3 Vt. 442. Hall v. Parsons, 15 Vt. 358. S. C. 17 Vt. 271. Mills v. Warner, 19 Vt. 609. Flanagan v. Wood, 33 Vt. 332; and see Farnsworth v. Shepard, 6 Vt. 521. Lyndon v. Belden, 14 Vt. 423. Wilson v. Hooper, 12 Vt. 653.

136. Question for jury. Where the question was one of change of possession—whether such possession was exclusive in the vendee, or a joint possession with the vendor, depending on appearances as to which was at the head controlling the business;—Held, that the question should be left to the jury to be determined from the special facts proved, with proper instructions as to what constitutes possession under such circumstances, in connection with agency. Hall v. Parsons, 15 Vt. 358. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

137. The county court rightly refused to rule, as matter of law, that there was no sufficient change of possession to perfect a transfer as against attaching creditors, where the debtor had no relation to the attached property until it went into his hands under the assignee's employment, and where all actual as well as apparent possession by him had ceased for several weeks before the attachment. White v. Miller, 46 Vt. 65.

138. How long continued. After a sale of personal chattels has become perfected by such a visible, notorious and continued change of possession that the creditors of the vendor may be presumed to have notice of it—in this case, it was for nearly six years—the vendee may lend, or let the thing to the vendor, or employ him to sell it, or perform any other service about it with the same safety as he might if dealing with a stranger. Dewey v. Thrall, 13 Vt. 281.

139. The purchaser of a horse took it into his possession and kept and used it as his own for over seven months, but had for a few times loaned or hired it to the former owner for a temporary purpose, and it was so hired to him and in his use for a mere temporary purpose, when it was attached for his debts. Held, that the change of possession was sufficient to protect the property to the purchaser. Farnsworth v. Shepard, 6 Vt. 521. Lyndon v. Belden, 14 Vt. 423. 17 Vt. 277.

140. But where the purchaser took and retained possession of the thing purchased for only some two to four weeks, and then suffered it to go back into the permanent possession and use of the vendor, and in his own business;—Held, that it was subject to attachment for the vendor's debts. Mills v. Warner, 19 Vt. 609.

141. The purchaser of a horse committed it to a third person to keep for him, who on the next day allowed the horse, though without the knowledge or consent of the purchaser, to go back into the possession and use of the former owner, when it was attached by his creditor. Held, that the purchaser was bound by the act of his agent, and that for want of a sufficient change of possession the attachment must prevail. Morris v. Hyde, 8 Vt. 352. 11 Vt. 687. 16 Vt. 329.

142. Property returned to the possession of the former owner was held subject to attachment for his debts, notwithstanding it had been assigned by him to trustees for the payment of certain debts and then for all other debts, and the trustees had taken exclusive possession of the property and so kept it for fourteen days, when they sold it upon advertisement at public auction to the plaintiff. Rogers v. Vail, 16 Vt. 327.

143. In March, R assigned and delivered all his property, including two wagons, to H, to be disposed of for the payment of certain debts of R. H sold part of the property and applied the avails upon the debts. In June following, the debts not being fully paid, H allowed the wagons to return to R's possession, being advised that he could safely do so. Held, that the wagons in R's possession were subject to attachment by other creditors of R. Houston v. Howard, 39 Vt. 54.

144. A calf given to the plaintiff remained in the donor's keeping, but at the plaintiff's expense, for one year, when the plaintiff put it into the possession of a third person and hired him to keep it for a year, after which it went back into the keeping of the donor, and was in his keeping for a month, when it was attached as his property. Held, that the change of possession was sufficient to protect the property from the attachment. Allen v. Knowlton, 47 Vt. 512.

145. Article substituted. Where the vendor of a horse had been allowed to keep such possession as subjected it to attachment for his debts, and he afterwards, for the convenience and advantage of his own business, and, for aught that appeared, in his own name and ostensibly on his own account, exchanged that horse for another which he put to his own use;—Held, that the second horse became as much a means of false credit as the other had previously been, and was equally liable to attachment for the vendor's debts. Mills v. Warner, 19 Vt. 609. 27 Vt. 387.

146. Cases without the rule. At an auction sale, property was struck off to B as the highest bidder, but he was unable to comply with the terms of sale as to ready payment or security. S then gave his note for the property, with the required security, to the amount of B's bid. This was done in the presence of B, but not at his request, nor did he know why it was done. Held, that S became the purchaser, and that the subsequent possession of the property by B did not per se subject it to attachment for his debts. Spring v. Chipman, 6 Vt. 662.

147. A sold to B a cow, but without change of possession. A again sold this cow to a third person, and the price was paid to B. B handed the price to A, who purchased with it another cow for B, but in A's own name and ostensibly on his own account, and he took and retained possession, until the cow was attached for A's debt. Held, that the doctrine of fraud in law did not apply, as this second cow was never the property of A; and, in the absence of fraud in fact, held, that B could hold the cow against the attachment. Ridout v. Burton, 27 Vt. 888.

148. Goods in hands of third person. It is a sufficient delivery and transfer and change of possession of goods sold which are in the care and keeping of a third person, so as to protect them from subsequent sale by the vendor, or attachment for his debts, that the party holding the goods, on notice and application of the purchaser, assents to retain the goods for him. Barney v. Brown, 2 Vt. 874. Spaulding v. Austin, 2 Vt. 555.

149. Where goods in the possession of a third person are sold, mere notice of the sale given by the purchaser to such third person, will not protect them from attachment by the creditors of the vendor. In order to defeat such right of attachment, such third person must consent to keep them for the purchaser. Whitney v. Lynde, 16 Vt. 579. Rice v. Courtis, 32 Vt. 460.

150. And the purchaser himself must give the notice of the transfer, or cause it to be done by some person other than the vendor. Whitney v. Lynde. Judd v. Langdon, 5 Vt. 281. 33 Vt. 337.

151. Where chattels sold or attached are in the hands of a third person, no visible change of possession is required in order to perfect the sale or attachment as against subsequent attachments, provided the purchaser or creditor [or attaching officer] gives notice to such third person of his purchase or attachment. Aldis, J., in Flanagan v. Wood, 33 Vt. 337. Harding v. Jones, 4 Vt. 462. Pierce v. Chipman, 8 Vt. 334. Merritt v. Miller, 13 Vt. 416. Potter v. Washburn. Ib. 558. Willard v. Lull, 17 Vt. 412.

152. But where such third person is the servant or agent of the vendor, notice to him of the sale, and his agreement to keep the property for the purchaser, are not equivalent to a visible change of possession. Sleeper v. Pollard, 28 Vt. 709. Flanagan v. Wood, 33 Vt. 332. 46 Vt. 69. 47 Vt. 517.

153. Where a chattel is in the possession of a third person when sold, notice of the sale must be given by the purchaser to such third person in order to perfect the sale as to creditors of the seller; and, in case he is the mere keeper or custodian of the property, there would seem to be some propriety in requiring that he should assent to become the keeper or bailee of the purchaser; but where he has a right of possession in himself, it would seem that mere notice from the purchaser should be enough. Poland, C. J., in Wooley v. Edson, 85 Vt. 221.

154. The plaintiff purchased of A a cow then in the possession of a third person under a contract of bailment for a certain time. The plaintiff gave the bailee notice of the purchase, with a request to keep the cow for him. To this the bailee assented, but declined to give up the cow until the expiration of the bailment. Afterwards, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, the bailee returned the cow to A, when she was attached by the defendant in A's possession, and as his property. Held, that such possession by A did not subject the cow to attachment for his debts. Lynde v. Melvin, 11 Vt. 688.

155. Removal to premises of third person. If the purchaser of personal property remove it from the premises of the vendor to the premises of a third person with his consent, this is a sufficient change of possession, as against the creditors of the vendor, although such third person was not informed of the sale. Bailey v. Quint, 22 Vt. 474. 30 Vt. 397.

156. The plaintiff bought certain lumber of A at a fixed price, to be delivered on the premises of the plaintiff then under lease to H. The lumber was so delivered. H having knowledge of the arrangement, and of the delivery, did not object to it, but did not agree to keep the lumber for the plaintiff. The plaintiff paid for the lumber, and it was afterwards attached as the property of A. Held, that there was a full and complete change of possession and that the lumber could not be taken on A's debts. Chase v. Snow, 48 Vt. 486.

157. Where attached property was by the attaching officer put into the barn of a third person by his consent, but he declined to assume any responsibility for its custody or safe keeping;—Held, that notice of a sale of it, such as to effect a change of possession and protect it from further attachments, should be given to the officer, and that notice to such third person would not be sufficient. Marshall v. Town, 28 Vt. 14.

158. Possession of chattels as connected with possession of land. It is not a sufficient change of possession, that the vendor had moved from the premises where the property was kept, if it remains in the care of his servant. Moore v. Kelley, 5 Vt. 84.

159. The plaintiff purchased of W certain colts and the farm on which they were kept, then in the care of a person employed by W. The plaintiff did not put his deed upon record, nor take possession of the farm or colts, nor did he inform the keeper of them of his purchase, until after they were attached by a creditor of W. Held, that there was no sufficient change of possession as against the attachment. Judd v. Langdon, 5 Vt. 231.

160. A sale of personal property raised and kept on a farm by the tenant is void against his creditors, if still kept by him on the farm, notwithstanding the owner of the farm agrees to keep it for the purchaser, when such owner is not in actual possession. Rockwood v. Collamer, 14 Vt. 141.

161. Where the occupant of a farm sold to the owner a wagon and fanning-mill then on the farm, and they remained there in the occupant's use as before;—Held, that they were subject to attachment for his debts, although the owner continued to reside on the farm. Mills v. Warner, 19 Vt. 609.

162. As to how far the actual or constructive possession of land may dispense with a removal of personal property situate upon it, in case of sale or attachment: (1). If the grantee takes actual and exclusive possession of the land, the personal property on it upon purchase, is of course in his possession, and no removal is necessary. Aldis, J., in Flanagan v. Wood, 33 Vt. 348, citing Burrows v. Stebbins, 26 Vt. 668. Wilson v. Hooper, 12 Vt. 653; and see Rothchild v. Rowe, 44 Vt. 389. (2). If the grantee buys land not in the possession of another and personal property situate upon the land, though he does not take actual possession, yet his constructive possession of the land gives constructive possession of the personalty, and no removal is necessary. This applies to all wild or unoccupied land, and to land left vacant by the grantor. Ib., citing Wilson v. Hooper. (3). If one sells personal property situate on the land of a third person, who agrees to keep it or allows it to remain on his land for the benefit of the purchaser, the vendor after that having no ostensible occupancy of the land or control of the property, such property is held to be in the possession of a third person, and no removal is necessary. Ib., citing Merritt v. Miller, 18 Vt. 416. Potter v. Washburn, 18 Vt. 558. (4). But when the land sold or leased remains in the actual possession of the vendor or lessor, or in the joint possession of the vendor and vendee, or lessor and lessee, the same rule as to change of possession of personalty applies as in case of a sale of personalty alone. Ib., citing Stiles v. Shumway, 16 Vt. 485. Mills v. Warner, 19 Vt. 609. Stephenson v. Clark, 20 Vt. 624. Parker v. Kendrick, 29 Vt. 388. See also, Beattis v. Robin, 2. Vt. 181.

163. Articles cumbrous, or incapable of present removal. The rule requiring a change of possession of property sold, in order to protect it from further sale by the vendor or attachment for his debts, does not require an actual removal or manual change of possession, where from the nature of the property, or its situation, such removal or manual possession is impracticable; as, in the sale of standing trees. Fitch v. Burk, 38 Vt. 688. Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 811.

164. So, of sawlogs, they being of a cumbrous character and difficult of removal. Sanborn v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 632. Hutchins v. Gilchrist, 28 Vt. 82. Birge v. Edgerton, 28 Vt. 291. 42 Vt. 811.

165. Where cumbrous articles somewhat difficult to remove, as mill logs, deposited on the land of a third person with his consent, or on the land of a stranger, are, in this situation, sold;—Held, that the mere constructive possession connected with the ownership was by the sale transferred to the purchaser; that the place of deposit became "the warehouse of the purchaser," and that the logs were not thereafter subject to attachment as against the vendor, although the purchaser had not removed them, nor taken actual possession, nor given notice of his purchase to the owner of the land where they lay. Hutchins v. Gilchrist. Sanborn v. Kittredge, 28 Vt. 296. 38 Vt. 344. 38 Vt. 688. 42 Vt. 811.

166. The plaintiff contracted for the purchase of a quantity of logs to be delivered and loaded on the railroad cars, and to pay for them in parcels, as they should be delivered by the side of the railroad track. The vendor delivered the logs for the plaintiff near the track upon the land of a third person, with his consent and knowledge, until they should be loaded, and gave notice to the plaintiff of the delivery, and the plaintiff paid for the logs. Held, that the title and possession of the logs passed to the plaintiff on such delivery, and they were not thereafter subject to attachment as against the vendor; that the contract for loading the logs was for a service to be performed on the plaintiff's property. Birge v. Edgerton, 28 Vt. 291.

167. A sold the plaintiff "one hundred cords of wood standing" on A's land, the plaintiff to commence upon one side of two specified pieces and take all the trees clean, except the oak and ash, until he should get his 100 cords, "the quantity to be ascertained by piling and measuring as it was cut." The plaintiff afterwards employed A to procure the wood to be cut, and A did procure it to be cut by his hired man, who cut and piled the wood on A's land and measured it. The plaintiff drew away a part, and the residue, while on A's land, was attached by the defendant as A's property. Held, that this was not a contract for cord wood, but conveyed a right to enter and to manufacture or make cord wood of the growing trees, by the expenditure of the plaintiff's labor and money, and as fast as the trees were cut, and before measurement of the wood, they became the property of the plaintiff; that as movable property they were never owned or possessed by A, and as growing trees no possession by removal was practicable; and that the wood was not subject to attachment as the property of A. Fitch v. Burk, 38 Vt. 688.

168. Certain exceptions. The sale of property exempt from attachment and execution is valid as to the creditors of the vendor, without a change of possession. Foster v. McGregor, 11 Vt. 595. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 209.

169. Where the plaintiff had purchased the interest of both parties in a cow conditionally sold, and had bailed her anew to the conditional vendee "to winter the cow for the milk";—Held, that such bailee had no attachable interest in the cow, and that no change of possession was necessary to protect the plaintiff's title. Wilder v. Stafford, 30 Vt. 399.

170. Notice of sale—Effect. Notice of the sale of personal property, where there is no change of possession, will not affect an attaching creditor of the vendor. Pierpoint, J., in Perrin v. Reed, 35 Vt. 8. Redfield, C. J., in Hart v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 38 Vt. 263. "Often so decided." 23 Vt. 89.

171. But such notice would affect a subsequent purchaser. Redfield, C. J. Id.

172. When change of possession may be made. The change of possession of property purchased, so as to protect it from attachment as the property of the vendor, need not be immediate, but may be perfected at any time before an attachment intervenes. Kendall v. Samson, 12 Vt. 515.

173. Who a creditor. The necessity of a change of possession of goods sold, in order to protect them from attachment against the vendor, is not limited to creditors of the vendor in the strict technical sense, but applies to any attachment; as, in an action of trover. Rice v. Curtis, 32 Vt. 460.

174. But no such change of possession is necessary to protect the property against a levy for a tax against the vendor—such tax not being properly a debt. Daniels v. Nelson, 41 Vt. 161.

175. Bona fide purchaser. In order to constitute one a bona fide purchaser, as against one who owned the property by an earlier purchase but without change of possession, it is necessary that the last purchaser should have parted with money, or other thing, in payment for the property so purchased. It is not sufficient that it be taken in payment of a debt; as, by indorsing it upon a note. Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674 and see Poor v. Woodhouse, 25 Vt. 234.

IV. CONDITIONAL SALE.

176. Title remains in vendor. On a sale with delivery of goods at a fixed price to be paid at a time limited, but, until paid, the title to remain in the vendor, payment is a condition precedent, and, until performance, the property is not vested in the vendee. West v. Bolton, 4 Vt. 558. Bigelow v. Huntley, 8 Vt. 151. Bradley v. Arnold, 16 Vt. 382. Smith v. Foster, 18 Vt. 182. Buckmaster v. Smith, 22 Vt. 203. Chaffee v. Sherman, 26 Vt. 237. Davis v. Bradley, 28 Vt. 118. Child v. Allen, 33 Vt. 476. Hurd v. Fleming, 34 Vt. 169. Armington v. Houston, 38 Vt. 448.

177. Vendor's right until condition fully performed. Where property is sold conditionally, that is, to become the property of the purchaser upon payment of the price, or performance of other conditions of the sale, the legal title does not vest in the purchaser until he has made full payment, or until full performance of the condition. Such conditional sale is not fraudulent as to creditors of the purchaser; and the vendor may retake it, for failure to perform the condition, in whosoever hands it may be; nor, until conditions performed, is the property attachable as the property of the purchaser. See cases supra, and Martin v. Eames, 26 Vt. 476, 482.

178. The vendor of a chattel, sold upon condition that it is to remain his property until paid for, is the entire owner, with the absolute right of possession upon failure of the vendee to pay according to the condition; and for a conversion thereof he may recover the full value. Burnell v. Marvin, 44 Vt. 277. Bradley v. Arnold, 16 Vt. 382. Buckmaster v. Smith, 22 Vt. 203.

179. Property sold conditionally is not subject to attachment for the debt of the conditional vendee, until it becomes his by full performance of the condition; nor can it be so attached by tendering to the vendor the part of the price which remains unpaid. Ib. (Changed by G. S. c. 38, s. 28.) Duncans v. Stone, 45 Vt. 118.

180. A sale of provisions, not fraudulent in fact, on condition that they were to remain the property of the vendor until paid for, but with the understanding that they might be consumed in the vendee's family before payment, was held good against an attachment of the provisions as the property of the vendee. Armington v. Houston, 38 Vt. 448.

181. Where a chattel was sold conditionally, and possession delivered under an agreement to pay the price;—Held, that the conditional vendor's title was not lost by a judgment recovered for the price, so long as the judgment remained unsatisfied, although before the judgment the vendee had left the property in the vendor's possession, but against his consent. Root v. Lord, 23 Vt. 568.

182. In case of a conditional sale with a power of sale to the conditional vendee, if he make a sale under such circumstances as that he might avoid it for the fraud of the purchaser, such sale may be avoided by the principal vendor. Dunham v. Lee, 24 Vt. 432.

183. Particular instances. B and F entered into a written contract in which it was agreed that B would deliver to F at his factory, from time to time as required to keep the factory in operation, a specified quantity of wool; that F would manufacture the wool into cassimeres, and deliver all the cassimeres so manufactured to B at the factory, from time to time, when finished and ready for market; that B would send the cassimeres to market and have them sold within twelve months at the option and direction of F, and pay F, for manufacturing, the balance of money obtained for them, after deducting forty cents for every pound of wool so delivered by B and the interest and cost of freight; that B should pay F one-third of the money received from the consignees in advance for the cassimeres, for defraying the expense of manufacturing; that B before sending the cassimeres to market, might take one-ninth the whole number of yards at 90 cents per yard; and that F would also manufacture for B another lot of wool of about 5,000 lbs., then owned by certain other persons, upon receiving notice within two weeks that B so desired. Held, that the property in the cassimeres so manufactured was in B, and that he had the right to the possession as fast as manufactured, and that he could maintain trover against both F and one to whom he had sold a portion of the cloth, to recover for the cloth so sold. Buckmaster v. Mower, 21 Vt. 204.

184. And that the rule of damages was the full value of the cloth at the time of the conversion. Ib. Bennett, J., dissenting.

185. L received of the plaintiff a quantity of goods to peddle, upon an agreement that the goods were to remain the property of the plaintiff until sold, he having the right to retake them whenever he pleased, and L the right to return them, or a part thereof, at his pleasure; the goods sold by L to be accounted for at prices specified in a list furnished him; and L deposited with the plaintiff, as agreed, a sum of money equal to the value of the goods so taken, as specified in the list, to remain as collateral security for the performance of L's contract. L sold part of these goods, took others on the same terms, paid a part, leaving his deposit as a security, as before. The goods unsold in the hands of L were afterwards attached by the defendant, as the property of L. In an action of trespass therefor;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover the value of the goods so attached, deducting only the sum paid on the second bill. Chaffee v. Sherman, 26 Vt. 237. Redfield, C. J., dissenting, would have deducted also the amount of the deposit.

186. A leased to B certain lands and 500 sheep for the term of sixteen years, on condition, among other things, that B should pay him 1,000 lbs. of wool from the sheep, of an average quality of the whole, each year; B not to dispose of any of the sheep or their increase during the term, nor of any of the wool, until A had received his yearly rent; and at the expiration of the term, if the conditions were complied with, the property leased was to belong to B. Held, that A remained the owner of the sheep until the end of the full term and the performance of all the conditions of the lease; that the wool was not leased, and that A had a present property in the wool shorn from the sheep, at least as tenant in common with B, in the proportion of 1,000 lbs. to the whole; and that the defendant was liable to A in trover, to the extent of the value of 1,000 lbs. of the wool, for having taken and sold on execution against B the whole clip of wool as the property of B. Bradley v. Arnold, 16 Vt. 382.

187. C leased a farm to L for three years, and before the expiration of the whole term L was, by the lease, to do certain work upon the farm extending into the third year. In consideration of such work to be done, C gave L a cow, but "to be holden by and belong to C." until L's agreement was fulfilled. Held, that L acquired but a conditional right to the cow, which did not become absolute until full performance by him of the work stipulated. Hogle v. Clark, 46 Vt. 418.

188. Change—Substitution. The lease of a farm for ten years, with stock and farming tools thereon valued in the lease at $1,000, contained a provision that the lessee should keep at least the same amount in value of stock and tools during the term, and that the original stock and tools and all other which might be thereafter added to or substituted for the same, should be and remain the property of the lessor as a security for the payment of the rents and performance of other stipulations of the lessee, but with a privilege to the lessee of taking the property at $1,000 at the end of the term. Held, that the contract was valid as against the creditors of the lessee, and covered property purchased by the lessee and substituted for the original, although the lessee had not in making his exchanges always disclosed the lessor as owner; and that the lessor, in an action on the case, could recover, to the extent of $1,000, of one who had attached the property as the property of the lessee. Paris v. Vail, 18 Vt. 277. 26 Vt. 188. 27 Vt. 389.

189. The plaintiff sold a horse to M, with condition that it was to remain the plaintiff's property until paid for, but gave M leave to trade off the horse, provided the pay or avails were paid to him. After paying a portion of the price, M exchanged the horse with the defendant for two other horses, and kept them himself. Held, that the title to the horse did not vest in the defendant, and that he was liable to the plaintiff in trover therefor. White v. Langdon, 30 Vt. 599.

190. The lien of a conditional vendor will attach to other property taken in exchange for it by the vendor's consent, and when it is so agreed. Kelsey v. Kendall, 48 Vt. 24.

191. Transfer by vendor. A conditional vendor may sell the property to a third person, and invest him with the same rights that he had himself, subject to any contingent rights of the conditional vendee. For a conversion or injury to the property thereafter, the action must be in the name of such third person. Burnell v. Marvin, 44 Vt. 277. Deering v. Austin, 34 Vt. 330.

192. H bought a stage-wagon of B, to remain B's property until paid for. The plaintiff repaired it for H by adding new wheels and new iron axles in place of the old ones, when H, without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent, took it away without paying for the repairs. A few days thereafter, the plaintiff took H's note for the repairs, with an agreement thereunder written that the "running part" of said wagon should be and remain the plaintiff's property until said note was paid. H never paid B for the wagon, but the plaintiff knew nothing of B's claim. B, knowing that the wagon had been repaired, but not knowing by whom, and without knowledge of the plaintiff's claim, took back the wagon from H and sold it to the defendant, who knew nothing of the plaintiff's claim until long after his purchase. Held, that the plaintiff could maintain trover for said wheels and axle. Clark v. Wells, 45 Vt. 4.

193. Forfeiture. The plaintiff gave his note for the purchase price of a cow, with a condition annexed, that the cow should remain the property of the payee "till said note was paid." Held, that the mere omission of the plaintiff to pay the note at maturity did not operate as a forfeiture of his rights under the contract, in the absence of a demand of payment or of the property for non-payment; and that on such demand, even after the note was overdue, the plaintiff would have the right to pay the note and retain the cow. Taylor v. Finley, 48 Vt. 78.

V. OFFICIAL SALES.

194. Change of possession—Rule. The doctrine of fraud in law, as applied to sales of personal property without change of possession, does not apply to public sheriff's sales. Boardman v. Keeler, 1 Aik. 158. Bates v. Carter, 5 Vt. 602. Gates v. Gaines, 10 Vt. 346.

195. And a sale by any authorized public officer, or by an authorized person, is to be treated as such "sheriff's sale." Gates v. Gaines.

196. Qualification — The process. A sheriff's sale of chattels, such as to protect them from subsequent attachment or sale without change of possession, must be upon process warranting the sale, and must be in the mode prescribed by law, and not rest upon consent of the parties. Batchelder v. Carter, 2 Vt. 168. Prentiss, J., dissenting.

197. To constitute a sheriff's sale, such as to be valid against creditors of the debtor without change of possession, the proceeding must be under the authority of his precept, and not rest upon the consent of the debtor; as, where it was sold at auction, by consent, without posting. Kelly v. Hart, 14 Vt. 50.

198. The exception which distinguishes sheriff's sales from private sales, in the matter of change of possession, rests rather upon the character of the sale—as, in the one case, transferring the title by operation of law, but in the other, by the contract of the party—than upon the supposed notoriety of a sheriff's sale. Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 645. Kelly v. Hart.

199. Sale must be absolute. The sale of property on execution is in its very nature an absolute sale. It can be nothing else. The law does not recognize such sales as conditional, or defeasible, or as vesting a title liable to be defeated by redemption. Webster v. Denison, 25 Vt. 498.

200. A creditor cannot make use of a confession of judgment by his debtor and a sale of the debtor's personal property on execution, according to a secret agreement between them to create a lien merely upon the property to secure the debt. In such case, if he allow the property to remain in the possession of the debtor, it will be subject to attachment as the debtor's. Id.

201. Not fraudulent in fact. The protection afforded by public sheriff's sales, as to change of possession, does not cover such sales when fraudulent in fact. Boardman v. Keeler, 1 Aik. 158.

202. Evidence that a sale on execution was made at an unusual place merely, was held inadmissible as tending to prove the sale fraudulent. Masham v. Place, 46 Vt. 494.

203. Purchaser and his title. A purchaser at sheriff's sale is not affected by any irregularity or impropriety in the proceedings of the officer, not having the character of positive fraud. Janes v. Martin, 7 Vt. 92. Wood v. Doane, 20 Vt. 612. Hale v. Miller, 15 Vt. 211. See Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 652.

204. The title of a purchaser at an official sale upon execution does not depend upon the return of the officer, but upon the fact of the sale and purchase, which may be proved by parol. Such title does not depend upon anything subsequent to the sale, and cannot be defeated by any neglect of the officer. Bates v. Carter, 5 Vt. 602. Gates v. Gaines, 10 Vt. 346. Hill v. Kendall, 25 Vt. 528.

205. Held, that the officer could recover the price of property sold by him on execution, although he had made no return of sale upon the execution. Hill v. Kendall.

206. One who claims title to property by purchase on execution sale, is not concluded by the facts stated in the officer's return, but may show that the sale was made in a different manner from that therein stated. Drake v. Mooney, 31 Vt. 617.

207. The sale of personal property upon an attachment vests the title in the vendee, though the plaintiff never recovers judgment in the suit; and the officer is accountable only for the money which he holds in substitution for the property. Morse v. Morse, 44 Vt. 84. Abbott v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 551.

208. A sheriff's sale of goods on execution conveys no greater title than that of the debtor; it does not pass the title of a stranger. Griffith v. Fowler, 18 Vt. 390. 20 Vt. 818. Lull v. Matthews, 19 Vt. 322. Sanborn v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 632.

209. Advertising. The advertising of property previous to its sale on execution is for the benefit of the debtor and to protect his rights, and when he waives that protection and consents to a sale without posting, the sale is legal. Burroughs v. Wright, 16 Vt. 619. S. C. 19 Vt. 510.

210. Where an officer, by consent of the debtor, sells property on an attachment or execution without advertising according to the statute, the sale is valid, and is an official sale, so that the return is prima facie evidence in favor of the officer and of those who acted under him. Burroughs v. Wright, 19 Vt. 510. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 185.

B. SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

211. The contract. In a contract for the sale and conveyance of land at a price to be paid at the same time the deed is to be executed, the seller must be ready and able to perform on his part, as a condition precedent to any obligation of the purchaser to pay the price. Lawrence v. Dole, 11 Vt. 549.

212. In the purchase of lands, though by parol, and payment of part of the purchase price in advance, if the vendor be ready to perform the contract on his part, such part payment cannot be recovered back. The same rule applies as in case of sale of personalty. Shaw v. Shaw, 6 Vt. 69. Cobb v. Hall, 29 Vt. 510.

213. The defendant sold land to C by a verbal contract, and C paid part of the purchase money and went into possession under an express agreement, and while in possession under such contract and by consent of the defendant, he cut and peeled bark and piled it upon the land. Held, that the bark became the property of C, and it was held by an attaching creditor of C against the defendant who removed it. Pike v. Morey, 32 Vt. 87; and see Yale v. Seely, 15 Vt. 221.

214. Notice of sale. In the case of a mere sale and conveyance of land by the absolute owner, without notice, either actual or constructive, to a creditor of the vendor, or any change of possession, the land is still subject to levy or attachment by such creditor. Hart v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 33 Vt. 252.

215. A bona fide purchaser of lands from one who holds the legal title of record, but in trust for another, stands upon a higher equity as to the cestui que trust, than an attaching or levying creditor of the trustee. Dictum of Isham, J. contra in Bigelow v. Topliff, 25 Vt. 289, disapproved. Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 108. Hart v. Farm. & Mech. Bank.

216. Vendor's lien. The vendor of real estate has a lien upon the estate for payment of the full purchase money, as against all persons except bona fide purchasers without notice of its non-payment. Knowledge that some portion of the purchase money remains unpaid, although without knowing how much, or how secured, is sufficient to put a subsequent purchaser on inquiry, and operates as constructive notice of the lien. Manly v. Slason, 21 Vt. 271.

217. Such lien may be waived, as by taking an independent security; but the taking of a promissory note for the purchase money, though payable at a future day, is not a waiver. Id.

Note. The vendor's lien was abolished by Stat. 1851 (G. S. c. 65, s. 33), unless evidenced by deed.

I. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. The taking of land for the location of a district common school house is for a public use; and the act of 1857, No. 58, providing for the taking of land in invitum for that purpose, upon an appraisal and payment of compensation therefor, is constitutional. (G. S. c. 22, s. 114.) Williams v. School Dist. Newfans, 33 Vt. 271. 44 Vt. 651.

II. SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

1. Organization.

2. Geographical. Under the statute requiring towns "to define and determine the limits of school districts;"—Held, that they should be defined by geographical limits; and that a vote "to set A B" to a named district was insufficient to transfer him and his farm to that district. Gray v. Sheldon, 8 Vt. 402. 33 Vt. 221. Pierce v. Carpenter, 10 Vt. 490. 21 Vt. 407. Sawyer v. Williams, 25 Vt. 811; and see Cutting v. Stone, 7 Vt. 471.

3. Such geographical limits must be defined by vote in town meeting creating the district, or else by a like vote recognizing, approving and ratifying such designation already made; as, when made by the district and recorded. Sawyer v. Williams. Pierce v. Carpenter.

4. Where a school district was formed by the description of persons "and their real estate," or persons "and the farms on which they reside;"—Held, that this was a sufficient definition by geographical limits. Moore v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 219.

5. It is not essential that a school district be formed of connected, contiguous territory. (G. S. c. 22, s. 20.) Weeks v. Batchelder, 41 Vt. 817.

6. A vote in town meeting setting a farm from one school district to another, takes effect presently, no other time being named. Ovitt v. Chase, 37 Vt. 196.

7. Alteration. G. S. c. 22, s. 53, does not provide the only mode for dissolving or altering the limits of school districts formed of parts of two or more towns; but this may be done by mutual consent of the district and of the town within which the territory is located. Jones v. Camp, 84 Vt. 384. Pierce v. Whitman, 28 Vt. 626. Bowen v. King, 84 Vt. 156.

8. Such consent may be shown by vote of the district. Pierce v. Whitman; or by long acquiescence. Jones v. Camp. Bowen v. King.

9. Where a town by vote set certain of its inhabitants to a school district of an adjoining town, such district consenting by vote to receive them (G. S. c. 22, s. 27), they, for all practical purposes, as in sharing the privileges and burdens of the district, become members of that district, although the districts, regarded territorially, are not thereby changed. Such arrangement is to be viewed in the light of mere license and temporary consent, and subject to be revoked or annulled by either party;—herein differing from the case of a district formed of territory and inhabitants belonging to adjoining towns. Hewitt v. Miller, 21 Vt. 402.

10. Where, by act of the legislature, a town was divided and incorporated into two distinct towns, by a line so drawn as to pass through one of the school districts of the old town, leaving $\frac{3}{8}$ of the district, with the school house, in one town;—Held, nevertheless, that such part alone was not authorized to act as a or the school district of such town, and could not lay a legal tax. Williston v. Newman, 23 Vt. 421.

11. Town warning and vote. An article in the warning of a town meeting was “to see if the town will make alterations in school districts when met”;—Held sufficient to warrant the consideration of any proposed change in the limits of the existing school districts, and to support a vote setting the plaintiff's farm from one district to another. Ovitt v. Chase, 87 Vt. 196. See Moore v. Beattie, 88 Vt. 219. Weeks v. Batchelder, 41 Vt. 317. Hall v. School Dist. Calais, 46 Vt. 19.

12. The warning of a town meeting was:—“To see if said town will accept and adopt the report of the committee to alter school districts.” Held, that this confined the action of the town, in the alteration of school districts, to such as the committee should recommend in their report, and that any other alteration was unauthorized and void. Wiley v. Wilson, 44 404.

13. Held, that a vote in town meeting “to set the whole of school district No. 10 to district No. 4,” was authorized by a warning “to see if the town will divide school district No. 10, and annex a portion of it to district No. 4, the remainder to district No. 5.” Moore v. Beattie, 88 Vt. 219.

14. The warning of a town meeting to see if the town will vote to divide school district No. 9, and to make such other alterations in school districts as may be found necessary, was held sufficient to warrant a vote of the town, forming a new district of a portion of the territory of No. 9. Weeks v. Batchelder, 41 Vt. 317.

15. Effect of alteration. A legal vote in town meeting “to unite school district No. 5 to No. 4 and constitute them one district,” has the effect of abolishing No. 5 and annexing the territory of which it had been composed to No. 4. No. 4 continues in existence as before, only enlarged. Hence a warning for a school meeting in No. 4, posted before the annexation, can be legally acted under after the annexation. Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 43 Vt. 207.

16. A town voted to “unite school districts No. 4 and 12 into one district, and called district No. 4.” Held, that said districts were thereby formed into a new district, distinct from either, and that a new organization was proper. Barnes v. Ovitt, 47 Vt. 316.

17. The creation of a new school district, embracing the prudential committee of another district, was held to create a vacancy in that office in the latter. Stevens v. Kent, 26 Vt. 503.

2. Evidence of organization.

18. Parol. Where the records of a school district are lost, the organization and continued existence of the district may be shown by parol. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 439.

19. Presumption. The mere fact that a school district has maintained its existence and operations for a great number of years, say fifteen, is sufficient evidence of its regular organization; and the same rule of presumption must be applied to the subdivision of the town into districts, the same having been acquiesced in by the town and the inhabitants. Id.

20. The legal existence and organization of a school district will be presumed after a long-continued maintenance of such organization, and exercise of the functions of a district, although the records of both town and district fail to show its creation, or organization. Bowen v. King, 84 Vt. 156. Barnes v. Barnes, 6 Vt. 388. Bull v. Griffith, 30 Vt. 273.

21. The legal existence of a union school district composed of parts of three towns, and indissoluble by the action of one of the towns, was presumed after an existence of seventy years. If there was no general law authorizing the creation of such district, a special act of the legislature creating the district might be presumed. Bowen v. King.

22. Reputation. The organization and existence of a school district, and that a certain person was prudential committee, may be proved by reputation, and that they severally acted as district and committee, without production of the records, in a case where these questions arise collaterally and where the district is not a party. State v. Williams, 27 Vt. 755.

23. Organization in fact. Where a school district had been in existence under an organization in fact for 26 years;—Held, that the selectmen could not treat it as an unorganized district and organize it again, because of doubts of the regularity of the former organization; and that such attempted reorganization was void. Thomas v. Gibson, 11 Vt. 607.

24. Suspension. A suspension of all the functions of a school district for ten years is not necessarily conclusive evidence of the dissolution of the corporation. In such case it may properly be newly organized with the consent of the town, without a vote of the town setting it off anew as a school district. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 439.

25. Vacating office. Under G. S. c. 22, s. 40, providing that by reason of a neglect to keep a school in the district, &c., "all the offices of said district shall be vacated," and that the selectmen shall, on application, fill the vacancies;—Held, that the failure to cause the school to be kept, furnished cause for vacating the offices, but that the officers were not displaced without the appointment of others by the selectmen; and by Poland, C. J., in many cases the word void in a statute has been construed to mean voidable—ground or cause for making void; so the words forfeit, or forfeiture in a statute, have usually been construed to mean cause of forfeiture, requiring some proceeding or action to effect the forfeiture. Woodcock v. Bolster, 35 Vt. 632.

8. Powers of district.

26. As to collector. A school district cannot choose a collector pro tem. but only for the year; nor to do part of the duties of collector—as, to collect a particular tax, or arrearages—and this, whether or not the office of collector is vacant. Hadley v. Chamberlin, 11 Vt. 618.

27. Prudential committee. It is not competent for a school district, having once appointed one as prudential committee, to supersede him during the year by appointing another in his place, nor to add to the number of the committee. Mason v. School Dist. Brookfield, 20 Vt. 487. George v. School Dist. W. Fairlee, 20 Vt. 495. Chandler v. Bradish, 28 Vt. 416.

28. Moderator. In the absence of the regularly elected moderator of a school district at a school district meeting, the meeting can appoint a moderator for the occasion, and this, without any statute specially authorizing it. Stevens v. Kent, 26 Vt. 508.

29. "By vote." Under C. S. c. 20, s. 88 [now changed by G. S.], a school district had power by a majority vote to locate its school house. "By vote," means a majority vote, unless other intent is expressed. Bean v. School Dist. Glover, 38 Vt. 177.

30. School house. A school district has, as against its prudential committee, the control of its school house for the purposes of education—as, for the keeping of a private school at such times as not to interfere with the keeping of the district school; and may, under such circumstances, license individuals to occupy the house for such private school, Chaplin v. Hill, 24 Vt. 528. Russell v. Dodds, 37 Vt. 497.

31. A school district may provide such buildings and rooms as, in the exercise of an honest discretion, it shall judge that the interests of the district, in the matter of its schools and for the purposes of its schools, require—as, a hall for the purpose of school examinations and exhibitions and school meetings, although intended, also, and used in connection therewith, and rented, for concerts, festivals, religious meetings, lectures, courts, &c.,—the rent going into the district treasury; and may make such provisions with reference to the prospective enlarged wants of the district for school purposes. Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 43 Vt. 207.

32. A school district may unite with another association in the building of a house on the lands of the district, one part of the house to belong to the district for use as a school house, and the other part to such other association for its purposes. Eddy v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 362.

33. A school district having proceeded, under invalid votes, to purchase and pay for land for a school house, and having built a school house thereon which has become their property, may legally vote and enforce a tax for the purpose of paying for the house; and such purpose may be embraced in the terms of the vote, to pay "our indebtedness." Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 43 Vt. 207.

34. So, the district may adopt a school house, however it came into existence, and legally vote a tax to pay for it. Id.

35. Parliamentary rules. A school district is not so bound by parliamentary rules that they are concluded by a vote—as, not to build a school house—from afterwards, at the same or an adjourned meeting, adopting other valid votes inconsistent with the first without formally rescinding the first; as, for the raising of a tax, and passing all other votes necessary for the erection of a school house. Id.

4. Officers; Powers and duties.

36. Qualification. It is not a requisite qualification of a voter or office-holder in a school district (or town), that he be a freeman; a man of foreign birth and not naturalized may be such. Woodcock v. Bolster, 85 Vt. 682. (Changed by stat. 1868, No. 89, and stat. 1869, No. 50.)

37. De facto. The doings of an officer de facto of a school district holding his office by virtue of an election, though irregular, he being eligible, are binding as to third persons. So Held, in respect to a school district clerk, on the question of the validity of a tax. Woodcock v. Bolster. Also, in respect to the prudential committee of a school district. Goodwin v. Perkins, 89 Vt. 598.

38. Ineligible. But (dictum), one who is ineligible and cannot by law hold the office of prudential committee, cannot, as such, assess a valid tax. Woodcock v. Bolster.

39. Prudential committee. The power of employing and dismissing teachers in school districts is, by law, vested in the prudential committee; and the district has no power or control over the subject; as, to dismiss a teacher by vote. Mason v. School Dist. Brookfield, 20 Vt. 487.

40. The prudential committee have full authority and power, as matter of law, to remove and dismiss a school teacher; but a contract to teach a school is to be considered as an ordinary contract for services and work, with like incidents, and if the teacher be removed or dismissed without just and sufficient cause he may recover damages. Holden v. School Dist. Shrewsbury 88 Vt. 529. Richardson v. School Dist. Westminster, Ib., 802.

41. Held, that the prudential committee of a school district might lawfully exclude scholars from further attendance for absence contrary to the rules of the school, though such absence was by the command of their Roman Catholic parents, and by direction of their priest, for the purpose of attending religious services on Corpus Christi day. Ferriter v. Tyler, 48 Vt. 444.

42. The prudential committee have no authority, without a vote of the district, to employ counsel at the expense of the district to prosecute or defend a suit for the district, or to defend a suit against some officer of the district in which the district may be interested. Harington v. School Dist. Alburgh, 80 Vt. 155. 86 Vt. 695.

43. The defendant, being prudential committee of a school district, agreed that A might use the district school house for a private school for eleven weeks during the usual school vacation; and A took possession and kept his school there for some weeks, the district not objecting, when the defendant, for no alleged reason, locked up the school house and undertook by force and an assault to prevent the entrance of A. Held, in an action for the assault, that the defendant could not set up in justification his want of authority to make the agreement. Russell v. Dodds, 87 Vt. 497.

44. It had been the custom of a school district to apportion the wood for the school to the scholars, and to sell the right of furnishing any deficiency to the lowest bidder; but there was no vote to that effect. The plaintiff, being prudential committee, furnished the deficiency himself. Held, that without a vote of the district, he could not assess this expense upon the scholars or the district, but that he could recover his charges in an action against the district. Norton v. School Dist. Tinmouth, 87 Vt. 521.

5. Meetings.

45. It is not necessary in the warnings of school meetings, or in the record, to state that such meetings were warned upon the application of the required number of freeholders, or voters; the maxim omnia rite acta, &c., applies to this and all similar subjects. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 489.

46. It is not essential to the regularity of a school district meeting, that there should be a written application to the clerk to call it. He may issue the warning upon his own mere suggestion. Mason v. School Dist. Brookfield, 20 Vt. 487. Chandler v. Bradish, 28 Vt. 416.

47. The statute does not require that a warning of a school district meeting should be dated. The date and posting may be proved by parol. Braley v. Dickinson, 48 Vt. 599.

48. It is essential that the warning for a school district meeting should be recorded. The terms of the warning cannot be proved by parol. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 17 Vt. 887.

49. Record. The proceedings of a school district meeting are to be determined by the record, where it can be produced; and the legal effect of the record or of a vote cannot be enlarged, restricted, explained away by parol, or controlled by evidence of what the voters at the meeting intended to do, or by what they supposed they had done. Adams v. Crowell, 40 Vt. 81. Cameron v. School Dist. North Hero, 42 Vt. 507;—or that the vote was passed by such as were not legal voters. Eddy v. Wilson, 48 Vt. 862.

50. Annual meeting. The annual meeting of a school district may be a few days more or less than a year from the former one. Held, that a prudential committee elected at such meeting, Sept. 16, 1847, became such committee from that date, in place of the committee elected at the annual meeting of Oct. 24, 1846. Chandler v. Bradish, 28 Vt. 416.

51. The warning. A school meeting held under a warning giving more than twelve days' notice is not lawfully "appointed and notified," and a tax voted at such meeting, although it is the annual meeting, is invalid. (G. S. c. 22, s. 41-43.) Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 48 Vt. 207. Peck, J., dissenting.

52. The proceedings of a special school district meeting held with only six days' notice, and not specifying the business to be done, were held void for both reasons. Hunt v. School Dist. Norwich, 14 Vt. 300.

53. A school meeting held under a warning not naming the hour of meeting, is irregular; and although such meeting be adjourned to a future day and hour named, the proceedings at such adjourned meeting are void. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 489. S. C. 17 Vt. 387.

54. Where the record of the warning of a school district meeting showed that the hour of the day for the holding of the meeting was not specified in the warning;—Held, that the defect could not be supplied by parol evidence that in the original warning the hour was specified; that such defect was not cured by the fact, offered to be proved, that all the legal voters of the district were present at the meeting at the same time, and voted; and that such testimony was properly excluded. Id.

55. In the adjournment of a school meeting to a future day, the vote must state the hour of the day to which it is adjourned; otherwise, the proceedings at the adjourned meeting will be invalid. Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 48 Vt. 207.

III. TAXATION.

56. Vote to tax. The prudential committee of a school district are not authorized to assess a tax, unless such tax be first voted by the district. Bowen v. King, 84 Vt. 156.

57. The vote of a school district was this, and no more:—"Voted to sustain a school during four months the ensuing year, in summer and fall." Held, that this did not justify the assessing of any tax by the prudential committee, no tax being voted. Adams v. Crowell, 40 Vt. 31.

58. Tax upon the scholar. Under the school acts of 1797, 1827, and 1833, a school district tax voted and assessed upon the inhabitants in proportion to the number of scholars actually sent by them to school, was held legal. Brown v. Hoadley, 12 Vt. 472.

59. School fund. The interest on the U. S. deposit fund is not to be treated as part of the school fund, in the assessment of the school tax under the act of 1827. State v. Jericho, 12 Vt. 127. State v. Northfield, 13 Vt. 565.

60. Limit. A vote by a school district that a tax be raised to pay the expenses of the repairs of their school house, or to pay the expenses of the school, is valid, without naming or limiting the amount to be raised, or the rate per cent upon the list; and the committee are authorized, under it, to assess a tax for the amount found necessary. Adams v. Hyde, 27 Vt. 221. Chandler v. Bradish, 23 Vt. 416. Brown v. Hoadley, 12 Vt. 472.

61. Where the vote of a school district was, "to pay the expense of the school with money drawn from the town, and the residue, if any, on the grand list of the district," it was held not a fatal objection to the tax bill, that the tax exceeded the sum required by $1.08; and, by Redfield, J.: It is of course impossible to know how large a portion of the tax will fail of collection, and it must of necessity be somewhat larger than the precise sum required. Chandler v. Bradish.

62. Who to assess. A committee appointed by a school district to remove the school house, upon an appropriation voted, have no authority to assess the tax and certify the tax bill therefor. This can be done only by the prudential committee. (G. S. c. 22, s. 47.) Johnson v. Sanderson, 34 Vt. 94.

63. List. If an inhabitant of a school district has no list, his name need not appear in the tax rate bill. Bull v. Griffith, 80 Vt. 278.

64. Where taxable. All property subject to taxation should, for school district purposes, be assessed and set in the list of the district within which it had its situs at the time with reference to which the assessment should be made, and not elsewhere. Held, that school district taxes voted March 27 and April 4 were properly assessed on lands situate in that district on the 1st of April, though annexed to another district by vote in town meeting of May 12, and though the grand list was not then completed, and the tax was not made up or assessed by the prudential committee until March 26 of the next year. Ovitt v. Chase, 87 Vt. 196.

65. Residence. A resident of a school district on the first day of April, and properly listed there, remains taxable therein upon the list taken as of that date, during the year following, although he may have removed from that district to another, or out of the State. Woodward v. French, 81 Vt. 337. Walker v. Miner, 32 Vt. 769. 37 Vt. 203.

66. The plaintiff moved with his family from his own farm in school district No. 7, to the town farm in district No. 8, under a contract to carry on the town farm for one year, and moved there for that purpose, intending that to be his home and residence during that year; and for the same purpose, under similar contracts and with like intentions, continued with his family to live on the town farm for a second and third year. Held, that this made him an inhabitant of school district No. 8, for purposes of taxation for each of said years, although he carried on his own farm at the same time, and intended all the time to return to reside on his own farm when he should get through with his contract, and claimed all the while his residence to be in No. 7. Woodward v. Isham, 48 Vt. 123. (G. S. c. 22, s. 43.)

67. Partnership. Held, that all the personal property of a partnership should be designated in the grand list as in the school district where a portion of it was actually situated, where a majority of the partners resided, and where the partnership business was carried on,—“the business domicile of the firm.” Fairbanks v. Kittridge, 24 Vt. 9.

68. Acquiescence. Attending the school meeting of a district to which the plaintiff had been, against his consent, illegally set, for the purpose of resisting the laying of a tax, and the paying of such district taxes “when required so to do by the collectors,” were held not to be such an acquiescence as to make him taxable in such district. Wyley v. Wilson, 44 Vt. 404.

69. Lands. Where lands are erroneously set by the listers in the wrong school district, this is not conclusive upon the owner or the district for purposes of taxation, if the town records furnish the necessary means of correcting it. Held, in this case, that land erroneously set in the grand list as in district No. 2, was properly taxed in No. 1, its actual situs. Ovitt v. Chase, 37 Vt. 196.

70. Before the statute of 1847, No. 40 (C. S. 457), it was the duty of the prudential committee of a school district, in assessing a tax, to assess all lands actually situate in the district which were set in the grand list of the town, though not there designated as being in the district; and to exclude from their assessment such lands as were not actually within the district, although designated in the grand list as being there. But they could not include in their assessment lands actually within the district, if wholly omitted in the list. Moss v. Hines, 29 Vt. 188.

71. In such case, and where no separate valuation was stated in the list, it was competent for the committee to assess the tax upon a valuation proportioned to the valuation of the whole listed lands of the party and of the aggregate list of lands of the district. Id. Adams v. Hyde, 27 Vt. 221.

72. Liability of listers. Where listers set property in the list as belonging to school district No. 2, which belonged to district No. 1, whereby the latter district was deprived of the right of assessing taxes upon such property, and the listers refused to correct the list on request;—Held, that they were liable to district No. 1, for damages. School Dist. St. Johnsbury v. Kittridge, 27 Vt. 650.

73. Tax on what list. The vote of a school district laying a tax on a list not to be completed until after thirty days from the vote, is void. Waters v. Daines, 4 Vt. 601.

74. Where a school district tax is voted upon a grand list then in existence, it is no objection to it that it was so voted at a school meeting held by adjournment from a day previous to the completion of such list. Moss v. Hines, 29 Vt. 188.

75. A school district in October, 1869, voted “to build a new school house,” and “to raise money to defray the expenses of said house.” In March, 1870, the district voted, “to raise 800 cents on the dollar to defray the expenses of building the new school house.” Held, that this last vote took the place of and wholly superseded the former one, and became the only vote upon which the tax could be made out; and that it could not lawfully be assessed upon the list of 1869. Capron v. Raistrick, 44 Vt. 515. 45 Vt. 213.

76. Warning and vote. An article in the warning of a school meeting, to see “if the district will have a school the ensuing winter, and if any, how much,” and “to see what method the district will take to pay the expense of said school,” is sufficient to authorize a vote to pay the expense on the grand list of the district. Chandler v. Bradish, 23 Vt. 416.

77. Under an article of the warning of a school district meeting, “to see what measures the district will take in relation to building a school house”;—Held, that the district was authorized to vote to purchase land whereon to erect the school house, it having no land for that purpose. Dix v. School Dist. Wilmington, 22 Vt. 309. 37 Vt. 45.

78. Where a school district by vote authorized their prudential committee to purchase a particular parcel of land, for a specified price, for the site of a school house;—Held, that the vote did not necessarily import that the purchase should be made free of all restrictions; and that the committee were authorized to agree to certain restrictions in the deed which in no manner defeated or impaired the object of the purchase—as, that the school house should be placed on a line with the meeting house, and no building should be erected in front of it, and that the land should be kept open. Dix v. School Dist. Wilmington.

79. The fact that a school district, in mistake of their rights, located their school house where they had no right to locate it, and that they were obliged to remove it on conviction for a nuisance, was held not to invalidate a tax laid for the building of the school house on that spot. Stevens v. King, 26 Vt. 508.

80. Where a school district, having an apparent interest in the defense of a suit against its collector, assumed by vote such defence, upon a supposed liability to indemnify him, but which liability, depending upon the construction of a statute, was doubtful;—Held, that a tax thereafter voted to pay the expenses of such defense was legal, although, perhaps, the district was not legally bound to assume such defense and indemnify the collector. Johnson v. Colburn, 86 Vt. 693.

81. Collector—Warrant. A school district collector is not limited to the district, as the place for advertising and selling property taken for a tax. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 439.

82. By C. S. c. 20, s. 41, the collector of a school district was required by the warrant to pay the taxes collected to the prudential committee. Stat. of 1854, No. 42, authorized each school district to elect a treasurer, and specified his duties in part. Held, that where a district had elected a treasurer, the warrant to the collector properly required the taxes collected to be paid to the treasurer, notwithstanding the provision of C. S. Bull v. Griffith, 30 Vt. 273.

83. The omission in a school district tax-warrant to limit the time within which the collector should collect and pay over the tax, as prescribed by statute, is not a defect of which the person taxed can take advantage; nor, that there is but one warrant for the collection of three tax bills. Walker v. Miner, 32 Vt. 769.

IV. ACTION AGAINST SCHOOL DISTRICT.

84. Service of process. A writ of attachment against a school district was served by attaching property, and leaving a copy, &c., at the house of the then usual abode of the clerk of the district in the hands of his wife, as is provided for the service of an ordinary writ of attachment. Held sufficient service. Dow v. School Dist. Walden, 46 Vt. 108.

85. Past consideration. The plaintiff built a good school house for a school district, worth $200, according to a plan furnished by one of a committee of two, such committee-man telling him that the district would probably pay him what it was worth. After its completion, the district voted to accept the house and to pay the plaintiff therefor $105, which sum the plaintiff declined to accept. In an action against the district;—Held, that whether or not a single one of the committee was authorized to make such contract, the vote to accept, and to pay, was divisible; that the acceptance was absolute, and was a ratification of the doings of the committee-man; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the house. Kimball v. School Dist. Roxbury, 28 Vt. 8.

86. The prudential committee of a school district employed a teacher to teach an extra school in the district, and engaged the plaintiff to board him. The district afterwards voted to raise a tax to pay the teacher. Held, that whether or not the committee was authorized to employ the teacher on the credit of the district, this vote was a ratification of the whole act of the committee in providing for and sustaining that school at the expense and on the credit of the district, and the plaintiff could recover of the district for the board of the teacher. Cameron v. School Dist. North Hero, 42 Vt. 507.

87. Agency. A school district voted to build a school house, and determined its location, and chose a committee for the building of the house. The committee employed the plaintiff, on the credit of the district, to build the house, and he built it where the committee directed, but not on the spot where the district had voted to locate it. The plaintiff had no knowledge of the vote locating the house, or that the house was being built in a wrong place, but acted in good faith under the direction of the committee, and according to their apparent authority. Held, that the district was bound by the contract made by the committee to pay for building the house. Baker v. School Dist. Barton, 46 Vt. 189.

88. In a suit against a school district to recover for services as an attorney, under an employment in behalf of the district by an officer having no authority to bind the district by such employment;—Held, that the fact that the officers of the district, and the voters generally, knew, during the progress of the business, of the employment and the services rendered under it, had no legal tendency to show any acquiescence in, or adoption of, such employment. Harrington v. School Dist. Alburgh, 80 Vt. 155.

89. Trustee process. A disclosure of a school district, as trustee, made by the clerk in the presence and with the assistance of the prudential committee, was held to bind the district. Udall v. School Dist. Hartford, 48 Vt. 588.

V. TEACHERS.

1. Certificate and school register.

90. Certificate. The statute of Nov. 9, 1827, providing that no school teacher "shall be entitled to receive any compensation, &c., without first obtaining from, &c., a certificate of his qualification,"—construed, as making the certificate a pre-requisite to performance of service as a teacher, and as indispensable to the creating of any legal obligation for such service. Baker v. School Dist. Bakersfield, 12 Vt. 192.

91. Under C. S. c. 20, s. 12, providing that any contract for school teaching "shall be null and void if the teacher shall fail to obtain a certificate of qualification, &c., before the commencement of the school for which such contract shall have been made," makes this a prerequisite to any right of action. It is not excused by the fact that the teacher was a minor, or that the superintendent was sick and unable to make the examination; nor can the prudential committee waive the requirements of the statute. Goodrich v. School Dist. Fairfax, 26 Vt. 115. Hopkins v. School Dist. Danby, 27 Vt. 281.

92. In an action to recover on such contract, the obtaining of such certificate is a necessary part of the plaintiff's proof. Welch v. Brown, 80 Vt. 586; but need not be averred in the declaration. Doyan v. School Dist. Montgomery, 35 Vt. 520.

93. But where the teacher had such certificate when the contract was made and before he commenced his school, and continued on in his employment after the expiration of the time limited in the certificate;—Held, that he could recover for his entire services. Holman v. School Dist. Halifax, 84 Vt. 270.

94. Where the plaintiff under a contract to teach school for three months, no time being specified for beginning the school, applied for examination and a certificate, on the morning of the day he began school, and before he began, and the superintendent deferred the examination until evening, saying it would do just as well, and at evening, at the close of the first day's school, he made the examination and gave a certificate, and after this the school proceeded for about seven weeks without any new contract, but without objection;—Held, that this was a substantial compliance with this statute; and that, in any view of the case, the contract was good as to all service performed after the first day. Paul v. School Dist. Hartland, 28 Vt. 575.

95. A school teacher's certificate, made out and dated before the commencement of the school, but retained by the superintendent to be delivered when called for, but not actually called for or delivered until after the close of the school, was held to take effect from its date. By Redfield, C. J.: The act which gives validity to the certificate is the judgment of the superintendent. The certificate is merely the record of that judgment. Blanchard v. School Dist. Warren, 29 Vt. 438.

96. Under G. S. c. 22, s. 11, a school teacher's certificate granted on an examination after, but dated back to a date before, the commencement of the school, was held good, where the teacher seasonably applied to be examined and subjected himself to the direction and convenience of the superintendent as to the time of examination, and both acted in good faith. Wells v. School Dist. Granby, 41 Vt. 853.

97. Where a school teacher was employed to teach school and taught one week without a certificate of qualification, and then went with the prudential committee of the district and obtained such certificate and continued teaching with the consent and approbation of the committee;—Held, that this was equivalent to making a new contract, commencing with the obtaining of the certificate, upon the same terms as the original contract. Scott v. School Dist. Fairfax, 46 Vt. 452.

98. Duration of certificate. Under G. S. c. 22, s. 11, providing that a certificate of qualifications given by a town superintendent of schools to a teacher "shall be available for one year only";—Held, that such certificate was available for one full year from its issue, although given by a superintendent appointed by the selectmen to fill a vacancy, and his appointment expired before the end of such year. Holman v. School Dist. Halifax, 84 Vt. 270.

99. Form. The certificate of qualifications required to be given to school teachers, is of no prescribed form; that the teacher was "examined and approved as a teacher," &c., is sufficient. Wells v. School Dist. Granby, 41 Vt. 853. See also Crosby v. School Dist. Readsboro, 85 Vt. 623.

100. Impeachment. A school teacher's certificate cannot be impeached by the fact that the superintendent granted it without personal examination of the qualifications of the teacher. George v. School Dist. W. Fairlee, 20 Vt. 495. Blanchard v. School Dist. Warren, 29 Vt. 438.

101. Such certificate may be impeached by showing that it was falsely dated, and given when the teacher was not entitled to it, under an assurance that no legal use should be made of it. Hopkins v. School Dist. Danby, 27 Vt. 281.

102. Register. A school teacher is required by G. S. c. 22, s. 110, to file his school register in the town clerk's office, previous to the receipt of his wages; but not to give notice thereof to the prudential committee. Wells v. School Dist. Granby, 41 Vt. 853.

103. A school teacher does not forfeit his wages by neglect to answer the interrogatories in the school register, and to certify to the correctness of his record of attendance of scholars according to G. S. c. 22, s. 110, although thereby the district loses its share of the public money; but such loss may be deducted from his wages. Crosby v. School Dist. Readsboro, 85 Vt. 623. Barrett, J., dissenting.

104. Where a school teacher was prevented from finishing the school term through the fault of the prudential committee;—Held, that his omission to make the prescribed entries in the school register "at the close of his school" (G. S. c. 22, s. 110), i. e., at the close of the term of school, did not prevent his recovery of wages. Scott v. School Dist. Fairfax, 46 Vt. 452.

2. Powers, duties, wages &c.

105. Power to expel. The teacher of a private school may require a pupil to leave for insubordination and misconduct, and, on refusal, may use the necessary force to remove him; and a third person, acting by request of the teacher, may justify in so doing as the servant of the teacher. State v. Williams, 27 Vt. 755.

106. A requirement by the teacher of a district school that the scholars in grammar shall write English compositions, is reasonable; and if the scholar refuse to comply in the absence of any request from his parents that he be excused, he may for this cause be expelled from school. Guernsey v. Pitkin, 32 Vt. 224.

107. It is the duty and right of a district school teacher to maintain proper and necessary discipline in the school; and, to that end, the teacher may, when necessary, expel a scholar; and if the prudential committee insist upon the return of such scholar, when his presence would be detrimental to the discipline of the school, the teacher is justified in quitting the school. Scott v. School Dist. Fairfax, 46 Vt. 452.

108. —to punish. Though a school-master, for all ordinary acts of misbehavior committed after the dismissal of school for the day, and the return of the pupil to his home, has no right to punish the pupil, yet he may, on the pupil's return to school, punish him for misconduct so committed out of school, which has a direct and immediate tendency to injure the school and bring the master's authority into contempt. Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114.

109. Excessive punishment. In trespass for an assault and battery, the declaration averred that the defendant with a club, fists, and a rawhide, struck the plaintiff a great number of violent blows, and threw him down, and kicked and wounded him, and tore his clothes. The plea was, that the defendant was a school-master and the plaintiff his pupil, and that the plaintiff was saucy and contumacious and refused to obey the lawful commands of the defendant, and thereupon the defendant moderately corrected him therefor, which are the same trespasses, &c. Held, on demurrer, that the plea was no justification of the acts of severity charged. Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 102.

110. If the punishment inflicted by a school-master upon his pupil be clearly excessive, he is liable for such excess, although he acted from good motives, and in his own judgment considered the punishment necessary and not excessive. Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114; and see Hathaway v. Rice.

111. Malice—Evidence. Upon the simple question whether the punishment of a pupil by his school-master was excessive, evidence that the master's previous ordinary management of his school had always been mild and moderate, is not admissible in his behalf. But if the claim be that the master acted maliciously and wantonly, from an evil heart, such evidence would be admissible to rebut such intent. Lander v. Seaver.

112. Upon the question whether a school-master acted maliciously in the punishment of a pupil with a raw-hide, the master may show, as rebutting such charge, that a raw-hide was accustomed to be used in other schools in the vicinity. Id.

113. Whether a raw-hide is a proper instrument of punishment in a school, is a question for the jury. Id.

114. Wages. A school teacher hired for a definite term who leaves during the term without sufficient cause, cannot recover for part service. Clark v. School Dist. Pawlet, 29 Vt. 217.

115. In an action for wages as teacher the declaration need not aver that the plaintiff had obtained a certificate. This is matter of evidence pertaining to the remedy. Doyan v. School Dist. Montgomery, 35 Vt. 520; and see Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591.

116. Under the general issue and notice of defense that "the plaintiff was incompetent to manage the said school," certain particular instances of mismanagement in the government of the school may be shown. Holden v. School Dist. Shrewsbury, 38 Vt. 529.

117. In an action by a school-master to recover damages for being wrongfully dismissed by the prudential committee of the school district;—Held, that evidence was inadmissible for the defense, that the scholars and their parents were dissatisfied with the plaintiff, and that the inhabitants of the district had voted to dismiss him. To justify such dismissal, actual incapacity or unfaithfulness of the teacher must be shown. Paul v. School Dist. Hartland, 28 Vt. 575.

118. The plaintiff, a certificated school-master, was duly hired to teach school for three months. He taught six weeks, when most of the district became dissatisfied and only one or two scholars attended, and parts of the stove were removed from the school house so that the school had to be closed. He was requested by the prudential committee to hold himself in readiness to go on with the school for the remainder of the term, which he did, and could get no other employment. The school house was not put in condition for continuing the school. In suit for wages brought after the close of the term;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover for the full term. Bromley v. School Dist. Tinnmouth, 47 Vt. 381.

119. The contract between a teacher and a school district stipulated, "that she should leave if the school was not satisfactory." Held, that this did not warrant her dismissal on account of her personal unpopularity and prejudice against her among the inhabitants of the district, or for any reason other than a dissatisfaction with the school. Richardson v. School Dist. Westminster, 88 Vt. 602.

120. A school teacher made a proposition, to be used at a school meeting, to settle a disputed claim against the district for $20. The district, at such meeting, voted to settle with her, "if it could be done for $20," but made no effort to do so, nor communicated to her the acceptance of her proposal. Held, that she was not bound by her offer. Ib.

121. An order of a school district committee on its treasurer is not payment of the debt of the district to a teacher, unless received as such, or unless the teacher has in some way availed himself of it. Ib.

SCIRE FACIAS.

1. Nature and characteristics of remedy. A writ of scire facias is a judicial writ founded upon the record, and must be signed by a judge or the clerk of the court where the record is, and to which the writ is returnable. Sherwood v. Pearl, 1 Tyl. 819. Walsh v. Haswell, 11 Vt. 85.

2. A scire facias is a judicial writ, and issues from the court where the record is. Thus, a recognizance taken by an inferior court or magistrate, becomes a record in the court where the suit or proceeding in which it is taken is finally determined—as, the county, or supreme court—and a scire facias thereon issues from such court, irrespective of the amount of the recognizance. Carlton v. Young, 1 Aik. 332. Shumway v. Sargeant, 27 Vt. 440.

3. Scire facias can be brought to that court only in which the judgment was rendered, and where the record is. Phelps v. Mott, Brayt. 191. Treasurer, &c., v. Erwin, Ib. 218. Hoit v. Bradley, 1 D. Chp. 262.

4. Scire facias does not lie before the county court upon a recognizance taken by a justice for the appearance of a respondent from day to day. The action must be debt. Treasurer, &c., v. Erwin.

5. A scire facias to the county court on the judgment of a justice, under the statute, must set out such facts as show the jurisdiction of the court under the statute. Phelps v. Mott, Brayt. 191.

6. A writ of scire facias upon a recognizance may issue as an attachment. Treasurer v. Moore, 1 Tyl. 329.

7. The statute authorizes an appeal from a judgment rendered on scire facias, as well as on any other writ. Gilson v. Gay, 10 Vt. 326.

8. Continuation of former suit. Scire facias upon a judgment to procure an execution is not an original suit, but only a continuation of the former suit, and execution issues upon the former judgment. State Treasurer v. Foster, 7 Vt. 52.

9. A scire facias upon a judgment is not regarded as an original suit, but, in one sense, a continuation of the former action; and, therefore, does not lie before one justice to enforce a judgment rendered by another. Gibson v. Davis, 22 Vt. 374. (Changed by G. S. c. 31, s. 75, where the first justice has died, or is out of office.)

10. On scire facias to revive a judgment, no damages or interest are recoverable. Hall v. Hall, 8 Vt. 156. (Changed by G. S. c. 33, s. 74.)

11. A scire facias against a trustee, under a statute of the State of Maine, was held to be a continuation of the original action; and that, he having been regularly a party to that action, the jurisdiction of that court to render judgment by default on the scire facias against him, was not lost by his removal out of the State so that service of the scire facias could not be made upon him; and, in an action of debt on such judgment in this State, the judgment was held conclusive. Burns v. Belknap, 22 Vt. 419. 26 Vt. 450.

12. Execution apparently satisfied. The terms of the statute authorizing a scire facias where an execution is apparently satisfied by a levy upon property, and which "did not belong to the debtor," embrace cases in which the debtor had no such title to the property as could be made available to the levying creditor; as, where it was held under an attachment, not known to the creditor, in favor of a third person, by which the levy and sale were defeated. (G. S. c. 47, s. 43.) Baxter v. Shaw, 28 Vt. 569.

13. A scire facias in common form upon a judgment, to obtain a new execution, was held amendable by adding an averment that an apparent satisfaction of a former execution was produced by a sale of property which turned out not to belong to the debtor. Ib.

14. A sold certain property on his execution against B. C, claiming the property, sued A therefor, but, while the suit was pending, agreed with A to discontinue it and release his claim. This suit was discontinued, but C afterwards brought another suit against A and recovered the value of the property; whereupon A sued C upon the agreement to discontinue and recovered back of him the same amount which he had recovered of A. Upon scire facias against B for an alias execution, on the ground of failure of title in the property sold on the execution;—Held, that A was entitled to recover,— for that B was a stranger to the recovery had by A against C. Maak v. Nichols, 5 Vt. 200.

15. Defective levy. Scire facias to obtain a new execution, where a former one was defectively levied, is not the appropriate remedy, but a petition under the statute. Royce v. Strong, 11 Vt. 248.

See BAIL; RECOGNIZANCE; SHERIFF.

SEAL.

1. As to deeds, charters, &c., the seal must be of wax, or wafer; something which may be impressed with an instrument used as and for a seal; and held that a scroll or circle made with a pen and the word "seal" written within it, was not a seal; and that an instrument of conveyance with such attachment to the signature was not a deed, not being sealed. Beardsley v. Knight, 4 Vt. 471.

2. Corporations act by their seal, and public documents are evidenced by a seal. In these cases, the impression of the seal may be made directly on paper, without the intervention of the wafer or wax, as it is the particular impression made by the stamp which is recognized as the seal of the corporation or public office. Ib.

3. Public seals do not require, for their validity, wafer or wax. Such seals impressed upon the paper itself are sufficient; as, a notarial seal. Bank of Manchester v. Slason, 18 Vt. 384.

4. Where an award was required to be sealed, the arbitrators produced an award signed by each, but with only one seal, and that attached at the left hand of the signatures. The award did not conclude with, "witness our hands and seals, &c." Held, nevertheless, that from its purpose and tenor it was obvious that the arbitrators intended and understood this to be a sealed instrument, and that each had adopted this seal as his own seal. Cheney v. Gates, 12 Vt. 565.

5. Where an instrument is signed by several parties and has but one seal attached, the question whether the one seal was adopted and stands as the seal of each is one of fact, and may be determined from the paper itself and the nature of the transaction. University of Vt. v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52.

SEDUCTION.

1. Trespass is the appropriate action to recover for the injury of seduction. It is of itself a substantive ground for such action.

Hubbell v. Wheeler, 2 Aik. 359. Haynes v. Sinclair, 23 Vt. 108.

2. Quære, whether, in an action for the seduction of the plaintiff's daughter, he may, in the opening of his case, give evidence of a promise of marriage by the defendant. By D. Kellogg, J.: "I think the weight of authority is against it." Haynes v. Sinclair.

3. Held, that it was error to charge, that evidence of promise of marriage between the parties tended to prove the fact of seduction. Ib.

4. In such action, evidence of the general character and standing of the daughter, and of the plaintiff and his family, is not admissible, in the absence of impeaching evidence by the defendant. Ib.

5. Nor is evidence of the probable expense of supporting the illegitimate child which came of the seduction, admissible. Ib.

SET-OFF.

I. AT LAW.

1. Mutuality of the respective demands.
2. Nature of the demands pleadable.
3. Declaration on book account in set-off.
4. Pleadings and practice.

II. IN CHANCERY.

I. AT LAW.

1. Mutuality of the respective demands.

1. To an action by the administrator of an estate represented insolvent, the defendant may plead in set-off counter demands, though the same have been presented to the commissioners, and this whether they have been allowed, or disallowed, by the commissioners. Olcott v. Morey, 1 Tyl. 198.

2. In an action against two upon their joint note;—Held, that the individual demands of either, and of each, and both, could be pleaded in set-off. Ashley v. Willard, 2 Tyl. 391.

3. On an appeal by an heir or creditor from an allowance by commissioners of a claim against the estate, the appellant may in the name of the executor plead an off-set thereto. Parkhill v. Parkhill, Brayt. 195.

4. In an action brought against two and a non est inventus return as to one;—Held, that the one on whom service was made, and who appeared, could plead in set-off a demand in favor of both, and recover judgment in his own name for the balance. Mott v. Mott, 5 Vt. 111.

5. Held, under like circumstances, that the defendant on whom service was made and who appeared could plead in set-off a demand in favor of himself alone. Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301. (Note. In Adams v. Bliss, 16 Vt. p. 42, it is said, that these two cases are opposed to each other, and that one or the other cannot be recognized as authority; and that the question remains yet to be decided.)

6. The right to plead in set-off under the statute can never be maintained and pursued to any practical purpose at law, unless the demands are legally mutual. Leavenworth v. Lapham, 5 Vt. 204. 16 Vt. 42.

7. In a suit against two, the defendants pleaded in set-off the note of the plaintiff to a third person or bearer, alleged to have been assigned to the defendants, and notice thereof given to the plaintiff, before the bringing of this suit. The proof was, that the note bore two indorsements, one in blank and one specially to one of the defendants, and that the notice of the assignment was given by this defendant, that he was the owner of the note. Held, that the plea was not sustained, and the set-off was not allowed. Bragg v. Fletcher, 20 Vt. 85.

8. Pleas in set-off are only allowed between the actual parties to the suit. Adams v. Bliss, 16 Vt. 39. Phelps v. Bulkeley, 20 Vt. 17.

9. The statute which authorized an indorsee of a promissory note to maintain an action in his own name, secured to the defendant a right to plead in set-off demands against the original payee. Since the repeal of that statute, in 1836, this cannot be done, although the plaintiff, suing as bearer or indorsee, holds the note merely in trust for the payee; as, for purposes of collection only. Ib.

10. A, the administrator of B, loaned money of B's estate to the defendant, and took his note therefor payable to A as administrator of B's estate. A died and the plaintiff was appointed his administrator, and also administrator de bonis non of B's estate. The plaintiff brought suit upon the note as administrator of A's estate and recovered judgment. On motion, the defendant was allowed to set off a judgment of the commissioners in his favor against the estate of A;—such judgments, although rendered in different courts, being in substance mutual, and made so by the acts of the parties. Rix v. Nevins, 26 Vt. 384.

11. In an action brought by an administrator for a debt accruing after the death of the intestate, the defendant cannot set off a debt due to him from the intestate in his lifetime. Aiken v. Bridgman, 37 Vt. 249.

12. Notice. A had an account against B. B became the assignee by indorsement of a note against A and gave A notice thereof. Held, that B's claim became perfected by the notice, as a set-off to the claim of A, which could not be defeated by the subsequent assignment of A's account to C; and that notice to

C was not necessary. Keyes v. Waters, 18 Vt. 479.

2. Nature of the demands pleadable.

13. To be perfected before suit. Money paid to the plaintiff's use since the commencement of a suit, though by reason of a liability incurred for the plaintiff before the suit, cannot be pleaded in set-off. Carpenter v. Coit, 1 D. Chip. 88. Houston v. Fellows, 27 Vt. 634.

14. Unliquidated claim. Before the statute of 1818 (Slade's Stat. 109, s. 1), uncertain damages arising from a breach of contract could not be pleaded in set-off. Haynes v. White, Brayt. 219. Rollins v. Walker, Ib. 222.

15. By the statute of set-off (G. S. c. 89, s. 1), "in any action founded on contract, express or implied," the indebtedness of the plaintiff to the defendant, "on contract, express or implied," may be pleaded in set-off. "Such plea shall be in the nature of a declaration, and may contain as many counts as the nature of the case shall require." (Ib. s. 2.) Under this statute, the matter in set-off is not required to be liquidated, as at common law; but the plea is a mere declaration, and may cover any matter of contract, not expressly excepted in the statute. Hubbard v. Fisher, 25 Vt. 539. Keyes v. W. Vt. Slate Co., 34 Vt. 81. Thompson v. Congdon, 43 Vt. 396. 45 Vt. 68.

16. Tort. The defendant delivered his horses to the plaintiff to be kept at an agreed price, without other agreement as to their return. The plaintiff wrongfully refused to redeliver them on demand. Held, that such refusal was a conversion and a tort, and not the subject of a declaration in set-off, as being a breach of an implied contract. Hudson v. Nute, 45 Vt. 66.

3. Declaration on book account in set-off.

17. Under the statute as existing in 1825, the maker of a note, sued by the indorsee, could file his declaration of book account in set-off, for an account against the payee existing before notice of the indorsement. Martin v. Trobridge, 1 Vt. 477. S. C. 3 Vt. 9.

18. The defendant cannot file a declaration in account in set-off, under G. S. c. 89, s. 10, but only a declaration in book account. If so filed, it may be dismissed on motion, even at a subsequent term and after a judgment thereon to account. Tobias v. McGregor, 19 Vt. 118.

19. A declaration on book in set-off, and the proceedings under it, are branches of the original action, and not a distinct action, or entry. Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt. 540. Tobias v. McGregor.

20. Where a declaration on book is filed in set-off, the amount of the debt only, as reported by the auditors, is to be pleaded in set-off;—all costs are taxed against the party in arrear. Dyer v. Burdick, Brayt. 222.

21. B owed D upon note, and also a balance on book. D brought suit upon the note, and also an action of book account. To the action on the note D filed a declaration in set-off on book. Held, that his book account could not be applied on the note, since the balance of account was against him, and D was allowed judgment in each suit. Davis v. Barton, 8 Vt. 246.

22. The balance in favor of either party is to be carried into the action, and judgment to be for the ultimate balance. Thus, where the plaintiff ultimately failed to sustain his original declaration, he was allowed judgment in the action for the balance found in his favor by the auditor; but costs only in that proceeding in which he was successful. Cross v. Haskins, 18 Vt. 536; and see Stearns v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 218.

23. The plaintiff brought his action of assumpsit and the defendant filed his declaration on book account in set-off. Before the auditor, the plaintiff brought in all his claims embraced in the action, and they, with the defendant's accounts, were there adjusted and a balance reported for the defendant. Held, that the plaintiff's claims had become res adjudicata, and could not be again considered; and that the plaintiff was estopped from claiming that they were not proper matters to be adjusted by the auditor in book account; and judgment for the balance found by the auditor was rendered for the defendant. Herrick v. Richardson, 17 Vt. 375.

24. Where a declaration in set-off on book account is filed, all sums due at the time of the audit are to be adjusted, as in ordinary cases, and the balance so found due and recovered may be set off, although a portion of the account accrued after the commencement of the principal suit; and this, notwithstanding G. S. c. 89, s. 5, the amount being an entire thing, and the balance being the thing pleadable. Thetford v. Hubbard, 23 Vt. 440.

4. Pleadings and practice.

25. Pleading. The amount recovered in a declaration on book in set-off, and a tender before suit of the balance of the plaintiff's demand, may be joined in the same plea in bar. Martin v. Trobridge, 1 Vt. 477.

26. Counts of different natures may be joined in a plea in set-off; as, assumpsit, and debt on judgment. Burton v. Brush, 4 Vt. 467.

27. A plea in set-off may be joined with a plea of non est factum, and pleas in bar. Johnson v. Muzzy, 42 Vt. 708.

28. Practice—Judgment for sum in arrear. The statutes of this State regulating offsets have materially changed the rules of the common law. In case of off-sets or mutual off-sets pleaded, as the jury are required to "find, generally, such sum as shall appear to be in arrear from either party," the off-set may form the basis of a separate judgment, if the original suit fail; and, it seems, that the defendant may, in such case, insist, notwithstanding such failure, that the cause proceed to trial and judgment on the declaration in set-off. Stearns v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 218.

29. A claimant before commissioners of an estate appealed from a set-off allowed against his claim, and in the county court filed a declaration on book. Before the filing of the auditor's report, the administrator filed a declaration in assumpsit in set-off. The auditor reported nothing due the plaintiff on book. Held, that the defendant was entitled, nevertheless, to have the case proceed to trial and judgment upon the declaration in set-off Ib; and see Cross v. Haskins, 18 Vt. 536. Herrick v. Richardson, 17 Vt. 375.

30. Set-off of mutual judgments on motion. Courts of common law have an equitable jurisdiction, derived from the general jurisdiction of a court over its suitors, to set off mutual judgments although rendered in different courts, and although the nominal parties of record are different but the real parties the same, whenever such set-off is equitable. Conable v. Bucklin, 2 Aik. 221. Riz v. Nevins, 26 Vt. 384; and see Sellick v. Munson, 2 Vt. 18, note.

II. IN CHANCERY.

31. Courts of equity exercised jurisdiction on the subject of set-off before the statutes of set-off existed. Consequently, the jurisdiction is not based upon such statutes. It would exist without them, and would not be affected by their repeal. Blake v. Langdon, 19 Vt. 485.

32. Where the orator neglected to present his claims against an insolvent estate for allowance, in reliance upon an agreement of the administrator that they should be allowed in set-off to a claim of the estate against him;—Held, that the orator was entitled, in chancery, to have his claims so applied in set-off to the extent of the dividend payable by the estate. Nims v. Rood, 11 Vt. 96.

33. It is not a valid objection to a set-off in equity, that the nominal parties to the contract are not strictly mutual, if the real parties upon whom the burden is ultimately to fall are the same. Smith v. Wainwright, 24 Vt. 97. Ferris v. Burton, 1 Vt. 439. Foot v. Ketokum, 15 Vt. 258. Downer v. Dana, 17 Vt. 518. Blake v. Langdon, 19 Vt. 485.

34. In order to the application of a set-off in chancery upon bill for that purpose, the claim must be liquidated; and for this purpose the party may be referred to a court of law, and the cause retained for application of the set-off when the amount is determined. This is the usual course. Smith v. Wainwright, Nims v. Rood, 11 Vt. 96. Foot v. Ketchum. (See G. S. c. 29, s. 27.)

35. The assignee of a note brought suit on it in the names of the two payees. The defendant filed a declaration in set-off as against one of the payees, to whom the note belonged and from whom the assignee claimed. The assignee appeared and defended before the auditor who heard and reported the accounts, and the report was accepted by the county court. On a chancery appeal, the court held and treated this adjustment by the auditor as a sufficient liquidation of the defendant's account to make it the basis of an equitable set-off as against such assignee. Foot v. Ketchum.

SHERIFF.

I. IN GENERAL. II. RELATIONS OF SHERIFF AND DEPUTY SHERIFF.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. His recognizance. A sheriff's recognizance taken according to the requirements of the act of 1797 before the first side judge of the county court, in the absence of the chief judge, was held valid, though the constitution prescribed the first judge. State Treasurer v. Kelsey, 4 Vt. 371. 29 Vt. 104. 36 Vt. 371.

2. Under the statute of 1839 requiring sheriffs' recognizances to be taken before "the first judge of the county court;"—Held, that this referred to the first local judge of the county, and not to a judge of the supreme court, or a circuit judge, who was ex officio the chief judge of the county court—that is, of the court as a legal tribunal when acting in the aggregate, as such; and that such recognizance taken before A B, "first assistant judge of the county court," was well taken—the one first named on the voting tickets and in the returns and record of the election being styled the first, and the other the second, assistant judge. (20 N. Y. R. 252.) Wing v. Gleason, 36 Vt. 371. Taylor v. Nichols, 29 Vt. 104.

3. The amended constitution of 1850 provided that sheriffs should give security, &c., before one of the judges of the supreme court, or the two judges of the county court, &c., "in such manner and in such sums as shall be directed by the legislature." Held, that this clearly contemplated future legislation to perfect and carry it out, before it could become effectual and operative; and that it did not, of itself and by its own force, operate to repeal or change a then existing statute providing that such security should be given before "the first judge of the county court." Id.

4. Since the statute of 1797, the remedy in behalf of an individual upon a sheriff's official bond, or recognizance, is that given by the statute, viz.: a scire facias, and this remedy is exclusive. Held, that debt in the name of the county treasurer would not lie. Fuller v. Holmes, 1 Aik. 111.

5. By the statutes as existing in 1826, the commitment of a delinquent sheriff to jail upon the State treasurer's extent, did not lay the foundation for a scire facias against the sheriff's bail. State Treasurer v. Holmes, 2 Aik. 48.

6. Scire facias cannot be maintained against the sureties on the recognizance of a deceased sheriff, until the liability of the sheriff and the extent of it have been established by an allowance against his estate, and that remedy has been exhausted; and this is so, although such estate is entirely insolvent. Tute v. James, 46 Vt. 60.

7. The judgment rendered against a sheriff for an official default, except where rendered upon default, is as conclusive against his sureties in a scire facias upon the official recognizance, as it is against him. (G. S. c. 30, s. 70.) Bradley v. Chamberlin, 35 Vt. 277.

8. Extent against. An extent against a sheriff need not be directed to the high bailiff, though the letter of the statute is so, when the sheriff is out of office when it issues. State Treasurer v. Weeks, 4 Vt. 215.

9. The State treasurer may issue one extent against a sheriff for distinct defaults in levying two separate extents against different constables in different years, the sums being distinctly stated in each. Id.

10. The remedy given by statute to the State treasurer to issue an extent against a sheriff, for his default in the service of an extent against a delinquent constable, is not exclusive. It does not preclude an action at law against the sheriff for the same default; nor can his bail object that no extent was issued. State Treasurer v. Kelsey, 4 Vt. 371. 10 Vt. 568.

11. Certain powers. A sheriff, or deputy sheriff, is not obliged to show his precept to the person to be arrested by it, nor to the bystanders. State v. Caldwell, 2 Tyl. 212.

12. A sheriff or deputy sheriff, as such, has no authority to impanel and take private charge of a justice jury. Hosford v. Allen, 1 Vt. 50.

13. A sheriff, or deputy sheriff, capturing a criminal under an offer of a reward, but having no process for the arrest, is entitled to the reward, the same as though he were not a peace officer. Davis v. Munson, 48 Vt. 676. Russell v. Stewart, 44 Vt. 170.

14. But if he have such process for service, he cannot recover any extra or additional reward for his services in making the arrest within his jurisdiction, though stipulated for; but for such services beyond his jurisdiction, he may. Brown v. Godfrey, 38 Vt. 120.

15. The sheriff of another State cannot pursue and retake in this State a prisoner who has escaped from his custody in such other State. Bromley v. Hutchins, 8 Vt. 194.

16. Escape—Liability for. Any departure of a prisoner, committed on final process, from the jail, i. e., the house, by consent of the sheriff, though there be a voluntary return before action brought, is an escape for which the sheriff is liable. Wait v. Dana, Brayt. 87. 12 Vt. 614.

17. If a sheriff voluntarily permits a prisoner in execution to escape, he cannot retake him, though the creditor may. In such case, the creditor may sue the officer for the escape, or he may sue the judgment. Farnsworth v. Tilton, 1 D. Chip. 297.

18. The sheriff, as keeper of the jail to which is committed a debtor from another county, is not liable for a negligent escape of such debtor. Chipman v. Sawyer, 1 Tyl. 88. S. C. 2 Tyl. 61.

19. A former sheriff is not liable for the escape of a prisoner after his term of office has expired, though the prisoner was committed during his term, provided he regularly delivered over the prisoner to his successor. Day v. Sweetser, 2 Tyl. 233.

20. The creditor must charge in execution and legally demand his debtor, committed to jail on meane process, within fifteen days after final judgment, or he will lose all claim upon the sheriff, whether the debtor has previously escaped, or not. Id.

21. Damages for escape. In an action against a sheriff for an escape on meane process, the defendant, according to the statute, gave evidence that the escaped prisoner was poor and without property. The plaintiff then offered to prove that the act for which the prisoner was sued was willful and malicious, and therefore he would be entitled to a close-jail execution; and that before the escape some persons, in behalf of the prisoner, had offered a certain sum on condition that the plaintiff would discharge him. Held, that the evidence was not admissible. Middlebury v. Haight, 1 Vt. 423. See G. S. c. 121, s. 17.

22. In an action against a sheriff for the escape of a prisoner committed to jail on execution for debt;—Held, that at common law, independent of the statute, he might show in mitigation of damages the insolvency of the prisoner, though such escape was voluntary. Wait v. Dana, Brayt. 87; and although the prisoner was not entitled to take the poor debtor's oath. State Treasurer v. Weeks, 4 Vt. 215.

23. Subrogation. In an action against a sheriff for an escape on meane process, the court required, as a condition of judgment, that the defendant should be allowed the benefit of the judgment against the debtor. Oliver v. Chamberlin, 1 D. Chip. 41. S. C. N. Chip. 26. 9 Vt. 294; and see State Treasurer v. Holmes, 4 Vt. 110.

II. RELATIONS OF SHERIFF AND DEPUTY SHERIFF.

24. Liability for default of deputy. The acts of a sheriff's deputy are, in law, the acts of the sheriff; and he alone can sue or be sued for any matter relating to the execution of the duties of his office merely. Smith v. Joiner, 1 D. Chip. 62. 1 Aik. 264.

25. For a misfeasance, a deputy sheriff is liable as well as the sheriff; but for a non-feasance, or neglect of duty, no action lies against the deputy, but against the sheriff only—as, for neglect of the deputy to pay over money collected by him upon an execution. Hutchinson v. Parkhurst, 1 Aik. 258. 28 Vt. 141; or for neglect to properly keep property attached, whereby it suffered damage. Abbott v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 551. Hale v. Huntley, 21 Vt. 147; or was stolen. Buck v. Ashley, 37 Vt. 475.

26. So long as the sheriff remains liable, it would seem that for mere official neglect the deputy is not also liable. Redfield, C. J., in Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 142.

27. The acts of a deputy sheriff are to be regarded as the acts of the sheriff, not in the sense of either agency or identity; but rather in the sense of official relation and of responsibility cast by law upon the sheriff for the acts of the deputy; not in the sense that what the deputy does is done by the sheriff, but that for what he does the sheriff is made responsible, the same as if he had officially done the same thing. Flanagan v. Hoyt, 36 Vt. 569. Barrett, J.

28. A sheriff is responsible to an attaching creditor who has duly charged the property in execution, for the default of his deputy in taking due care of the property attached by him, whereby it became lessened in value; as, also, for the proceeds of such property sold on credit by arrangement of the several attaching creditors and debtor, which came into the hands of such deputy while the lien created by the attachment existed (Seaver v. Pierce, 42 Vt.

325), though such default happened after the sheriff had gone out of office, and his deputy had become the deputy of another sheriff. Stimpson v. Pierce, 42 Vt. 334.

29. A sheriff remains liable for the default of his deputy, although he and his deputy both go out of office before the bringing of suit. Ib. Coburn v. Chamberlin, 31 Vt. 326.

30. Under G. S. c. 52, ss. 10, 12, providing for the survival of actions "for damages done to real or personal estate";—Held, that an action on the case against a sheriff for the default of his deputy in the service of an execution, whereby the creditor lost his debt, survived in behalf of the administrator of the creditor. Dana v. Lull, 21 Vt. 383; so, also, against the administrator of the sheriff. Bellows v. Allen, 22 Vt. 108;—giving to the statute the same construction as that of 4 Ed. III. c. 7; and see Winhall v. Sawyer, 45 Vt. 406.

31. Evidence—Admission of deputy. In an action against a sheriff for the neglect of his deputy to return an execution, a receipt signed by the deputy, acknowledging that he received the execution for collection, is evidence of that fact for the plaintiff. Nye v. Kellam, 18 Vt. 594.

32. The admissions of a deputy sheriff are evidence against the sheriff, in an action against him or his sureties, for the default of such deputy; and may be proved by any other witness as well as by the deputy, even when he is a witness. Lyman v. Lull, 20 Vt. 349.

33. Appointment of deputy. That one was a deputy sheriff may be proved by the record of his deputation in the county clerk's office. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

34. Record of deputation. Where a deputy sheriff duly lodged with the county clerk for record his deputation and certificate of his oath of office, and the same was so received by the clerk, and was afterwards copied upon the record by the clerk;—Held, that the record, being only for the purpose of notice, and not of creating a title, was constructively deemed to exist from the time of lodging the instrument for record, and that the intervening acts of the deputy, as such, were valid under the statute. Ferris v. Smith, 24 Vt. 27. 25 Vt. 284. G. S. c. 12, s. 5.

35. When deputy may sue. A deputy sheriff may sue in his own name, in trespass or trover, for a conversion of property attached by him. Stanton v. Hodges, 6 Vt. 64.

36. A deputy sheriff who attaches personal property and takes a receipt for it in his own name, has such a special interest in it that he may sue in trover or assumpsit on his receipt. West v. Thompson, 27 Vt. 613. Spencer v. Williams, 2 Vt. 209; and see Miller v. Gould, 2 Tyl. 439.

37. An action in such case also lies in the name of the sheriff. Davis v. Miller, 1 Vt. 9. Pettes v. Marsh, 15 Vt. 454.

38. Deputy's contract. A deputy sheriff can make no contract that will render the sheriff liable for the breach of it. The sheriff is holden for the official neglects, only, of his deputy. Wetherbee v. Foster, 5 Vt. 136. Tomlinson v. Wheeler, 1 Aik. 194.

39. Interference by creditor. A sheriff is not liable, as for a default of his deputy, for not collecting and returning an execution, or paying over the proceeds of a sale thereon, when by the direction or assent of the creditor the sale was upon a credit, instead of for cash. Kimball v. Perry, 15 Vt. 414. Bellows v. Allen, 23 Vt. 169. See 42 Vt. 325.

40. In an action against a sheriff for neglect of his deputy in not executing a writ of execution, the plaintiff put in evidence the deputy's receipt, in which he acknowledged the receipt of this and eighteen other executions, "to collect and account for according to law." Held, that parol evidence was admissible, for the defendant, of a subsisting agreement between the plaintiff and the deputy, that the deputy should not commit any of the plaintiff's debtors in execution without express direction of the plaintiff. Downer v. Bowen, 12 Vt. 452.

41. A sheriff is not excused to an attaching creditor for the default of his deputy in keeping property attached, because such creditor or other parties may have taken it into his, or their, possession on receipt given to the deputy, where the property has been restored to the possession of the deputy under the attachment. Stimpson v. Pierce, 42 Vt. 334.

42. A deputy sheriff attached the property of S upon a writ against him declaring upon a promissory note, and sold the property upon the attachment, as perishable, under the statute. That suit terminated in favor of S. In an action by S against the sheriff to recover the proceeds of such sale, after demand;—Held, that it was not competent for the defendant to prove that said note was given to defraud the creditors of S, for that the note was good between the parties to it. Seaver v. Pierce, 42 Vt. 325.

43. Held, also, that the sheriff was liable for such proceeds, though the deputy by direction of S sold the property upon a credit, if the deputy received the proceeds during the pendency of that suit, or before the lien was discharged by a judgment in favor of S; but that this fact must appear affirmatively. Ib.

44. Held, also, that the defendant was not chargeable with interest until after demand, it not appearing that he had any previous knowledge of the discharge of the lien. Ib.

See JAIL.

SLANDER.

I. ORAL.

II. WRITTEN, OR LIBEL.

I. ORAL.

1. What words are, or are not, actionable. Words charging a simple assault and battery are not actionable per se; as, that "He snaked his mother out of doors by the hair of her head; it was the day before she died." Billings v. Wing, 7 Vt. 489.

2. Words to be actionable of themselves must charge an offense not only punishable corporeally, but which implies moral turpitude. Words charging the stealing of property of a value less than seven dollars are actionable;—the offense being punishable by fine or imprisonment, and the words imputing an infamous crime involving moral turpitude. Redway v. Gray, 81 Vt. 292.

3. In an action for slander of a minister of the gospel in his profession, the words charged and proved were: "Mr. S (the plaintiff) said the blood of Christ had nothing to do with our salvation more than the blood of a hog." Held, that these words were actionable; and that testimony to prove that the plaintiff denied the divinity and atonement of Christ, but spoke of Him as a highly intellectual and moral being and perfect, but still a created being, a creature, so that there was no more virtue in His blood than in the blood of any creature as an atonement, was not admissible, either in justification or mitigation. Skinner v. Grant, 12 Vt. 456.

4. Privilege. No action lies for any thing said, written, or published in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, and which comes within the ordinary scope of the forms and proceedings therein, however groundless or malicious the suit may be, even if the process of the court is sought as the mere cloak of malice and slander; and this defense is available under the general issue, but may be specially pleaded. Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 858, 414.

5. Prima facie, a party, or his counsel, is privileged for everything spoken in court. In order to sustain an action of slander therefor, the plaintiff must show that the words spoken were not pertinent to the matter then in progress, and that they were spoken maliciously, and with a view to defame him. If pertinent, however malicious the motive, or if spoken bona fide, believing them to be pertinent, although not so, no action of slander will lie therefor. Mower v. Watson, 11 Vt. 536.

6. There is a class of cases which form an exception to the general rule, that malice is to be presumed, as matter of law, from defamatory words actionable per se. Such are cases of giving the character of servants; confidential advice for some legitimate purpose; communications to persons who ask for information and have a right or interest to know. Such occasions do not necessarily justify the words, nor, on the other hand, is malice to be inferred by law, but must be found as matter of fact by the jury. Peck, J., in Nott v. Stoddard, 38 Vt. 82.

7. A, at the instance of the plaintiff, inquired of the defendant as to the report that he had charged the plaintiff with stealing wood. The defendant replied, that it was so; that he saw it himself—and went on stating the circumstances. In an action therefor, for slander;—Held, that if the plaintiff caused the inquiry to be made as a trick to induce the defendant to utter a slander, he could not make the words thus elicited a ground of action. But if the inquiry was made in good faith, and merely to ascertain whether the defendant had made such a charge, then the action would lie for such words, if spoken maliciously. But in such case, malice is not implied by law, but must be found as a fact by the jury. Id.

8. Particular charges. The words, "he took a false oath," or "he swore false," do not of themselves amount to an accusation of perjury. To render such words actionable, a declaration therefor must set forth an introductory statement, or colloquium, alleging the occasion on which they were spoken and the proceeding to which they related—as, that they were spoken with reference to some proceeding in which an oath might lawfully be administered, and in which a false statement under oath might amount to legal perjury, and that the plaintiff was legally sworn, or testified upon oath. There must also be an innuendo showing the injurious sense in which the words were uttered—as, that the defendant intended to accuse the plaintiff of the crime of perjury. Sanderson v. Hubbard, 14 Vt. 462. 38 Vt. 188. Wood v. Scott, 18 Vt. 42.

9. Words charging that the plaintiff burned the house of his wife, in which he lived, impute no crime and are not actionable. Redway v. Gray, 81 Vt. 292.

10. Before the Stat. of 1858, No. 23 (G. S. c. 118, s. 5), it was held that words charging that the plaintiff burned his own buildings with intent to defraud an insurance company which had insured them, were not actionable. Id.

11. It is not actionable to say that the plaintiff went to a certain place for the purpose of persuading a woman to commit adultery with him;—these words not implying the actual commission of the crime. Dickey v. Andros, 33 Vt. 55.

12. Spoken words charging an unmarried woman with unchaste conduct (as, to call her a whore) are not actionable per se; otherwise, as to a charge of sexual connection with a married man, or of such conduct as amounts to open and gross lewdness; for these would subject her to corporal punishment for a crime involving moral turpitude. Underhill v. Welton, 32 Vt. 40.

13. But such words are actionable, if some special pecuniary damage has resulted therefrom; and it was held sufficient to aver and prove that by reason of grief and anxiety occasioned by the charge, the plaintiff lost time, and that the effect upon her mind or body was such as to render her less capable of attending to her daily business. Id.

14. Words uttered in Canada charging the plaintiff with having administered poison with intent to kill, or injure a person (not stating the extent of the injury—as, to do great bodily harm);—Held, not to be assumed as actionable, in lack of proof that they were so by the law of Canada. Langdon v. Young, 33 Vt. 136.

15. By G. S. c. 113, s. 39, the willful and malicious girdling or destroying of another's fruit trees of a value exceeding seven dollars, is punishable by imprisonment in the State prison, or by fine, or both. Held, that such offense involves moral turpitude, and that words charging such offense are slanderous, and actionable per se. Murray v. McAllister, 38 Vt. 167.

16. Words charging that one is a bastard are not actionable per se. Hoar v. Ward, 47 Vt. 657.

17. How to be understood. In slander, the words charged should be understood in the most innocent sense, unless there be averments giving them other and sinister meaning. Thus, where the words alleged were that the defendant told W that he (W) had intercourse with the plaintiff, Martha, meaning that she had committed adultery with W, this allegation without colloquium or other averment, was held to impute no crime. Merritt v. Dearth, 48 Vt. 65.

18. The form in which a slander is expressed is quite immaterial. The words, "C acknowledged to me that he swore to a lie, &c.," with proper colloquium and innuendoes, are actionable, where the speaker intended to communicate the slanderous idea and have it believed. Cass v. Anderson 33 Vt. 182.

19. Declaration. The words constituting the slanderous charge must be set forth in the declaration. An omission so to do is not cured by verdict; as, where the averment was that the defendant "did charge the plaintiff with the crime of perjury." Haselton v. Wear, 8 Vt. 480. 32 Vt. 707.

20. In an action by husband and wife for a slander imputing adultery of the wife, the declaration must aver that they were husband and wife at the time of speaking the words. Ryan v. Madden, 12 Vt. 51.

21. It is no objection to the declaration that it sets forth a libel as inducement, where it counts only upon the spoken slander. Hoyt v. Smith, 32 Vt. 304.

22. It is proper to include in a single count words spoken at different times, and to different persons, in relation to the same subject, as well as to make several counts. Id.

23. There is a material distinction between an inducement, introduction, or colloquium, and an innuendo. The office of the former is, to set forth the occasion and circumstances of the publication, and to allege all extrinsic facts which are necessary to be taken in connection with the words spoken, in order to complete the sense; while the latter has no other use than simply to ascertain the application of previous expressions to particular persons or things. "It means no more than the words id est, scilicet, or meaning, or aforesaid, as explanatory of a subject matter sufficiently expressed before; as, such an one, meaning the defendant, or such a subject, meaning the subject in question. But as an innuendo is only used as a word of explanation, it cannot extend the sense of the expressions in the libel (or of the words spoken) beyond their own meaning, unless something is [previously] put upon the record for it to explain." (Cowp. 684.) Hence, if the words are not actionable with a mere explanation of the persons or things intended by them, they cannot be made so by an innuendo; for an innuendo is only a word of explanation, and never of addition or extension. Fitzsimmons v. Cutler, 1 Aik. 33. Taft v. Howard, 1 D. Chip. 275. Ryan v. Madden, 12 Vt. 51. Wood v. Scott, 13 Vt. 42. Sanderson v. Hubbard, 14 Vt. 462. Nichols v. Packard, 16 Vt. 83. Holton v. Muzzy, 30 Vt. 365. Smith v. Hollister, 32 Vt. 695. State v. Atkins, 43 Vt. 252.

24. It is not the office of an innuendo to extend, but simply to explain the meaning of the words charged. When these are of doubtful signification, it is for the pleader to allege in what sense they were used, and for the jury to find the truth of the allegation. Nichols v. Packard, 16 Vt. 83.

25. In this case, the innuendo was held not to enlarge the meaning of the words spoken. Murray v. McAllister, 38 Vt. 167.

26. In slander for words as actionable per se, the pleader must aver clearly and distinctly, in the colloquium and prefatory averments, the crime intended to be imputed, and in the innuendo, the crime pointed at and insinuated. It is not sufficient to designate it as a crime, and leave it to the court to ascertain whether a definite crime may be fairly deduced. Hoar v. Ward, 47 Vt. 657.

27. A declaration that sets forth that the defendant, to or in the hearing of others, called the plaintiff a thief, is good, without other colloquium than that the words were spoken of the plaintiff. Sabin v. Angell, 46 Vt. 740.

28. Where the declaration counts for different slanders at different times, a general averment of special damage "by means of the committing of which several grievances," is not sufficient, where one of the alleged slanders is not actionable. Hoar v. Ward, 47 Vt. 657.

29. Pleas and evidence. The truth of the words spoken cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. Barns v. Webb, 1 Tyl. 17.

30. In justifying, the plea must justify the same words contained in the declaration, or at least so many of them as are actionable. It is not enough to justify the sentiment contained in the words. Skinner v. Grant, 12 Vt. 456. 82 Vt. 707.

31. Where the words charged are divisible without materially changing the sense, or constitute two distinct charges or slanders against the plaintiff, the defendant may justify one, and rely on the general issue in defense of the other. Nott v. Stoddard, 38 Vt. 25.

32. Where the words charged are ambiguous, and are actionable by force of the meaning assigned to them in the innuendo, it is not sufficient for the defendant to justify the very words merely, but he must justify them in the sense alleged in the declaration. This applies to a notice, as well as to a plea. Id.

33. Where the plaintiff gives a definition of the words in the innuendo, he is bound by the definition given, even though he may thereby limit the meaning as expressed in the colloquium. Kimmis v. Stiles, 44 Vt. 351.

34. In an action for spoken slander, the true rule to be gathered from all the cases is, that the substance of the alleged charge must be proved in substantially the same words as laid in the declaration; that any variation in the form of expression merely is not material; but the words alleged cannot be proved by showing that the defendant expressed the same meaning but in different words. Smith v. Hollister, 82 Vt. 695. 8 Vt. 482. 15 Vt. 249.

35. A deputy sheriff having private charge of a justice jury, acts therein under his special appointment and oath for that particular service, and not in virtue of his general office, the statute devolving that duty primarily upon the town constable. Hence, in an action of slander for charging him with misconduct on such occasion, in his capacity or office as deputy sheriff;—Held, that there was a fatal variance. Hoarford v. Allen, 1 Vt. 50.

36. The declaration averred that the defendant charged the plaintiff with the commission of a certain crime. The evidence was that the defendant said he supposed the plaintiff was guilty, &c. Held to be a variance. Dickey v. Andros, 32 Vt. 55.

37. In slander for words charging the plaintiff with perjury, if the defendant pleads in justification the truth of the charge, he must, in order to sustain his plea, establish it by proof sufficient to sustain an indictment for perjury. Durinella v. Aikin, 2 Tyl. 75.

38. It is no justification in this action, that the defendant, after speaking the words and before suit, disclosed to the plaintiff the author of the slander. The name of the author must be disclosed with the words, and at the time when they were spoken; nor can one safely repeat them as coming from another, unless he does this in good faith, that is, believes them to be true. Skinner v. Grant, 12 Vt. 456.

39. Where a count in slander contains words actionable, coupled with others not actionable, but spoken at the same time, the latter shall be considered as merely in aggravation, and the finding of entire damages on the whole count will be good. Chipman v. Cook, 2 Tyl. 456.

40. In an action of slander for charging the plaintiff with having stolen the defendant's sheep, the defendant, to mitigate the damages, put in evidence the record of a judgment in his favor in an action of trespass by the plaintiff for taking away the same sheep. Held, that the plaintiff might thereupon, for the purpose of showing malice and enhancing the damages, give any legal evidence, whether circumstantial or not, that the defendant knew the sheep were not his, and had good reason to believe they belonged to the plaintiff, and knew his charges were false. Bullock v. Cloyes, 4 Vt. 304.

41. The defendant should be held to have used the words spoken in such sense as he expected the hearers to understand them, and as they did fairly understand them. Thus where the words charged theft of an article which, in fact, had been loaned or sold to the plaintiff, but of which loan or sale the hearers of the words had no knowledge;—Held, that this fact could not be used as showing that the charge was of an impossible offense, or not seriously made; and that it was not admissible in mitigation of damages, unless as tending to prove a quarrel between the parties, and that the words were spoken in heat of passion, or under excitement. Smith v. Miles, 15 Vt. 245.

42. Damages. Where the words are actionable per se, evidence of the effect of the slander upon the plaintiff, to the extent of the direct and natural consequences of the defamatory words spoken, is admissible. Nott v. Stoddard, 38 Vt. 25.

43. Evidence is admissible, on the question of damages, that rumors and reports were abroad after the publication of the slander, that the defendant had made the charges stated in the declaration, as showing the extent of the necessary consequences of his wrongful act. Id. 44 Vt. 144.

44. Held, that in this action charges of a character similar to, but other than, those set out in the declaration, may be proved, not as a substantive ground of recovery, but as tending to show malice. Cavanaugh v. Austin, 42 Vt. 576.

45. Mitigation. Common report is never a sufficient justification for publishing slanderous matter, but may be received in mitigation of damages. The effect, as to justification, of giving the name of the informant at the time of speaking the slanderous words, or the name and very words of the author of a libel repeated,—discussed. Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 353, 412.

46. In this action, the defendant may prove under the general issue, in mitigation of damages, the general bad character of the plaintiff in respect to the offense imputed, but not particular instances of misconduct, nor particular rumors—as, where the words spoken imputed perjury, that the general character of the plaintiff, in respect to being a perjured man, was bad; that his general character was that of a dangerous witness and his statements under oath as a witness not to be relied upon. Bowen v. Hall, 20 Vt. 232. Bowditch v. Peckham, 1 D. Chip. 145.

47. So, where the words spoken imputed the charge of adultery;—that the plaintiff, before the speaking of the words, was commonly reputed to be an unchaste and licentious man. Bridgman v. Hopkins, 34 Vt. 532.

48. And this may be done, although, in addition to the general issue, there be a plea justifying the truth of the words. Bowen v. Hall, 20 Vt. 232.

49. The defendant may, under the general issue without notice, in order to rebut the presumption of malice and in mitigation of damages, give proof of such facts and circumstances as show that he had reason to believe and did believe, when he spoke the words, that they were true, although such evidence may tend to prove the truth of the words. He cannot, in such case, under pretence of mitigating the damages, go into evidence that really proves the charge to be true, but must concede that his evidence does not support it. Hutchinson v. Wheeler, 35 Vt. 330.

50. In an action for slanderous words charging that the plaintiff was a thief, judgment was given for the plaintiff on demurrer to the declaration. On trial for the assessment of damages, the court excluded evidence offered by the defendant to show (1), that he, in speaking the words, had reference to a transaction which did not amount to larceny, but not offering to show that those who heard the words so understood or could have so understood them; and (2), evidence of previous difficulties between the parties, and the state of feeling between them. Held correct. Sabin v. Angell, 40 Vt. 740.

51. Conduct of defendant. In an action for slander, certain witnesses for the plaintiff, residing in another State, testified to the speaking of the words alleged. The plaintiff was then allowed to prove by the same witnesses, that the defendant had endeavored by solicitations, money and threats, to induce them to decline attending court, or testifying against him. Held, that such evidence was admissible, not to prove malice, but as tending to show the defendant's knowledge that the truth would operate against him, and to confirm the witnesses as to the facts testified to by them. Kirkaldie v. Paige, 17 Vt. 256. Hebard, J., dissenting. (Law Rep. 5, Q. B. 314.) Note.—It is stated in brief of counsel (p. 259) that this testimony was introduced after an attempt to impeach those witnesses.

52. Arrest of judgment. Judgment was arrested for a mistaken use of the pronoun he for I, in setting out, in the declaration, the words spoken. Bowditch v. Peckham, 1 D. Chip. 144.

53. In an action for slander, the innuendoes, “meaning to insinuate and falsely represent”—“meaning to insinuate and be understood”—or, “meaning and intending to represent,” “that the plaintiff had stolen the money aforesaid,” are tantamount to a direct charge of larceny, and are sufficient on motion in arrest. Hoyt v. Smith, 32 Vt. 304.

54. A declaration in slander for words charging perjury was held good on motion in arrest, although the judicial proceeding was referred to in the colloquium argumentatively and by way of recital; and although the fact that the plaintiff was sworn was only inferable from the averment that the words were uttered concerning the plaintiff and “his testimony given as a witness on that trial.” Case v. Anderson, 33 Vt. 182.

55. In an action for slander, after a colloquium that the plaintiff had testified as a witness on a certain trial, the words charged were: “You are a liar and I can prove it. You swore to a lie, and I can prove it,” “meaning thereby that the plaintiff swore in said court falsely.” Held, on motion in arrest, that these words were not actionable per se, and that the innuendo was fatally defective in not alleging that the defendant intended by the words to impute the crime of perjury. Kimmis v. Stiles, 44 Vt. 351.

56. In slander for words alleged to impute adultery, judgment was arrested for want of sufficient averments in the declaration, that the party or parties to the transaction were married to other parties at the time of the supposed offense. Merritt v. Dearth, 48 Vt. 65.

II. WRITTEN, OR LIBEL.

57. In an action for libel, parol proof of contents is admissible in case of loss of the libelous paper. Gates v. Bowker, 18 Vt. 23.

58. Under a declaration for libel, "in the words following, to wit,"—the precise words must be proved. A variance herein was allowed to be amended. Harris v. Lawrence, 1 Tyl. 156. Olin v. Chipman, Ib. 167. 2 Tyl. 148.

59. An action for libel lies against two, if the offense be a joint act done by both. Harris v. Huntington, 2 Tyl. 129.

60. An action for a libel is an action for "slandrous words," in the meaning of the statute restricting costs in actions therefor. Harris v. Lawrence, 1 Tyl. 164. Parsons v. Young, 2 Vt. 434.

61. No action lies for libel upon a petition for redress of grievances, whether the subject matter of the petition be true or false, simply on its being preferred to the legislature, or disclosed to any of its members. Harris v. Huntington, 2 Tyl. 129.

62. It is a libel to publish of the plaintiff that he had, for the purpose of injuring the defendant, put in circulation a false report that the defendant had abused his family in a scandalous manner, by placing his grown daughter upon a rail a la cavalier, &c. Distinction taken between spoken and written slander. Colbey v. Reynolds, 6 Vt. 489.

63. In an action for libel, the defendant may plead to a part, definitely pointing it out; but if he attempts to recite the writing wholly, or in part, in hæc verba, and there is the omission, or substitution, or addition of a single word, there is a variance, and the plea is ill. Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 353.

64. In an action for libel, a plea averring in general that the matters set forth in the publication are true, is ill. The particular facts relied upon as constituting the charge must be set forth specifically, that the court may judge whether the facts warrant the charge made. Ib.

65. A plea justifying the words as true, must aver the truth of the "very charge;" and it is not sufficient to plead and prove the plaintiff guilty of a similar offense, or even of one more flagrant. Ib. 408.

66. It must put in issue the very fact which his words charge. Holton v. Muzzy, 30 Vt. 376.

67. In an action for libel, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and gave notice of special matter in justification. Held, that where the publication contains a direct and specific libelous charge, and the truth of the charge is relied upon in defense, the defendant is limited and confined in his proof to that very issue; and the matter of justification, to be of any avail or admissible in evidence, must answer substantially, if not exactly, the substance of the libel declared upon, in the sense of the prefatory averments and innuendoes of the declaration. Gregory v. Atkins, 42 Vt. 287.

68. In such case, where the plaintiff does not claim to recover under so broad a construction of the libel as the evidence offered in justification implies, but only for charges of particular acts of misconduct, or acts of misconduct of the character charged in the publication, evidence of acts outside such specific charges should be excluded. Ib.

69. In an action for libel, the court charged the jury that the publication "was clearly a libel, if published in the sense charged in the declaration." Held to be correct; and that where there is no ambiguity in the language, as in a case where there is an unequivocal charge accusing one of an infamous crime, or of conduct calculated to bring him into disgrace, and which is injurious and affects him in his situation and station, whether libelous or not, is a question of law. The facts being ascertained, the legal quality of the publication is for the court. Ib.

70. Where the language is susceptible of a double meaning, one innocent and harmless, the other libelous and injurious, the sense is always for the jury to find, as well as to find whether the innuendoes of the declaration, explanatory of the meaning, are justified by the words; and it is in this view that the question, whether a libel or not, is for the jury. Ib.

71. The defendant wrote and published concerning the plaintiff a libelous letter, commencing, "I have been told," &c. The defendant offered evidence that he had been requested by his correspondent to find out certain facts about the plaintiff and to write the result of his inquiries in that respect; and that, according to such request, he made such inquiries previous to writing the letter. The court, against objection, admitted the evidence as bearing upon the point of the motive and intention, or alleged malice, with which the defendant wrote and sent the letter. Held, that this was error; (1), that the evidence did not go to the point that the matters stated in the letter were ascertained on such inquiry; (2), that the letter did not give the name of the author of the report; (3), that the request did not call for or justify any such response—the libel carrying on its face conclusive evidence of the most virulent malice. Bond v. Kendall, 36 Vt. 741.

72. Indictment. In an indictment for libel, the substance of the publication set forth was, that E attended a political convention while his wife lay dead in his house—with reflections and comments, based upon this supposed fact, which if false were libelous; but it was not alleged in the indictment that any political convention was held on the day stated, or while Mrs. E lay dead at home. Held, on demurrer, that the indictment, for want of such prefatory averment, was insufficient, and was not aided by an innuendo ("meaning that the said E was attending a political convention all day.") State v. Atkins, 42 Vt. 252.

SLAVE.

No inhabitant of this State can hold a person as a slave therein. A bill of sale of a slave executed in another State, though binding there, ceases to operate here when the master becomes an inhabitant of this State. Selectmen v. Jacob, 2 Tyl. 192. (1802.)

SMALL-POX.

1. The selectmen of a town whose inhabitants are exposed to the spreading of small-pox, may, under the statute of 1797 (Slade's Stat. 498), for the purpose of preventing the spreading of the disease, procure the inoculation for kine-pox of those exposed, and a town tax assessed to defray the expenses therefor is valid. Haesen v. Strong, 2 Vt. 427.

2. A town which provides physicians, &c., for one infected with small-pox, may, under G. S. c. 99, s. 3, maintain an action for the expenses directly against the town where such person has a settlement, in case that person is not of sufficient ability to pay; notwithstanding he is a minor, and has a father bound to support him, who is of ability to pay. Brattleboro v. Stratton, 24 Vt. 306.

3. Certain duties are imposed and certain powers conferred on selectmen, but none on the town, as such, under the small-pox act (G. S. c. 99); and the town is not liable for the acts or default of its selectmen in that behalf. White v. Marshfield, 48 Vt. 20; and see State v. Burlington, 36 Vt. 521.

SOLDIER'S BOUNTY.

1. Statute. Independent of any special statute, towns have no authority to vote bounties to soldiers. No such statute authorizes the voting of bounties to drafted men, who commuted. Davis v. Putney, 43 Vt. 582. Whitney v. Athens. Id. 584.

2. G. S. c. 15, s. 95, does not authorize towns to vote money to be paid to soldiers from such towns in the U. S. army. The stat. of 1862 (G. S. 118, s. 1), embraced only volunteers. The authority to vote money to drafted men was first given by stat. of 1868, No. 2. Burnham v. Chelsea, 43 Vt. 69.

3. Constitutional. The act of 1862 (G. S. 118), authorizing towns to vote money to such soldiers as had before volunteered from such town, is constitutional; and the town, under a vote of that purport, is liable to such volunteer who has been applied upon the quota of the town, as upon a promise based upon the consideration of past services. Butler v. Putney, 43 Vt. 481.

4. The act of 1863, No. 2, authorizing towns to vote money to drafted men who had gone personally into service from such town, or had furnished an accepted substitute, is constitutional. Laughton v. Putney, 43 Vt. 485.

5. Consideration. Such service by a drafted man, going in reduction of the town quota, is a sufficient consideration to sustain the promise to pay a bounty therefor expressed in a subsequent vote of the town. Swift v. Elmore, 44 Vt. 87.

6. The same law applied to the case of a drafted man, who had procured a substitute at considerable expense. Rosebrooks v. Guildhall, Id. 90.

7. Muster in. An enlistment of a soldier is not perfected by signing an enlistment contract, but by being accepted and mustered into the service; and when the question is who first enlisted, the date is to be reckoned from the mustering in. Steinberg v. Eden, 41 Vt. 187. Hill v. Eden, 41 Vt. 195. Jackman v. New Haven, 42 Vt. 591.

8. Adjutant-General's office. The plaintiff re-enlisted in the field as a soldier Dec. 15, and was mustered in Dec. 16. Dec. 17, the defendant town voted to pay a bounty to each volunteer to fill a certain quota. Dec. 20, the plaintiff, having heard of this vote, procured his enlistment to be put to the credit of the town on said quota, and notice thereof was given to the Adjutant General of the State before such quota was filled. The town, having received no notice of the enlistment, filled its quota otherwise. Held, that the plaintiff could recover the bounty voted. Gale v. Jamaica, 39 Vt. 610.

9. The books and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the State, and not the date of the muster-in, control as to who apply on the quota of a town under a given call, so as to entitle them to a bounty under the vote of the town to pay a bounty to those who should enlist and be credited to the town on its quota, under such call. Bucklin v. Sudbury, 43 Vt. 700. Spalding v. Waitsfield, 45 Vt. 20. Moore v. Warren, 45 Vt. 199.

10. Where the vote of a town offered a bounty to such persons as should enlist before a day named "and be accepted on the quota of the town" under a particular call;—Held (overruling Jackman v. New Haven, 42 Vt. 591), that without actual acceptance and application on that quota in the office of the Adjutant-General of the State, the plaintiff, though applied on a subsequent quota, could not recover the bounty. Bucklin v. Sudbury. Peck, J., dissenting.

11. Express undertaking. No case has yet gone so far as professedly to hold, that anything short of an express undertaking will make a town legally bound to pay a bounty to a soldier. Barrett, J., in Davis v. St. Albans, 42 Vt. 590.

12. An unauthorized promise of the selectmen that the town would pay a soldier such bounty as the town should pay others on future calls, if he would let his name remain to the credit of the town, does not bind the town, though the town did pay bounties to others on future calls, and though the soldier, relying upon this promise, allowed his name to remain to the credit of the town, and he applied on the town's quota on future calls, and served through the war. Wrisley v. Waterbury, 42 Vt. 228.

13. Past service. The vote of a town to pay a soldier a bounty in consideration of a past enlistment and application upon the town's quota, is binding, and its legal effect cannot be defeated by a subsequent rescission of the vote. Seymour v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 171.

14. Where a soldier, without request of a town, enlisted to its credit and applied upon its quota, and the town afterwards voted to pay a bounty to a class which embraced such soldier;—Held, that the service rendered by giving the town such credit was a sufficient consideration to make the promise contained in the vote a binding contract. Cox v. Mount Tabor, 41 Vt. 28.

15. Rescission of vote. Held, also, that the town could not by a subsequent vote rescind such contract. Ib. Haven v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 418. 40 Vt. 171.

16. A soldier had enlisted under the selectmen of a town, duly authorized recruiting agents, and had been mustered into service and applied to the town's assigned quota, upon the promise of a bounty for which the selectmen had given him a town order. Under a vote of the town to pay volunteers "gone into the service of the U. S.," &c.;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover. Pottle v. Maidstone, 39 Vt. 70.

17. The plaintiff re-enlisted in the field and had himself credited to the defendant town, relying upon the assurance of an authorized recruiting agent of the town, that he would receive such pay as the town paid other soldiers. The town afterwards voted to pay each re-enlisted veteran $500, &c. Held, that the plaintiff could recover according to the vote. Haven v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 418. (Stiles v. Danville, 42 Vt. 282.)

18. The vote. Under the vote of a town offering a bounty to such as should "enlist" before a certain date;—Held, that this embraced the case of one who had already enlisted before the passage of the vote under an expectation of receiving such bounty as the town should pay, and who was afterwards mustered into service to the credit of the town on its quota before the date fixed, he then having the right of determining to what town he should be credited; that his "enlistment," in the sense and spirit of the vote, became complete by the muster-in, and credit to the town's quota. Johnson v. Newfane, 40 Vt. 9.

19. The language of the town vote was "to pay to each re-enlisted veteran who has re-enlisted for three years $500 * * excepting commissioned officers, and those who have died leaving no families, and deserters." The plaintiff, being within the terms of the vote, after demand of the bounty and refusal and during his term of service, brought his action which came on for trial after he had served out his full term. Held, that his right of action was perfect when the suit was brought, and his right to recover perfect at the time of trial, and that he could recover. Haven v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 418.

20. General offer. A soldier, by complying with all the terms and conditions of a town vote constituting a general offer of a bounty to enlisting soldiers, may recover the bounty offered, although he did not enlist in reliance upon the vote, nor was influenced by it to enlist. Davis v. Landgrove, 43 Vt. 442. Butler v. Putney, Ib. 481. Hill v. Eden, 41 Vt. 195. Jackman v. New Haven, 42 Vt. 591.

21. Under an open offer by vote of a town to pay bounties to those who should enlist and be mustered into service to fill a particular quota, they who first comply with the terms of the vote, in number sufficient to fill the quota, exhaust the offer. The true date of the muster, and not the date of the muster-roll [which was dated back], was held to govern, under the vote. Hunkins v. Johnson, 45 Vt. 131.

22. A vote of a town to pay a specified bounty to each person who should enlist as a soldier to fill the town's quota, is a general and direct offer from the town to such person as should so enlist, and becomes a binding contract by such enlistment and muster into service, and no contract with or assent of the selectmen is necessary. Jackman v. New Haven, 42 Vt. 591. Gale v. Jamaica, 39 Vt. 610. Steinberg v. Eden, 41 Vt. 187. Hill v. Eden, 41 Vt. 195.

23. Nor will his claim be affected by the neglect of the Adjutant-General, or of the federal authorities, to set down his enlistment to the credit of the town in its proper order, or to give the town notice; nor by the mere omission of the soldier to notify the town of his enlistment. Steinberg v. Eden, Hill v. Eden. Jackman v. New Haven. But see Bucklin v. Sudbury, 43 Vt. 700.

24. The warning for a town meeting was: "To see whether the town will vote bounties to supply the quota of said town under the recent call, * * for 300,000 men to serve in the war. In case the town shall vote to pay such bounties, to raise and provide means for the same." The vote was: "That the selectmen be instructed to borrow a sum not exceeding $3,000 for the purpose of paying $300 each to volunteers that may hereafter enlist for the war under the recent call, * * payment to be made such enlisted men when mustered into the service of the United States." Held, (1), that there was no such difference between the warning and the vote, as to render the vote inoperative; (2), that the only discretion left to the selectmen was, as to the amount of money they should borrow; (3), that the vote was such a general offer as the soldier might comply with, and thereby entitle himself to the benefit of its provisions, either with or without the intervention of a contract with the selectmen. Mudgett v. Johnson, 43 Vt. 423. Hunkins v. Johnson, 45 Vt. 131.

25. Vote merely confirming authority to contract. The vote of a town, "to direct the selectmen to pay three men the sum of $300 each, as volunteer soldiers," to fill a given quota, was held not to be a general open offer, but to contemplate the personal participation of the selectmen in the procurement and designation of the men. Slack v. Craftsbury, 43 Vt. 657.

26. Under a town vote authorizing the selectmen to enlist men to be credited on the town's quota, and to pay such men enlisted a sum not exceeding $400;—Held, that to entitle an enlisted man to recover a bounty under this vote, he must show that the selectmen agreed to pay him a bounty. James v. Starksboro, 42 Vt. 602. Hicks v. Lyndon, 42 Vt. 606. Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 303. Chase v. Middlesex, 43 Vt. 679. Poquet v. North Hero, 44 Vt. 91. 45 Vt. 275. Guyette v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 228.

27. A vote "that the selectmen be and are authorized to pay a bounty not exceeding $300 to each volunteer, &c.," is not an open and general offer, even though the selectmen had agreed among themselves to pay each volunteer $300; but requires the offer or promise of the selectmen to the volunteer, in order to the making of a contract, though the volunteer may have enlisted relying upon getting the $300. Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 303. 46 Vt. 228.

28. The vote of a town to pay each volunteer soldier a bounty "not exceeding $500," does not constitute an open offer, but requires some negotiation with the town officers to perfect the contract by fixing the sum. Blodgett v. Springfield, 43 Vt. 626.

29. Under a warning "to see if the town will authorize their selectmen to pay a bounty to volunteers to fill the quota of the town," a vote to instruct the selectmen "to pay $325 for each volunteer to fill our quota," was held to refer only to the then present call of the government for volunteers; and that the plaintiff to recover the bounty must show a contract with the town, assented to by at least two of the selectmen. Scott v. Cabot, 44 Vt. 167. See Eddy v. Landgrove, 44 Vt. 465.

30. It was voted in town meeting, that a bounty be paid to each soldier who had re-enlisted to the credit of the town, or to such of his representatives, in case of his decease without family, as the selectmen in their discretion should deem most just and equitable. Held, that the administrator of the estate of a deceased soldier, so enlisting, must show, in order to recover the bounty, that the selectmen had exercised their discretion and determined that the bounty should be paid to such administrator. Collins v. Burlington, 44 Vt. 16.

31. Concluding the contract. The defendant town authorized its selectmen to offer a bounty of $225, to each volunteer to fill its quota under a certain call. Afterwards, the orderly sergeant of the plaintiff's company in the field, in behalf of another member of the same company, wrote to R, one of the defendant's selectmen, inquiring what bounty the town would pay for volunteers, and R replied that the town would pay $250. The plaintiff heard R's letter read in presence of his company, and, relying upon the statement thereof, and expecting to receive the bounty, re-enlisted to the credit of the defendant, reserving the right, as re-enlisted men had the privilege to do, of changing his credit, before muster, to any other town. Before muster, the plaintiff hearing that the town of S was paying a larger bounty, directed the proper officer to change his credit to S; but this was never done, and the plaintiff served to the close of the war, supposing he was credited to S. The plaintiff gave the defendant no notice of his enlistment to its credit until after his discharge; but the defendant had the benefit of his credit. Held, (1), that these facts tended to prove a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant; (2), that the plaintiff's attempt to get his credit changed, not perfected, did not prejudice his right of recovery; (3), that the fact stated in the exceptions, that "the defendant received the benefit of the plaintiff's credit," tended to prove that he applied upon the quota named in the vote, in the absence of evidence that he applied on any other quota, or that the town had another quota; (4), that earlier notice of the plaintiff's enlistment was not material, since it did not appear that the town suffered any detriment by the delay. Chandler v. Bristol, 45 Vt. 880.

32. S and R, two of the three selectmen of the defendant town, went together to the plaintiff to procure him to enlist to apply on the town's quota. S was permitted by R to negotiate with the plaintiff in behalf of the town for the board of selectmen, and the contract was made between the plaintiff and S. Held, that R must be taken to have approved the hiring, and the price agreed to be paid by S; and that the town, having availed itself of the credit of the plaintiff in pursuance of the contract, and the contract having been performed on his part, could not repudiate the stipulation as to price, because it was larger than R and the third selectman understood it to be. Earle v. Wallingford, 44 Vt. 867.

33. The selectmen were authorized by town vote to hire men to fill the quota of the town, at the best advantage; and they made contracts for this purpose separately. M, one of the selectmen, contracted with the plaintiff to pay him for his enlistment $500 and as much more as the town should pay any other recruit. The town did afterwards pay some others $700. Before such contract, the selectmen agreed together that they would pay only $500 to any recruit; but the plaintiff had no knowledge of this. M and one other of the selectmen afterwards were present and acted officially and took part in the plaintiff's muster into service, such other selectman supposing the contract was for only $500. Held, that such other selectman must be taken to have known what he ought to have known, and what M knew, and what the plaintiff had good reason to suppose was known to both; and that the official participation of the two selectmen in mustering the plaintiff into the service was, under the circumstances, a ratification of the contract. Tarbell v. Plymouth, 39 Vt. 429.

34. Where the selectmen of the defendant town, having authority from the town, requested the plaintiff, then in the field, to re-enlist to the credit of the town, and offered him a certain bounty therefor, and he did so, relying upon such promise, and gave the town notice thereof in reasonable time, and continued in the service;—Held, that he was entitled to recover such bounty, although, but without his fault, he was not mustered into service under such re-enlistment for two or three months thereafter, and in the meantime the town had filled its quota otherwise. Mann v. Fairlee, 44 Vt. 672.

35. Where a town put its defense to an action to recover a soldier's bounty on the ground of a fraudulent representation, or concealment of a physical defect which occasioned the discharge of the soldier before service, but after he had been mustered in and applied on the town's quota, the court charged, that for the defense to prevail, the jury must be satisfied that the plaintiff knew something material about his health or soundness which he misrepresented or concealed, for the purpose of inducing the town to enlist him. Held correct; but semble, if the defense had been put on the ground of an express warranty, such charge as to the scienter might have been erroneous. Richardson v. Concord, 40 Vt. 207.

36. The right of a soldier to recover a town bounty, where his case falls within the terms of the vote, is not affected by the fact that others, standing in the same position with himself, are mustered in at the same time to the credit of the town, more than enough to fill the quota. Kittredge v. Walden, 40 Vt. 211.

37. Desertion. The desertion of a substitute, after his enlistment and muster into the United States service, is not a bar to an action for a town bounty offered in favor of the party furnishing the substitute. Rogers v. Shelburn, 42 Vt. 550.

38. Nor does such desertion of a volunteer bar his action against a town for the bounty offered. His contract with the town was, not that he would perform three years' service as a soldier, but that he would enter into a contract with the United States so to do, and be mustered into service under that contract to the credit of the town; and the town gets the benefit it is to receive, by his application on its quota, and has no more interest in the fact of his desertion than in the desertion of any other soldier in the service. Bingham v. Springfield, 41 Vt. 82. (Altered by Stat. 1864, p. 26, a. 8.)

39. A town voted to pay a bounty to such veteran soldiers as had re-enlisted to the credit of the town, and had not been paid a bounty, excepting such as had deserted. The plaintiff had so re-enlisted and deserted before the passage of the vote, but afterwards returned under the President's proclamation of pardon and served to the close of the war and was honorably discharged. Held, that he could not recover under the vote. Barnes v. Rutland, 42 Vt. 622.

40. The plaintiff was duly drafted as a soldier and was notified thereof, and when and where to appear in response thereto. He purposely neglected to report on the day ordered, and on the evening of that day was arrested, and the next morning was taken to the provost marshal's office, was examined and accepted as a soldier and was put to the credit of the defendant town. He was then committed to prison and kept ten days, and then was sent forward to the draft rendezvous and thence to the front, but under charges for desertion, in accordance with the regulations of the War Department in cases of such neglect to report. These made him liable to punishment under the acts of Congress, which provided that any drafted man who should fail to report after due notice shall be "deemed a deserter." No further proceedings were had upon the charges and the plaintiff served until the war closed, and was then mustered out. Stat. 1864, No. 6, s. 3, provides, that "no action shall be had or sustained against any town by a soldier, for such bounty or pay, where said soldier has deserted the service." In an action to recover a bounty duly voted by the defendant town to drafted men;—Held, by a majority of the court, that the plaintiff could not recover; and that common law courts have jurisdiction of this question of desertion, when raised in defense to such a suit. (Case distinguished from Hulen v. Reilly, 53 Penn. 112.) Harvey v. Peacham, 42 Vt. 287.

41. The plaintiff enlisted for the town of G and became entitled to a bounty of $800 when mustered in. Induced by the offer of $600 paid him by the town of L, he deserted G and, with the fraudulent connivance of the agents of L, got himself mustered in to the credit of L upon its quota; but the mustering-in officer, on the application of the agents of G, withdrew his credit from L and set it to G, and he was compelled to serve out his time. Held, that having performed his contract with G, though by compulsion, the plaintiff could recover the bounty promised by G. Bonnett v. Guildhall, 38 Vt. 232.

42. Infant. A minor having enlisted into the military service of the government with the consent of his father, is entitled, as against his father, to receive and control such compensation as he is entitled to from the government, or otherwise, under his enlistment contract, as also the town bounty paid by the town as an inducement to enter into the enlistment contract, and to be credited to the quota of the town. Baker v. Baker, 41 Vt. 55.

43. This consent to the enlistment is a virtual emancipation or discharge of the minor from all obligations of service or obedience to the father, so long, at least, as the enlistment contract exists. Id. Stiles v. Danville, 42 Vt. 282.

44. Construction of vote. The vote of a town "to pay the veteran soldiers" a bounty, without further specification of what veteran soldiers, was interpreted to apply to those veterans whose service stood to the credit of that town. Cox v. Mount Tabor, 41 Vt. 28.

45. The plaintiff on enlistment was induced to set his name to the credit of the defendant town, upon the promise of the selectmen that the town would pay him as much bounty as it should vote to others. The town afterwards voted to pay $800 to each of eleven men to fill the deficiency of its quota. Held, that the vote excluded the plaintiff, and he could not recover. Hartwell v. Newark, 41 Vt. 337.

46. The warning of a town meeting was "to see what action the town will take in regard to the expected draft soon to be made," &c., and "to see whether the town will vote to pay bounties to volunteers; if so, what bounties." At an adjourned meeting under this warning, the town voted, "to pay each man liable to draft who has furnished a substitute," &c., "$600." Held (by a majority), that the warning was sufficient to authorize the vote. Hickok v. Shelburn, 41 Vt. 409. Rogers v. Shelburn, 42 Vt. 550.

47. A man liable to draft furnished and paid a substitute who was enlisted and mustered into service to the credit of the defendant town upon the request of the agents of the town and their assurance that the town "would do what was right about it." The town subsequently voted to pay each man liable to draft who had furnished a substitute $600. In an action to recover the bounty, held (by a majority), that under Stat. 1862, No. 88, such vote was authorized;—and held, that a recovery could be had under the common count in assumpsit for money paid to the use of the town. Id.

48. Construction of town votes in soldier's bounty case. Wood v. Springfield, 43 Vt. 617.

49. A town having 16 men assessed as its quota of the then last call, under a warning, "(3d.) to see if the town will raise money to pay bounties to soldiers who may enlist to fill our quota on said call, and how much"; "(4th.) to see if the town will vote and pay bounties to re-enlisted soldiers who have not been paid bounties,"—voted, under the 3d article, to pay each volunteer a sum named "as town bounty, when mustered into the service of the United States, to the amount of the quota of the town" under that call; and, "voted to pass over the 4th article of the warning." The plaintiff had before this re-enlisted in the field to the credit of the town, and was one of a surplus of five men furnished by the town who had been applied to no quota, but stood as credits in reduction of the present quota, reducing it to 11 men, which the town knew. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover a bounty under the votes; that the quota referred to in the 3d vote meant such reduced quota, and did not embrace the plaintiff; that his case fell within the 4th article of the warning, and that the vote "to pass over" that article, was equivalent to a vote to dismiss it, or to reject the proposition; and that a promise by one of the selectmen, who was recruiting officer, to pay such bounty, never being voted, did not bind the town. Livingston v. Albany, 40 Vt. 666.

50. A town having a quota to fill, passed a vote to pay a specified bounty to each volunteer who should enlist on that quota. The plaintiff, being then in service, re-enlisted and was mustered in before said quota was filled, but no notice of such enlistment was given or received by the town until after said quota was ordered to be filled, and was filled by the town and the bounties paid as voted. The plaintiff was in fact applied upon a subsequent quota of the town, for which the town had not voted a bounty. Upon these facts alone, held, that the plaintiff could not recover the bounty voted. Witherell v. Fletcher, 42 Vt. 409.

51. A soldier who had been discharged and afterwards re-enlisted, cannot claim a bounty under a town vote afterwards passed to pay a bounty to veterans "re-enlisted in the field." Sargent v. Ludlow, 42 Vt. 726.

52. A vote "to raise $325 on the grand list for each volunteer to fill the quota of the town under the last call, &c," construed not to apply to a deficiency under former calls. Hatch v. Fairfield, 43 Vt. 321.

53. A vote "to raise $1000 for each white volunteer to fill the quota of the town under the call, &c., of July 18, 1864," construed to apply only to such as should thereafter enlist to complete the quota, which was, and was known to be, partly filled by previous enlistments. Ib.

54. A town voted "to instruct the selectmen to pay each enlisted man $200 when he shall be mustered into the service of the United States, up to the number of 18." The plaintiff was one of the first of the 18 mustered into service and applied on the town's quota. Held, that he was entitled to recover the $200—although he enlisted without expectation of the bounty and without the procurement of the selectmen; and although the selectmen had contracted with 18 others for their enlistment; and although the town subsequent to the plaintiff's enlistment instructed the selectmen not to pay a class of which the plaintiff was one; and although the selectmen notified the plaintiff before he was mustered in, that they would not pay him. Chase v. Middlesex, 43 Vt. 679.

55. Where the application for a town meeting was, "to see what course the town will take to fill the quota of men required of the town of Waterbury under the last two calls of the general government for soldiers;" and the warning, reciting the terms of this call, was, "to see if the town will pay any additional bounty to volunteers from said town, and, if any, how much, or what action they will take upon the subject;" and the vote was, "to pay each volunteer from this town a bounty of $300, when mustered into the United States service";—Held, that this bounty was confined to such as should enlist under the call or calls made before the date of that vote. Wrisley v. Water- bury, 42 Vt. 228. Jones v. Waterbury, 44 Vt. 113.

56. The defendant town voted to pay a bounty of $300 to each man who should enlist into the old regiments, to fill the town's quota under a given call. The plaintiff enlisted into a new regiment, but was actually applied on the quota named in the vote. Held, that this was not a compliance with the conditions expressed, and that the plaintiff could not recover the bounty. Carley v. Highgate, 45 Vt. 273.

57. The warning of a town meeting was: "To see if the town will raise a sum of money to encourage enlistments in said town." The vote was: "That the sum of $300 be paid to each of such volunteers as may be enlisted and mustered into service under the call of the President for 300,000 men, Oct. 17, 1863, provided the quota is not filled; and in case the quota is filled, then the further sum of $200, to the number of 29 men." The plaintiff re-enlisted in the field to the credit of the town, Dec. 16, 1863, and was mustered in the same day, but without knowledge of such vote, and not acting upon the faith of it. His muster roll was not received at the Adjutant-General's office till between Jan. 17 and 21, 1864. On and before Dec. 25, 1863, the selectmen had enlisted and caused to be mustered in the full quota of the town, and, until several weeks after and after the bounties had been paid, it was not known that the plaintiff had enlisted. The plaintiff was in fact one of the first twenty-two who enlisted after the passage of the vote and one of the first six who were mustered in. Held, (1), that the warning did not confine the enlistments to such as should be made within the territorial limits of the town; (2), that the plaintiff was not entitled to the $300 bounty voted. Davis v. Windsor, 46 Vt. 210.

58. Particular contracts. The plaintiff enlisted as a soldier for three years to the credit of the defendant town, for a bounty of $530, and the further agreement of the town to pay him as much more as they should pay for any other three years' man—the agent asserting that he should fill the quota only with three years' men. The agent afterwards filled the quota with one year men, and paid one of them $625. Held, that the plaintiff could recover this difference. Burbee v. Winhall, 41 Vt. 694.

59. Where a town had voted to pay recruits, when enlisted, $200, and the plaintiff enlisted upon the payment of the $200 and the further promise by the selectmen, that if the town should pay more than $200 bounty to any men under that call, they would pay all alike, and the town afterwards duly authorized the selectmen to enlist four other men required to fill its quota, and to use their discretion in paying them bounties, and the four men were enlisted and the selectmen paid three of them $400 each;—Held, that as the plaintiff knew of the extent of the authority of the selectmen, they did not make themselves personally liable to him for any increase of bounty in consequence of having transcended their authority from the town; but held, also, that the testimony tended to prove a personal undertaking on the part of the selectmen and should have been submitted to the jury. Leet v. Shedd, 42 Vt. 277.

60. A town that fills its quota, in good faith, is not bound to pay a bounty to others who may have enlisted and been mustered in at an earlier date, where the town had no notice of such enlistments, and they were not applied on the quota. This has been repeatedly adjudged. Atwood v. Lincoln, 44 Vt. 332. 46 Vt. 213.

61. Where the selectmen were authorized by vote of the town to procure volunteers and to pay certain bounties, one of them wrote a letter (not official) to a soldier in the field, informing him that the town was paying certain bounties to such as should re-enlist to its credit and be applied on its quota. The plaintiff on hearing this letter read in camp re-enlisted and was mustered to the credit of the town, he relying upon the information contained in the letter and expecting the bounty. He immediately gave notice to the selectmen of such re-enlistment and that he expected the bounty. Held, that these facts did not constitute a contract with the town, and that the plaintiff could not recover. Sanders v. Bolton, 47 Vt. 276.

Soldiers voting—see STATUTE, 20.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. Part performance—Statute of frauds. The ground for decreeing specific performance of a contract falling within the statute of frauds, where there has been part performance, is that of fraud; not that kind of fraud which consists merely in the non-performance of a promise, but something more (as illustrated). Meach v. Perry, 1 D. Chip. 182.

2. To a bill for a specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of lands, the defendant may avail himself of the statute of frauds, either by plea or demurrer, except in certain cases; as, where the bill alleges part performance, &c. Ib.

3. The objection to a bill for the specific performance of a parol contract, that it is within the statute of frauds, should be taken by plea, or in the answer; otherwise, it is waived. Adams v. Patrick, 30 Vt. 516. 46 Vt. 151.

4. Equity will not refuse to decree specific performance of a parol contract in part performed, and so work a forfeiture of the contract, because of some failure in the performance not incurred through gross negligence or bad faith, and where compensation in damages can be made to the defendant; but will provide in the decree for the satisfaction of such damages. Ib.

5. Discretion. A court of equity has a discretion in decreeing a specific performance of a contract, and will not do it where it will be useless and nugatory to the complainant to have it done. Ib.

6. Nor, where it is not in the power of the defendant to perform it; as, to convey a right which has already been conveyed to another. Conant v. Bellows Falls Canal Co., 29 Vt. 263.

7. Instance. The orator purchased land of the defendant by verbal contract, and paid him the price, upon the defendant's promise that he would execute a proper deed the next morning and leave it in the town clerk's office for record. The defendant surrendered possession, and, although the orator did not take actual possession, yet supposing that the deed had been executed and left as agreed, he sold and got pay for the land, and executed a warranty deed thereof to the purchaser. On a bill for a specific performance, the court decreed a conveyance by the defendant. Stark v. Wilder, 36 Vt. 752.

STATUTE.

- I. ENACTMENT.
- II. CONSTITUTIONALITY AND VALIDITY.
- III. CONSTRUCTION, OPERATION AND EFFECT.
- IV. REPEAL, AND EFFECT THEREOF.

I. ENACTMENT.

1. Old constitution. When the Governor and Council suspended the passage of a bill until the next session of the legislature, and at the next session it was passed without amendment;—Held, that it became a law without again sending it to the Governor and Council. Easterbrook v. Low, 2 Vt. 185.

2. Joint resolution. A joint resolution of the two houses of the General Assembly, but without the approval of the Governor, has not the character of a legal enactment. The Governor, under the constitution, is a co-ordinate branch of the government and a necessary party to all acts of legislation. Kellogg v. State Treasurer, 44 Vt. 356.

3. At what time a statute takes effect. A statute which takes effect from its passage goes into operation on the day on which it is approved; and this has relation to the first moment of that day. The statute repealing the U. S. bankrupt act of 1841 was approved March 8, 1848. Held, that a petition in bankruptcy filed on that day came too late and must be dismissed. In re Howes (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 619. In re Welman (U. S. D. C.), 20 Vt. 658.

4. How this must appear. The time when a statute, which is approved and signed by the executive, takes effect, must appear, and can properly appear only, from the statute itself. Id.

II. CONSTITUTIONALITY AND VALIDITY.

5. Valid. A statute purporting to legalize a defective proprietary division of the lands of a town, was held valid. Forbes v. Smith, 1 Tyl. 88.

6. A special statute authorizing, but not compelling, one of two administrators (the other being absent in the military service of the United States), to convey the lands of the estate to creditors in payment of debts at an appraisal, with a deduction of not exceeding 25 per cent., was held constitutional, and such deed valid. Langdon v. Strong, 2 Vt. 284.

7. Invalid — as assuming judicial powers. An act of the legislature directing that a particular deposition taken should be read in a certain cause, was held unconstitutional and void, as an attempt to exercise judicial powers; as retrospective; and rather in the nature of a legislative sentence, order, or decree, than a law. Dupy v. Wickwire, 1 D. Chip. 287. 2 Vt. 256.

8. — as taking away vested rights. The judgment of the commissioners of claims against an estate, not appealed from, is a final judgment which fixes the rights of the parties; and a special act of the legislature, allowing a further time for appeal after the expiration of the time limited by the general law, is unconstitutional and also, on general principles, void. Bates v. Kimball, 2 D. Chip. 77. Stanford v. Barry, 1 Aik. 314. 2 Aik. 294. 2 Vt. 257.

9. An act of the legislature authorizing the probate court, in a particular case, to renew a commission of claims after the time limited by the general law for such renewal, was held void—as not general in its operation; as retrospective in its effect; as taking away rights vested by the general law, and giving rights extinguished by the same general law. Brudford v. Brooks, 2 Aik. 284.

10. A statute allowing an appeal from the decisions of road commissioners, already made, was held unconstitutional and void as to those persons to whom damages and costs had been awarded. Williams, J., dissenting. Hill v. Sunderland, 3 Vt. 507. 19 Vt. 90.

11. A special act of the legislature discharging a debtor from imprisonment on execution, or freeing his body from arrest for a certain time, is not authorized by the constitution of this State. It does not partake of the character of a law, and, on the general principles of law, is void, and is no protection in an action for an escape. Ward v. Barnard, 1 Aik. 121. Keith v. Harrington, 2 Aik. 293. 2 Vt. 174. Lyman v. Mower, 2 Vt. 517. Kendall v. Dodge, 3 Vt. 360.

12. A private act of the legislature releasing a jail bond, where the condition was already broken, was held unconstitutional. Starr v. Robinson, 1 D. Chip. 257. 2 Vt. 257.

13. Retrospective, but affecting remedy only. The statute of 1830, authorizing the county courts to grant relief to persons imprisoned on executions for torts, applies to those in prison when the statute was enacted, and is constitutional. Sommers v. Johnson, 4 Vt. 278.

14. The statute of 1818 (G. S. c. 40, s. 14) applies to leases made before the passage of the statute; which only gives a new and more simple remedy for an existing right, and is constitutional. Maidstone v. Stevens, 7 Vt. 487.

15. The betterment acts, though retrospective, are not for this reason unconstitutional. Brown v. Storm, 4 Vt. 87.

16. Claim against State. A petitioner under the act of 1831 was held to have no claim against the State “legally, or in analogy to the principles of law, or according to the principles of justice and equity,” for money which he had been compelled to pay as surety for one in jail, who, having obtained a suspension act, departed from the liberties, though said act was afterwards adjudged unconstitutional. Davison v. State, 4 Vt. 235.

17. Statute impairing grant or contract. The legislature can pass no act impairing the rights or privileges of a corporation and opposed to the original grant, without its consent; as, that a turnpike corporation, previously chartered, shall allow a certain class of persons to pass toll free. Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aik. 264. 27 Vt. 152.

18. A grant of land by a State legislature, though made for the purpose of public instruction, is a contract which the State has no power to impair by subsequent legislation. Grammar School v. Burt, 11 Vt. 632.

19. Turnpike supervision. The act of 1806, authorizing the appointment of turnpike inspectors, and placing turnpike companies under their supervision to order repairs made, gates to be opened, &c., was held constitutional as applied to companies chartered before the passage of that act; and that the inspectors might order such repairs as were necessary at the time of the order, not going beyond the charter, without regard to the state of the road as first made and accepted by the authorities named in the charter. State v. Boe worth, 13 Vt. 402. 27 Vt. 152.

20. Soldiers' voting. The act of Nov. 11, 1863 (Laws of 1863, No. 5), providing for soldiers voting without the State, was held unconstitutional as respects the voting for governor, lieutenant-governor and treasurer; and that, under the State constitution, the right of voting for these officers can only be exercised within the State in the "freeman's meetings" to be held within the towns on the first Tuesday of September in each year; but that so much of the act as authorizes such voting for members of Congress, and electors of President and Vice-President, is not contrary to any provision of the constitution of this State, or of the United States. Opinions of the judges, 37 Vt. 665.

21. Right of trial by jury. Any statute which destroys or materially impairs the right of trial by jury according to the course of the common law, in cases proper for the cognizance of a jury, is unconstitutional. Held, that the act of 1856, No. 6, providing for a compulsory reference of actions, was for this cause unconstitutional. Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 288.

22. The denial of the right of trial by jury to the trustee of an absconding debtor, is not inconsistent with the constitution of this State, or of the United States. Huntington v. Bishop, 5 Vt. 186.

23. The tenth article of the State Bill of Rights has reference to that class of criminal offenses usually denominated high crimes, the punishment of which affects life, liberty and reputation, and exposes the offender to infamous corporal suffering, at the least, and has no application to those minor offenses which chiefly concern the regulation of the internal police of the State. Redfield, C. J., in State v. Conlin, 27 Vt. 318. In re Dougherty, 27 Vt. 325. State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 526. See infra, 24.

24. Article 10 of the Bill of Rights, which provides "that in all prosecutions for criminal offenses, a person hath a right to * * a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the country," applies to all prosecutions for crimes or misdemeanors, in the trial of which "the issue in fact is proper for the cognizance of a jury," according to Article 12. It applies to minor offenses, such as violations of the statute prohibiting the sale or manufacture of intoxicating drinks. [G. S. c. 94.] Dicta contra in State v. Conlin, &c., supra, disapproved. State v. Peterson, 41 Vt. 504.

25. The word "jury" as thus used in the constitution means a common law jury of twelve men. Id.

26. The provision of the charter of the city of Burlington, which professes to confer final jurisdiction upon the recorder's court to try and determine criminal cases within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to try and determine, without provision for a trial by such jury of twelve men, is unconstitutional. Id.

27. It is not a violation of the right of trial by jury under the constitution, to provide for a mode of trial without jury, or by a jury of less than twelve men, where an appeal is allowed to a court where a trial by a common law jury can be had. Id. Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 361.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

III. CONSTRUCTION, OPERATION, AND EFFECT.

28. Practical construction. The contemporaneous and long established practical construction of a statute may have the force of a judicial determination. Boyden v. Brookline, 8 Vt. 284.

29. Terms of former statute employed in new. Where terms or modes of expression are employed in a new statute which had acquired a definite meaning and application in a previous statute on the same subject, or one analogous to it, they are generally supposed to be used in the same sense; and in settling the construction of such new statute, regard should be had to the known and established interpretation of the old. Whitcomb v. Rood, 20 Vt. 49.

30. Terms of English statute. Where an English statute which has received a fixed and well-known construction, is adopted in this State, we take it with the construction which it had received; and this, upon the ground that such was the implied intention of the legislature. Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 258.

31. Words yielding to spirit. In construing a particular statute (G. S. c. 126, s. 52) the court say: "The necessity of the case compels us to include them [certain officers not named], at the expense of forcing the construction of the words of the act, in order to avoid so gross an absurdity as the literal interpretation would lead us into." Henry v. Tilson, 17 Vt. 479.

32. In construing statutes, the terms of a proviso may be limited by the general scope of the enacting clause. So done, where the proviso was in terms repugnant to the enacting clause. State Treasurer v. Clark, 19 Vt. 129.

33. Under those rules for the construction of statutes which look to the whole and every part of a statute and the apparent intention derived from the whole, to the subject matter, to the effects and consequences, and to the reason and spirit of the law, the court held themselves at liberty to, and did, disregard the letter of a statute, and attach to it that meaning which the legislature really intended, where the words of the statute were admitted to be plain and unambiguous to the contrary, but where they were directly repugnant to the whole spirit and intent of all legislation on the same subject and in the same act, and seemed to involve an absurdity. Ryegate v. Wardsboro, 30 Vt. 746.

34. Where a statute is strongly derogatory to common right, no case can be brought within it except such as comes within its terms with imperative necessity. Farnsworth v. Goodhue, 48 Vt. 209.

35. Whether prospective, or retrospective. It is an elementary principle, that all laws are to commence in futuro, and operate prospectively; and no one can question the correctness of the position, as a general rule, that no statute is to be so construed as to have a retrospective operation beyond the time of its enactment, unless the language is too explicit to admit of any other construction. Bennett, J., in Briggs v. Hubbard, 19 Vt. 90. Lowry v. Keyes, 14 Vt. 74. Wires v. Farr, 25 Vt. 41. Richardson v. Cook, 37 Vt. 599. Sturgis v. Hull, 48 Vt. 302.

36. But where such intent is apparent, and a retrospective operation of the act would not impair an existing right or inflict any wrong; or, if such intent be not manifested by the form and language of the enactment, still, if the just results would constitute a reason for giving it such operation, and it be not restrained in this respect by some provision of it, such reason would be permitted to operate, and the act have a retrospective effect. Barrett, J., in Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 223.

37. By R. S. c. 33, s. 9, it was provided that a judgment of a justice might in certain cases be vacated on petition to the county court, but not unless presented at the first or second term after the rendition of such judgment. By act of 1843, that limitation was repealed, and the act provided that no such petition should be sustained "unless brought within two years next after the justice judgment." Held, that although it was the intent of the act of 1843 that it should be so far retrospective as to reach a case upon which the previous statute had not then fully run, it did not embrace a case where the remedy was fully barred by the revised statutes when the statute of 1843 was enacted. Briggs v. Hubbard, 19 Vt. 86.

38. A statute providing, or merely affecting, the remedy, may apply to causes of action already existing, as well as to those thereafter to accrue. Whether it does so apply, is to be determined from the language of the act, and from the reason of the thing. Held, that G. S. c. 30, s. 73, applied to past defaults of a sheriff — it concerning the remedy only. Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 211.

39. So held as to Stat. of 1850, in relation to invalid and informal levies of execution. Pratt

v. Jones, 25 Vt. 303; and to Stat. of 1837, on same subject. Bell v. Roberts, 13 Vt. 582.

40. But held contra, as to act of 1872, No. 54, as to the effect of a past judgment to account in an action of account. Sturgis v. Hull, 48 Vt. 302.

41. Conjunctive and disjunctive clauses. It is not uncommon, in construing a statute, to take a conjunctive clause in a disjunctive sense, where it is obvious such was the intention of the legislature. "Law and equity," was construed as, law or equity. Barker v. Esty, 19 Vt. 181.

42. Construction of the marriage act, where the word or connects clauses of a sentence, and not words only. Ellis v. Hull, 2 Aik. 41. Campbell v. Shattuck, 2 Aik. 109.

43. Directory, or mandatory. A statute cannot be construed to be merely directory, in opposition to its own direct negative terms. Warner v. Stockwell, 9 Vt. 9. 17 Vt. 77.

44. As to when a statute is directory merely, see Holland v. Osgood, 8 Vt. 276. Corliss v. Corliss, 8 Vt. 373. Briggs v. Georgia, 15 Vt. 61. Crosby v. School Dist. Readsboro, 35 Vt. 623, 630.

45. It is said, that the word "may" in a public statute means must. But the law has made no new lexicon in this class of cases to give exceptional meaning to words; the intent and purpose of the legislature is the true guide and criterion of construction, whether to impose a positive and absolute duty, or merely to give a discretionary power. The word "may" means must or shall, only in cases where the public interest or rights are concerned, and where the public or third persons have a claim, de jure, that the power should be exercised. Kellogg v. State Treasurer, 44 Vt. 356.

46. The joint resolution of the general assembly of 1870, "authorizing" the State Treasurer to pay in coin certain State bonds issued before the passage of the "legal tender act,"—construed as permissive only, and intended to enable the treasurer to conform to the law as then interpreted by the courts, and so long as that interpretation prevailed, and no more. Ib.

47. Where the terms of a statute leave room for any administrative discretion to be exercised, it cannot be interpreted to be mandatory. And a statute directing the mode of proceeding by public officers is to be deemed directory, and a precise compliance is not to be deemed essential to the validity of the proceedings, unless so declared by statute. Free Press Assoc. v. Nichols, 45 Vt. 7.

48. Statute of 1867, No. 61, "An act relating to State printing," construed and applied. Ib.

49. Remedial. A statute which gives to a party aggrieved a right to recover cumulative damages—as, double damages and costs—or a fixed compensation for an injury, though denominated a forfeiture, is treated as a remedial and not a penal statute. Burnett v. Ward, 43 Vt. 80. Neuman v. Waite, 43 Vt. 587. Spaulding v. Cook, 48 Vt. 145. See USURY, 36, 37.

50. Prohibitory. Where a statute prohibits a thing to be done, an act done in contravention of the prohibition must be adjudged inoperative and void, if the statute cannot be otherwise made effectual to accomplish the object intended by its enactment. Bank of Rutland v. Parsons, 21 Vt. 199. Nelson v. Denison, 17 Vt. 73.

51. —by implication. Where a statute imposes a penalty for doing an act, it impliedly prohibits the act and makes it illegal, and no right of action can be based upon such illegal act, in favor of a party to it. Territt v. Bartlett, 21 Vt. 184. Bancroft v. Dumas, Id. 456. Converse v. Foster, 32 Vt. 828. Hove v. Stewart, 40 Vt. 145. There is no difference between such a statute and one which expressly prohibits the act and imposes a penalty. Aiken v. Blaisdell, 41 Vt. 655.

52. Statute construing former one. A statute which in form declares what construction or application shall be given to a former statute, has no other effect than to change the law from the date of the passage of the last act, and does not affect a past suit or transaction. Johnson v. Dexter, 37 Vt. 641.

53. A statute amending a prior one by declaring that it shall be amended so as to read in a given manner, has no retroactive effect, but is to be treated as a new enactment as to any new provisions; and as to such part as is copied without change, this is not to be considered as repealed and again enacted, but to have been the law. Kelsey v. Kendall, 48 Vt. 24.

54. Statute form. A form prescribed by statute must be followed in every essential particular; but not every verbal variance, either in the omission or addition of words, will vitiate. If the matter intended appears with sufficient certainty from the whole instrument, the purpose of the statute is answered. [Applied to a warning-out process]. Shrewsbury v. Mount Holly, 2 Vt. 220.

55. Compilation. The several acts of the compilation of 1797 are not to be considered as prior and subsequent acts, but as passed simultaneously and constituting parts of one general system. Ashley v. Harrington, 1 D. Chip. 348. 8 Vt. 98.

IV. REPEAL, AND EFFECT THEREOF.

56. Repeal by implication. A subsequent statute revising the whole subject matter of a former one, and evidently intended as a substitute for it, operates to repeal it, although without express words to that effect. Farr v. Brackett, 30 Vt. 344. Giddings v. Cox, 31 Vt. 607. Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 690.

57. To repeal a statute by implication, there must be such a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and the old, that they cannot stand together, or be consistently reconciled. Ide v. Story, 47 Vt. 62.

58. A statute entitled as “in amendment of” a former statute, and which enacts that the former statute “shall read as follows,” and then recites the former statute, omitting one of its provisions, was held to be a substitute for the former and to be a repeal of it, so far as it differed from the act last passed—that is, the omitted part stood repealed. Barnet v. Woodbury, 40 Vt. 266.

59. Effect on pending suit. The repeal, without a saving clause, of a statute authorizing a penal action, ends an action upon it pending, and the action will be dismissed on motion. Sumner v. Cummings, 23 Vt. 427.

60. The repeal of a statute prescribing a particular mode of trial, will not operate to abrogate the proceedings already had under it, but they will be preserved and united with proceedings under the new statute, unless in cases where that is clearly impracticable. Danforth v. Smith, 23 Vt. 247.

61. The statute of 1851 (G. S. c. 4, s. 19), providing that the repeal of a statute shall not operate to defeat actions brought upon such statute, applies to all cases which depend upon such statutes for their form and vitality;—as, the statute of 1850 in relation to invalid and informal levies of execution (Pratt v. Jones, 25 Vt. 308); and G. S. c. 30, s. 73, in relation to suits against the sureties of sheriffs (Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 211); and it is not limited in its effect to cases of formal repeal in literal terms, but applies to cases where the provisions on which such actions depend have ceased to be operative by reason of other enactments. Hine v. Pomeroy.

62. The repeal of the statute requiring ex parte depositions to be filed 30 days before being offered in evidence, was held to make such a deposition admissible, though not filed, where it had been taken more than 30 days before the term. Armstrong v. Grinwood, 28 Vt. 376.

63. —on rights fixed. A right acquired under a statute while in force—as, a settlement—does not cease by a repeal of the statute. Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 13 Vt. 215.

64. The statute of 1820 provided that no person employed in the practice of physic and surgery, &c., “shall hereafter have any right to make any demand for the same, or shall be entitled to the benefit of law for the collection of his fees,” &c., unless licensed, &c. Held, that the repeal of this act did not enable one unlicensed to recover for medical services rendered before the repeal. Warner v. Saxby, 12 Vt. 146.

SUBSCRIPTION.

1. A subscription made to the University of Vermont for the purpose of erecting college buildings, accepted by the corporation and upon the faith of which expense has been incurred, was held to be upon sufficient consideration, and mutual, and binding. University v. Buell, 2 Vt. 48. 9 Vt. 293. 24 Vt. 196.

2. The defendant signed a subscription paper for the erection of certain college buildings, promising to pay "$50, in labor or materials, at his option, another season." Held, that no special demand of payment or notice was necessary, where the defendant had knowledge that the work was going on. Id.

3. In an action upon a subscription for a college, it was held to be a good defense that the subscription was obtained by false representations, and by the procuring of other apparent but unreal subscriptions, as an inducement for others to subscribe, &c. Middlebury College v. Loomis, 1 Vt. 189. Same v. Williamson, 1 Vt. 212.

4. In an action on the defendant's subscription for the building of a meeting house;—Held, that he could not prove in defense, that the plaintiff's agent procured such subscription upon the verbal assurance that he wanted the defendant's signature to influence others to sign, and that if he would sign he should never be called on to pay. Blodgett v. Morrill, 20 Vt. 509. 24 Vt. 477.

5. And held, that it was not a defense that a subscription upon the same paper, previous to the defendant's, had been obtained by like assurances. Id.

6. Where subscriptions were made to a college to create a permanent fund for its support, conditioned that a certain amount should be subscribed in order to the subscriptions becoming binding, and that if the college should receive a sum beyond that, then the subscriptions should be reduced pro rata;—Held, that a reduction of the subscriptions below the minimum named, by the votes and acts of the college, or the substitution of land for cash payments, operated to release any subscriber not assenting thereto. Middlebury College v. Williamson, 1 Vt. 212.

7. The defendant, with others, signed a subscription paper agreeing to pay the sum set against their names respectively to the treasurer of the State, towards the building of a State House at Montpelier, where they resided.

The act for the building of the State House was conditioned upon the inhabitants of Montpelier paying into the treasury a certain sum. The State House was built. Held, that the defendant's contract was not void, as being either without consideration, or against public policy, and that an action lay thereon in the name either of the treasurer, or (by statute) of the State. State Treasurer v. Cross, 9 Vt. 289. 24 Vt. 196.

8. Where the subscriptions to a subscription paper for the building of a meeting house were made payable to the treasurer of a certain religious society, but (as construed) independent of the society;—Held, that the subscriptions should be understood not as promises to the society, but to the plaintiff who was treasurer, as a trustee for the subscribers; and that an action thereon lay in his name. Blodgett v. Morrill, 20 Vt. 509. 3 Vt. 233.

9. The defendant, with others, signed a subscription paper by which he agreed to pay the plaintiffs, an incorporated academy, $100, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiffs to pay the debts of the academy, provided that the sum of $20,000 should be subscribed by a day named. The plaintiffs procured the full sum to be subscribed by the day named, and incurred expenses in so doing. Held, that the agreement disclosed a sufficient consideration; that the relation of the defendant to the other subscribers and to the plaintiff estopped him from denying the obligation of his subscription, and that he was liable in an action thereon. Troy Academy v. Nelson, 24 Vt. 189.

10. Defendant subscribed $25, to help plaintiffs rebuild their mill, upon condition that their creditors would "sign a paper not to embarrass or molest them for three years." Their creditors signed a paper agreeing to forbear, if plaintiffs would pay them in certain instalments commencing within the three years and extending beyond, and would not file a petition in bankruptcy. The defendant afterwards, not knowing but the condition of his subscription had been complied with, paid $10 upon it and promised to pay the balance. He afterwards sued to recover back the $10 paid and judgment was rendered against him. In an action to recover the balance of the subscription;—Held, (1), that the condition had not been complied with; (2), that the payment of part, under the circumstances, was not a waiver, and the promise to pay the balance was without consideration; (3), that said judgment was not conclusive upon his rights in this case. Judgment for defendant. Felt v. Davis, 48 Vt. 506.

SUNDAY.

1. Sunday contract. A contract for the sale or exchange of horses, made in the usual way and under the circumstances which usually attend those transactions, is a "secular labor and employment," prohibited by the statute to be performed on the Lord's day, and if concluded on that day, is therefore void; and a warranty given in such trade cannot be enforced. Lyon v. Strong, 6 Vt. 219. Mattocks, J., dissenting.

2. A promissory note made upon Sunday, not being a work of necessity or charity, is void, although done in consummation of a previous contract. Lovejoy v. Whipple, 18 Vt. 379.

3. If a promissory note is signed and absolutely and unconditionally delivered to the payee, or his agent, on Sunday, no recovery can be had upon it without a subsequent promise to pay it, or acknowledgment of it as a subsisting obligation. Goss v. Whitney, 27 Vt. 273.

4. If made upon Sunday, but not delivered until upon a subsequent secular day, it is valid, taking effect only upon delivery. Id. Lovejoy v. Whipple, 18 Vt. 379.

5. A contract made upon Sunday in another State is no violation of the statute of this State, and is not so far contra bonos mores at common law, that it cannot be enforced in this State. Adams v. Gay, 19 Vt. 358.

6. Ratification. Contracts made upon Sunday are not tainted with any general illegality; they are illegal only as to the time in which they are entered into. It is not sufficient to avoid them, that they have grown out of a transaction upon Sunday; they must be finally closed on that day; and although closed on that day, yet if affirmed upon a subsequent day, they then become valid. Id.

7. Where a contract, made upon Sunday, remains executory upon both sides, it is simply void until subsequently affirmed by mutual consent. Where either party has done anything under it, he may demand restitution of the thing delivered, or where that is impracticable, compensation, and thus put the other party to his election, whether to affirm or disaffirm the contract. If he declines to make restitution or compensation, this is an affirmation of the contract. Id.

8. Where a horse was sold on Sunday and a note given therefor on the same day;—Held, that the subsequent retaining of the horse without offer to return, and payments upon the note, were an affirmation and ratification of the note. Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 317.

9. An award. An award made and published on Sunday, where the hearing was commenced on Saturday and prolonged until after midnight, was held not void; but, if void, that a subsequent promise to pay, ratified and confirmed it. Sargeant v. Butts, 21 Vt. 99. Blood v. Bates, 31 Vt. 147.

10. Work of necessity and charity. Healing the sick, or employing a physician so to do, upon Sunday, is a work of "necessity and charity," excepted from the prohibition of the Sabbath act (G. S. c. 93); and a contract therefor made upon Sunday is valid. Smith v. Watson, 14 Vt. 332.

11. Labor done in the making of maple sugar upon Sunday, "where it was necessary in order to save a great waste of sap," was held to be "work of necessity" under the Sabbath act. Whitcomb v. Gilman, 35 Vt. 297.

12. Traveling—Town. A town is not liable to one who is unlawfully traveling on Sunday, for an injury occasioned by the insufficiency of its highway. Johnson v. Irasburgh, 47 Vt. 28.

13. The necessity which will excuse one for traveling on Sunday must be real and not fancied. It is not an honest belief that a necessity for traveling exists, but the actual existence of the necessity which renders traveling on Sunday lawful. Id.

14. A journey on Sunday to visit one's children who are away from home is not unlawful; and the statute prohibiting travel on that day "except from necessity and charity," does not, in such case, bar a recovery for an injury received on such journey through the insufficiency of a highway. McClary v. Lowell, 44 Vt. 116.

I. POWER TO TAX; NATURE OF TAX.

1. Grant from State. It is only where exemption from taxation forms a condition or consideration of a grant from the State, that the legislature is, by the constitution, deprived of the power to tax the thing granted; that is, where so to do would impair the obligation of the contract. Herriek v. Randolph, 18 Vt. 525. 27 Vt. 146.

2. Situs of property. The doctrine that the situs of personal property follows the domicile of the owner, is subject to the limitation, that the State within whose jurisdiction it is actually situate has as entire dominion over it, while therein, in point of sovereignty and jurisdiction, as it has over immovables situate there; and this extends to the power of taxation, &c. Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152.

3. H, a resident of New York, inherited from his father, who at his death was a resident citizen of this State, personal estate consisting of debts due from solvent debtors resident in this State, evidenced by promissory notes; and he appointed the plaintiff, a resident of this State, his agent, upon a salary, to manage the property, with discretionary power to collect and re-loan and keep on interest. Held, (1), that such property was embraced in Stat. 1844, No. 9, for purposes of taxation, as personal estate "held in trust" by "an agent," and was properly set in the list to the plaintiff as "agent" of H; (2), that the legislature had the right to tax property so situated. Id.

4. The owner of the stocks of other States of the United States, residing in this State, may be legally assessed and taxed therefor in this State. Webb v. Burlington, 28 Vt. 188.

5. Delegation of power—By-law. Under a village corporation act empowering the corporation to make by-laws relating to their common and the shade and ornamental trees thereon, and to raise taxes to carry into effect any legal vote or by-law, a tax laid, according to a vote, for building a fence around and inclosing the common, was sustained. Hutchinson v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 402.

6. Terms—"Public taxes." The charter of the town of Wheelock, granted by the State, conveying the territory to the President of Dartmouth College, provided that the lands should be free and exempt from public taxes, so long, &c. Held, that this was not an exemption from local municipal taxes, such as town, parish, district and village taxes, assessed upon and to be expended for the use and immediate benefit of the particular municipality. Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773.

7. Tax not "a contract debt." A tax is not a contract express or implied, nor properly a debt. Johnson v. Howard, 41 Vt. 122. Webster v. Seymour, 8 Vt. 140.

8. The acts of congress exempting a soldier from arrest for any "debt or contract," do not protect him from arrest for non-payment of a tax upon taxable property set in the list against him, before his enlistment. Webster v. Seymour.

9. A town, summoned as trustee, cannot apply upon its indebtedness to the principal defendant an unpaid town tax against him. Johnson v. Howard, 41 Vt. 122.

10. The State, town, &c., to which a tax is payable is not a creditor in such sense as that the doctrine of fraud in law, as to change of possession of chattels sold, applies. Daniels v. Nelson, 41 Vt. 161.

11. The assessment of a tax does not create a debt that can be enforced by suit, and the tax does not draw interest, either before or after demand of payment. Shaw v. Peckett, 26 Vt. 482. (1851.)

12. Where the collector arrested a tax-payer for the purpose of enforcing payment of interest upon the tax;—Held, that the arrest was illegal, for that no interest was chargeable upon taxes, although the tax-payer, in this case, had neglected and refused for more than five years after demand made, to pay the tax, and had been out of the State. Ib.

13. When an "incumbrance." In case of a non-resident proprietor, taxes become an incumbrance upon the land when the constable has made a list of the land and the taxes assessed thereon, and deposited the same in the town clerk's office for record, according to C. S. c. 81, s. 24. Hutchins v. Moody, 84 Vt. 438.

II. TAXABLE PERSONS AND PROPERTY.

14. Idiot. Under the listing law as existing in 1836,—Held, that an idiot was not subject to be assessed and taxed for money on hand, or due. Hunt v. Lee, 10 Vt. 297. 14 Vt. 348.

15. Town of residence. Under a statute requiring personal property to be set in the list and taxed in the town where the owner resides;—Held, that such a tax assessed in any other town is illegal and void ab initio, for want of jurisdiction; and that the collector is liable in trespass or trover for enforcing the collection of it; and this is so, although the owner gave his list in such town, specifying such property for taxation—he not consenting to the final enforcement of the tax. Blood v. Sayre, 17 Vt. 609.

16. On the question of residence for the purposes of taxation, the plaintiff, for the purpose of showing that he was not taxable in the defendant town on the 1st of April, proved that his name was in the grand list of another town (B) for that year, and listed at $3000 for money on hand and debts due, and that he paid taxes thereon for that year. Held, that it was competent for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff was not assessed by the listers of town B, but that they took his list as he offered it, and upon his own proposition. Mann v. Clark, 83 Vt. 55.

17. The plaintiff, then residing in Randolph, during the winter of 1854-5 hired a farm in Braintree for one year from the 1st day of April following, with the view of living there the next season. In March, 1855, he moved all his wood and furniture, and most of his provisions, from Randolph to this farm. A former occupant, whose term expired March 31, was not ready to leave on that day, and did not leave until April 3d. March 31st (Saturday), the plaintiff took his wife and family, his cow, the remainder of his provisions and a few cooking utensils, and leaving Randolph and not intending to return there, went to the house of his brother-in-law in Brookfield, near the farm which he had hired, and remained there until April 4, when he moved to the farm and lived there for the remainder of the year. Held, that his residence began at Braintree when it ended at Randolph, and that he was subject to assessment and taxation as a resident of Braintree on the first day of April, 1855. Ib.

18. Held, that where the right to tax a person in a particular town is the question, the burden is upon the town, claiming the right, to prove that such person was legally set in the list and taxable in such town. Hurlburt v. Green, 41 Vt. 490. S. C. 42 Vt. 316.

19. Where it appeared that a person was taxable either in town A, or in town B, and the evidence as to which town was equally balanced;—Held, that it was error to charge that the fact that he was not listed in town B and had not returned a list anywhere, furnished an intendment in favor of town A [claiming the tax], on the ground that it is the policy of the law that every man shall pay a tax somewhere. Ib. 41 Vt. 490.

20. But where the question was one of domicile, whether for purposes of taxation the plaintiff was an inhabitant of town A, where he was taxed, or of town B, and the plaintiff, at the trial, claimed that he was an inhabitant of town B;—Held, that it was competent to prove, as bearing upon the question of intent as to domicile, and as an answer to his present claim of domicile in town B, that he returned no list in town B, and was not taxed there. S. C. 42 Vt. 316.

21. Held, in a trustee suit under G. S. c. 84, s. 34, by a tax collector to collect a tax, that neither the fact that the defendant's name was set in the list of the town claiming the tax, nor the decision of the listers in setting his name in the list, was any evidence to prove the defendant's residence for the purpose of taxation. Gregory v. Bugbee, 42 Vt. 480.

22. Ownership April 1. By G. S. c. 83, s. 9, real estate is to be set in the grand list to the person who shall be the owner or possessor thereof on the first day of April in each year. Held, that a farm was properly set in the list for 1865 to one who was once the owner, and who had been in possession and occupation of the farm for many years including the year 1865, it having been listed to him and he having paid the taxes without objection down to 1865, although the legal title stood in another by such possessor's deed executed in 1857, and recorded in 1863. Bemis v. Phelps, 41 Vt. 1.

23. The subsequent act of 1863, No. 18, s. 1, requiring real and personal estate to be set in the list to the last owner on the first day of April in each year, applies only to cases where the ownership of the estate changes on that day. Ib.

24. Exemption. Act of 1870, No. 78, exempting certain manufacturing establishments from taxation. See Westmore Lumber Co. v. Orne, 48 Vt. 90.

III. VOTING AND ASSESSING TAXES.

25. The vote. A vote in school (or town) meeting, to raise a tax not exceeding a specified sum, is valid, although it leaves a discretion as to the amount to be raised within the limitation fixed. Brown v. Hoadley, 12 Vt. 472. 23 Vt. 420; and see Adams v. Hyde, 27 Vt. 221.

26. If, after a portion of a tax properly voted has been voluntarily paid under the inducement of a discount, new and unforeseen circumstances render it unnecessary to use the the entire amount voted for the purpose for which it was voted, the town may then properly vote to have the unpaid taxes fully collected and to refund the surplus to the taxpayers pro rata; or it may collect the tax and treat it as funds in the treasury to be used in payment of any other legal obligation of the town. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590.

27. Where the granting of a State tax was averred in pleading,—Held, that such averment need not be specifically proved, the laying of the tax being by general law, of which the court will take notice. Downer v. Woodbury, 19 Vt. 329.

28. A tax voted on the first day of March, or at any time thereafter within one year, cannot be lawfully voted, or assessed, upon any other grand list than the one then to be completed on the 15th day of May following. (G. S. c. 84, ss. 66, 67.) Alger v. Curry, 38 Vt. 382. Capron v. Raintick, 44 Vt. 515. Allen v. Burlington, 45 Vt. 202.

29. Assessment. The assessment of a tax must be made on the list in legal existence at the time when it is voted; and if made on any other, the tax is wholly void, and no one can justify under it. Waters v. Daines, 4 Vt. 601. Collamer v. Drury, 16 Vt. 574. 29 Vt. 195.

30. Requisites of grand list. The law requires all taxable property to be put into the list of each year; and in this respect there is no difference between real and personal estate. Each list must be complete and perfect in itself without reference to any former list; and no taxes can be legally assessed, either for real or personal property, unless such property be inserted in the current list for the year. Downing v. Roberts, 21 Vt. 441.

31. A list is not complete and cannot form the basis of a legal tax, until the alterations required by the county and State committees are made; and held, that where the listers of a town omitted to make the alterations required by such committees, but, on the contrary, made arbitrary additions thereto, the list was void. Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460. (1843.) 24 Vt. 418.

32. The grand list of a town is not perfected as a basis for taxation, unless signed, certified and sworn to by the listers, as provided by G.

S. c. 83, s. 36. Reed v. Chandler, 32 Vt. 265. 39 Vt. 342.

33. A grand list is not rendered invalid, because the fact that the proper oath was taken by the listers is not evidenced by the certificate of a magistrate annexed to the certificate of the listers. It is sufficient if the oath was in fact administered; and the certificate of the listers to the list, which was in form of an oath to the truth of the matters certified, and was signed by them, was held to be sufficient evidence that the certificate was properly sworn to. Blodgett v. Holbrook, 39 Vt. 336.

34. It is not essential to the validity of a grand list, that it should appear upon the list at what time it was completed and lodged in the town clerk's office. Id.

35. A grand list is not invalid because sworn to by the listers according to the form prescribed for the years of appraisal of real estate, instead of the form prescribed for other years [which last was the form appropriate to this case]. Id.

36. If the quinquennial appraisal of real estate is not sworn to by the listers, it is void as a basis of taxation; and a subsequent annual list, made, certified, and sworn to, only according to the statute in relation to such lists, does not cure the defect, since there is no certificate of appraisal. Houghton v. Hall, 47 Vt. 333.

37. Where by statute the grand list was required to be completed and returned as finished on or before a certain day;—Held, that it became the basis for taxation on that day. Moss v. Hinds, 29 Vt. 188.

38. Where the time within which listers are required by law to complete and return the list to the town clerk's office has elapsed, and the list has been so returned, it then becomes the basis of taxation for the ensuing year, and neither the listers, nor the selectmen, nor any other person, has thereafter any legal power to alter or add to it. Downing v. Roberts, 21 Vt. 441. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590.

39. Any such alteration, made by a stranger, would not invalidate the list, nor have any effect to change it, but only the alteration would be nugatory and void. So, also, semble, if made by the listers. Bellows v. Weeks.

40. Alterations made in the grand list of the several towns by the equalizing committee of the legislature, affect only State taxes. Spear v. Braintree, 24 Vt. 414. (1852.) Barnes v. Oviatt, 47 Vt. 316. (1875.)

41. Mere circumstantial errors or mistakes, or defect in the detail of items in the making up of a list, like an error of computation in assessing a tax, do not render the list or the tax void, when they are accidental, or made bona fide. Spear v. Braintree, 24 Vt. 414. Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460.

42. An omission by the listers to set down

In the grand list the quantity of real estate owned or occupied by the party taxed, does not render the list void, nor give the owner an action without showing that the neglect has worked him some loss or injury. The statute, as respects him, is directory merely. (G. S. c. 88, s. 20.) Bellows Falls Canal Co. v. Rockingham, 87 Vt. 623.

43. Property all connected together, not divided into separate parcels, the listers may properly set in the list in one gross sum, under any appropriate name or description; or they may divide it up separately, giving the value of each building by itself. Id.

44. Lost grand list. The existence and contents of a grand list, lost or destroyed, may be proved by parol. Spear v. Tilton, 24 Vt. 420.

45. Presumption. A grand list, being made by sworn officers appointed for that purpose and being regular upon the face of it, is presumed to be correct until the contrary is shown. Wilson v. Seavey, 38 Vt. 221. Macomber v. Center, 44 Vt. 285.

46. Where the grand list, the vote of the town laying the tax, and the tax bill and warrant are regular upon their face, the tax is prima facie a legal tax. Macomber v. Center. Briggs v. Whipple, 7 Vt. 15.

47. Legalizing list, &c., by legislature. It is competent for the legislature, by special act, to legalize a town grand list and the taxes assessed thereon, when such list is irregular and invalid;—as, where it was made up or altered out of due time, and without authority. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590.

48. A grand list not sworn to by the listers is invalid as a basis of taxation; and the legalization of such list by act of the legislature, does not validate taxes previously assessed thereon [so as to make a collector and his bail liable for not collecting them before the list was so legalized]. Tunbridge v. Smith, 48 Vt. 648.

49. Assessment for money on hand, &c. Under G. S. c. 88, ss. 27, 28, the selectmen, on an "appeal" from an assessment by the listers, cannot raise the assessment. The "appeal" is only an application for relief. Leach v. Blakely, 34 Vt. 134.

50. It is not a valid objection to a certificate of assessment, that one selectman wrote the names of all the selectmen in the signature thereto, he being directed so to do by the others, and all having acted in concert in making the assessment. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590. See Haven v. Hobbs, 1 Vt. 238.

51. The notice of assessment for money on hand, &c., by the listers, under act of 1866, No. 14, must be given each year, or such assessment is void. It is not enough to adopt the assessment of a previous year on which the party paid taxes, unless notice be given, Dean v. Aiken, 48 Vt. 541.

52. It is not the duty of listers to notify persons whom they assess for bank stock—as is required by G. S. c. 88, s. 27, in respect to assessments for money on hand, &c. Clement v. Hale, 47 Vt. 680.

Taxing water power, see WATER COURSE, 57.

IV. COLLECTING.

1. The rate bill and warrant.

53. Their sufficiency. It is not essential to the validity of a tax warrant, that any certificate be annexed to the tax bill (or rate bill), further than to indicate that it is a tax bill (G. S. c. 15, s. 46); and the collector's authority under the warrant is not controlled by any statements in such certificate as to the time the tax was voted; when it is payable, &c. Weeks v. Batchelder, 41 Vt. 817. Read v. Jamaica, 40 Vt. 629. See also Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 604. Goodwin v. Perkins, 39 Vt. 598.

54. A direction in the warrant for the collection of a town tax, that it be paid to the selectmen, instead of the treasurer (Clemons v. Lewis, 36 Vt. 678), or such direction in the vote laying the tax (Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 487), does not invalidate the tax. Id.

55. In an action against a town to recover back taxes paid to the collector "under protest," the plaintiff objected to the sufficiency of the collector's warrant, because, in following a former statute form, it gave the collector no authority to levy upon lands. Held (the collector not offering to use the warrant for the purpose of such a levy), that such defect afforded no ground for a recovery. Read v. Jamaica, 40 Vt. 629.

56. The selectmen should annex to the rate bill of a State school tax assessed by them, a warrant for its collection, as in case of taxes imposed by the town; and without such warrant a collector cannot justify a seizure for such tax. This is by implication of G. S. c. 23, s. 80, &c. Wilson v. Seavey, 38 Vt. 221.

57. Where a tax is laid payable in installments, the more proper way is to put the whole tax in one rate bill. Where this is done, the rate bill is not invalid because two former ones had been before issued, one for each installment of the tax. Eddy v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 362.

58. The warrant for the collection of a State tax need not be attached to the rate bill of the State tax. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590.

59. A tax warrant which was sufficient when issued and served is not invalidated by a subsequent alteration of it by the magistrate; and the fact and character of the alteration may be shown, and how it was before it was altered. Goodwin v. Perkins, 39 Vt. 598.

60. It is no objection to a town tax warrant, that it is signed by a justice of the peace who is also one of the selectmen to whom, by the vote laying the tax, the tax is directed to be paid. Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 437.

61. An error in the date of a warrant for the collection of a tax, does not avoid it. The true date of its execution, if necessary, may be proved; and it will take effect from that time. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590.

62. A warrant for the collection of highway taxes was held insufficient to justify an arrest, where the only command was, that on neglect to pay, &c., "you are to proceed with him or them as the law directs." Flint v. Whitney, 28 Vt. 680.

63. Who may serve warrant. A State treasurer's tax warrant directed to a person named as "collector and constable," &c., such person being at the time dead, may be served by a constable and collector afterwards elected. Wilson v. Seanev, 38 Vt. 221.

64. Under G. S. c. 84, s. 58, the selectmen may appoint a person to collect unpaid taxes, when the collector has permanently removed from the town, and so has "become disabled." Clement v. Hale, 47 Vt. 680.

2. Powers and duties of collector.

65. For a tax assessed against a feme sole, who afterwards marries, the property of the husband cannot be distrained, though it be such as he acquired by the marriage. Sumner v. Pinney, 81 Vt. 717. (Altered by G. S. c. 84, s. 16.)

66. A tax collector is not obliged to go against the real estate for the taxes assessed upon that. Shaw v. Peckett, 25 Vt. 423.

67. Distress. A distress for taxes is in the nature of an execution. Beasts of the plough are not exempt. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 489.

68. In order to make a distress of property for non-payment of taxes, so as to create a lien, it is necessary, as in case of an attachment, that the collector should, either by himself or servant, take and maintain the actual custody and control of the property. Dodge v. Way, 18 Vt. 457.

69. G. S. c. 84, ss. 10, 11, requiring a collector of taxes to keep the distress four days and then to advertise for six days before sale, does not confine him within this time for advertisement and sale, but the same may be done within a reasonable time thereafter. A seizure on the 5th, advertisement on the 13th, and sale on the 21st of the same month, were held sufficient. Clemons v. Lewis, 36 Vt. 673.

70. A tax collector is not obliged to keep a distress four days before posting it for sale, provided the time of sale is fixed full ten days from the taking. Harriman v. School Dist. Orange, 35 Vt. 311.

71. Where property was distrained for a tax Feb. 21, and posted on the 25th for sale March 3, and then sold, making 10 days from time of seizure to time of sale;—Held, that this was a compliance with the statute, requiring the property to be kept four days, and posted six days. Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 437.

72. The right of a tax collector to adjourn an advertised sale rests in the exercise of a sound discretion, and is the same as that of any officer as to property taken on execution; an irregularity in this respect does not make him a trespasser ab initio. Spear v. Tilton, 24 Vt. 420. Wheelock v. Archer, 26 Vt. 380.

73. It cannot be determined upon demurrer, that a barn, where property was posted and sold upon a tax warrant, was not "a public place" as it may well be such, in fact. Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 437; and see Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 645. Drake v. Mooney, 31 Vt. 617.

74. Where a tax collector makes a proper demand for the payment of the tax, and the person taxed distinctly refuses to pay;—Held, that it is not necessary, before the collector makes distress therefor, to give notice of the time and place that he will attend to receive the tax, as generally required by statute. Downer v. Woodbury, 19 Vt. 329. Wheelock v. Archer, 26 Vt. 380. Hurlbert v. Green, 42 Vt. 316.

75. After a tax collector has properly levied his warrant for refusal to pay the tax, he is justified in further proceedings under his warrant, although the delinquent promise that he will pay the tax that week if the collector will not remove the property distrained. Wheelock v. Archer.

76. Taking body. To make a tax-collector liable in trespass for taking the body instead of the property of the delinquent, there must be some distinct offer of some specific property. Nor is the collector obliged to delay; to wait, and to go some distance for the property. Flint v. Whitney, 28 Vt. 680.

77. Fees. Where the collector of a tax had duly demanded payment of the tax, and afterwards performed travel for the purpose of making a distress;—Held, that he was entitled to traveling fees in addition to the tax, and that a tender of the amount of the tax only was not sufficient to prevent a distress. Joslyn v. Tracy, 19 Vt. 569.

78. Sale—Motive. A tax collector, at a sale, announced that he had sold enough to satisfy the tax and costs, and should sell no more; but he then called back the dispersing audience and made further sales, but not beyond the true amount of the tax and costs. Held correct, and that his motive, as ill will towards the delinquent, was of no importance. Woodcock v. Bolster, 35 Vt. 632.

79. Receipt. A collector of taxes is under no obligation to give a receipt for taxes paid him; and a refusal to pay unless a receipt be given is equivalent to an absolute refusal. Custom cannot vary this. Stiles v. Hitchcock, 47 Vt. 419.

3. Justification by collector.

80. General rule. A tax bill and warrant, though regular upon their face, do not of themselves justify the collector in enforcing them; but the legality of all the previous proceedings must be shown. Collamer v. Drury, 16 Vt. 574. Downing v. Roberts, 21 Vt. 441. Read v. Jamaica, 40 Vt. 632. Chipman, C. J., in Wilcox v. Sherwin, 1 D. Chip. 82. Bates v. Haseltine, 1 Vt. 81. Waters v. Daines, 4 Vt. 601.

81. In order for a collector of taxes to justify under his tax bill and warrant, he must aver and prove that the plaintiff had a list in the town. This cannot be inferred from the fact that the party's name is in the tax bill; and in this respect there is no difference between the case of a State tax, and a town tax. Downer v. Woodbury, 19 Vt. 329. 16 Vt. 574.

82. Pleadings. A plea justifying a distress for taxes must set forth all the facts necessary to constitute a legal vote of the tax, a legal list, a legal assessment, and legal proceedings in the collection. These must be expressly set forth in full detail. Shaw v. Peckett, 25 Vt. 423.

83. A plea of justification by a collector under a rate bill and warrant to collect a town tax, need not set forth the purposes for which the tax was voted. It will be presumed to have been voted for a lawful purpose. Briggs v. Whipple, 7 Vt. 15.

84. Or, if set forth in general terms merely, and that be a purpose for which the town may raise money, it is sufficient. Clemons v. Lewis, 36 Vt. 673.

85. That the treasurer "issued his extent in due form of law, dated," &c., is a sufficient averment, on general demurrer, that the extent was signed by him. State Treasurer v. Weeks, 4 Vt. 215.

86. Where a plea set forth a warrant, annexed to a rate bill, as directed to the defendant, as surveyor, by A B, a justice of the peace;—Held, that this implied, and was a sufficient averment, that the warrant was signed by such justice. Andrews v. Chase, 5 Vt. 409.

87. —and evidence. Under the replication de injuria to the defendant's plea justifying his taking of the plaintiff's property as collector of taxes under a rate bill and warrant, in which plea the defendant averred that he gave the bond required by statute, but without setting forth the bond, or making proof of it;—Held, that it was sufficient proof of this averment, that the defendant acted as collector. Downer v. Woodbury, 19 Vt. 329.

88. Where a collector justifies under a rate-bill and warrant, the production of the grand list of the year for which the tax was assessed, although not the year for the general appraisal of real estate, and although the taxes in question were all upon real estate, is sufficient evidence that the real estate was duly appraised and set in the list, without producing the grand list of the year of the last general appraisal. Wilson v. Seavey, 38 Vt. 221.

89. In trespass de bonis, the defendant justified under a tax bill and warrant, his plea averring that the plaintiff had a list. Replication, de injuria. Held, that the grand list, made in proper form and duly authenticated, was sufficient proof of that averment. Braley v. Burnham, 47 Vt. 717.

90. Kind of evidence—Return. A tax warrant is not returnable process. Hence the collector's return written thereon is not an official act, nor evidence in his favor of his doings; but the same are provable by parol. Hathaway v. Goodrich, 5 Vt. 65. Henry v. Tilson, 17 Vt. 479. Spear v. Tilson, 24 Vt. 420. Flint v. Whitney, 28 Vt. 680.

91. Certificate of doings on copy. Public ministerial officers must set forth the acts done by them, that the court, and not themselves, may judge of their sufficiency. Under the act requiring a collector of taxes to certify upon the copy of his warrant of commitment of a delinquent tax-payer "his doings thereon in relation to such delinquent." Held, that a general statement on such copy, that "after legally notifying him of the time and place when and where the collector would be to receive the tax," &c., was not sufficient to show that he had given the delinquent the six days, notice required by law. Henry v. Tilson, 19 Vt. 447.

92. The omission of a tax collector, on committing a delinquent to jail, "to certify his doings in relation to such delinquent" on the copy of his warrant left with the jailer, cannot be supplied by other proof, at the trial, that he had, in fact, proceeded regularly. Flint v. Whitney, 28 Vt. 680. Nor can any defect in such certificate be so supplied. Henry v. Tilson.

4. Collector's liability.

93. For the non-collection of taxes illegally assessed, neither the collector, nor the sureties on his bond, are liable, though he has given a receipt for the tax-bills, wherein he agrees "to collect and pay over." But for the misappropriation of all monies collected, he and they are liable. Tunbridge v. Smith, 48 Vt. 648.

94. Town, as well as State taxes, are payable in money only. If a collector receives of a tax payer a town order and applies it as payment of a town tax, the order is not thereby paid, but the order becomes his and he can transfer it, leaving himself liable to the town for the amount of such tax. Saenger v. Springfield, 40 Vt. 305.

95. A collector of taxes took the money collected on a tax bill of one year, and paid therewith to the treasurer his arrears of a previous year, and directed the treasurer so to apply the money;—neither the treasurer nor any other officer of the town knowing how he obtained it. In an action against the sureties upon the collector's bond of the second year;—Held, that this misapplication was the sole fault of the collector, and that the sureties were not thereby released, pro tanto. Lyndon v. Miller, 36 Vt. 329.

96. A tax collector's bond to the town, so far as relates to the State tax, is a bond of indemnity simply. Middlebury v. Nixon, 1 Vt. 282.

97. In an action upon a tax collector's official bond for neglect to collect and pay taxes, a prior demand of payment need not be averred, or proved; nor, in case of State taxes, that an extent has been issued. Ib.

98. In assigning breaches of such bond, the various circumstances of the tax, time of payment ordered, to whom, &c., must be averred Ib.

99. In an action by a town against its collector of taxes and his sureties upon their bond for faithful performance, and to indemnify the town;—Held, that the receipt of the collector acknowledging to have received from the selectmen the tax bill, stating the amount, to collect and account for, was sufficient prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, and that the tax-bill was a legal one. Charlotte v. Webb, 7 Vt. 88.

100. And held, in such case, that an extent issued by the State treasurer against the town was satisfactory evidence against the defendants of the regularity of the previous proceedings which warranted it. Ib.

101. In such action for neglect to collect and account for taxes,—Held, that the rule of damages was the amount of the rate-bill not paid over. Ib.

102. Extent. In a petition of the selectmen to a justice for an extent against a delinquent collector, and in the extent issued, the year in which the tax was laid was erroneously stated. There being no other misdescription, held, that the proceedings were not invalidated thereby. Clark v. Lathrop, 38 Vt. 140.

V. REMEDIES FOR WRONGFUL TAXATION.

1. Against the town.

103. Payment under protest. The payment of an illegal tax, under protest, when a collection of the tax is threatened and payment is made for that reason, is not to be treated as a voluntary payment, although the collector may not have had a warrant to his tax bill. Babcock v. Granville, 44 Vt. 325. Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460.

104. Where one, under express protest, pays a tax assessed against him, although before any warrant has been issued against him for the collection of it, this is not such a voluntary payment as to preclude him from recovering back the tax so paid, if illegal, if he so paid because, otherwise, he expected and had a right to expect that in due course the warrant would be issued and the collection be enforced, with costs. Allen v. Burlington, 45 Vt. 202.

105. Action. The power given by G. S. c. 15, s. 66, to the board of civil authority to abate taxes, does not prevent the ordinary remedies for illegal taxation; as, assumpsit to recover back money paid upon an illegal tax. Babcock v. Granville, 44 Vt. 325.

106. Extent of recovery. Where the plaintiff had been compelled to pay taxes assessed upon a void list;—Held, that, in an action of assumpsit against the town for money had and received, he could recover the full amount paid as town taxes which went into the town treasury. Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460.

107. In assumpsit against a town to recover back money paid as taxes, and wrongfully collected, the plaintiff cannot recover what the town has collected as agent and paid over—as, State taxes—but only what has gone to the town's use—town taxes. Spear v. Braintree, 24 Vt. 414. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Burlington, 28 Vt. 198. Slack v. Norwich, 32 Vt. 818.

108. In assumpsit or case to recover of a town for an excess of taxes paid by reason of a circumstantial, or accidental, error in the list or assessment;—Held, that the plaintiff cannot recover where the error operates to his advantage; nor beyond what, on the whole, is his actual damage. Spear v. Braintree, 24 Vt. 414. Fairbanks v. Kittredge, 24 Vt. 9.

109. Burden of proof. In an action against a town to recover back money paid as taxes, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the taxes were illegally collected. B. F. Canal Co. v. Rockingham, 37 Vt. 623.

110. Appeal. An action of assumpsit before a justice, brought against a town, demanding only ten dollars damages, and so in the ad damnum, is not appealable under G. S. c. 81, s. 70, by a plea that the money which the plaintiff is seeking to recover was collected of him by the constable of the town, upon a legal rate-bill and warrant duly issued, &c. May v. Jamaica, 37 Vt. 23. (Changed by Stat. 1868, No. 23.)

2. Against selectmen, and listers.

111. Selectmen. The selectmen are liable in trespass for property distrained and sold in satisfaction of an illegal tax assessed by them; and where such illegal tax is so blended with others, though legal in themselves, as that they cannot be separated, the whole proceeding is void, and no deduction from a full recovery can be made. Drew v. Davis, 10 Vt. 506.

112. Under section 18 of the listing act of Nov. 17, 1825, the duties of the selectmen were purely ministerial, and they were bound to accept the sworn disclosure of the party assessed for money on hand, and could not require him to answer as to particulars; and were then bound to certify such disclosure to the town clerk. For their neglect so to certify to the town clerk,—Held, that the selectmen were liable. Kellogg v. Higgins, 11 Vt. 240.

113. The selectmen refused to receive the plaintiff's disclosure of his money subject to assessment, but he afterwards agreed to meet them at a time appointed and transact the business. He neglected to appear, and there was no subsequent refusal to receive his disclosure. Held, that this agreement and his neglect to appear operated as a waiver, and released or discharged any right of action he might have had for the original refusal. Cooley v. Aiken, 15 Vt. 322.

114. Listers. Listers are liable in an action on the case to the party injured by any illegal act of theirs, where they act ministerially in the making up of the grand list. Fairbanks v. Kittredge, 24 Vt. 9. 27 Vt. 654.

115. As, where they list a man or his property not taxable; or in a town where not taxable. Henry v. Edson, 2 Vt. 499.

116. Or, an eleemosynary corporation not taxable. Congregational Socy. v. Ashley, 10 Vt. 241.

117. So, for neglect to return assessments and two folds to the town clerk by the day fixed by statute, whereby the party was deprived of his appeal to the selectmen. Howard v. Shumway, 18 Vt. 358.

118. So, for listing property in the wrong school district, whereby the party, or the school district entitled to the tax, has suffered damage. Fairbanks v. Kittredge, 24 Vt. 9. School District, St. Johnsbury v. Kittredge, 27 Vt. 650.

119. A list is not rendered void by any error of judgment in the listers as to a matter within their jurisdiction; nor are the listers liable therefor, in such case, where they act bona fide and with reasonable care. Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460. Stearns v. Miller, 25 Vt. 20. Wilson v. Marsh, 34 Vt. 352.

120. In many things the acts of listers so far partake of a judicial character, that they incur no personal responsibility when not actuated by malice. This is so as to appraisals and assessments which they are commissioned to make; as, also, whenever it is the evident intention of the law that they shall act solely upon their own judgment and discretion. Royce, C. J., in Fairbanks v. Kittredge, 24 Vt. 9.

121. Having jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, they are not responsible for any error of judgment in making assessments for money on hand, debts due, &c., unless actuated by malice or corruption. Fuller v. Gould, 20 Vt. 648.

122. In relation to some of the duties of listers, they involve so much of matter of judgment and discretion, and partake so much of the nature and character of judicial proceedings, that their judgment, exercised in good faith and without malice, is conclusive in their favor. But in relation to setting real estate in the list to the owner, or person liable to pay taxes thereon, so far as it relates to the persons to whom it is to be set and the number of acres, the listers are bound to act in good faith and with common care, skill and prudence. If they so act, they are not liable for mistakes, oversights, or inaccuracies; otherwise, they are liable to the party injured. Wilson v. Marsh, 34 Vt. 352. Stearns v. Miller, 25 Vt. 20.

123. Listers are liable to a party injured for their omission of express and obvious matter-of-fact duties. They are liable for all other injurious misconduct in their office, even in matters of discretion, where it can be shown that they acted mala fide. Redfield, C. J., in Stearns v. Miller.

124. In an action against listers for wrongfully setting personal estate in the list, where the listers had jurisdiction and no appeal was taken to the selectmen;—Held, that the proceedings were conclusive, unless, by clear proof, the listers were shown to have acted corruptly. Id. 44 Vt. 329.

125. Where listers left in the town clerk's office, within the time required by the statute, an abstract of the plaintiff's list containing the assessment complained of, properly certified, and containing a general notice of hearing;—Held, that the plaintiff's only remedy for an over-assessment was by the statute appeal, unless he could show by irrefragable evidence that the listers made such assessment from motives of corruption, or express malice towards the plaintiff, Id.

126. In an action against listers for wrongfully appraising and setting in the plaintiff's list more land than he owned, it is sufficient to aver and prove that they did the act knowing it to be false. It is not necessary to allege that they did it maliciously and corruptly. Id.

127. Where listers, in the exercise of good faith and acting according to their best judgment, set in the list one who has removed from the town with his property, upon their belief that such removal was for the purpose of avoiding taxation or of changing it to another town (G. S. c. 83, s. 48), their action is of a judicial character, and they are not liable for an erroneous judgment therein. Davis v. Strong, 31 Vt. 332. Aldis, J., dissenting; and see Universalist Society v. Leach, 35 Vt. 108.

128. The court cannot say, as matter of law, that listers were lacking in due diligence in the making of a list, where they erroneously set lands to the mortgagor, instead of the mortgagee in possession. This is a question of fact for the jury upon the circumstances. Wilson v. Marsh, 34 Vt. 352.

129. Form of action. Case, and not trespass, was held to be the proper action against listers for wrongfully setting the plaintiff and his property in the list of a town where he and his property were not taxable, and of which he was not an inhabitant;—upon which list taxes were assessed which he had been compelled to pay, upon arrest by the tax collector. Henry v. Edson, 2 Vt. 490.

VI. SALE OF LANDS FOR TAXES; TAX TITLES.

1. General rules.

130. A collector of proprietors' taxes must pursue his power strictly, however difficult, and perform all pre-requisites, which stand as conditions precedent to his right of selling. Otherwise, his sales are invalid. Underhill v. Smith, N. Chip. 81.

131. Sales for land taxes are proceedings in invitum. It is a mode of transferring title by operation of law without the agency of the owner, and is also in the nature of a forfeiture. Therefore, the proceedings are, as conditions precedent, to be strictly, perhaps literally, followed. Spear v. Ditty, 9 Vt. 282. 17 Vt. 100.

132. Courts have been, generally, somewhat astute in requiring such strict compliance. Bennett, J., in Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 124—citing Mead v. Mallet, 1 D. Chip. 239. Culver v. Hayden, 1 Vt. 359. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 16. Spear v. Ditty, 9 Vt. 282. Sumner v. Sherman, 13 Vt. 609; and see Taylor v. French, 19 Vt. 49. Lane v. James, 25 Vt. 481.

133. A tax sale under the act of 1831, granting a tax on each acre of land in Essex county for the purpose of building a jail, was held valid against sundry objections. General principles announced—as, that the court should not be too astute in finding defects, or surmounting them, &c. Bellows v. Elliot, 12 Vt. 569.

134. It is a condition precedent to the passing of any title by a tax collector's deed, that the proceedings of the officers, who have anything to do with assessing or collecting the tax, or recording the proceedings, whether to be performed before or after the sale, should be in strict and literal compliance with the requirements of the statute. Judevine v. Jackson, 18 Vt. 470. Sumner v. Sherman, 18 Vt. 609.

135. The following principles, or rules, for testing the validity of tax titles, appear to be fairly deducible from the reported cases on that subject: (1), Where the statute under which the sale is made directs a thing to be done, or prescribes the form, time, and manner of doing any thing, such thing must be done, and in the form, time and manner prescribed, or the title is invalid; and in this respect the statute must be strictly, if not literally, complied with; (2), But in determining what is required to be done, the statute must receive a reasonable construction; and where no particular form or manner of doing a thing is pointed out, any mode which effects the object with reasonable certainty is sufficient; and in judging of these matters the court is to be governed by such reasonable rules of construction, as direct them in other cases. Hall, J., in Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388.

136. Collector's deed as evidence. A deed of the collector of a proprietors' tax, however worded, is not even prima facie evidence of a legal sale; but, to sustain it, all the previous proceedings must be proved regular. Powell v. Brown, 1 Tyl. 285.

137. A tax deed, without proof of every essential pre-requisite, is void. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9.

138. To make a good title under a tax deed, the statute requisitions must be proved to have been strictly complied with, and a general recital in the deed that the collector "has in all things pursued the directions of the statute," is no evidence thereof. Brown v. Wright, 17 Vt. 97 (overruling Powell v. Brown, 1 Tyl. 285, and Parker v. Bixby, 2 Tyl. 466). Hall v. Collins, 4 Vt. 316. Reed v. Field, 15 Vt. 672. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 190.

2. Rate bill and warrant.

139. In order to support a collector's deed under the 30,000 dollars' tax act (2 Tol. St. 237), the rate-bill must be produced. Mix v. Whitlock, 1 Tyl. 80; and must be proved to have been deposited with the State Treasurer by Nov. 1, 1793. S. C. 1 Tyl. 305.

140. In a land tax sale, it is not necessary that the collector's rate bill be recorded. Spear v. Ditty, 8 Vt. 419.

141. Although not required in terms by the land tax act, yet it is considered that a tax bill must be furnished the collector by the committee, as showing the description of the delinquent lands, the names of the proprietors, the number of acres, and the amount of the tax; but the tax bill need not appear of record. Isaacs v. Wiley, 12 Vt. 674.

142. In support of a land-tax sale, it was held sufficient, prima facie at least, to establish that such a tax bill had been furnished to the collector as the law requires, that in his return he certified that the foregoing are true records and entries of his proceedings in the collection of the tax therein described, and this immediately followed a statement in which appeared the original grantees' names, the divisions, numbers, and the description of the lots, number of acres in the lots, and the tax. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

143. Under the statute of Oct., 1789, directing the treasurer to issue his warrant against the proprietors of certain towns to defray the expenses of surveying, the warrant must name the persons and the several sums by them to be paid. Fellows v. Tuttle, Brayt. 236.

144. Three persons named were empowered by act of the legislature to issue their warrant, under their hands, for the collection of a tax. Held, that the warrant signed by only two was void. Townsend v. Gray, 1 D. Chip. 127.

145. Where a title was made through a tax sale by a constable, as collector, and the warrant was directed to the constable of the town, without naming him;—Held, that his appointment must be proved by the record. Broughton v. Blackman, 1 D. Chip. 109; and see 1 D. Chip. 99. 1 Vt. 81, 87.

146. Where a land tax act requires the tax to be collected by a public officer—as, a sheriff or constable;—Held, that this is to be regarded as a duty superadded to his other duties, and that the direction of the warrant to him by his name of office, without naming him, and his proceedings and signature in such official capacity, and not as collector, are sufficient. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388. Bellows v. Elliot, 12 Vt. 569.

147. Where the warrant to the collector of the half-penny tax of 1791 misrecited the time of the passing of the act granting the tax;—Held, that the warrant had nothing to stand upon, and that the collector's deed of land sold under it conveyed no title. Brown v. Wright, 17 Vt. 97.

8. Advertisement; publication; record; certificate.

148. In the advertisement of sale for a proprietor's tax, the land being assessed by equal rights and for equal sums, it is not necessary to annex to the name of each delinquent the sum assessed; but it is sufficient to mention the amount of the tax on each right generally, and then insert a list of the delinquents. Wentworth v. Allen, 1 Tyl. 226.

149. The proceedings of the collector of a particular land tax were held invalid, and his deed to convey no title: (1), Because in his advertisement he omitted to fill the blank in the prescribed form with the place of the session of the legislature when the tax was assessed; (2), because the town clerk, in recording the advertisements, omitted to state the place where the newspaper containing the advertisements was printed—these being statute requirements. Culver v. Hayden, 1 Vt. 359. 17 Vt. 100.

150. The advertisement of a committee to superintend the expenditure of a land-tax, under G. S. c. 98, s. 4, need not name the town where the legislature sat which laid the tax. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

151. A collector's advertisements of particular land taxes must be signed by him as "collector." Spear v. Ditty, 9 Vt. 282. 22 Vt. 398.

152. The making of the advertisement of his sale by the collector of a particular land tax, is an official act, and if made before he is qualified by being sworn, his sale is void; and the date appearing upon the advertisement must be taken as prima facie evidence, at least, of the time of making it. Langdon v. Poor, 20 Vt. 13.

153. Where the advertisement of sale, as recorded, described the act granting the tax as assessing it "for the purpose of making and repairing and building bridges," whereas the act was "for the purpose of making and repairing roads and building bridges;"—Held, that a sale under such recorded advertisement was invalid. Id.

154. Otherwise, under a like act, where the word "bridges" was omitted in the advertisement;—the word roads comprehending bridges, but not vice versa. Isaacs v. Wiley, 12 Vt. 674.

155. The recording of a land tax advertisement at length as dated March 3, 1829, with a certificate that it was inserted in a certain newspaper, and also that the same advertisement, dated March 10, 1829, was inserted in certain other newspapers, was, on account of this discrepancy, held not to be a record at length of the second advertisements. Clark v. Tucker, 6 Vt. 181.

156. Under the land-tax act, where the collector's or committee's advertisement is the same in all the newspapers in which they are required to be published, it is a sufficient recording of them "at length," where the town clerk records one at length, and certifies on the record that the same was inserted and published in the other papers named, giving numbers and dates. Isaacs v. Shattuck, 12 Vt. 668.

157. A land tax statute required that advertisements of the collector and committee should be "published in the Vermont Republican, printed at Windsor"; and the record showed that they were published in "the Vermont Republican and American Yeoman published at Windsor." Held sufficient. Ib.

158. The collector of a land tax was at the same time town clerk. In recording in the town records, the committee's advertisements and a certificate of the newspapers in which they were published, he signed the same as collector. Held insufficient; that he should have been signed as town clerk. Ib.

159. By the statute of 1807 regulating the sale of lands for taxes, the town clerk was required to record the advertisements at length. Held, that such record made from a copy of the same, and certified by him on the sales book of the collector, was not a compliance with the statute, and that the collector's deed conveyed no title. Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 121. 22 Vt. 398.

160. On a sale of lands for payment of town taxes, if the town clerk neglects to certify upon the record that the advertisements had been published as required by law, the collector's deed conveys no title. Judevine v. Jackson, 18 Vt. 470.

161. Under a land tax sale, it is not necessary that the town clerk should [formally] certify the volumes, numbers and dates of the several papers in which the committee's and collector's advertisements are published, where all these particulars appear in his record [officially stated]. Spear v. Ditty, 8 Vt. 419.

162. What is a sufficient certificate of the committee's and collector's advertisement on record. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

4. Sale ; Return ; Record.

163. Where a collector's land tax sale was advertised to be held at a particular time and place named, and his return stated the sale as made on the day and in the town named, it will be presumed, in the absence of proof or presumption to the contrary, that the sale was made at the precise time and place specified. Spear v. Ditty, 8 Vt. 419.

164. Held, that a sheriff's deed of lands sold under the one cent per acre land tax act of 1812 conveyed no title, unless he left, within thirty days after sale, with the county clerk, if the town had not been organized, a true and attested copy of his proceedings, and unless the same were recorded by the clerk. Sumner v. Sherman, 18 Vt. 609. 18 Vt. 472.

165. Where a sale of lands for a particular land tax was in fact completed on a certain day, and the collector omitted to return and have his proceedings recorded in the town clerk's office for more than 30 days thereafter;—Held, that the proceedings were fatally defective; and that they were not cured by a formal adjournment of the sale to a future day, and then opening and dissolving the vendue, and then returning and recording his proceeding within 30 days thereafter. Taylor v. French, 19 Vt. 49. (Stat. Nov. 11. 1807. R. S. c. 86, s. 12. G. S. c. 98, s. 12.) Mead v. Mallet, 1 D. Chip. 289.

166. Proceedings under a land tax sale were held defective, because, (1), the collector did not return and have recorded in the town clerk's office his proceedings within 30 days after completing the sale; (2), he did not sign his return; (3), there was not a full record of the advertisements; (4), the town clerk did not certify that he made a record of the advertisements, &c., from the papers themselves. Taylor v. French.

167. A copy of vendue sales lodged in the county clerk's office, which carried internal evidence that it was not so lodged within 30 days next after the sales, and was not attested by the collector as a true copy, as required by the tax act, was held not evidence to sustain the tax deed. Richardson v. Dorris, 5 Vt. 9.

168. A vendue tax deed conveys no title, unless the proceedings are recorded according to the statute requirements. Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344. 25 Vt. 284.

169. Under the land tax act requiring the proceedings of the committee and collector to be recorded in "the proper office for recording of deeds," it is not required that they be recorded in the book of the record of deeds. They may well be recorded upon a separate book kept for that purpose. Isaacs v. Shattuck, 12 Vt. 668.

170. A list of lands not redeemed tied into the book of town land records, was treated as a proper record. Carbee v. Hopkins, 41 Vt. 250.

171. A town clerk's certificate, at the end of a record of the entire proceedings of a tax sale of lands, in this form: "Received for record and recorded and examined April 7, 1840. Attest—John Dodge, Town Clerk,"—was held to refer to the entire record. Ib.

172. A town clerk cannot be allowed to amend his records of a tax sale of lands so as to affect any right fixed by the proceedings as they stand recorded. Judevine v. Jackson, 18 Vt. 470. Langdon v. Poor, 30 Vt. 13.

173. To sustain a title by tax sale, the town clerk's certificate of the allowance of the committee's account, stating the sum, is not evidence. A copy of the record is required. Coit v. Wells, 2 Vt. 818.

174. Sundry objections to the sale of lands under the act of Nov. 11, 1807, laying a tax for erecting a state's prison, considered, and sale sustained, viz: (1). That the State treasurer's warrant was directed to the sheriff of the county without giving his name, and that in his proceedings he described himself as sheriff, and not as collector: (2). That the warrant merely named the towns and gores without stating that they were within his precinct, and without giving the reasons why the warrant was directed to the sheriff, rather than to the constable: (3). That there was an error in the record of the rate-bill, as to the title of the act—but the identity was apparent; also, in misstating the number of acres in some of the rights—but the amount of the tax was correctly stated; also, in the date of the sheriff's certificate—but that was set right by other parts of it: (4). That there was an error in the clerk's certificate as to the date of the record—but that was set right by parol evidence: (5). That the sale was at the county court house, instead of the town where the lands lay: (6). That the record of the town clerk did not show that the advertisement had been published;—but this act did not require a record of the publication, and the publication was proved by the production of the original newspapers: (7). That there was no evidence that the Secretary of State published the act in all the newspapers of the State, as directed by the act;—but this was merely directory and not essential to the validity of the tax; moreover, this would be presumed, as there was no evidence to the contrary. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388.

5. Other requirements—bond, oath, &c.

175. Publication of act. The publication of an act assessing a land tax is not essential to the validity of a sale under it, although the act directs such publication. Ib.

176. Bond. In land tax sales under the act of 1807, the collector must give bonds before he advertises his sales, or the sale will be invalid. Coit v. Wells, 2 Vt. 818. 12 Vt. 677.

177. This bond must be double the amount of the tax, which is determined by the amount of the rate bill delivered to the collector. If given for a less sum, the sale is invalid. Spear v. Ditty, 8 Vt. 419. 12 Vt. 676. Oatman v. Barney, 46 Vt. 594.

178. The bond required to be given by the collector under the particular land tax act of Nov 11, 1807, viz.: in "double the amount of the tax he is appointed to collect," is sufficient if in double the amount of the tax bill delivered to him, though not double the whole tax assessed. Ib.

179. The giving of the necessary bond by the collector of a particular land tax to the committee to expend the tax, may be proved by the receipt of the committee. Chandler v. Caswell, 17 Vt. 580.

180. Oath. Where a public and sworn officer of the law, as a constable or sheriff, is made collector of a land tax, the provisions of the general land tax act requiring the collector to be sworn, do not apply. Adams v. Jackson, 2 Aik. 145. Bellows v. Elliot, 12 Vt. 569. 22 Vt. 399.

181. A warrant for the collection of a land tax recited that the tax was assessed by the legislature, at a session named, stated the appointment of the collector (naming him), and was in the usual form defining and describing his duties. Immediately following the record of the warrant was a record of the certificate of the oath, which recited that the collector, naming him, personally appeared and was duly sworn to perform the duties assigned him as collector of said tax in and by the above warrant, as the law directs. Held, that this answered the requirements of the statute that he should be "duly sworn,"—no form of oath being prescribed. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

182. Committee's account. In the expenditure of a land tax, all questions respecting the faithful expenditure of the labor, and whether or not it was expended in "the best place," were held to be involved in, and concluded by, the allowance of the account of the committee by the county court. Fitch v. Flanders, 27 Vt. 608.

183. No title can be deduced from a land tax sale and collector's deed under G. S. c. 98, s. 1, unless it appears affirmatively that the committee's account had been approved by the county court before exposure of the lands for sale. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

184. Stats. 1787 and 1788. The validity of the proceedings in regard to particular land taxes, under the statutes of 1787 and 1788, considered. Brown v. Hutchinson, 11 Vt. 569.

185. Non-resident proprietor. The land of H, then a resident of Vermont, was set in his grand list. Shortly afterwards, he removed to a distant State to remain permanently absent, as was supposed, leaving no personal property; but he returned to a remote town in this State before the proceedings of the constable for the collection of the taxes. Held, that the constable was justified in treating the lands as those of a "non-resident proprietor," for the purpose of a sale of the lands for the taxes, provided that he was not aware of the return of H to this State, or the circumstances were not such as to affect him with notice thereof. Hutchins v. Moody, 84 Vt. 483 S. C. 87 Vt. 818.

6. The purchaser—right acquired, &c.

186. Who may not purchase. At an official sale of lands for taxes, the collector cannot personally, or through an agent, bid in the lands so as to affect the title of the owner. Such sale is absolutely void. Chandler v. Moulton, 83 Vt. 245; and see Woodbury v. Parker, 19 Vt. 353.

187. A party who is bound to pay the taxes upon land and prevent a vendue sale therefor, cannot acquire a title by such sale and conveyance, as against the right owner, but the vendue deed will be treated as void from the beginning. Blake v. Howe, 1 Aik. 306.

188. Where a widow conveyed, as in fee and with warranty, lands set to her as her dower, and a subsequent grantee, during her lifetime, bid in the lands on a tax sale and took a deed to himself;—Held, that as against the reversioner such grantee took only an estate for the life of the widow; that it was his duty to pay the tax; and that he could not set up the tax deed as against the reversioner. Lyman v. Hollister, 12 Vt. 407.

189. The right acquired. By a sale of land for taxes, the purchaser gets no greater or different right than the former owner had before the sale. He will get the land he buys, in severalty, or in common, as the former owner held it. Willard v. Strong, 14 Vt. 582. Sheafe v. Wait, 30 Vt. 735.

190. A tax collector's sale and deed of land was of so many acres of a certain lot. The lands were owned in common. Held, that the deed passed such an undivided interest in the lot as the number of acres sold bore to the whole number of acres in the lot. Id.

191. A tax laid by the legislature, in 1831, of three mills per acre on all the lands in Essex county for the building of a jail, was held not to be a tax against any person, nor to create any personal liability; and that the collector's deed (all the proceedings being regular) extinguished all prior claims, whether of title or possession, and gave good title to the purchaser at the tax sale. Brown v. Austin, 41 Vt. 262.

192. Covenant in deed. The collector of a particular land tax who executes a deed in his official capacity, according to the requisitions of the statute, i. e., containing a general covenant of warranty, is not liable on such covenant for failure of the title. Gibson v. Mussey, 11 Vt. 212. 35 Vt. 353.

193. Record of deed. A collector's deed under the Ives vendue of 1784, lodged in the proper office in due season, but not recorded until 1827, was held inoperative as against a deed of the original proprietor executed in 1797 and recorded in 1799. Allen v. Everts, 8 Vt. 10.

194. Possession under tax deed. Possession first taken and held for five years under a tax deed twenty-three years old, raises no presumption of title under the deed. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9.

195. Liability of town. In an action by the purchaser of land at a tax sale against a town for a default of its collector, by which no title passed by the collector's deed, but where the plaintiff had never taken possession, and there was no existing possession or seisin in another at the time of the sale and conveyance;—Held, that the damages recoverable were only the money paid and interest. Saulters v. Victory, 85 Vt. 351.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

I. IN LANDS.

1. Creation by deed.
2. Rights and remedies of tenants as to third persons.
3. Rights and remedies between themselves.

II. IN CHATTELS.

I. IN LANDS.

1. Creation by deed.

1. Construction. It seems, that a conveyance of a given number of acres of a lot to one man and another number to another, thus conveying the whole right to both, the intent to convey in severalty not appearing, creates a tenancy in common, with interests proportioned to the number of acres specified in the deeds. Preston v. Robinson, 24 Vt. 583; and see Sheafe v. Wait, 30 Vt. 735.

2. Where a deed was made to two persons for their own use forever, with a condition that they should pay all the grantor's debts, or the deed should be void;—Held, that the deed did not create a trust estate, nor express an intention to create a joint tenancy; and that therefore under the statute (G. S. c. 64, ss. 2, 3), this was a tenancy in common. Lamb v. Clark, 29 273.

2. Rights and remedies of tenants as to third persons.

3. Action by one tenant. One tenant in common may recover the whole land in eject-ment against a stranger to title, and hold possession both for himself and his co-tenants. Pomeroy v. Mills, 3 Vt. 279. S. C. Id. 410. Coit v. Wells, 2 Vt. 818. University of Vt. v. Reynolds, 3 Vt. 558. 10 Vt. 18. Johnson v. Tilden, 5 Vt. 426. House v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 172. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 408. Robinson v. Sherwin, 36 Vt. 69. Park v. Pratt, 38 Vt. 545, 550.

4. This law applies to the owner of a proprietor's right, in whole or in part, to undivided lands of a township, as against a stranger. Pomeroy v. Mills. Johnson v. Tilden. House v. Fuller. Chandler v. Spear. University of Vt. v. Reynolds. Coit v. Wells.

5. In such case, as also in trespass qua. clau., he may recover the whole damages. Hibbard v. Foster, 24 Vt. 542. Bigelow v. Rising, 42 Vt. 678.

6. But in trespass to personal property, he can recover only for the damage done to his own interest. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388, 408. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 66.

7. The right of one tenant to recover to the extent of his interest is not affected by the fact that the right of his co-tenant is barred by the statute of limitations. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165.

8. —by all.—G. S. c. 40, s. 13. Tenants in common may, by agreement and for convenience, occupy distinct portions of their common land in severalty, without affecting their ultimate rights in the whole as tenants in common. In such case, and where the possession by each is not adverse to the others, all may join in an action against a stranger for an injury to the possession of either portion. Johnson v. Goodwin, 27 Vt. 288. 33 Vt. 612.

3. Rights and remedies between themselves.

9. Conveyance. One tenant in common cannot convey by metes and bounds a part of the estate held in common, where this operates to the injury of his co-tenants. Such conveyance does not prevent a subsequent partition, irrespective of it, by order of court upon the application of the other co-tenants. Held, that such deed was so far void and inoperative, that the grantee was not entitled to notice of proceedings for partition taken in the probate court. Broughton v. Howe, 6 Vt. 266.

10. Trespass. There was an irregular levy of execution upon an undivided interest in a farm, and a conveyance of the interest so levied upon, and the grantee took possession. Held, that, prima facie, his possession was according to his deed, and that he could not maintain trespass against the owner of the remaining interest, his co-tenant, for a subsequent entry which did not exclude him. Wilkins v. Burton, 5 Vt. 76.

11. One heir to an estate cannot sustain trespass against a co-heir for an injury to their undivided lands. Owen v. Foster, 18 Vt. 268.

12. Trespass qua. clau. cannot be maintained by a tenant in common of land against his co-tenant for entering upon the common land, although under a claim of exclusive ownership, and cutting and carrying away all the timber. Wait v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 190; and see Booth v. Adams, 11 Vt. 156.

13. Where one tenant in common occupies a particular part of the common property by agreement of the other tenants, this is so far a severance in fact as to permit him to maintain trespass against them for the same acts which would constitute trespass in a stranger, although the length of such occupation would be insufficient to mature an absolute legal title in severalty. O'Hear v. De Goesbriand, 33 Vt. 593.

14. Adverse title. The tenant of a tenant in common is not precluded from taking a conveyance from the other tenants in common of their shares. Catlin v. Kidder, 7 Vt. 12.

15. One who takes possession under a deed which makes him a tenant in common with another, cannot set up against the other an adverse title in a stranger. Braintree v. Battles, 6 Vt. 395.

16. Where one tenant in common of lands purchased the premises at a tax sale and took a deed of the whole from the collector;—Held, that this was but a discharge of a common incumbrance and of his own legal liability for the benefit of himself and his co-tenant, and that he acquired no title by the deed to the share of his co-tenant. Downer v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464.

17. Ejectment—Ouster. A tenant in common of the use and occupation of land whereof his co-tenant has the fee, does not, by a perversion of his right and an actual ouster of his co-tenant, forfeit his interest, but his co-tenant may sue him in ejectment, and recover according to his own interest. Warren v. Henshaw, 2 Aik. 141.

18. One tenant in common may acquire title against his co-tenant by fifteen years' adverse possession; but this presupposes an ouster; otherwise, the possession of one is, in judgment of law, the possession of both. Owen v. Foster, 18 Vt. 268.

19. In case of an actual ouster of a tenant in common by his co-tenant, no demand to be let into possession is necessary in order to sustain ejectment; and the same proof that puts the statute of limitations in operation, creates an ouster. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165.

20. Where one tenant in common took from a stranger a deed to himself of his co-tenant's share, and set it up;—Held, that this was such an ouster of the co-tenant as entitled him to maintain ejectment for his share. Catlin v. Kidder, 7 Vt. 12.

21. A disseisor of lands held in common afterwards took a deed from one of the tenants in common of his interest, and continued in possession. Held, that the other tenant in common could not thereafter maintain ejectment against him, without a fresh ouster, or disseisin. House v. Fuller, 13 Vt. 165.

22. The plaintiff and defendant being joint tenants under a lease reserving to the lessor the right of re-entry for non-payment of the rent reserved, the lessor conveyed to the plaintiff all his interest in the premises, certain rent being then in arrear. Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain ejectment because of the rent in arrear. Birney v. Birney, 15 Vt. 186.

23. The sole possession of one tenant in common is not presumed to be adverse to his co-tenant, but to be held in the right of both. To render void a deed to a third person from a tenant out of possession, such tenant, or his grantee, must have notice, at the time of the conveyance, that such holding is adverse. It is not enough that it was intended to be adverse. Buckmaster v. Needham, 22 Vt. 617. 10 Vt. 593.

24. Where land is owned in joint tenancy, or tenancy in common, and one tenant takes a deed of the whole, and takes and maintains exclusive possession and makes exclusive claim to the whole under his deed, this is a sufficient ouster of his co-tenant to entitle the latter to maintain ejectment to recover his share, without a demand to be let into possession. Johnson v. Tilden, 5 Vt. 426. Pomeroy v. Mills, 3 Vt. 410. Carpenter v. Thayer, 15 Vt. 552. Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 319.

25. Where one joint owner of lands took and maintained exclusive possession of the lands, and asserted an exclusive claim and title to the whole adversely, and where [as in this case] he contracted to sell and convey the whole;—Held, that this was such evidence of an actual ouster of his co-tenant, as that he might elect to treat it as an ouster, and could maintain ejectment, without a demand to be let into possession. Carpenter v. Thayer, 15 Vt. 552. 30 Vt. 324.

26. The entry upon and taking possession of lands by one joint owner and his exclusive occupation of them for fifteen years, claiming title to the whole, was held not to be such an ouster of his co-tenant as to give title by adverse possession, where it did not appear that such co-tenant had notice of such exclusive and hostile claim. Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 319; and see Leach v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 195. Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 525. Catlin v. Kidder, 7 Vt. 12.

27. Where there is no adverse holding, the possession of real estate is deemed to be in him who has the title; and when one joint owner is in possession of the whole, the presumption is that he is keeping possession not only for himself but for his co-tenant, according to their several rights; and the other joint owner has a right so to understand, until he has notice to the contrary. Id.

28. A conveyance by one joint tenant, or tenant in common, of all his interest in real estate, though the land is described in such a manner as to pass the whole under the deed if the grantor had owned the whole, is not notice of itself to the other joint owner of any such exclusive claim to the land as to oust him of his legal seisin in the land. He has a right to suppose that by such a deed, both the grantor and grantee understand it to convey the real interest the grantor owns in the land. He may treat the possession of the grantee under such a deed, until notice to the contrary, as a holding by the grantee in his character and right as joint tenant, or tenant in common with the other joint owners of the premises, and for their mutual benefit. Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 525. Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 319. Leach v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 195.

29. The taking of a deed of land by one tenant in common from a third person, and spreading the same upon the record, has no effect towards constituting such an ouster of his co-tenant as will lay the foundation for the commencement of an adverse possession against him, unless accompanied and followed by a hostile claim of which such co-tenant has knowledge, and by acts of possession not only inconsistent with, but in exclusion of, the continuing right of such co-tenant in the premises. Holley v. Hawley. Leach v. Beattie.

30. Devisees. An entry or acts of possession of one of several devisees of the same estate are those of a tenant in common, until distribution made; and his right is subject to the results of administration according to the will,—as, the payment of debts; and until then, such acts are not operative towards gaining a title by adverse possession. Ames v. Beekley, 48 Vt. 395.

31. Misuse. If one tenant in common misuses that which is in common with another, he is answerable to that other. For an injury less than a destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common, an action on the case, ex delicto, is the appropriate remedy. McLellan v. Jenness, 43 Vt. 183.

32. The plaintiff, the defendant and three others owned a main aqueduct, each owning the right to one-fifth of the water passing therein, which they took to their respective premises by branch aqueducts, which each owned separately. In an action on the case alleging that the defendant so maliciously and wantonly made use of his own branch aqueduct as to prevent the plaintiff from enjoying the benefit of the water, the court charged (among other things) that if the defendant knowingly suffered his family to use or waste more than one-fifth of the water, for the purpose of annoying or injuring the plaintiff, or with a wanton disregard or indifference to the inconvenience it might occasion the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had thereby suffered damage, the defendant was liable. Held correct—understanding the word suffer, as used in the charge, to mean allow or permit; and whether a voluntary or a negligent permission, is not material. Id.

32. Remedies in chancery. The character and extent of the respective rights of tenants in common and the proper mode of exercising them, are familiar and proper subjects of chancery jurisdiction. Lyon v. McLaughlin, 82 Vt. 423.

33. Repairs and improvements. One tenant in common has no implied lien for repairs, as against a levy upon the interest of his co-tenant. Galusha v. Sinclear, 3 Vt. 394.

34. Where one tenant in common cleared a portion of the common land, and it did not appear that this was done with the assent or knowledge of the other, nor that the premises were improved in value thereby;—Held, in an action of account, that the expense of the clearing was not chargeable against the other tenant. Kidder v. Rixford, 16 Vt. 169.

35. On partition by arbitration and subsequent conveyances between A and B, tenants in common, there was set to A a parcel upon which B had before sowed grain, and the crop was then growing, and A afterwards harvested it. Held, that, in adjusting their accounts in the action of account, there should be allowed to B the expense of sowing the grain. Id.

36. Where two had an interest in a spring of water and an aqueduct, held that one could not cut off the supply of water to the other for refusal to contribute towards the necessary expense of repairs. Coolidge v. Hager, 43 Vt. 9.

37. Partition—Remainder man. Tenants for life, holding in common, cannot make a partition which shall bind those entitled in remainder. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

38. Accounting. Where the occupancy of one tenant in common is beneficial and at a profit to him, and is entire and exclusive, he is bound, under G. S. c. 41, s. 1, to account to his co-tenant for what he has received by such occupancy more than his just proportion; and this, without an agreement to that effect. Hayden v. Merrill, 44 Vt. 336. Winsall v. Wilkins, 5 Vt. 87.

39. The plaintiff and defendant were tenants in common of a tract of land covered with young and growing timber. The defendant cut off the timber from a parcel of the land, established a race-course thereon, and continued in exclusive occupation thereof at a profit, until the termination of the tenancy. Held, that under G. S. c. 41, s. 1, the defendant was liable in an action of account for what he had received above his just proportion of the estate. Hayden v. Merrill.

40. A and B who had owned and occupied, as tenants in common, land subject to an annual rent, and had divided the profits from year to year between them, sold the land and divided the avails between them, and promised the purchaser to pay all rent then in arrear. A, being afterwards called upon, paid all the arrears of rent. Held, that B was liable to pay him the one-half, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit. Fisher v. Kinaston, 18 Vt. 489.

See ACTION OF ACCOUNT.

As to levy of execution upon estate of tenant in common, see EXECUTION, V., 8.

As to partition, see PARTITION.

II. IN CHATTELS.

41. Conversion—Action. A destruction of a personal chattel by one tenant in common is a conversion for which his co-tenant may maintain trover. Tubbs v. Richardson, 6 Vt. 442.

42. The sale by one tenant in common of the whole property to a stranger, is not such a destruction of the property as amounts to a conversion. Id. 12 Vt. 685. 14 Vt. 221. 15 Vt. 707. 16 Vt. 381. 38 Vt. 123. Sanborn v. Morrill, 15 Vt. 700. 26 Vt. 427. See Lyman v. Dow, 25 Vt. 405. 45 Vt. 858.

43. A and B owned a piano, as tenants in common. The defendant, having no possession or title, sold an undivided half to B, and B removed the piano from the State. In an action of trover by A,—Held, that as this was no conversion by B, no action lay against the defendant. Bates v. Marsh, 38 Vt. 122.

44. The sale of an entire chattel owned in common, upon an attachment or execution against one of the owners, is a conversion of the interest of the co-tenant, for which he may maintain trover. Ladd v. Hill, 4 Vt. 164. 15 Vt. 509. Bradley v. Arnold, 16 Vt. 882. White v. Morton, 22 Vt. 15. 26 Vt. 427.

45. Non-joinder. In actions ex delicto, the non-joinder of a joint owner as plaintiff must be pleaded in abatement, in order to defeat the action. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57. Hall v. Adams, 1 Aik. 166. S. C. 2 Aik. 180.

46. Damages. In actions merely personal, as, trespass de bonis, one tenant in common can recover damages only to the extent of his interest in the whole damages. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388. 24 Vt. 546. 35 Vt. 66.

47. Attachment. The attachment of a chattel held in common, on a process against one of the tenants in common, as his sole property, and the taking of the entire and exclusive possession to the dispossession of the other tenant, do not give the other tenant the right to an action of trespass or trover against the attaching creditor, or officer. Welch v. Clark, 12 Vt. 681.

48. Where the interest of one tenant in common of personal property is attached, and the attachment is dissolved, a return of the property to either one of the joint owners is a return to both, and relieves the officer from liability to either, and both. Frost v. Kellogg, 28 Vt. 308. Gassett v. Sargeant, 26 Vt. 424.

49. Liabilities of joint owner. A and B were owners of a saw mill of which A had the entire management and control, when A agreed, for the period of two years, to saw lumber for the defendant at certain prices stipulated. Within the two years A died, and his interest in the mill passed to his widow, who, with B, ran the mill and sawed lumber for the defendant. In an action by B and the widow to recover for the sawing done after the death of A;—Held, that, simply as joint owner or tenant in common of the mill with B, A had no authority to bind B by such contract as to the price of sawing; that such contract did not bind the widow, who simply succeeded to A's title in the mill; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover what the sawing was reasonably worth, irrespective of the contract with A of which they had no knowledge. Winslow v. Fraser, 30 Vt. 522.

50. A owned a stable, and B a livery stock of horses and carriages. A purchased of B an undivided half of the stock, and B sent D with the whole stock to A's stable, recommending D as a suitable person to have the charge of such business. D took the charge, and procured of the plaintiffs feed for the horses, on the credit of A and B. Held, that they were jointly liable therefor, irrespective of the question whether they were partners as between themselves, or as to the public, inasmuch as there was nothing in the case to show that either was absolved from the obligation to maintain and care for this joint property. Wilson v. Henry, 44 Vt. 470.

TENDER.

1. Requisites. In the absence of the party to whom, by the terms of the contract, a tender is required to be made, the tender, to be good, must be made before dark ("the evening") of the day on which the contract falls due; otherwise, if the party is present. Sweet v. Harding, 19 Vt. 587.

2. A tender of a gross sum upon several demands, without designating the amount tendered upon each, is sufficient. So, a defendant may plead generally a tender to several counts for different demands. Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440.

3. In an action of book account a tender was held good, where, before suit, the true sum due was, in bank bills, placed on a table in the room where the plaintiff was, and he was told the amount and that it was ready for him, and he might have taken it if he would, though it was not formally presented, or handed out to him, where he made no objection to the kind of money offered, and the amount due was, after suit, placed in the hands of the auditor and was brought into court. Curtiss v. Greenbanks, 24 536.

4. The defendant desiring to make a tender, said to the plaintiff as he was passing, "I want to tender you this money before Mr. Dodge, for labor you have done for me,"—at the same time holding in his hands money enough to pay the plaintiff's claim, but naming no sum. The plaintiff kept along with his team, making no reply. Held, that this was not a valid tender. Knight v. Abbott, 80 Vt. 577.

5. Condition. A tender with a condition annexed to its acceptance, is invalid; as, that the creditor shall give a receipt, or surrender a security or obligation upon which the money is tendered. Holton v. Brown, 18 Vt. 224; or, that if received, it shall be in full payment of the claim. Draper v. Hitt, 43 Vt. 439. Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 201. Forster v. Drew, 39 Vt. 51. ACCORD, 17, et seq.

6. A tender was made in this form: "I tender this sum [named] as the balance due on the note." Held, that this was a good tender, and not an offer upon condition, and that the receipt of the money did not constitute, in law, an accord and satisfaction. Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 201. By Pierpoint, J.: This was merely an assertion of what the party offering the money claimed, and an identification of the demand upon which he made the tender. It is simply saying, "I tender this sum, it being all that is due upon the note." Id. 204.

7. The plaintiff had a claim against the defendant growing out of a transaction about some oats, on which there was really due not exceeding $170, though the plaintiff claimed more. The defendant had a book account against the plaintiff on which was due $41.78. The defendant had offered the plaintiff $170, saying he tendered that upon the oat contract, and the book account might stand, or, the plaintiff might take $180 of the money, and the defendant would discharge the account. The plaintiff declined to take the money, saying there was not enough. Afterwards the defendant tendered the plaintiff $180, "supposing and telling the plaintiff that if he took the $180, it closed the whole business; and if he took the $170 it settled the oat business and left the account standing." In an action on book,—

Held, that this last was not a conditional offer, but a good tender of the balance due; that what was said was but an explanation of the defendant's claim and the purpose of the tender, and what each tender was intended to cover; and was not equivalent to saying, that if the plaintiff received the money, he must receive it as closing matters between them. Foster v. Drew, 39 Vt. 51.

8. Effect. A tender in settlement of a balance due on a particular claim, is, in law, an admission of the legality of the claim, denying only the amount due. Woodward v. Cutter, 33 Vt. 49.

9. Money tendered and paid into court, not sufficient in amount, belongs to the defendant, and should not be deducted in making up the judgment. Meeker v. Hurd, 81 Vt. 639.

10. Keeping tender good. A tender of the sum due on execution entitles the debtor to relief by audita querela. But such tender must be kept good and the money be brought into court; and unless this be averred in the complaint, it is ill on demurrer. Perry v. Ward, 20 Vt. 92.

11. If a suit be brought before a justice court, money tendered must be produced in that court; and if the action is there defended exclusively on other grounds, or a judgment submitted to and an appeal taken by the defendant without insisting on the tender, it will be too late afterwards to set up that defense. Chipman v. Bates, 5 Vt. 143. 18 Vt. 336.

12. The tender, in such case, must be pleaded in the justice court and the money be there produced. A mere offer to produce it, though the plaintiff refused to receive it, was held not to be sufficient. Griffin v. Tyson, 17 Vt. 35.

13. It is not necessary, in order to keep good a tender of money, that the party should keep the identical money offered, ready to be paid over on demand, or into court; but he may use it as his own, being ready to pay the debt in current money when requested, or into court—herein differing from a tender of specific articles. Curtiss v. Greenbanks, 24 Vt. 536.

14. Demand of tender. A demand of money tendered, in order to avoid the tender, must be of the precise sum tendered. If of a different sum, as, "of the amount due and owing," the debtor is not bound to regard it. Thetford v. Hubbard, 23 Vt. 440.

15. Tender superseded. Where one has wholly incapacitated himself from performing a contract on his part, he shall take no advantage of the informality of a tender by the other party. Morton v. Wells, 1 Tyl. 381.

16. The necessity of a legal tender may be superseded when, upon an offer to pay, the other party refuses to receive. Dickinson v. Dutcher, Brayt. 104.

17. Where a demand is necessary to give a right of action, such demand, accompanied with a claim for more than is demandable and a refusal to receive less, is nugatory, and renders a tender unnecessary. Russell v. Ormsbee, 10 Vt. 274. Gragg v. Hull, 41 Vt. 217.

18. Where an award was that the defendant should make out and deliver to the plaintiff a deed of certain land and give possession of the same by a certain day named;—Held, that the plaintiff's refusal to accept the deed, when duly tendered, was a renunciation of all rights incident to and growing out of the deed, and that the defendant was not bound to go further and tender possession. Preston v. Whitcomb, 11 Vt. 47.

19. Concurrent acts. Where parties are required to do concurrent acts, those upon one side being the consideration for those on the other, it is not required that the one party, in order to secure a right of action against the other, should make a formal and express tender. All that is required, either in pleading or proof, is, that the party claiming a breach upon the other part should show that he made no default himself; that he was ready and willing to perform his part of the undertaking; that this was well understood by the other party, but that he, notwithstanding, refused to perform his part of the contract. Redfield, C. J., in Cobb v. Hall, 33 Vt. 238.

20. Thus, under a contract to convey lands for a certain price to be paid, it is not necessary, in order to an action, that the price should be tendered upon the one side, or the deed upon the other, if the other party refuses to perform. The law never requires a useless ceremony. Id. 233. Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 87.

21. Rescission. Where the purchaser of goods has a right to rescind on the ground that they are different in kind or class from those contracted for, and he has used a part of them before discovering the difference, he must, in order to a rescission, not only return the goods unsold, but actually tender the value of the part used. Hoadley v. House, 32 Vt. 179.

22. Specific articles. A contract absolute for the payment or delivery of specific articles, at a time and place named in the contract, requires for its performance an actual tender at the time and place named. Such tender may be made, though the payee neglect to attend; and the effect of it is to discharge the contract and to vest the property tendered in the payee. Hence, a plea of readiness, or offer to perform, but that the payee was not present to take delivery, is ill. Barney v. Bliss, 1 D. Chip. 399. 12 Vt. 581. McConnel v. Hall, Brayt. 223. 14 Vt. 461.

23. Where the defendant in the absence of the plaintiff, but at the proper day and place, set apart property in fulfillment of a contract of which the plaintiff was the legal assignee, and known to be so by the defendant;—Held, that the plaintiff thereby became the owner of the property with right of possession, and could maintain trover for a subsequent conversion on the same day by the defendant. Seward v. Hefin, 20 Vt. 144.

24. The defendant gave his note to the plaintiff payable in good, well-finished plows, at his shop, in the month of February. On the last day of the preceding January he set aside such plows, at the place named, to the amount of the note, and for the purpose of paying it, marking each plow with the name of the plaintiff; and the plows were kept there in that condition and for that purpose throughout the whole month of February. Held, that a second turning out of the property, in direct terms, during the month of February, would have been a useless act; and that this was a tender of the plows and a payment of the note, in the month of February. Gilman v. Moore, 14 Vt. 457. 16 Vt. 30.

25. To a note payable "in leather," the tender of leather unsealed, which by law is required to be sealed before being offered for sale, or the tender of leather which is sealed as "bad," is not sufficient. Elkins v. Parkhurst, 17 Vt. 105.

26. Tender after suit. The statute allowing a tender of the demand sued for and costs, after the commencement of the action to three days before the sitting of the court, &c. (G. S. c. 125, s. 7), was not intended to extend the right to other actions than those in which a tender might be made at common law; but the object was to allow a tender after action brought. Green v. Shurtliff, 19 Vt. 592. It does not apply to an action of trover. Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt. 188.

27. In an action on a bond conditioned to convey,—Held, that after breach and suit brought, the tender of a deed, with the costs of suit, was not admissible in defense, or in mitigation of damages. Boardman v. Keeler, 21 Vt. 77.

28. Where a tender of amends and accrued costs was made after suit brought and after the service of a subpoena, and too late reasonably to countermand the attendance of the subpoenaed witnesses;—Held, that a tender was insufficient which did not include the costs of such witnesses as attended the court under the subpoena, although their fees had not been paid nor tendered them. Smith v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 138.

29. A party to whom a tender is made, in such case, is not bound to inform the other what costs he claims, if not inquired of. Ib.

30. The statute does not allow a tender after judgment by a justice and an appeal taken, and before entry of the appeal in the county court. A tender, so made and accepted, only operates as a payment of so much towards the debt and accrued costs. Babcock v. Oulser, 46 Vt. 715.

31. Pleading tender. A tender need not be pleaded, but may be given in evidence under the general issue, where a tender is collateral to the action, operating to extinguish or suspend the plaintiff's title to the specific property sued for; as, in ejectment upon a mortgage (Powers v. Powers, 11 Vt. 262; McDaniels v. Reed, 17 Vt. 674); nor, where the tender, as authorized by statute, was after suit commenced and before entry in court; nor, in the action of book account, need a tender be pleaded. Woodcock v. Clark, 18 Vt. 333.

32. In scire facias upon a recognizance for the payment of intervening damages and costs occasioned by an appeal, a tender cannot be pleaded as to the intervening damages, they being unliquidated; but a tender of the costs may be pleaded, and the assignment of intervening damages traversed. A plea of tender to the whole declaration, in such case, is ill. Green v. Shurtliff, 19 Vt. 592. Holmes v. Woodruff, 20 Vt. 97. 27 Vt. 577.

33. A tender in an action for damages (as in case, or trespass) under G. S. c. 25, s. 44, cannot be pleaded in bar to the jury, but is to be considered by the court only in the matter of the taxation of costs. Adams v. Morgan, 39 Vt. 302. Smith v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 138.

34. Delivery of specific things under special rule of court. A court of common law jurisdiction has authority (as, in an action of trover or trespass de bonis asportatis) to permit, by order, a return of the property sued for in mitigation of damages, and, on payment of costs, to order that the plaintiff shall thereafter proceed at his peril as to subsequent costs. Rut. & Wash. R. Co. v. Bank of Middlebury, 32 Vt. 639. Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt. 188. Yale v. Saunders, 16 Vt. 248 and note. Bucklin v. Beals, 38 Vt. 653.

35. Such power, though discretionary, should not be exercised where it would deprive the plaintiff of full reimbursement, or where the conduct of the defendant has been willful. Ib. But the fact that the plaintiff claims damages beyond the value of the property, is not a sufficient objection to the granting of the order. 32 Vt. 639.

36. In trover, a tender of the property sued for was disallowed as a defense, where the conversion was willful and the property was essentially injured, and no rule was seasonably moved for. Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt. 188.

37. In trover for certain railroad bonds and after one trial and a review, the defendant was permitted, under a special rule, to deliver the bonds into court for the plaintiff in mitigation of damages. Rut. & Wash. R. Co. v. Bank of Middlebury, 82 Vt. 689.

See BOOK ACCOUNT, VIII.

TERMS OF COURT.

1. Adjourned term. An adjourned term of court must be considered as a separate and distinct term for the purpose of entry of causes, in all cases where entries are proper at such term. Pearl v. Allen, 2 Tyl. 311.

2. A term of court holden by adjournment, under the statutes of this State, must be considered a new and distinct term, and not a continuation of the former stated term. Hoar v. Jail Commissioners, 2 Vt. 402.

3. Next term. In reference to appeals, the expression "next term" has been uniformly held to exclude a present or existing session of the court appealed to, and to carry the appeal to the next succeeding term. Shelburn v. Eldridge, 10 Vt. 123; and see Woodward v. Spear, 10 Vt. 420.

4. A county court writ was made returnable at a term "next to be holden on the second Tuesday," &c. The term appointed by law was the first Tuesday, &c. Held, that the time was sufficiently definite without stating the day, and that a statement of the wrong day might be rejected as surplusage; and the writ was allowed to be amended in this particular, after a plea in abatement filed. Dean v. Swift, 11 Vt. 381.

5. By the act of 1806, the county court was required to appoint turnpike inspectors "at their session next following the first day of December, annually." Held, that it was not improper or illegal to appoint them at a term commencing on the last Tuesday of November, where the session continued after the first day of December. State v. Bosworth, 13 Vt. 402.

6. General term. A cause is not in the supreme court until it has been entered at a fixed county term. It cannot be entered at the general term, unless ordered there by the supreme court sitting in and for a county. State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 14.

7. A petition for a new trial cannot be made returnable to the general term of the supreme court, though the cause be there pending on exceptions. S. Royallton Bank v. Colt, 31 Vt. 415.

8. Particular term named. An averment in an indictment that, among the pleas of a certain term named, "a certain issue was duly joined," was held as applying to the state in which the pleadings were at that term found, and not to the act of joining the issue; and that the averment was sustained by the record showing the issue actually joined at a previous term, but standing joined at the term named, and then tried. State v. Davidson, 12 Vt. 800.

THREATS.

1. Criminal. Any threats which disturb the public peace are made an offence by the statute against breaches of the peace. A threat, in order to violate that sense of security which constitutes the public peace, must be of some grievous bodily harm, put forth in a desperate and reckless manner, accompanied by acts showing a formed intent to execute them; must be intended to put the person threatened in fear of bodily harm, and must produce that effect, and must be of a character calculated to produce that effect upon a person of ordinary firmness. State v. Benedict, 11 Vt. 236. (Bennett, J., dissenting.) 23 Vt. 338.

2. Actionable. To warrant an action for writing a letter to the plaintiff giving information willfully false, and with a malicious design to annoy the plaintiff and drive him out of town, the loss or inconvenience sustained must be the direct and reasonable result of the letter and of a reliance upon it; and must consist of something more than mental suffering and annoyance, and the trouble and expense of discovering the authorship of the letter. Taft v. Taft, 40 Vt. 229.

3. Threats of bodily hurt which occasion such interruption or inconvenience as is a pecuniary damage, are actionable—as, a threat of imprisonment producing fear, whereby a party is rendered unable to attend to his usual business, and suffers expense and loss. A mere vain fear is not sufficient; and the declaration must show some just cause of fear producing pecuniary damage. (Sufficiency of declaration considered on demurrer.) Grimes v. Gates, 47 Vt. 594.

4. In case for threats made in letters, the words need not be set out in the declaration, but only the substance of the threat. Id.

TIME.

1. Month. The word month, as used in the statutes of this State, means a calendar month, unless otherwise expressed. Kimball v. Lamson, 2 Vt. 188.

2. Computation of time. In the service of writs and executions, advertising property, warnings of town meetings, &c., it has always been practiced, in reckoning a given number of days, to exclude the day of the act. Redfield,

J., in Pratt v. Swanton, 15 Vt. 147; and see Allen v. Carty, 19 Vt. 65. Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 449.

3. The rule for computing time for the calling of a school meeting is like that which prevails in case of the service of process; either the day of posting the notice, or the day set for the meeting, will be counted. Mason v. School Dist. Brookfield, 20 Vt. 487.

4. Seven days' notice of school district meetings being required by statute;—Held, that a notice dated the first for a meeting to be held the seventh day of the same month was not sufficient. Hunt v. School Dist. Norwich, 14 Vt. 800.

5. A town meeting warned on the first to be held on the twelfth day of the same month, was held to be on but eleven days' notice, and irregular. Pratt v. Swanton, 15 Vt. 147.

6. In computing the thirty days from the day when the plaintiff is first entitled to an execution (with reference to charging property attached), the first day is excluded. So, in computing the sixty days of the life of an execution, the day of the date is excluded. Allen v. Carty, 19 Vt. 65. 20 Vt. 661. 40 Vt. 437.

7. In computing the "sixty days from the time of rendering final judgment," within which, by G. S. c. 83, s. 62, the execution must be returned non est in order to charge the bail, the day on which the judgment was rendered is excluded. Mussy v. Howard, 42 Vt. 23.

8. G. S. c. 53, s. 19, requires the taking of an appeal from commissioners to be at the time of returning their report, "or within twenty days after such return." Held, that in computing the twenty days, the day of the return should be excluded. Robinson v. Robinson, 32 Vt. 788.

9. By statute, a writ of review must be brought "within three years next after the rendition of the judgment." The judgment was rendered May 9, 1840, and the writ of review was brought May 9, 1843. Held, that the writ was seasonably brought—the day of the judgment being excluded in the computation; and quære, as to the distinctions taken between computing from the thing done, and from and after the day of the fact. French v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 341.

10. Where a party is to give notice to another in a distant town within three days, the deposit in the postoffice of a letter containing such notice on the third day and after the departure of the mail of that day, so that the letter does not reach its address until the next day, is not a notice in due time. Field, Admr., v. Mann, 42 Vt. 61.

11. Fractions of a day. The rule that in law there are no fractions of a day, is applicable to transactions of a public character—such as legislative acts, or public laws, or such judicial proceedings as are matters of record; but is never applied in mere private transactions involving rights between individuals; there, the true time when an act was done, or a right or authority was acquired, may always be shown. Courser v. Powers, 34 Vt. 517. In re Welman, 20 Vt. 653.

12. In an action against a justice of the peace for an arrest under a warrant claimed to have been issued before he had taken his official oath, where it appeared that such oath was taken on the day of issuing the warrant;—Held, that the true time of the day could be shown—as, that it was after the issuing of the warrant. Courser v. Powers.

TOWNS.

- I. ORGANIZATION.
- II. POWERS AND LIMITATIONS; LIABILITIES.
- III. TOWN MEETINGS.
- IV. TOWN OFFICERS.
- V. DIVIDING AND ANNEXING TOWNS.

I. ORGANIZATION.

1. The legal organization of a town, at and after a particular time, may be presumed from the fact that at that time it had appointed town officers, and was conducting its affairs as an organized town. This is sufficient prima facie proof of due organization. Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 416.

II. POWERS AND LIMITATIONS; LIABILITIES.

2. Power to acquire title. A town, like an individual, can acquire title to land by adverse possession. Boothe v. Coventry, 4 Vt. 295.

3. —to defend suit. A town may vote a tax to prosecute or defend a suit in which it is interested, although the suit is between third persons. Briggs v. Whipple, 6 Vt. 95.

4. —to inoculate. A town may lay a tax to defray expenses incurred by the selectmen in inoculating with kine-pox, to prevent the spread of small-pox, under the statute of 1797. (Slade's Stat. 493.) Hazen v. Strong, 2 Vt. 427. 11 Vt. 422.

5. —to take bond. A town may take a bond, voluntarily given, conditioned to save the town harmless from the support of certain persons therein named, though not at the time chargeable as paupers. Pawlet v. Strong, 2 Vt. 442. Williston v. White, 11 Vt. 40.

6. —to contract with turnpike company. A town and a turnpike company may contract with each other that the company shall support, for a term of years, a highway bridge to be used by the company, and that the town shall, in consideration thereof, pay the company an annual sum. Royalton v. R. & W. Turnpike Co., 14 Vt. 811.

7. —to sell office of constable. A town, in open town meeting, put up for sale at auction the office of first constable, which was bid in by the defendant. He was then elected to the office, and gave his note to the town for the purchase price. Held, that this was authorized by G. S. c. 15, s. 82, and the note was upon valid consideration. Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440. 32 Vt. 728. See 32 Vt. 827.

8. —to bring suit. Sundry persons associated for the purpose of killing wolves deposited their State bounty money with the defendant, who afterwards gave his note therefor running to the selectmen of sundry towns. Held, that an action lay thereon (by Stat. of 1817), in the names of such towns. Middlebury v. Case, 6 Vt. 165.

9. On a bond given to the selectmen of a town, for the benefit of the town, an action lies in the name of the town. Fairfax v. Soule, 10 Vt. 154.

10. —to protect their property from fire. Where a town, in its corporate capacity, is the owner of property exposed to loss by fire, it may make appropriations from corporate funds for the preservation and protection of such property from fire; as, by the purchase of fire apparatus, and procuring the assistance of men to use it; or by the aiding of fire companies already organized, or incorporated. VanStoklen v. Burlington, 27 Vt. 70. (This, under the power given to towns by G. S. c. 15, s. 95, to grant money, &c., "for the prosecution and defense of their common rights and interests, and for all other necessary and incidental charges within said town.")

11. The town of Burlington, in its corporate capacity, owned valuable property which was exposed to injury by fire, and in town meeting the inhabitants passed the following vote: "Resolved, that the town appropriate a sum not exceeding $600 * * for the fire department, to be disbursed to the engine and hook-and-ladder companies, as the selectmen in their discretion may deem necessary." Said fire companies were incorporated, and not under the authority of the town. Held, that said vote was valid, and such appropriation could not be enjoined by a tax payer. Id.

12. —to build a jail. The inhabitants of a town cannot by vote impose a tax, or appropriate the corporate funds, for objects entirely foreign to their political or municipal duties; as, to build a county jail; and such tax is illegal and void. Drew v. Davis, 10 Vt. 506. 27 Vt. 76.

13. —to rescind vote. A vote in town meeting to raise money for town purposes by a tax, is merely a resolution to provide themselves with money. So long as this rests in mere resolution and has not been acted upon, the town has power to rescind or reconsider it at a lawful meeting; and having done so, the tax first voted cannot be afterwards assessed or collected. Stoddard v. Gilman, 22 Vt. 568.

14. A town cannot by rescinding a vote which has already operated as a contract, defeat the effect of the first vote. Seymour v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 171. Cox v. Mt. Tabor, 41 Vt. 28. Haven v. Ludlow, Id. 418. Laughton v. Putney, 43 Vt. 485. Swift v. Elmôre, 44 Vt. 87. Josselyn v. Ludlow, 44 Vt. 584.

15. —to change their boundaries. Political boundaries, as well as those of private property, may be established or changed by acquiescence of proper parties; but State boundaries cannot be changed by the acquiescence of the local authorities, as towns, but only by the States themselves; and probably not by them, even, without the sanction of Congress. State v. Young, 46 Vt. 565.

16. The recognition by adjoining land-owners of a certain line as the line between adjoining towns, though for 20 years or more, does not in law bind the towns. Smith v. Rockingham, 25 Vt. 645.

17. Liabilities—Statute obligation. No private action lies against a town or other municipal corporation, at common law, for a neglect of duty, though an individual suffer damage thereby;—as, for neglect to keep a highway in repair. It is only by force of the statute that such action lies. Baxter v. Winooski T. Co., 22 Vt. 114. 27 Vt. 457.

18. Municipal corporations, as towns, are not liable to a private action, nor to an indictment, for failure to perform a duty imposed upon them, not by their charter, but by a general law of the State, unless expressly made subject to such remedies by the statute itself. State v. Burlington, 36 Vt. 521. Baxter v. Winooski Turnpike Co.

19. Officers as agents. Where the legislature by general laws has devolved certain duties relative to the general police upon selectmen—as the prevention and removal of nuisances—these do not become corporate duties and obligations of the town, for a neglect of which the town can be held liable by action, or indictment. State v. Burlington; and see White v. Marshfield, 48 Vt. 20.

20. That highway surveyors and street commissioners sustain to the town the ordinary relation of private agents to a principal, so that the town would be liable to a person injured by their acts of negligence in the performance of their duty—doubted. Haynes v. Burlington, 38 Vt. 361.

21. Interest on accounts. The rule as to the computation of interest upon an account against a town, which is known to the officers of the town, stands upon no different ground from accounts between individuals; and does not require a presentation of the account and demand of payment, in order to claim interest. Langdon v. Castleton, 30 Vt. 285.

22. Use and occupation. Where a town had for years used the plaintiff's house, by his consent, for the purpose of holding town meetings, under the understanding that he should claim nothing therefor, except that the selectmen should grant him a license to sell liquor there on town-meeting days and this had been done when he requested it;—Held, that a mere notice given by him in town meeting, that he could not any longer have the meetings held in his house, did not entitle him to recover of the town for such use thereafter, there being no notice that he should claim pay, and no promise to pay. Orcutt v. Roxbury, 17 Vt. 524.

23. Ratification. An unauthorized, but not void act—as, a condition attached to a contract by a committee acting in behalf of a town—may be adopted and ratified by the town; and such adoption may be legally presumed from a failure to repudiate it. Danville v. Montpelier, &c., R. Co., 43 Vt. 144.

24. The selectmen of the plaintiff town laid out a highway, mostly upon the defendant's land and principally for his benefit, and agreed with him that he should charge no land damages, should build the road, and keep it in repair so long as he lived where he then did, and that the town should remit all taxes assessed against him for the purpose of repairing highways in the town, so long as he should continue to keep said road in repair. Each party acted under this agreement for twelve years, and it was fully performed by the defendant. Held, that after such recognition by the town it was bound by the agreement, whether or not the selectmen had authority, in the first instance, to make it; and that the defendant having repaired the road for the year in question, was entitled to have such highway taxes remitted. Mount Holly v. Burwell, 45 Vt. 354.

25. Town order. A town order drawn by the selectmen upon the treasurer and made payable to A B or bearer (or order), is negotiable, and after presentment for payment and payment refused, can be prosecuted in the name of the assignee and a recovery had thereon, declaring upon the order as such, or under the common money counts. Dalrymple v. Whittingham, 26 Vt. 845. Cook v. Winhall, 43 Vt. 434. 42 Vt. 552. Contra, Taft v. Pittsford, 28 Vt. 288; and see Hyde v. Franklin Co., 27 Vt. 185.

26. An action does not lie upon a town order until after presentment and demand of the town treasurer (G. S. c. 15, s. 71); and where the order is received in satisfaction of a claim against the town, a recovery cannot be had for the original consideration without having presented the order. Dalrymple v. Whittingham.

27. The plaintiff claimed of the defendant town $600 and took a town order for $300, but without prejudice to his claim. The town treasurer refused to pay the order. In an action upon the original consideration to recover the $600, the order was not produced on trial nor accounted for, nor was it shown to have been returned. It not appearing that the order was negotiable,—Held, that the plaintiff might recover the $600. Rogers v. Shelburn, 42 Vt. 550.

28. Collateral impeachment. Where towns and school districts keep within the limits of their corporate powers, their proceedings, being within their discretion, cannot be collaterally impeached. Eddy v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 362.

III. TOWN MEETINGS.

29. Warning—time. Where a town meeting was warned on the 1st day of a month to be held, and was held, on the 12th day of the same month;—Held, that this was but eleven days' notice, and that the meeting was irregular and its proceedings invalid. Pratt v. Swanton, 15 Vt. 147.

30. Held, that such proceedings could not be ratified, so as to bind the town, by any subsequent action of the town authorities or the inhabitants not acting in town meeting. Ib.

31. Posting. It is no objection to the legality of a town meeting that the notices therefor were not posted in the places in the town where such notices had usually been posted, it not appearing but that they were posted in "public places," as required by the statute. Stoddard v. Gilman, 22 Vt. 568.

32. The record of the warning of a town meeting and of the proceedings of the meeting held under it is sufficient, prima facie, to show that the warning was, in fact, posted up as required by law. Lemington v. Blodgett, 37 Vt. 210.

33. Substance of warning. The warning should indicate the subject for consideration with reasonable certainty, and in such a manner that no person interested could be misled in respect to the proposition to be submitted for the consideration and action of the town. Nothing more is required. Moore v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 219. Ovitt v. Chase, 37 Vt. 196. Weeks v. Batchelder, 41 Vt. 317.

34. Vote under warning. It is not necessary to the validity of a vote in town meeting to raise money, that the vote should state the particular facts which show the present necessity of the town for the use of the money. All that is necessary in this respect is, that the vote should indicate, in general terms, the purpose or object for which the money is raised, and if that purpose or object is such as comes within the scope of the powers of the town, it is sufficient. Blodgett v. Holbrook, 39 Vt. 386. Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 444.

35. A warning for a town meeting "to ascertain whether the town would vote to pay bounties to soldiers, and whether it would vote a tax on its grand list for that purpose," is sufficient to sustain a vote to pay such bounties and to raise a tax therefor. And an averment of the warning in that form, and the vote under it, in a plea of justification by a collector, was held sufficient on demurrer, without averring that there was a rebellion, that the town had a quota to fill, &c. Alger v. Curry.

36. Held, also, that the "soldiers" referred to should be presumed to be of the regiments and companies of this State. Id. Clemons v. Lewis, 36 Vt. 678.

37. Under the warning of a town meeting "to see if the town will vote to raise a tax upon the grand list to pay recruits or volunteers for said town who may hereafter enlist;"—Held, that a vote was invalid which instructed the selectmen to procure volunteers and use their discretion in the payment of bounties, and empowered them "to borrow at the credit of the town, for five years' time, not to exceed 200 cents on the grand list for said purpose"; and that the vote gave no authority to the selectmen to bind the town by a promise to pay a bounty to a volunteer. Blush v. Colchester, 39 Vt. 193. Atwood v. Lincoln, 44 Vt. 332.

38. Under a warning to vote upon the question of raising money for school purposes;—Held, that the meeting could not vote a tax, or authorize the borrowing of money, for erecting a high-school building. Allen v. Burlington, 45 Vt. 202.

39. Annual meeting. Towns at the annual March meeting, or at a meeting adjourned from that, which is but a continuation of the same meeting, may transact all matters necessary to their corporate interests, without naming such business in the warning. Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Vt. 472. 11 Vt. 391.

40. Special. A special town meeting may be adjourned to a future day, and then act under the original warning. Hickok v. Shelburn, 41 Vt. 409. Rogers v. Shelburn, 42 Vt. 550.

IV. TOWN OFFICERS.

41. Election. Sec. 31 of the constitution of 1786 (Vt. State papers, 527), requiring that "all elections, whether by the people or in general assembly, shall be by ballot," does not extend to the election of town officers; but they may be chosen by viva voce vote. State v. Marsh, N. Chip. 29.

42. Claim for services. Town officers, as such, have no legal claim against the town to recover for services rendered, unless by an express vote of the town, &c. Boyden v. Brookline, 8 Vt. 284.

43. But this does not extend beyond strictly official services. Thus, a town agent, authorized as such to employ an attorney to prosecute and defend suits in behalf of the town, who is himself an attorney and performs professional services for the town, may recover therefor. Langdon v. Castleton, 30 Vt. 285.

44. In order that a constable may recover against a town, under G. S. c. 15, s. 83, for neglect to give him the collection of certain taxes, he must set forth a contract to that effect. Cameron v. Walden, 32 Vt. 823.

45. Oath of office. The oath of office may be taken by a town officer elsewhere than in town meeting. Andrews v. Chase, 5 Vt. 409.

46. Selectmen. The law does not require selectmen to be sworn. Lemington v. Blodgett, 37 Vt. 210.

47. Selectmen cannot, in their official capacity, maintain an action against a highway surveyor for his default, as such, but the action must be in the name of the town; nor will assumpsit lie in such case. Selectmen of Newbury v. Johnson, Brayt. 24.

48. In a suit against a town for the default of its constable, the selectmen cannot discharge the constable, so as to make him a witness for the town. Angel v. Pownall, 3 Vt. 461. 36 Vt. 358; nor can they discharge a highway surveyor, so as to make him a witness for the town in an action for an injury upon a highway. Yuran v. Randolph, 6 Vt. 369.

49. Selectmen have no right to receive money collected by a sheriff on an execution in favor of the town, and discharge him. It was the duty of the sheriff to pay it to the town treasurer. Middlebury v. Rood, 7 Vt. 125. 86 Vt. 358.

50. Under the powers given to selectmen "to audit, and in their discretion to allow, the claim of any person against the town for money paid or services performed for the town" (G. S. c. 15, s. 52), they may submit to arbitration a claim against the town for building a bridge. Dix v. Dummerston, 19 Vt. 262.

51. Selectmen have power to submit to arbitration claims against their towns for damages sustained upon their highways. Hollister v. Pawlet, 43 Vt. 425.

52. Also, to settle and stop a suit brought by the town to recover a penalty for not removing an obstruction out of the highway; although such settlement was opposed by the town agent, appointed under the statute "to prosecute and defend suits in which the town is interested." Cabot v. Britt, 36 Vt. 349.

53. The selectmen have no authority to make a new appointment to a town office—as, a highway surveyor—unless a vacancy occurs in one of the modes specified in the statute. Cummings v. Clark, 15 Vt. 653. 27 Vt. 547.

54. It is within the scope of the implied powers of selectmen, to protect the interests of their town by the employment of counsel, at the charge of the town, in road cases where the town agent provides no counsel, and makes no objection to the employment of counsel by the selectmen; and his assent may be presumed where he neglects to employ counsel and no dissent is shown. Burton v. Norwich, 34 Vt. 345.

55. The declarations of a selectman made while repairing a bridge upon which an injury had occurred to a traveler, admitting in substance that the town was liable for the injury, were held inadmissible. They did not tend to qualify or explain any act of his; and the liability of the town rests upon acts and not upon admissions of its selectmen or other officers. Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 580; and see Underhill v. Washington, 46 Vt. 767.

56. One selectman, without the knowledge or consent of the others, cannot bind the town by contract, nor estop the town by his subsequent assent. Hunkins v. Johnson, 45 Vt. 181.

57. Where the three selectmen of a town agreed together as to the mode in which a town business should be transacted, and two of them entrusted the business to the third one, and he made the contracts in relation thereto;—Held, that the jury would be justified in finding such assent on the part of the others, or one of them, as to make the act of the one thus contracting the act of the majority, and binding on the town. Guyette v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 228.

58. The voluntary acknowledgment by selectmen, after the expiration of their term of office, of a lease by them before executed of public lands, is valid, since, by statute, an acknowledgment could have been enforced. Lemington v. Stevens, 48 Vt. 38.

59. Liability. Selectmen in determining who were members and the respective numbers of the several organized religious societies of the town to whom certain rents were to be appropriated under G. S. c. 97, s. 5, were held to act in a judicial capacity, and not to be responsible for any error of judgment in ascertaining the facts, while acting in good faith, and with reasonable diligence. Universalist Socy. v. Leach, 35 Vt. 108; and see Fuller v. Gould, 20 Vt. 643. Stearns v. Miller, 25 Vt. 20. Davis v. Strong, 31 Vt. 332.

60. Town agent. The town agent is designated in the statute as "an agent to prosecute and defend suits in which the town is interested"; and his duties obviously pertain to pending litigation—perhaps to the commencement of suits resolved upon, rather than to preliminary advice, the object and effect of which often is to prevent litigation. His duties must have reference to civil suits, and it is quite clear that it was never intended that he should take charge of criminal prosecutions, though the town be interested in the fine and costs. This duty is imposed upon the town grand-juror. Peck, J., in Burton v. Norwich, 34 Vt. 345.

61. A town agent to defend and prosecute suits has no authority, as such, to bind the town by a promise to pay a certain sum in settlement of a suit against the town to recover for an injury occasioned by the insufficiency of a highway. Clay v. Wright, 44 Vt. 588.

62. Special agent. An agent appointed by a town for the purpose of "compromising" a claim for damages in the laying of a highway, may refer such claim to arbitration. Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Vt. 473.

63. Town clerk. A joint action on the case lies against a town and the town clerk for the default of the town clerk in his office—the statute providing that the town "shall be liable to make good all damages," &c. Lyman v. Windsor, 24 Vt. 575.

64. It is the duty of a town clerk, under the statute, to provide an alphabet or index to his land records, and to keep and preserve the same for inspection and use, with the same truthfulness and care that he is required to exercise in keeping the books of record. For a neglect in this respect occasioning a special damage, the town, as well as himself, is directly liable in an action. Hunter v. Windsor, 24 Vt. 327. 29 Vt. 324.

65. It is not essential to the statement or proof of damage sustained by the neglect of a town clerk to index a recorded mortgage, that any specific request should appear to have been made of the clerk to produce the index, or to show a particular record. A general request to the clerk to produce the books of record is sufficient; for every person has the right to examine the records for himself, and is under no necessity to make known the object of such examination. Id.

66. In order to sustain an action against a town clerk for his neglect to keep an index of the records, or properly to index a particular record, it must appear that the plaintiff was injured thereby; as, that such neglect was the reason why actual knowledge of the record sought was not obtained. Id. Lyman v. Edgerton, 29 Vt. 305.

67. G. S. c. 15, s. 38, subjects to liability a town clerk who shall, "on proper request, refuse to show any record or any files in his office." The plaintiff's agent had, in the town clerk's presence, examined the town records to ascertain the title to certain lands, and, finding no incumbrance, asked the town clerk "whether he knew of any, or there were any incumbrances on any of the lands; that if he did, he wanted him to show them." The town clerk knew, at the time, that certain mortgages did appear on the records; he had them in mind, and knew that the agent's request referred to them, but he answered that there were none, and he showed none, though he did produce for inspection all the books of record, and the files. Held, that this was a proper request on the part of the plaintiff and such a refusal on the part of the town clerk to show the record as to constitute an official default, and made him and the town liable to the plaintiff for all damages sustained thereby—as, in making a loan and taking a mortgage therefor upon the lands, which were in fact subject to certain undiscovered incumbrances upon the record. Jarvis v. Barnard, 30 Vt. 492; and see Lyman v. Windsor, 24 Vt. 575.

68. But where the party did not go to the town clerk's office, nor examine the records, nor request to examine them, but only, while examining certain land of the town clerk during a negotiation for the purchase of it, said to him: "you are town clerk and can tell me, is there any claim upon this property?" and the town clerk said there was not;—Held, that this was not such an official neglect or default, under the statute, as to make the town liable. Lyman v. Edgerton, 29 Vt. 305.

69. Where a town clerk is called upon to show the record of a particular deed by name, it could scarcely be doubted that it would be his duty to produce and show to the party the identical record itself, and that, on such request, it would be no sufficient compliance for the town clerk to produce all the records of the town and tell the party he might see it, provided he could find it. Poland, J., in Jarvis v. Barnard, 30 Vt. 500; criticising expressions in the opinion in Lyman v. Edgerton.

70. Clerk pro tem. A clerk pro tem may be appointed at an adjourned special town meeting, and his record of the proceedings recorded by the town clerk is valid, though it does not appear that the clerk pro tem was sworn. Hickok v. Shelburn, 41 Vt. 400. Rogers v. Shelburn, 42 Vt. 550. (Hutchinson v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 402.)

71. Assistant. An assistant town clerk is not an officer of the town, nor responsible to it; he is appointed by the town clerk under the statute, and is but a clerk or servant of the town clerk, for whose acts the town clerk is responsible. Charleston v. Lunenburg, 21 Vt. 488. Fairfield v. King, 41 Vt. 611.

72. Hence, under a statute requiring service of process upon a corporation to be made by leaving a copy with the clerk (G. S. c. 83, s. 24), service by copy left with the assistant town clerk is ill (Fairfield v. King); and, under the statute providing that in the absence of the clerk from the State such copy shall be left with one of the principal officers of the corporation, such copy left, in such absence of the town clerk, with one of the selectmen is good service, though the assistant town clerk be present. Charleston v. Lunenburg.

73. Constable. In order to lay the foundation for an action against a town for the default of its constable, it is not necessary first to get judgment against the constable. The remedies are independent. Hence, a judgment against the constable is not evidence of the liability of the town. Bramble v. Poultney, 11 Vt. 208. 12 Vt. 405. 23 Vt. 592. McGregor v. Walden, 14 Vt. 450.

74. An action lies against a town, though after the death of its constable, for his default committed in his lifetime. Martin v. Wells, 48 Vt. 428.

75. By the act of 1881 the first constable of a town could not be authorized to serve writs out of his own town by vote of the town at any other than the annual March meeting, nor until after a record of such vote in the town clerk's office. Emerson v. Bailey, 11 Vt. 656.

76. In order to the disqualification of a constable to act as such, under his election, for neglect to give bonds (G. S. c. 15, ss. 26, 27), the selectmen must first have required him to give the bonds, specifying the amount and the securities required, and have peremptorily refused to allow him to proceed, either in the present tense, or after a certain limited period of indulgence. He can perform all the duties of constable by virtue of his election, until his office is thus vacated by the selectmen. Bowman v. Barnard, 24 Vt. 355. Langdon v. Rutland & Washington R. Co., 29 Vt. 212. Bank of Middlebury v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co., 30 Vt. 159. 34 Vt. 377.

77. Testimony that the constable of the defendant town, who was employed to summon some of the defendant's witnesses and to assist in the defense, offered inducements to one of the plaintiff's witnesses to keep away from the trial, was held not admissible, without proof that such act was authorized or approved by the town agent. Green v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 5.

V. DIVIDING AND ANNEXING TOWNS.

78. The act of 1848, No. 7, dividing the town of Windsor into Windsor and West Windsor, provided that "the debts now due" from the town of Windsor should be paid by the two towns newly incorporated. Held, that the words quoted embraced all liabilities, whether arising ex contractu, or ex delicto. Hunter v. Windsor and West Windsor, 24 Vt. 337.

79. In the act of 1848, No. 11, "to annex Mansfield to Stowe," it was enacted that "the United States surplus money belonging to the town of Mansfield should become the funds of the town of Stowe; and that the trustees of the town of Stowe might maintain an action on any notes executed to the trustees of Mansfield, or, if payable to the town of Mansfield, in the name of Stowe." Held, that this did not enable the town of Stowe to maintain an action upon the official bond executed to the town of Mansfield by the former trustees of that town. Stowe v. Luce, 27 Vt. 605.

80. The act of 1848, No. 6, dividing the town of Montpelier, was held constitutional, and to create two new municipal corporations, abolishing the old one. Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 27 Vt. 704. S. C. 29 Vt. 12.

81. The old town of Montpelier having been abolished in the formation of two new towns (Montpelier and East Montpelier), by act of the legislature;—Held, that the effect of the act was to abolish the trustee of those rights of land which were reserved in the charter of the original town for public uses, and placed under the charge of its inhabitants, and that it created no division of such rights between the two new towns; that the new town of Montpelier did not succeed to such trusteeship, and could not recover at law the rents of such lands received by East Montpelier. Ib. 27 Vt. 704.

82. But upon bill in equity, the court ordered the appointment of a new trustee to administer the trust according to the charter. Ib. 29 Vt. 12.

83. "The last dwelling place or home" of a pauper, having a settlement in the town of S, was in that part of S which was annexed to the town of W, the pauper then being supported by the town of S in another town. Held, that the pauper upon such annexation became chargeable to W under G. S. c. 19, s. 1, clause 9. Wilmington v. Somerset, 35 Vt. 232.

84. The setting off, by act of the legislature, of one portion of a town to another, transfers nothing but the municipal jurisdiction over the territory so set off and annexed to the other town. It does not affect any vested right of proprietorship in the part so set off and annexed. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 193.

85. Where lands reserved in the charter of one town for the use of schools were, by act of the legislature, annexed to another town;—Held, that the proprietorship in the lands was not thereby changed, and that the power of leasing remained in the selectmen of the former town, and was not in the selectmen of the town to which the lands were annexed. Ib.

86. The town of Burlington, having voted money for bounties, was subsequently divided into the city of Burlington and the town of South Burlington. The selectmen of the original town placed the money in the hands of a trustee to hold for persons who should be entitled to it. The trustee, after paying bounty to certain soldiers, paid the residue of the money, part to the town of South Burlington and part to the city of Burlington, in proportion to their assets in the original town. Held, that a joint action for bounty could not be maintained against said city and town. Collins v. Burlington, 44 Vt. 16.

TREES.

A tree, with its product, is the sole property of him on whose land it is situated: and its location and property should be determined by the position of the trunk or body of the tree above the soil, rather than by the roots within or the branches above it. Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115. TRESPASS, 92.

As to sale of standing trees, being of an interest in lands, see FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, III; TRESPASS, 48, 85, 97.

TRESPASS.

- I. IN GENERAL.
 1. Trespass ab initio.
 2. Pleadings and evidence.
- II. TO THE PERSON.
 1. Action and defense.
 2. Pleadings and evidence.
- III. TO PERSONAL PROPERTY.
 1. Action and defense.
 2. Pleadings and evidence.
- IV. TO REAL PROPERTY.
 1. For what acts.
 2. Plaintiff's title and possession.
 3. Pleadings and evidence.

For distinction between trespass and case, see ACTION ON THE CASE.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Tortfeasor. In trespass, even a tortfeasor may, by force of his possession, recover against another tortfeasor who shows no right whatever. Fletcher v. Cole, 26 Vt. 170.

2. Corporation. Corporations are liable in this action for trespasses authorized or commanded by them. Lyman v. White River Bridge Co., 2 Aik. 255. 27 Vt. 107.

3. Joint trespassers. The principle applicable to co-trespassers does not affect cases of indemnity, where one employs another to do an act, not unlawful in itself and not known to be illegal; as, for the purpose of asserting a right. Id. See Spalding v. Oakes, 42 Vt. 343.

4. Where a privity is shown between several defendants in trespass, the acts of any one of them are admissible as evidence of the trespass. Broughton v. Ward, 1 Tyl. 187.

5. Two several creditors sued out separate writs of attachment against the same debtor, bearing the same date, which were delivered to the same officer for service, and were served by him at the same time by attaching the same property. In an action of trespass against both creditors and the officer;—Held, that this was, prima facie, a joint taking by the three. Ellis v. Howard, 17 Vt. 330.

6. The plaintiff having a right of action against several persons for a joint assault, made W his agent with full power to settle the claim and to have all he could make out of it. W settled the damages with two of the trespassers, and gave each a writing agreeing to indemnify them against all liability to the plaintiff. Held, that this was a full discharge of the two, and also of the other trespassers, it being a payment of the full damages. Eastman v. Grant, 34 Vt. 387. See Spencer v. Williams, 2 Vt. 209. Chamberlin v. Murphy, 41 Vt. 110.

1. Trespass ab initio.

7. An abuse of a license given by law makes the wrong-doer a trespasser ab initio; but otherwise of a license given by the party. Hubbell v. Wheeler, 2 Aik. 359.

8. An abuse of a license in fact will not render the party a trespasser ab initio. Where one having license to pass and repass through another's field left the bars down, whereby cattle got in the field and did damage;—Held, that an action of trespass did not lie therefor: (1), because the license was a license in fact; (2), because the abuse complained of was a mere non feassance. Stone v. Knapp, 29 Vt. 501.

9. A public officer in the exercise of an authority conferred upon him by law does not become a trespasser ab initio by a mere non feassance; nor does he become such, except by doing some positive wrongful act giving character to the original act and incompatible with the exercise of the legal right to do the first act, and showing that it was entered upon for an unlawful purpose. Stoughton v. Mott, 25 Vt. 668. 26 Vt. 557. 29 Vt. 346, 454. 36 Vt. 631.

10. The abuse of an authority in law will render the party a trespasser ab initio; but this abuse must be something beyond a mere non-feassance. It must be a positive and active wrong, and of such a character as to fairly justify the implication that the original entry was for the purpose of committing the wrong, and not bona fide under the authority which the law gave and for the purpose for which the law gave it. Redfield, C. J., in Stone v. Knapp, 29 Vt. 503.

11. Whenever a process is regular and issues from a court of competent jurisdiction, neither the officer, nor the party, is liable in trespass for any mere abuse of the process, however groundless or malicious their proceedings may be; but the appropriate remedy is case. Pierson v. Gale, 8 Vt. 509. 28 Vt. 17.

12. No mere omission, or want of care or skill in doing a lawful act, will render such act a trespass by relation. Sabin v. Vt. Central R. Co. 25 Vt. 363, 371; and see Spear v. Tilson, 24 Vt. 420. Wheelock v. Archer, 26 Vt. 380.

13. The refusal of an officer to take bail on mesne process is but a non-feassance, for which case is the only remedy; it is not a malfeassance which makes him a trespasser for the arrest, or commitment. Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661.

14. Trespass or trover does not lie against an attaching officer, in behalf of the debtor, for a neglect to take proper care of the property attached, or for other non-feassance. Hale v. Huntley, 21 Vt. 147.

15. Where property is sold upon an attachment under the statute, and the officer, after judgment for the defendant, refuses on demand to pay over the money, or claims to retain part of it on grounds not well founded in law, he does not thereby become a trespasser ab initio. This is but a non feassance, and the action of trover for the property attached does not lie against him. Abbott v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 551.

16. To make an officer serving process a trespasser ab initio, the wrongful act must be done to the property itself—not to the fund realized from a legal sale; as, by a misapplication of it. Wilson v. Seavey, 38 Vt. 231.

17. An officer can not be made a trespasser ab initio where the original taking upon the attachment was lawful, and the illegality lay only in the sale upon the execution. It must be an abuse of the same authority upon which was the original taking, to make him a trespasser ab initio. Heald v. Sargeant, 15 Vt. 506.

18. In trespass against an officer, complaining only of an illegal taking of goods, it is sufficient to set forth in the plea a sufficient authority for the taking, without stating the ulterior proceedings; and if by any subsequent abuse the defendant became a trespasser ab initio, this is matter for replication. Andrews v. Chase, 5 Vt. 409. 31 Vt. 441.

19. If, in such case, the plea sets forth such facts as show the defendant a trespasser ab initio, the plaintiff may demur; but he is not to be so treated because he neglects to state his after proceedings, for this is a mere omission. Id.

20. An officer attaching property is not made a trespasser ab initio, by subsequently using a part of the property attached in removing other parts of it attached at the same time, the property used not being injured or lessened in value thereby. Paul v. Slason, 22 Vt. 231.

21. Machinery subject to attachment may be removed by the attaching officer from the building in which it is set up. If in so doing, and in the exercise of all reasonable care, he unintentionally or necessarily does some small injury to the machinery or building, he does not thereby become a trespasser ab initio. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443.

22. The defendant being impeded by the plaintiff in a lawful attempt to impound the plaintiff's cattle, assaulted the plaintiff in self-defense and in defense of his possession of the cattle. The defendant, maintaining his control of the cattle, instead of proceeding to impound them, turned them into the plaintiff's inclosure. In an action for the assault,—Held, that the defendant by such disposition of the cattle did not in this action become a trespasser ab initio. Barrows v. Fassett, 36 Vt. 625.

23. A person assisting an officer in serving a legal process will not become a trespasser by a subsequent abuse by the officer of his authority, as he would have been if the original taking had been illegal. Wheelock v. Archer, 26 Vt. 390.

24. If property attached be used by the officer, he thereby becomes a trespasser ab initio, and is liable, prima facie for its full value. Collins v. Perkins, 81 Vt. 624.

25. If an officer by direction of a creditor attaches a chattel, and the creditor puts it to use with the assent of the officer, both are trespassers ab initio. Lamb v. Day, 8 Vt. 407.

26. The like use of the chattel attached, by the bailee of the officer, is the act of the officer and makes him a trespasser ab initio. Briggs v. Gleason, 29 Vt. 78.

27. The doctrine of making an officer a trespasser ab initio for using property attached by him has, to our knowledge, never been extended to any case except where there has been a clear, substantial violation of the owner's rights, and of such a character as to show a wanton disregard of duty. Poland, J., in Paul v. Slason, 22 Vt. 236. Not every use for the shortest time, or through inadvertence, or for the health of the animal attached, will make the officer a trespasser; but such use as is calculated to lessen the value and expose the life and health of the animal, and which is made of it understandingly and perseveringly

(as in this case), must be regarded as an intentional misuse and perversion of the process, so as to make the officer a trespasser ab initio. Redfield, C. J., in Briggs v. Gleason, 29 Vt. 80.

28. An irregular sale of a beast impounded makes the impounder a trespasser ab initio. Sutton v. Beach, 2 Vt. 42.

29. Where an officer levies upon property by virtue of a regular execution and advertises the same for sale, but neglects to sell upon that execution and sells on the day advertised upon a void alias execution;—Held, that he is liable in trespass; and, by Williams, C. J., he was a trespasser ab initio. Bond v. Wilder, 16 Vt. 393.

30. The officer making an attachment, and the creditor's attorney directing it, become trespassers ab initio by such a subsequent unauthorized disposition of the property attached, as the creditor himself was not authorized to make. Eaton v. Cooper, 29 Vt. 444.

31. Damages—Mitigation. Where an officer becomes, by an abuse of his authority under process, in respect to property, a trespasser ab initio, he is liable prima facie for its full value; but he may show in mitigation of damages that the plaintiff subsequently received back the property (Yale v. Saunders, 16 Vt. 243); or that the same was legally disposed of for his benefit (Collins v. Perkins, 81 Vt. 624); and as was done in Irish v. Cloyes, 8 Vt. 30. Lamb v. Day, Id. 407. Clark v. Washburn, 9 Vt. 309. Stewart v. Martin, 16 Vt. 397. See Briggs v. Gleason, 29 Vt. 78.

32. But to this end, such disposition of the property must be a legal disposition of it; and where the sale upon the execution was illegal;—Held, that the payment of the proceeds over to the execution creditor did not go in mitigation. Hall v. Ray, 40 Vt. 576.

33. Where an officer sells property upon an execution at a different place from that named in the posted notice, without adjournment to such other place or consent of the execution debtor, he becomes a trespasser ab initio, and is liable to the debtor in an action of trespass for the full value of the property, although the officer has paid over to the execution creditor the proceeds of the sale. Id. By Barrett, J.: Such act is not a mere negligence in the discharge of incidental or implied duties growing out of his lawful custody of the property, nor a violation merely of such duties, nor a mere non-fensance of express duties resting upon him, but a departure from the requirement of the statute and in direct violation of it. Id. 578-9.

2. Pleadings and evidence.

34. Declaration. The omission of the words with force and arms, in a declaration in trespass, is only matter for special demurrer. Higgins v. Hayward, 5 Vt. 73.

35. Where the plaintiff in trespass alleged the injuries to have been committed between a day named and the date of the writ;—Held, that he could not in that suit recover for injuries done between the date and the service of the writ. Prouty v. Bell, 44 Vt. 72.

36. Where distinct acts of trespass are laid in one count as committed on divers days and times, &c., the plaintiff may prove as many such distinct acts as were committed within the dates specified; but where there are several defendants, he cannot recover against any one for an act in which he did not participate; and the extent of a joint recovery is measured by the extent of a joint participation in the several acts of trespass. Myrick v. Downer, 18 Vt. 360.

37. Where (under the statute) counts in trespass and in trover are joined, the declaration need not contain a special allegation that they are for the same cause of action. Alger v. Curry, 38 Vt. 382.

38. Plea, &c. Under the general issue in trespass, the defendant cannot set up matter in discharge. Austin v. Norris, 11 Vt. 38.

39. In trespass, matters in justification or discharge must be specially pleaded. If not, and the trial be upon the general issue only, the defendant cannot avail himself of such matters in defense, though they may appear in the plaintiff's proof. Allen v. Parkhurst, 10 Vt. 557. Walker v. Hitecock, 19 Vt. 634. Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 433. Richardson v. Stockwell, Id. 439.

40. In trespass, a license requires to be specially pleaded only where the license was given by the plaintiff himself; and not where the defendant stands in the shoes of one claiming title against the plaintiff. Child v. Allen, 33 Vt. 476.

41. Where a license in trespass is relied upon under the general issue with notice, the plaintiff may recover for what is not covered by the license. Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 383. Hubbell v. Wheeler, 2 Aik. 359.

42. In trespass, where the defendant pleads the general issue with notice of special matter in justification, the whole merits of the question are thereby opened on both sides; and no new assignment is necessary to recover, as for a distinct substantive trespass, on what was alleged in the declaration by way of aggravation. Hubbell v. Wheeler. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443.

43. In an action of trespass, where the defendant gives notice, according to the statute, of special matter of defense under the general issue pleaded, no replication is required; and the plaintiff may avail himself on trial of every matter which he might properly have new assigned, or replied, if the defendant had pleaded his defense specially. Keyes v. Howe, 18 Vt. 411. Lawton v. Cardell, 22 Vt. 524.

44. In trespass, the plaintiff is put to proof of his title under the general issue however many special defenses may be pleaded; and the special pleas have no effect by way of an estoppel, or as admissions, as to any facts averred or admitted in them outside the issues upon such particular pleas. Child v. Allen, 33 Vt. 476.

45. Replication de injuria to a plea of justification in trespass: The defendant put in evidence outside the issue, without objection, and the court ruled that the plaintiff could not avail himself of it, because it was impertinent. Held correct. Braley v. Burnham, 47 Vt. 717.

II. TO THE PERSON.

1. Action and defense.

46. An assault, what. There may be an assault by a man upon a woman without an actual touching of her person;—as, by an exposure of his person and such movements as show an intention to have intercourse with her, and make her fear that he would. The imposition of the fear and the influence it would have upon her movements and feelings would constitute an actionable injury to her. Alexander v. Blodgett, 44 Vt. 476.

47. Matter of defense. In an action for assault and battery by thrusting the plaintiff out of the defendant's store where the plaintiff had lawfully gone, the defendant justified the assault as in defense of his possession, after having first requested the plaintiff to leave and he had refused. Held, that if the defendant, in his language, irritated and abused the plaintiff for the sake of having an affray with him, and the occasion was sought by the defendant to lay hands upon the plaintiff for the purpose of injuring and abusing him, and not for the sake of defending the possession, then the justification failed, although the defendant refused to leave on request. Watrous v. Steel, 4 Vt. 629.

48. Where standing trees were sold, by parol, with the privilege of cutting and getting them off the land within three years, and the purchaser had cut and piled them upon the land;—Held, that the timber cut did not pass with a conveyance of the land but remained the personal property of the purchaser; and that he or his assignee had the legal right to enter upon the land, within the time agreed, to take it away; and held, that if, in entering upon the premises to draw off the timber, he was forcibly resisted by the owner of the land, he would be justified in using so much force as would be necessary to remove the obstruction. Yale v.

Seely, 15 Vt. 221. But on this last point, see Dustin v. Cowdry, 23 Vt. 646.

49. If one, on credit, purchases property not carried about the person [such as a stove], by means of false and fraudulent representations as to his ability to pay and as to the amount of his property, he acquires no right of property in the article, or of possession; and the vendor may pursue him and retake the property, using no unnecessary force. If he resists the taking, such resistance is unlawful, and the vendor is not liable for using only that amount of force which is necessary to accomplish the object of retaking the property under the resistance offered. Hodgeson v. Hubbard, 18 Vt. 504. See 23 Vt. 646.

50. The defendant, a minor in his father's service, was directed by the father to watch an aqueduct upon the father's premises, and see that no one interfered with it. He went to the boundary of the land where the aqueduct was, and found the plaintiff about to enter, on his way to disturb the aqueduct, which was 22½ feet distant. The defendant forbade the plaintiff going upon the land; but the plaintiff sprang over the fence and approached the defendant in a threatening manner, when the defendant assaulted the plaintiff. In an action for the assault, under a plea of defense of the aqueduct;—Held, that the defendant had the right to prevent the plaintiff's further approach towards the aqueduct, and was not bound to wait until the injury or destruction of the aqueduct became more imminent; that he could rightfully defend "the approaches and outposts." Harrison v. Harrison, 48 Vt. 417.

51. Character of party. Where one is assaulted, the kind and degree of resistance which may be lawfully employed must be measured, or at least modified, by the apparent danger with which he is threatened; and this would depend, measurably, upon the known character of the assailant—whether "a man of war, or of peace." Redfield, J. Ib. 48 Vt. 424. 47 Vt. 81.

52. In an action for an assault, under a plea justifying the assault;—Held, that the defendant was entitled to prove that the plaintiff was reputed to be, and was in fact, a quarrelsome man, with a violent and uncontrollable temper, and that this was known to the defendant at the time. Ib. 417. State v. Lull, 48 Vt. 581. But in order to the admission of such evidence, such knowledge must be shown. State v. Meader, 47 Vt. 78.

53. In an action for an assault and battery where the justification was self-defense, the court say:—The amount and extent of force, which the defendant would have a right to use, would depend in some measure on the perilous condition he had reason to suppose he was in from apprehended violence from the plaintiff, and what force he had reason to suppose necessary to protect himself. Hence, the fact of the presence or proximity of the defendant's two hired men, known to both parties, was proper for the jury to consider as bearing on the question. Edwards v. Leavitt, 46 Vt. 126.

54. In an action for an assault and battery growing out of a dispute about the occupation of certain lands, it was held not error to admit evidence for the plaintiff that the defendant had before the affray brought sundry suits against him for and about the same land and its occupation, which suits were then pending, as tending to show unfriendly feelings towards the plaintiff. Ib.

55. Upon the trial of an action for an assault and battery, the defendant justified on the ground of the plaintiff's prior assault, &c., and offered in evidence, to sustain his defense, the record of a conviction of the plaintiff in a criminal prosecution for such prior assault. The county court excluded the evidence. Held correct. Robinson v. Wilson, 22 Vt. 85.

2. Pleadings and evidence.

56. Declaration. In an action for an assault and battery, all the details of the principal transaction declared upon, and which are a part of it, may be proved though not alleged in the declaration. Devine v. Rand, 38 Vt. 621. 45 Vt. 288.

57. Where several acts of violence to a person were committed within a short space of time and at places but little distant from each other, and they were so connected together that each of them to some extent characterized the others, and all together made a continuous series of assaults and batteries;—Held, that they might all be included in one count of a declaration, with proper allegations. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

58. Where a count in trespass averred that the defendant laid hold of the plaintiff with great force and violence, and with a raw-hide, and with clubs, sticks, fists and feet, gave to the plaintiff a great many violent blows, and with great violence shook and pulled him about, and threw him down, and harshly and brutally kicked him, and wounded him and tore his clothes;—Held, that the count stated a succession of trespasses, each requiring some competent justification or excuse, and not a mere aggravation of the first assault. Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 102.

59. But where, in such case, the plea professed to answer "the assaulting, beating and ill-treating," "as in the declaration mentioned";—Held, that it should be understood as assuming to justify the assault, &c., precisely as described, and therefore to be co-extensive with the alleged cause of action. Ib.

60. Plea and replication. In answer to a plea of son assault, if the plaintiff would justify his own assault he must reply the matter of justification. A replication de injuria would not be sufficient. Elliot v. Kilburn, 2 Vt. 470.

61. In an action for an assault and battery and justification pleaded, as son assault demesne, moderate correction of a servant, or pupil, &c., with a replication de injuria, such replication puts in issue all the substantial averments of the plea, and the plaintiff may, without a new assignment, recover for any excess of force used; but is limited to that, if he in fact made the first assault, or if the moderate correction was justifiable. Ib. Bartlett v. Churchill, 24 Vt. 218. Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114. Devine v. Rand, 38 Vt. 621. Harrison v. Harrison, 43 Vt. 417.

62. In such action, a plea of son assault demesne is good, although the declaration charges an aggravated battery and wounding. If excess of force was used, that would appear in the evidence, and could be recovered for under the replication de injuria. Mellen v. Thompson, 32 Vt. 407.

63. In such case, where the declaration charges an aggravated battery and wounding, a plea of moliter manus, &c., in defense of a brother, and for preventing a breach of the peace, is not sufficient. Ib.

64. In trespass for an assault and battery, the defendant pleaded in justification moderate correction of the plaintiff for misbehavior as his minor servant, and the plaintiff replied de injuria. Held, that this put in issue the defendant's intent, and made evidence of accompanying acts and words, showing malice, admissible. Devine v. Rand, 38 Vt. 621.

III. TO PERSONAL PROPERTY.

1. Action and defense.

65. What is a trespass. Assuming the custody and control of property, as by an attachment and sale on execution, though it be not removed nor any actual force exerted upon it, is a trespass, for which the action of trespass lies. Hart v. Hyde, 5 Vt. 328. Brown v. Scott, 7 Vt. 57.

66. Where the defendant, an officer, levied an execution upon the plaintiff's only cow and advertised her for sale while she was in the possession of the plaintiff's lessee for a specified term, but did not remove the cow until after the expiration of the lease, and he then drove her away and sold her on the execution;—Held, that such subsequent asportation was a fresh trespass for which the plaintiff could maintain the action of trespass. Keyes v. Howe, 18 Vt. 411.

67. Plaintiff's title and possession—Special property. One who has a special property in goods [as a tanner who has taken skins to tan for a price agreed], may maintain trespass against the general owner and recover damages according to the value of his interest. Burdick v. Murray, 8 Vt. 302.

68. Actual possession. Actual possession of personal property is a sufficient title to maintain trespass, except as against the legal owner. Fisher v. Cobb, 6 Vt. 622. Potter v. Washburn, 13 Vt. 558.

69. One engaged in cutting down a bee tree, found upon the land of another, has such possession as that he can maintain trespass against one who, having no better right, drives him off, finishes the cutting of the tree and appropriates the honey; and can in such action recover the value of the honey. Adams v. Burton, 43 Vt. 86.

70. General property—Right of possession. The owner of personal property is considered in law as in possession, and, not having parted with the right of possession, he may sustain trespass for the conversion of it though never in his actual possession. Edwards v. Edwards, 11 Vt. 587.

71. In order to maintain trespass or trover for chattels, the plaintiff at the time of the injury must have had either the actual possession, or a property in them, either general or special, with the right to immediate possession. Swift v. Moseley, 10 Vt. 208. Hurd v. Fleming, 34 Vt. 169.

72. Where a sheriff had wrongfully attached property, and while it was so in his possession, he again wrongfully attached it, in behalf of another party;—Held, that the owner had sufficient possession in law to enable him to sustain trespass against the sheriff for the second attachment, and against the creditor by whose direction it was made. Cox v. Hall, 18 Vt. 191.

73. Where a mortgagee of chattels reserved the right to take possession, if he should at any time deem himself in danger of losing his debt by delay until the debt should fall due;—Held, that this did not give such constructive possession as to enable him to maintain trespass for a taking of the chattel from the mortgagor; that the right to possession depended upon a contingency, until the happening of which, followed by some act of the mortgagee asserting the right, the right to possession did not attach. Skiff v. Solace, 23 Vt. 279. See Soper v. Sumner, 5 Vt. 274.

74. The purchaser at sheriff's sale of property in the possession of a third person, and of which he does not take possession, cannot maintain trespass therefor against the right owner. Culley v. Cushman, 12 Vt. 494. Austin v. Tilden, 14 Vt. 325.

75. Outstanding right of possession.

The general owner of chattels cannot maintain trespass or trover for them, where there is an outstanding possession in another, accompanied with a special property. Bourne v. Merritt, 22 Vt. 439.

76. The owner of personal property who has by contract parted with the possession and right of possession for a given time, as, by lease, cannot maintain trespass for an injury to it while in possession of the bailee, or for taking it from his possession. Soper v. Sumner, 5 Vt. 374. 28 Vt. 283. 19 Vt. 378. Hart v. Hyde, 5 Vt. 328. Hurd v. Fleming, 34 Vt. 169;—nor trover. Swift v. Moseley, 10 Vt. 208.

77. The plaintiff sold A certain sheep on condition of payment by a day named, and gave possession with right of possession until default of payment. Before the day of payment arrived, the defendant attached the sheep as the property of A and took them away. Held, that the plaintiff, although general owner, could not maintain trespass therefor, not having the right of immediate possession at the time of the attachment. Hurd v. Fleming.

78. Where the consignee of goods for sale upon commission has failed and become insolvent and there are no commissions unpaid, the consignor has the right of immediate possession and such a constructive possession as that he may maintain trespass against an attaching officer. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Dunclee, 30 Vt. 29; and see Chaffee v. Sherman, 26 Vt. 287.

79. General issue. Under the general issue in trespass de bonis, the defendant may give in evidence whatever is in denial of what it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove; as, property and possession in another, and so not in the plaintiff. Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97.

80. In trespass for personal property, the general issue is a denial of the plaintiff's property, as well as of the taking by the defendant. Property in the defendant cannot be pleaded in bar, for this would amount to the general issue. Merritt v. Miller, 18 Vt. 416.

81. Under the general issue in trespass de bonis, if the plaintiff proves property in himself and that the defendant took the property, he is entitled to a verdict. Any matter of justification must be pleaded, or notice be given under the statute. Strong v. Hobbs, 20 Vt. 185.

82. Negative pregnant. Trespass de bonis; Plea, that the defendant attached the goods as an officer by virtue of a certain writ, &c.: Replication, that the defendant "did not attach said goods by virtue of said writ." On special demurrer, the replication was held ill as being a negative pregnant, and uncertain as to the point to be contested. Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 433.

IV. TO REAL PROPERTY.

1. For what acts.

83. The act of entering, severing and carrying away a part of the realty, as one act, can be recovered for only in the action of trespass quare clausum. Sturgis v. Warren, 11 Vt. 433.

84. The plaintiff was the owner of land under the eddy of a stream in which, in high water, flood-wood, timber, &c., was accustomed to gather and float about. The defendant seized and appropriated some of the wood, &c., while so floating in the eddy. In trespass quare clau. therefor,—Held, that although the plaintiff did not own the wood, &c., while so floating, yet he had the exclusive right to seize it while so on his own land and appropriate it to his own use, subject to be reclaimed by the owner; and that he was entitled to recover of the defendant, not the value of the wood, &c., taken, but the value of his chance of seizing and enjoying it. Rogers v. Judd, 5 Vt. 223.

85. The plaintiff owned all the cedar and pine timber standing upon a lot belonging to another, with a right of possession for the purpose of cutting and removing it. He sold to the defendant all the pine timber with the right of going on to cut and remove that. Both parties went on at the same time, the plaintiff cutting the cedar and the defendant the pine, but the defendant removed part of the cedar cut by the plaintiff. Held, that the plaintiff could maintain trespass quare clau. therefor. Haskin v. Record, 32 Vt. 575.

86. Disseisin. In all cases of disseisin, the owner may maintain trespass if the entry was made while he was in possession; but the damages will be restricted to the first entry, unless he has made re-entry before action brought. If he has made such re-entry, he will recover all his intervening damages. Cutting v. Cox, 19 Vt. 517. Stevens v. Hollister, 18 Vt. 294. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

87. Entry. The entry upon land by the owner disseized, measuring the lines, asserting on the land his claim of title and directing his agent to cut the grass thereon, and this with notice to the disseisor, constitute a sufficient re-entry to enable him to maintain trespass for a subsequent entry by the disseisor. Cutting v. Cox.

88. The plaintiff having title and right of possession of a house, entered and turned out the defendant, but not by force and strong hand so as to make such entry unlawful. The defendant afterwards re-entered. Held, that he was liable in trespass therefor. Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82.

89. Whether the plaintiff could have returned and expelled the defendant forcibly—quare. See Whittaker v. Perry, 38 Vt. 107, 113.

90. A mere intruder upon lands may be forcibly expelled therefrom by the owner, and lawfully, so far as the land is concerned. If guilty of a breach of the peace and trespass upon the person of the intruder in so doing, he is liable for that, but his possession of the land is lawful. Beecher v. Parmele, 9 Vt. 352. See Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82. Dustin v. Cowdry, 23 Vt. 681.

91. The defendant, the owner of cattle, found them upon the plaintiff's land. How they came to escape, or how they came to be in the plaintiff's possession, did not appear. The defendant, against the plaintiff's prohibition, entered and took away the cattle. In an action of trespass qua. clau.,—Held, that these facts justified the entry. Richardson v. Anthony, 13 Vt. 278. (Bennett, J., dissenting.) 15 Vt. 284.

92. Tree. It seems, that a tree and its products are the sole property of him on whose land the tree is situated; and that, considering the necessary uncertainty of evidence as to the location and extent of the roots of a tree, its location and property should be determined by the position of the trunk or body of the tree above the soil, rather than by the roots within or the branches above it; and held, that where an apple tree was set and grew on the plaintiff's land six feet from the division line between his and the defendant's land, but the roots extended into, and the branches overhung the defendant's land, the defendant was liable for picking and converting to his own use the apples growing on the branches overhanging his own land. Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115. Note.—Whether trespass qua. clau., or trover, was the proper action was not decided, since counts in each form were joined under G. S. c. 83. s. 14.

93. Search-warrant. Where an officer had completed the service of a search-warrant by entering the plaintiff's house and taking the stolen goods and the plaintiff before the magistrate, and he afterwards made a second entry for another professed purpose, which was lawful, the court charged, in an action of trespass qua. clau., that if, after the defendant had fully completed his search for the stolen goods, he made such second entry for the real purpose of finding more evidence against the plaintiff, and that his profession of such other purpose was a mere pretext, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Held correct. Lawton v. Cardell, 22 Vt. 524.

2. Plaintiff's title and possession.

94. Actual possession. A tenant at will may maintain trespass for breaking down the fence of his inclosure. Brown v. Bates, Brayt. 230.

95. Occasional acts of possession, with continued claim, constitute a sufficient possession of land to sustain trespass. Hibbard v. Foster, 24 Vt. 542.

96. A trespasser upon land is not accountable to his co-trespasser. The latter having manifested no claim, nor pretended to have any right, has, in contemplation of law, no possession that can be disturbed. Doolittle v. Linsley, 2 Aik. 155.

97. Where A sold B certain timber standing on A's land, and B had entered and cut and removed a part;—Held, that B had such possession as entitled him to maintain trespass qua. clau. against a stranger for entering and cutting and removing the rest of the timber bought. Goodrich v. Hathaway, 1 Vt. 485. 15 Vt. 233.

98. The defendant went into possession of land under a parol contract of purchase from B, paid part of the purchase price and claimed to hold the land under the contract. B conveyed to the plaintiff. Held, that the defendant did not thereby become a tenant of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff had no such possession as enabled him to sustain an action of trespass. Ripley v. Yale, 16 Vt. 257. 34 Vt. 553.

99. The plaintiff was in possession of lands, and his possession was prior to any possession by the defendant, or his grantors. The defendant had a faultless chain of title on paper; but a third person had acquired the ownership by fifteen years' possession adverse to the defendant's grantors. In an action of trespass for a disturbance of the plaintiff's possession;—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Hughes v. Graves, 39 Vt. 359.

100. Legal seisin. The legal seisin of land carries with it the possession and is sufficient to enable the owner to maintain trespass, unless the injury is done to a tenant in actual possession, or there is an adverse holding and the injury is committed subsequent to the dis-seisin. Prentiss, J., in Robinson v. Douglas, 2 Aik. 368. Kellogg, J., in Harris v. Haynes, 34 Vt. 227. Chesley v. Brockway, 34 Vt. 550.

101. The plaintiff had taken a deed of lands, but had not entered into actual possession, the grantor remaining on the premises by mere sufferance, claiming no right. Held, that the plaintiff had a sufficient possession to maintain trespass qua. clau. for an entry by a stranger. Chesley v. Brockway.

102. Where a tenant carries on a farm at the halves, the landlord has still such a possession as enables him to maintain trespass for an injury to the inheritance; as, digging stone, or cutting timber. Cutting v. Cox, 19 Vt. 517. 84 Vt. 553.

103. A title to lands, without entry, does not warrant an action of trespass qua. clau.

against a party in actual adverse possession, for the cutting of trees upon the land; nor (semble) trespass de bonis for the wood severed from the land. Pratt v. Battels, 28 Vt. 685.

104. Trespass qua. clau. against A and B: The plaintiff's title was by levy of execution against A, where the time for redemption had expired, and demand had been made of B, that he surrender possession. A had never been in possession after the levy, and B held possession adverse to A before the levy, and adverse to the plaintiff ever since. Held, that the action did not lie against either. Bowne v. Graham, 8 Tyl. 411.

105. In trespass qua. clau. to land not in the actual possession of the plaintiff, the defendant set up a prior constructive possession in a third person. Held a sufficient defense, although the defendant did not connect himself with the title of such third person. Ralph v. Bayley, 11 Vt. 521.

3. Pleadings and evidence.

106. Declaration. Under G. S. c. 38, s. 14, a count in trespass on the freehold can be joined with a count in case, when for the same cause of action. Hagar v. Brainerd, 44 Vt. 264.

107. Description. A declaration in trespass for breaking and entering a certain close, not averred to be the close of the plaintiff, and there taking away certain chattels of the plaintiff, was held good as for a trespass de bonis only. Hawley v. Clerk, 2 Tyl. 20.

108. In trespass qua. clau., a description of the premises as "the close of the plaintiff situate, lying and being in St. Albans," was held sufficient. Rice v. Hathaway, Brayt. 281.

109. In trespass quare clauum, where the declaration gives the boundaries of the locus in quo, or otherwise describes it with certainty, it must be proved as laid, and the plaintiff can recover only on proof of the trespass where he lays it. Hooker v. Hickok, 2 Aik. 172.

110. The declaration described the locus as being in the town of F and bounded East by the West line of the town of P. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover if the locus was in fact in town P, although he had always possessed, improved and claimed it as being in town F. Ib.

111. Matter of aggravation. Matter of aggravation, correctly understood, does not consist in acts of the same kind and description as those constituting the gist of the action, but in something done by the defendant on the occasion of committing the trespass, which is, to some extent, of a different legal character from the principal act complained of. Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 102.

112. In trespass qua. clau., for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house and there assaulting and debauching the plaintiff's daughter;—Held, that the breaking and entry were the gist of the action, and the debauching of the daughter matter of aggravation only. Hubbell v. Wheeler, 2 Aik. 359.

113. So, where the declaration charges a breaking and entering of the plaintiff's close, and breaking a certain gate and throwing down fences. Grout v. Knapp, 40 Vt. 168; or, taking and carrying away stone thereon. Goodrich v. Judevine, 40 Vt. 190; or fences. Howard v. Black, 42 Vt. 258.

114. In trespass q. c. f. with other wrongs alleged,—as debauching the plaintiff's daughter per quod, &c. (Hubbell v. Wheeler, 2 Aik. 359); breaking the plaintiff's fence, gates, &c. (Grout v. Knapp, 40 Vt. 168); or carrying away the plaintiff's corn,—the breaking of the close is the gist of the action, and the other wrongs alleged are but matters in aggravation. In such cases, a plea justifying the entry justifies the entire trespass; and in order to recover for such additional wrongs the plaintiff must new assign, relying upon them as a distinct ground of recovery. Warner v. Hoinington, 42 Vt. 98.

115. Matter of aggravation need not be pleaded to, and a plea which justifies the breaking and entering is an answer to the whole declaration—as, a license; right of way; a right to enter for a special purpose, &c. In such case, if the plaintiff relies upon the matters stated in aggravation as a distinct injury, he must bring them forward by a new assignment. Hubbell v. Wheeler. Grout v. Knapp. Goodrich v. Judevine, 40 Vt. 190. Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 107.

116. The declaration alleged, that the defendant broke and entered the plaintiff's close "and tore down and carried away the plaintiff's fence then and there standing." The case was referred on the general issue, and the referees reported that the fence was built by the plaintiff, but as a trespasser upon the defendant's land; that the defendant tore it down, and in so doing unnecessarily broke and injured the same. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover; that the gist of the action was the unlawful entry, and the destruction of the fence was but matter in aggravation, and the plea need not answer that; and held, that although in the reference of an action it may be heard and tried by the referee upon any state of pleadings applicable and appropriate to the case, yet as in this case the locus in quo was in the defendant, and so his entry was lawful, no defense could be made upon the facts in the nature of a justification of the entry of the plaintiff's close, which would open the case to the plaintiff for any claim he might make under a new assignment. Howard v. Black, 42 Vt. 258.

117. In trespass, in common form, for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house and removing and damaging his goods, where issue was joined on a replication de injuria to pleas justifying the trespasses, the court was "inclined to think" that the plaintiff was not entitled to a charge that if the entry was made with strong hand and a multitude of people, and not peaceably, the plaintiff could recover. Carpenter v. Barber, 44 Vt. 441.

118. Where the declaration is of doubtful construction, as to whether certain doings following the breaking and entering are laid as matter of aggravation only, or as distinct injuries, the defendant is at liberty in his plea to treat them as of the former character, since the plaintiff may new assign. Grout v. Knapp, 40 Vt. 163. But if such additional matter be pleaded to and be attempted to be justified, the defendant will be bound by his own construction of the declaration, and a new assignment is not necessary. Carpenter v. Barber, 44 Vt. 441.

119. In trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close and removing and damaging his goods, the defendant's pleas attempted to justify, not only the breaking and entering, but also specifically the trespasses alleged as to the goods. Held, that the replication de injuria was an entire traverse of the pleas, and put the whole in issue; that the defendant was bound by his own construction of the declaration, and could not, under the issue, treat the trespass to the goods as matter of aggravation; that there was no necessity for a new assignment; and that the plaintiff might recover for damage done to the goods, though the entry might be justified. Id.

120. Plea, &c. In trespass qua. clau., if the defendant attempt to justify under a special plea of title and possession, he must aver every material fact necessary to constitute a title. Gleason v. Howard, Brayt. 190.

121. In such action a license must be pleaded. It cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178. Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 888.

122. A plea justifying an entry by virtue of a search-warrant sworn out by the defendant, need not aver that a complaint was signed by the applicant; nor that any minute was made of the day, &c., when presented; nor that a recognizance for costs was given; nor that the warrant was returned, in case the goods were not found. These requirements do not apply to a search-warrant. Chipman v. Bates, 15 Vt. 51.

123. Trespass qua. clau.: Plea—title in defendant. Replication—that defendant entered with strong hand, &c., and not peaceably; and issue joined. The defendant on trial justified the forcible entry and expulsion of the plaintiff on the ground of a previous peaceable entry. Held, that to sustain this point, it must appear that the defendant had taken an actual peaceable possession which was not abandoned down to the time of the last entry, so that in what was done on this last occasion the defendant stood in the attitude of defending his possession, and not invading the plaintiff's possession by violence and with strong hand. Whittaker v. Perry, 38 Vt. 107. See Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82.

124. In trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close and carrying away certain stone, the plea, pleaded as an answer to the whole declaration, was silent as to the breaking and entering, and set up a justification of the removal of the stone. On special demurrer, the plea was held ill. 1st, as professing to answer the whole declaration whereas, at most, it was only an answer in part; 2d, as taking issue upon mere matter in aggravation. By Kellogg, J.: If the defendant had the right to remove the stone, he should have pleaded that he entered the close for the purpose of exercising that right, doing no unnecessary damage. Goodrich v. Judevine, 40 Vt. 190.

125. In trespass declaring for breaking and entering the plaintiff's store, removing his goods and expelling and keeping him out of the store for 20 days, the defendant's plea justified the entire trespass in its particulars, and the replication (under G. S. c. 33, s. 16) traversed the entire plea. On trial the evidence sustained the plea as to the breaking and entering and as to removal of the goods; but did not tend to prove that it was necessary to this end to expel the plaintiff and exclude him from the store for the time that he was so excluded. Held, that it was error to charge that a justification of the entry under the pleadings covered the expulsion and exclusion of the plaintiff; and held, that a new assignment was not necessary, as the declaration contained a minute and circumstantial statement of the whole cause of action, and the plea professed to answer the whole, and the traverse was to the whole plea. Perry v. Carr, 42 Vt. 50.

126. Where the declaration counts upon a single act of trespass which is justified by the plea, the plaintiff cannot in his replication traverse the plea, and also new assign. Spencer v. Bemis, 46 Vt. 29.

TRIAL OF CIVIL ACTIONS.

- III. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.
- IV. WHAT QUESTIONS ARE FOR THE COURT, AND WHAT FOR THE JURY.

- V. REQUESTS AND CHARGE.
- VI. THE VERDICT.
- VII. ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES.

I. GENERAL RULES.

1. Admissions. The concession of a party at one trial, when not attached to the record, is considered as a concession for that trial only and does not bind at any future trial. Read v. Allen, 1 Tyl. 4. Phelps v. Hall, 2 Tyl. 401.

2. An admission upon trial must be taken according to its terms; and no presumption of a fact can be drawn from it, when the existence of the fact is negated by the admission. Clarendon v. Weston, 16 Vt. 332.

3. Issue to court. The issue upon a plea of nul tiel record can only be tried by the court. If there is also an issue to the jury in the case, the issue to the court should be first tried and determined. Gray v. Pingry, 17 Vt. 419.

4. Instances of error. Where the county court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the matters involved in a suit, it is error to refuse to try and determine the rights of the parties because they may be more conveniently and completely determined in chancery, and so direct a verdict for the defendant. Kimball v. Neal, 44 Vt. 567.

5. It is error for the judge to have any communication with the jury about the case after it has been submitted to them, except in open court. State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308.

6. Notice to produce. If the opposite party in whose possession a deed is presumed to be, is without the State, seasonable notice to his attorney within the State to produce the deed is sufficient to warrant secondary proof of contents. Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326.

7. Where suit was brought upon a written contract which was in the possession of the defendant, but was fully described in the declaration;—Held, that the service of the writ and declaration was sufficient notice to produce to authorize secondary evidence of contents, where the defendant failed to produce the contract on trial. Dana v. Conant, 30 Vt. 246.

8. Examination of witness. G. S. c. 30, s. 29, authorizing the court to order the examination of witnesses separate and apart from each other, does not include parties to the cause who may be witnesses. Streeter v. Evans, 44 Vt. 27.

9. As a general rule, leading questions are not to be put on an examination in chief; but this rests in the discretion of the court, and error cannot be assigned on it. Hopkinson v. Steel, 12 Vt. 582. 31 Vt. 439.

10. The practice as to the proper form of examining a witness upon matters of reputation, has not been uniform—whether to have him state first the general fact, and leave for cross-examination the witness's actual knowledge and means of knowledge, or to proceed in reverse order; and error cannot be predicated of either course. Wait v. Brewster, 31 Vt. 516.

11. A witness testified to a certain transaction and the date of it, and that he had written a letter upon the subject to one R. Held, that on cross-examination he might be inquired of, and without producing the letter, whether he did not in that letter give a certain other date to that transaction. Randolph v. Woodstock, 35 Vt. 291.

12. In the plaintiff's closing evidence, his counsel offered to read his minutes of the defendant's testimony given on a former trial, which he swore were correct, and contained all of the testimony in chief, but did not contain the defendant's cross-examination. This was admitted against objection, the defendant being in court. Held correct. Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611.

13. Plans, maps, &c. Plans, maps, profiles, drawings and models, verified by the person making them as correctly made, are allowed, in proper cases, to be used in connection with the testimony of the person making them and all the evidence in the case relative to the various objects shown upon them, for the purpose of explaining and illustrating the subject, and may be submitted to the jury for examination during the trial, and in their retirement; and this, although the plan, &c., does not make a full representation upon both sides. A plan, &c., might be so unfair, as that the court might properly refuse to allow it to be kept before the jury. Wood v. Willard, 36 Vt. 82. Hale v. Rich, 48 Vt. 217.

14. Memorandum. Although private memoranda are not admissible as independent evidence in favor of the party making them (Lapham v. Kelly, 35 Vt. 195. Cross v. Bartholomew, 42 Vt. 206. Goddard v. Orcutt, 44 Vt. 54), yet the witness may testify therefrom, where he has only a general recollection of the transaction and states that the memorandum was correctly made by him at the time it was made. Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 118; and the memorandum goes with his testimony to the jury. Lapham v. Kelly. Cross v. Bartholomew.

15. Where a witness on his examination in chief refers to a memorandum to refresh his memory, the opposite party is entitled to take and examine the paper for the purposes of cross-examination. Nor can the witness be excused from producing it on his statement that it was a memorandum of his doings as a detective and of a public nature, and that he could not submit it to examination without a breach of confidence, and a personal injury—certainly not, unless it appears to the court that he had a reasonable ground of belief that he would thereby subject himself to personal injury. State v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 526.

16. A witness may be allowed, in testifying, to refer to a memorandum recently made by him partly from recollection, and partly from original entries, bills and receipts, containing dates, figures and amounts and concerning matters that transpired long before; but this, not for the purpose of refreshing his recollection as to the correctness of the entries, but to enable him to state with accuracy the details of things of which he had from recollection made the memorandum, but which he could not carry in his mind so as to be able to repeat them without the aid of the paper. Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 681.

17. Mixed offer of evidence. It is not the duty or business of the court to dissect and analyze an entire offer of evidence which, as a whole, is illegitimate, and select and allow such elements of it as would be legitimate if standing alone, excluding the rest. Wright v. Williams, 47 Vt. 222.

II. THE ISSUE; EVIDENCE AS RELATED THERETO.

18. Proof of issue—Effect. Where a trial was had, under the general issue, upon a declaration which showed upon its face that the plaintiff could not recover, a verdict was directed for the defendant, although the declaration should have been demurred to. Smith v. Joiner, 1 D. Chip. 62. 22 Vt. 126.

19. Where a trial is had upon a declaration which sets forth a defective case, although all the facts are proved as stated, it rests in the discretion of the court whether to allow a verdict to be taken, leaving the defendant to his motion in arrest of judgment, or to direct a verdict at once for the defendant. Baxter v. Winooski Turnpike Co., 22 Vt. 114. Dyer v. Tilton, 28 Vt. 818, 819. Amidon v. Aiken, 28 440. 44 Vt. 157.

20. Upon trial under the general issue, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict if he proves the facts stated in his declaration, although the declaration might be ill on demurrer, or on motion in arrest; and although the evidence may disclose matter in justification. Allen v. Parkhurst, 10 Vt. 557. 19 Vt. 689. 81 Vt. 438.

21. Where the plaintiff proves his declaration, he is entitled to a verdict in the absence of proof of facts on the part of the defendant to obviate it; and the defendant cannot require the court, on the trial before the jury, to entertain and decide a question outside the issue joined. If the declaration be insufficient, the objection should be taken by demurrer, or motion in arrest. Newman v. Wait, 46 Vt. 689.

22. It is not error to receive evidence which sustains the declaration, though the declaration is ill, or shows no cause of action. Wheelock v. Wheelock, 5 Vt. 438. Onion v. Fullerton, 17 Vt. 359.

23. Whatever evidence is pertinent to prove the facts put in issue cannot be rejected, and the verdict must be according to the issue and evidence, regardless of the sufficiency of the pleadings. Barney v. Bliss, 2 Aik. 60. 11 Vt. 349. French v. Thompson, 6 Vt. 54. 22 Vt. 126. 23 Vt. 319.

24. Where a plea is traversed and the issue formed is tried by jury, the insufficiency of the plea, as that the defendant had no right to plead such a plea, cannot be raised upon an exception to the charge. The court tries such issues as the parties make by their pleadings. Carpenter v. Welch, 40 Vt. 251.

25. Where an insufficient special plea is traversed and issue joined, it seems, that the issue must be tried, and that the court cannot lay it out of the case. Batchelder v. Kinney, 44 Vt. 150.

26. If a defendant claims judgment on the ground that he has proved a plea, which is insufficient in law as a defense, he must at least prove, so far as he does allege. Bryant v. Pember, 45 Vt. 487.

27. If a defendant succeeds upon an issue of fact joined on one of several pleas going to the whole action, he is entitled to a verdict and judgment, irrespective of the result of any other issue joined on any other line of pleading. Wilson v. Seavey, 38 Vt. 221.

28. Evidence confined to issue. Where parties go into special pleadings, the rule is universal that they shall be confined strictly to the facts put in issue. Campbell v. Hyde, 1 D. Chip. 65.

29. In an action upon notes surrendered to the defendant after part payment accepted as in full upon his representations, claimed to be false and fraudulent, that he had disposed of all his other property in payment of his honest debts;—Held, that evidence for the defendant that he owed others besides the plaintiff to an amount as great as all his property, was not admissible, since it did not tend to prove that the statements made were not false, nor that the plaintiff was not thereby deceived. Reynolds v. French, 11 Vt. 674.

30. In an action to recover the difference agreed to be paid on an exchange of oxen, the only defense was a warranty of the plaintiff's oxen. Held, that it was without the issue and incompetent for the defendant to prove that the oxen he exchanged were worth more than those he received. Thomas v. Howe, 88 Vt. 600.

31. Where issue was taken on pleas: (1), that the defendant did prepare a suitable and convenient kiln or dry-house, and that it was prepared and ready for use when required for the purpose of securing the crop of hops; (2), that he did prepare, &c., according to the true intent and meaning of said contract, and to the full satisfaction of the plaintiff;—Held, that evidence that the plaintiff directed the defendant not to build a dry-house, but consented to the use of his own, and it was so used, and he was paid for such use, and all to his satisfaction, sustained the issue on both pleas. Thompson v. Kilborne, 28 Vt. 750.

32. Where by the pleadings it is admitted, by not being traversed, that certain persons were committee of a school district, testimony that they were not, is not admissible; aliter, if it be a question of identity. Moss v. Hinds, 29 Vt. 188.

33. Impertinent averments. There is a distinction between an averment merely unnecessary, and an impertinent averment; the first must be proved; the latter need not be. Fairhaven T. Co. v. French, 1 D. Chip. 209.

34. In an action on a contract of sale of certain shares of stock in a corporation, where the declaration averred a division of the stock into shares;—Held, that such averment must be proved. Id.

35. In case for fraudulent representations as to land sold, it was held unnecessary for the plaintiff to prove the source of the defendant's title, although stated in the declaration, such averment being superfluous, and surplusage. Curtis v. Burdick, 48 Vt. 166.

36. Waiver by not objecting. Where the evidence upon trial supplies any defects in the pleadings or formal issues, and no objection is taken to the pleadings or evidence, the case will be determined upon the facts established in the case, as though the pleadings had been accommodated thereto. Paige v. Smith, 18 Vt. 251. Wood v. Springfield, 43 Vt. 625.

37. The admission of testimony not objected to cannot be alleged as error, although it was not properly admissible under the pleadings; was by parol where it should have been in writing, &c. Davenport v. Hubbard, 46 Vt. 200. Hartland v. Henry, 44 Vt. 593. Laurent v. Vaughn, 30 Vt. 90.

38. Where the plaintiff, without objection, allowed inadmissible testimony to be introduced which tended to establish a material fact in defense;—Held, that the defendant had the right to have such testimony considered by the jury; for, had it been objected to and excluded, the defendant might have supplied its place with unobjectionable testimony. Porter v. Gile, 44 Vt. 520.

39. Where a deposition was admitted "subject to objection for substance";—Held, that after the testimony was closed the competency of the witness—as that she was the wife of one of the parties—could not be objected to. Motley v. Head, 43 Vt. 633.

40. In an action for an assault and battery, where the general issue was pleaded with notice of defense that the assault was committed in defense of the defendant's property, the plaintiff had testified, without objection, that he was constable of the town of H, and having a writ of attachment in his hands for service upon the defendant (which was in evidence), was attempting to attach thereon the defendant's property in the town of W, and was acting as such officer when assaulted. The defendant in his opening argument to the jury raised the objection, for the first time, that the plaintiff had shown no authority to serve the writ in W under G. S. c. 15, s. 81. Held, that the objection came too late; and that upon the state of the evidence, as left by the plaintiff, the burden was on the defendant to show a want of authority in the plaintiff to serve process outside the town of H. Distinction taken between this case, and a justification by virtue of process. Wakefield v. Fairman, 41 Vt. 339.

III. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

41. Order—Discretion. In all cases, the court has, to a certain extent, a discretionary power and control as to the order in which the evidence shall be introduced, for the purpose of placing the parties upon an equal footing in respect to the trial so that neither shall gain an unjust or undue advantage. Unless this discretion is so exercised as to deprive a party of a reasonable opportunity of availing himself of his evidence, or of his legal right in this respect, no ground of exception exists. Prout, J., in Pratt v. Rawson, 40 Vt. 189. Skinner, C. J., in Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aik. 267. Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326. Clayes v. Ferris, 10 Vt. 112. Goss v. Turner, 21 Vt. 437. Thayer v. Davis, 38 Vt. 163.

42. The general rule in relation to the order of evidence is well established in this State. The plaintiff is entitled to rest upon making a prima facie case. The defendant is then to introduce all his evidence in answer to the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff is then allowed to introduce testimony to rebut the evidence given by the defendant, and also additional evidence in support of his case as made in the opening; and ordinarily this closes the evidence. Poland, J., in Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 598.

43. But, in practice, these general rules have always been so applied, and in justice should be, as to give each party an opportunity to answer and controvert every fact, and to contradict or impeach any witness introduced by the opposite party. If a witness is called for the first time by the plaintiff in the close, or the plaintiff in the close introduces proof of a new and distinct fact, not fairly notified to the defendant by the opening evidence so as to enable him to answer it in his general evidence, he must be allowed to impeach such new witness, and to answer or contradict such new fact afterwards; and the refusal of the court to allow this would be error. Poland J., supra; and so held in the case. 32 Vt. 589. Clayes v. Ferris, 10 Vt. 112.

44. But where the plaintiff's evidence in the close only tended to sustain the evidence introduced in the opening and was not upon any new point, but upon a point in respect to which the defendant had introduced testimony;—Held, that the defendant had no right to introduce any further testimony; and the decision below excluding it was affirmed. Thayer v. Davis, 38 Vt. 163.

45. The plaintiff, as a witness, had testified, making out a prima facie case, and rested. He was cross-examined in relation to facts which, if established, discredited or impeached him. The defendant then put in his defense, which was a denial of the plaintiff's case and evidence of further facts tending to impeach the plaintiff's testimony, and rested. The plaintiff was then recalled, and contradicted only the new facts introduced by the defendant in the way of impeachment, these facts being of the same character as those inquired about on cross-examination, and which the defendant then had an opportunity to cross-examine the plaintiff upon. The defendant then offered general evidence of impeachment of the plaintiff's character for truth, which the court excluded. Held, that it was within the discretion of the court, at that stage of the trial, so to do. Pratt v. Rawson, 40 Vt. 183.

46. The right of opening or closing the evidence in a case does not belong to the plaintiff, or the defendant, as such, but depends entirely upon which party takes the affirmative of the issue; and the right to rest upon a prima facie showing is mutual. Thus, if the defendant rely upon an independent fact in discharge of the plaintiff's claim, as payment, he may content himself in the outset by establishing such defense prima facie, with the same right to sustain it by rebutting evidence, if attacked, as the plaintiff had as to the issue when the affirmative ground belonged to him. Goss v. Turner, 21 Vt. 497.

47. In an action against a town for an injury occasioned by running off a highway by reason of its insufficiency, a witness for the defendant was asked on cross-examination, and without objection, whether, on the day before the accident, he did not go off at the same place with his team; and he answered in the affirmative. The defendant then proposed to go into an inquiry as to the particular circumstances of his running off. The plaintiff objected, disclaiming any use to be made of this fact except as serving to fix the time and to call the attention of the witness to the road; and thereupon the court ruled that the explanation sought was of no importance and excluded it, as not bearing on the issue. Held, that this was in the discretion of the court, and the decision was not error. Allen v. Hancock, 16 Vt. 230.

48. A witness, having testified, returned some days later in the trial and corrected his previous testimony on a single point. The opposing counsel then put the question: "Are you not as likely to be mistaken on other points in which your testimony differs from that which you gave before the probate court, as you are in this?" The court excluded the question and required that the cross-examination, at that stage of the trial, should be confined to the point in respect to which the witness had corrected his testimony. Held correct; and, by a majority, that the matter was entirely in the discretion of the judge; and by other members of the court, that the question was improper because it called the witness's attention to no single point in his testimony in the probate court, but to the whole collectively, and assumed that there was such contradiction. Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 123.

49. Provisional testimony. Where testimony, not admissible by itself, is offered and admitted upon the statement of counsel that it will be so connected with other evidence to be put in as will make it admissible, and such other evidence is not given, the court in summing up should exclude the testimony from the consideration of the jury. State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Baxter, Id. 814.

50. The professional opinion of a medical expert, based upon hypothetical facts, may, in the discretion of the court, be received in evidence as well before evidence given of the facts, as after; or after evidence of part of the facts only, when the court is satisfied that the party intends in good faith to offer proof of the supposed facts. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

51. An exception taken to evidence introduced out of its proper order, or which standing alone would not be admissible, is cured, provided such evidence, in its relation to other evidence afterwards introduced, becomes, in the end, pertinent to the issue. Jenne v. Joslyn, 41 Vt. 478.

52. Irrelevant. Where the defendant had put in certain irrelevant testimony, the plaintiff was allowed, against the defendant's objection, to contradict it. Held not to be error. Gottlieb v. Leach, 40 Vt. 278.

53. The introduction of evidence by one party, that might have been excluded if objected to, does not necessarily open the door to the other party to introduce incompetent evidence. But where the evidence introduced is a circumstance morally tending to render the disputed fact more probable, even if so remote as not to be admissible as legal evidence, the other party has a right to do away with the impression it may create in the minds of the jury, by evidence of the same character and force, tending directly to meet and explain it. Peck, J., in Lytle v. Bond, 40 Vt. 624; and, for the refusal to admit such evidence in reply, the judgment was reversed. Id. 618.

54. Improper. Dictum. In the trial of cases where the issue is not defined and where, at the time, it is often impossible to anticipate what questions may arise in the course of the trial, testimony offered should be received if competent evidence in any view of the case which may be thereafter taken. And a new trial is not to be granted on account of the admission of evidence which might become important in any supposable state of the other evidence, or upon any question which might probably thereafter arise, unless it appears that it was improperly applied in the decision of the case; so that, as a general rule, it is not safe to raise questions upon the admissibility of evidence, but to reserve the questions upon the application of the evidence to the determination of the case. Redfield, C. J., in Harris v. Holmes, 30 Vt. 352. But see infra.

55. The error of admitting improper testimony, which is objected to, is not cured by a charge to the jury not to consider it. Conn. & Pass R. R. Co. v. Baxter, 32 Vt. 805. Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80. Williams, C. J., in Allen v. Hancock, 16 Vt. 233. Redfield, J., in Hodge v. Bennington, 43 Vt. 458. Poland, C. J., in Wood v. Willard, 36 Vt. 88.

56. Where a deposition containing some irrelevant and perhaps improper matter was allowed to be read in full to the jury against a general objection thereto, but the court charged the jury to disregard the objectionable parts;—Held, that this was not error; that it was a question of practice, and that the judge must be allowed some reasonable discretion. Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582. (The authority of this case is considerably limited. Poland, C. J., in Wood v. Willard.)

57. Harmless. A judgment will not be reversed for the reason that an improper question was allowed to be put to a witness, if no improper evidence was obtained by his answer. Randolph v. Woodstock, 35 Vt. 291.

58. Where a witness to a proper question gave an inadmissible answer before there was time to check him or interpose an objection, and the court said that was not evidence for any purpose;—Held, that here was no error which could be revised. Id.

59. A witness for the plaintiff made a statement while testifying, which was instantly objected to by the defendant and excluded by the court as inadmissible. The defendant requested the court to charge upon this as testimony. The court declined and treated the statement as not in the case. Held correct. Morse v. Richmond, 42 Vt. 539.

60. The declaration in an action for slander was in two counts—one for words charging perjury, the other for words charging theft. Evidence was introduced in support of both counts. The testimony being closed, the plaintiff proposed to abandon the first count. This the county court, against the defendant's objection, allowed, and instructed the jury to lay that count and all the testimony in relation to it out of the case. Held, that this was not error, and that the action of the county court was proper in the case. Kirkaldie v. Paige, 17 Vt. 256.

61. Party not objecting. A party cannot allow testimony to be introduced without objection, thereby waiving his right to object, and then, after the testimony is closed and the case is being argued, insist upon its exclusion. Laurent v. Vaughn, 30 Vt. 90.

62. The question being as to the validity of the levy of an execution;—Held, there being no objection to the authentication of the record but only to its want of intrinsic validity, that this objection was not waived by not objecting to the reading of the record and by letting it pass to the jury, and that the same question could be raised on argument to the court. Stanton v. Bannister, 2 Vt. 464.

63. Where a paper presented by the defendant, was read to the jury without objection, but the court charged the jury that it was of no avail in the case, and the court afterwards permitted the paper to go to the jury with the other papers in the case, though against the objection of the plaintiff against whom the verdict was;—Held, that this was not error. Warden v. Warden, 22 Vt. 563.

64. Where the only objection made to testimony offered was that it was immaterial;—Held, that all other objections to it were waived; as to proof of the contents of a letter without proof of loss. Weeks v. Barron, 38 Vt. 420.

65. I think that where evidence has a moral tendency to induce belief of the truth of a disputed fact, although the inference from it is too remote to constitute legal evidence, the right to object to it is waived by suffering it to come in without objection, since the party offering it may have relied on it, and thereby been induced to omit supplying it by other proof. Peck, J., in Cavendish v. Troy, 41 Vt. 107.

66. Limitation of issue. Where an injury is improperly laid with a continuando and so the declaration may be subject to a special demurrer, the plaintiff on trial, without any waiver on his part, may, upon the objection of the defendant, be confined by the court to proof of a single injury. Baxter v. Winoski T. Co., 22 Vt. 114.

67. Election. In an action against a town to recover for injuries received upon a highway, the declaration, in a single count, averred the insufficiency of a certain section of the highway, and that the plaintiff's wagon was thereby broken and his horse killed. On the trial it appeared that the axle was broken at one point in the highway and the plaintiff was there thrown out, when the horse taking fright ran 21 rods along the road and was then thrown into a ditch and killed—both points being in that section of the highway which was averred to be insufficient. The plaintiff claimed to recover by reason of the insufficiency of the road as well as at the point where the horse was killed, as at the point where the axle was broken—at both points, or either. The defendant asked that the plaintiff should be put to his election. The court refused. Held, not erroneous;—for it was the continuous insufficiency of this line, or section of road, not a point in the road, that caused the injury. Hodge v. Bennington, 48 Vt. 450.

68. Where the subject matter and causes of action are separate and divisible and the declaration is single and in one count, the plaintiff cannot duplicate the causes of action, and it would be error, after he had given evidence of one, to allow him to attempt to prove another; and if two causes of action should become disclosed by the evidence, he should be required to elect for which he would go. But it is otherwise, as here, where the cause of action is single and essentially one occurrence and one transaction, yet made up of parts and embracing many incidents. Redfield, J., Ib. 457; and see Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

IV. WHAT QUESTIONS ARE FOR THE COURT, AND WHAT FOR THE JURY.

69. For the court. In an action upon contract where the testimony is all in paper, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury, as a question of law, whether the testimony, all being true, proves the contract alleged; and, if not proved as alleged, to direct a verdict for the defendant. Mixer v. Williams, 17 Vt. 457.

70. Judgment reversed, because the judge did not, upon request, instruct the jury what constituted fraud in fact in a sale of chattels; nor, whether the facts proved amounted to a delivery and change of possession. Mott v. McNiel, 1 Aik. 162.

71. In every case where there is no conflict in the evidence, the question of change of possession—as, in case of sales and attachments—is purely one of law, and as such to be decided by the court. But where the testimony is conflicting and the facts uncertain, it must be submitted to the jury to find the facts; and the court is to say what facts, if found by the jury, constitute a sufficient change of possession. Burrows v. Stebbins, 26 Vt. 659, explaining Stephenson v. Clark, 20 Vt. 624. Hall v. Parsons, 17 Vt. 271. Wilson v. Hooper, 12 Vt. 658. Rothchild v. Rowe, 44 Vt. 889.

72. It is error to submit a question to the jury, where the evidence presents only a question of law. Collamer v. Langdon, 29 Vt. 32. Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 124.

73. The plaintiff, son of the defendant, testified that while a minor he went out to work, the defendant saying he might have all he earned, if he would; that he afterwards, while still a minor, enlisted in the army with his father's consent, and upon the defendant's assurance that the plaintiff should have all the money, bounty, &c., and that whatever the plaintiff should send him he would pay back; and testified in detail the amounts sent, and when, &c. The defendant claimed that, admitting the truth of the testimony, the jury were at liberty to infer, or not to infer, such a relation as would entitle the plaintiff to recover; but the court instructed the jury that if the testimony was true, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Held correct. Ayer v. Ayer, 41 Vt. 302.

74. A request to charge was, that the plaintiff could not recover for any trespass committed on "the Slocum piece," because that was not covered by the description given in the declaration. Whether so or not, was not a simple question of construction, but depended upon the findings of the jury. The court charged that the plaintiff could not recover for any trespass not committed upon the premises described in the declaration. Held, that the request was substantially complied with. Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667.

75. For the jury. Where testimony tending to sustain an issue is submitted to the jury, it cannot be assigned for error that "the court permitted a verdict" against the weight of the testimony, or without sufficient testimony. The whole question is with the jury, and it is no judicial act of the court that they permit a verdict to be rendered. Stearns v. Howe, 12 Vt. 577.

76. In all questions depending upon a general inference from a multiplicity of particular facts, the inference is always one of fact unless the law has established some fixed rule—as, six months' notice to quit, &c.; or where the inference is one which admits of no doubt, so that it will strike all minds alike. But in all questions of doubt of this character, and where the law has fixed no rule, the inference is one to be made by a jury. Such are questions of due diligence, skill, reasonable time, probable cause, intention, &c. Seadons v. Newport, 28 Vt. 9.

77. The question of reasonable diligence, or how much would have been made from a particular security if reasonable diligence had been used, is for the jury, and not for the court. Brainard v. Reynolds, 36 Vt. 614.

78. Certain depositions to the unsoundness of a horse were excluded by the court, as not sufficiently identifying the horse. Held erroneous—there being other testimony in the case to establish the identity, which was a question for the jury. Wason v. Rowe, 16 Vt. 525.

79. The defendant's counsel insisted to the jury that certain depositions of the plaintiff were guarded in expression, avoided details, &c., indicating a purpose to get up a false case. The court instructed the jury, that if they found the depositions subject to this objection they might consider it in weighing the testimony of such witnesses, and that the whole question as to the truth of the depositions was with the jury. Held, it appearing that the depositions were fairly subject to such criticism, that the charge of the judge was proper. Clough v. Patrick, 37 Vt. 421.

80. The bill of exceptions stated that the plaintiff gave evidence tending to prove certain facts; that the defendant introduced no testimony, and that the court charged that if the jury believed the testimony in the case, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. General verdict for plaintiff. Held, that the charge was erroneous; that it should have been put to the jury to find how the fact was—which is quite another thing from finding that the evidence given tended to prove the fact. Bourne v. Merritt, 22 Vt. 429.

81. A ruling "that in the absence of any evidence discrediting or contradicting the deposition offered, it was sufficient evidence" of a fact in question, was held, under the circumstances, as taking from the jury the question of the truth of the evidence, and was erroneous. Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 471.

82. Where upon the testimony of one of the plaintiff's witnesses a case was made against the plaintiff, but there was other testimony tending to sustain his case;—Held, that it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant. Barnum v. Hackett, 35 Vt. 77.

83. In trespass for driving the defendant's wagon against the plaintiff's carriage, but not purposely, the evidence was conflicting as to whether the collision was by the plaintiff's or defendant's negligence. The jury disagreed; whereupon the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff and an assessment of the damages, so that the cause might pass to the supreme court to have the question of law determined whether trespass would lie in such case. Held error, because if the jury had found the facts as the defendant's evidence tended to show, the plaintiff could not have recovered in any form of action. Howard v. Tyler, 46 Vt. 683.

84. To what particular demands or accounts a party's acknowledgment or promise applies, where it is not specific, is a question of fact to be determined by the triers of fact. Kimball v. Baxter, 27 Vt. 628. Brewin v. Farrell, 39 Vt. 206. Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 369.

85. The testimony not being unequivocal as to the extent of the authority of an agent, or the length of time it was to continue, held erroneous to decide this as a question of law. Riley v. Wheeler, 42 Vt. 528.

86. Although there may be no conflict in the evidence, and no dispute as to the language made use of by the parties in the making or discharging of a contract, the conferring of an authority, &c., the question may yet be one of fact for the jury, and not of law for the court—a question of intention, as to how the language and the transaction were really understood by the parties; and this to be determined from all the circumstances attending the transaction. Williams v. Heywood, 41 Vt. 279. Adams v. Flanagan, 36 Vt. 400.

87. If there is any evidence tending to show that the parties to an unwritten contract might have understood it in the way claimed by one of them, it is the duty of the court to submit to the jury to find whether the parties did so understand it. Andrews v. Moretown, 45 Vt. 1.

88. The cases are rare where it is necessary to have a jury inquire into facts affecting the construction of a written contract; yet such cases may occur, where the question of intention, with proper instructions, must go to the jury. Redfield, J., in Roberts v. Button, 14 Vt. 195.

89. A verdict cannot be directed for the defendant, if there is any evidence tending to prove the contract as set up in the declaration. Lewis v. Pratt, 48 Vt. 358.

90. Where there is any evidence of a material fact, it must be left to the jury; otherwise, it is error. Rogers v. Judd, 6 Vt. 191.

91. Where evidence is given tending to prove a material fact, it is error in the court to adjudge it insufficient, and direct a verdict. That is exclusively for the jury to determine. Jones v. Booth, 10 Vt. 268. Wemel v. Missisquoi Lime Co., 46 Vt. 458.

92. The testimony of a competent witness, however much discredited, must be submitted to the jury to be weighed by them. State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93.

93. It may be proper for a court to instruct a jury to find for a plaintiff if the evidence is believed, where there is no conflict of evidence and it directly proves the fact in issue, or where the fact is a necessary and invariable inference of law from what is proved. But if there be any conflict in the evidence, or if it only shows facts from which the main fact is to be presumed or inferred by the jury, the case should be left to the jury, under proper legal instructions. Lindsay v. Lindsay, 11 Vt. 621.

94. Finding without evidence. It is error to leave to the jury to find a fact, when there is no evidence tending to prove such fact. Manwell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176. Birney v. Martin, 8 Vt. 236. Bray v. Wheeler, 29 Vt. 514. Dean v. Dean, 43 Vt. 344.

95. Case of leaving to the jury to find a fact upon conjecture, and without evidence. Judgment reversed. Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 124.

96. It is error to instruct the jury to decide a cause according as they find a particular fact, where there is no testimony tending to prove that fact, or where all the testimony given tends to prove the contrary. Birney v. Martin, 8 Vt. 236. Fullam v. Cummings, 16 Vt. 697.

97. Non-suit. A non-suit imports a voluntary act of the plaintiff. The court cannot enforce a non-suit on trial, while the plaintiff insists on proceeding to verdict. French v. Smith, 4 Vt. 363.

98. The court cannot take a case from the jury on trial and order a judgment of non-suit, against the plaintiff's will, for the reason that he fails to make out a case. Such judgment is proper only in cases where the plaintiff fails to appear and prosecute, or voluntarily withdraws after appearance, or fails to comply with some rule or order of the court. Smith v. Crane, 12 Vt. 487. Brown v. Munger, 16 Vt. 12.

V. REQUESTS AND CHARGE.

99. Requests—Time for presenting. The rule of practice requires, that any special requests to charge should be presented to the court by the opening of the argument for the party making the requests. Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266. Cady v. Owen, 34 Vt. 598. Wilmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 455.

100. After the court has submitted the cause to the jury, a request to charge upon a new point is not in time, and the court is not bound to receive it. Stanton v. Bannister, 2 Vt. 464. Wetherby v. Foster, 5 Vt. 186.

101. Nor is the court bound to notice a request made after the argument is closed. Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266; nor after the jury have come in disagreed. Cady v. Owen, 34 Vt. 598; nor least of all, to notice a request made after argument and charge, where the charge adopted the position taken by counsel on both sides—as, that certain testimony was to be treated as impeaching evidence only; and the new request was to charge that it was evidence in chief—thus giving to it a new character and application. Wilmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 447.

102. Character of request. The character and value of special requests to charge, commented upon by Williams, C. J., in Waller v. Keyes, 6 Vt. 257; by Redfield, J., in Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266.

103. A court is never bound to regard written requests to charge, unless they are couched in such terms as to be sound to the full extent. The fact that some sound law might be extracted from the requests, or that in general terms they may be sound law, with certain qualifications, is not enough. They must be wholly sound law, and without any necessary qualification, or it is not error to refuse them. But the court is bound to charge upon every point material to the decision of the case upon which there is evidence, and to charge correctly and fully, whether requested or not. Redfield, J., in Vaughan v. Porter.

104. Where a party is not entitled to a charge to the full extent of his request, the mere refusal so to charge is not error. Underwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 120.

105. A request which collates certain conceded and certain disputed facts and isolates them from others which affect their force, thus making an unreal case, is not required to be made a separate branch of the charge, and may be refused. Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122.

106. Where a request to charge was an entire proposition, made in reference to the plaintiff's right to recover and not in reference to damages, and was properly denied;—Held, that it was not error for the court to omit to single out a particular part of the request and apply it upon the question of damages, if there was no affirmative error upon the question of damages. Whittaker v. Perry, 38 Vt. 107.

107. To entitle a party to a reversal of judgment upon the ground that the court refused to charge as requested, it should appear that the party was entitled, as a matter of legal right, to the charge requested. Bates v. Cilley, 47 Vt. 1.

108. Duty to charge properly. Though a party is not entitled to the particular charge requested, he is entitled to such a charge as the facts in the case require. Hazard v. Smith, 21 Vt. 123.

109. The county court is always bound to charge the jury according to the rules of law applicable to the case, whether specifically requested so to do, or not. Redfield, J., in Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 498.

110. There may be cases where a verdict would not be set aside, or judgment be reversed, for neglect of the court to charge upon a material point, not having been requested so to do; yet it is error, in such case, to refuse on proper request. Skinner, J., in Washburn v. Tracy, 3 D. Chip. 128.

111. Each party is entitled to a correct charge as to the legal result of such a state of facts as he claims to exist, and as his testimony tends to prove. Clark v. Tabor, 28 Vt. 222. Dodge v. Stacy, 39 Vt. 565. Morse v. Huntington, 40 Vt. 495. Whitney v. Lynde, 16 Vt. 579.

112. A party has a right, on trial, to require the opinion of the court upon any point of law pertinent to the issue, and the refusal to give such opinion is cause for exception, and a ground of error. Fletcher v. Howard, 3 Aik. 115.

113. A judgment of the county court was reversed, where they avoided the expression of an opinion to the jury of the law applicable to the issue, as embraced in the request to charge. Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97.

114. The law, and all the law upon the subject, which is required to enable the jury to come to a correct determination, must be decided by the court, or it will be error; but the judge is not obliged to answer requests made upon a hypothetical case. Brooks v. Claves, 10 Vt. 37.

115. Though the judges of the county court may disagree upon a material question of law, it is their duty nevertheless to charge one way or the other upon the point, or else suspend the trial to another term. For refusal to charge in such case, judgment was reversed. Boardman v. Keeler, 1 Aik. 158. So, also, where, by reason of such disagreement, the question of law was submitted to the jury. Hall v. Adams, 1 Aik. 166.

116. Charge to be warranted by, and applied to, the evidence. The court is not bound, and ought not, to charge what the law is as to a point upon which there is no evidence. Mack v. Snider, 1 Aik. 104. Barron v. Fay, 38 Vt. 705.

117. A request to charge must be warranted by the evidence, and should not be answered unless so warranted, though the request may be a correct statement of a legal proposition. Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667.

118. It is not the duty of the court to give instructions to the jury upon any abstract point, not raised by the evidence; and it is error to instruct them to return a verdict as they may find some particular fact, when there is no evidence tending to prove that fact. Wetherby v. Foster, 5 Vt. 136.

119. It is error for the court to instruct the jury to decide the cause upon the consideration of certain specified facts or circumstances, when there are others which ought also to be taken into account. Gordon v. Tabor, 5 Vt. 108.

120. Unless the testimony is all one way, it is error for the court to charge that if they find the facts as testified to by the witnesses, they should find for the plaintiff. Where the testimony is not concurrent, the attention of the jury should be called to the different aspects of the case as presented by the testimony; and they should be directed to the particular facts they must find in order to entitle the party to a verdict. For a too general direction in this respect, the judgment will be reversed and a new trial granted. Hazard v. Smith, 21 Vt. 128.

121. Abstraction. Judgment reversed, because the charge laid down the law only in the abstract, without specific application to the facts in evidence. Mason v. Silver, 1 Aik. 367.

122. It is the duty of courts, in their instructions to juries, to make the law applicable to the particular case, and not to deal in mere abstractions—as, by reading to them legal principles from text-books and reports. Such practice criticised. State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491.

123. It is not the duty of the court, in a charge, to illustrate a general proposition of law, correctly stated, in every conceivable way, or in any particular manner unless specially requested so to do. It is enough, if the illustrations given do not inculcate any false principle. It is its duty to state correctly the general principles governing the case, and to illustrate them sufficiently to enable the jury to understand their proper application to the case. Ross, J., in Whitcomb v. Fairlee, 43 Vt. 675.

124. Discretion. As to circumstantial evidence, it rests in the discretion of the judge to what extent he will go in laying down to the jury the approved rules for weighing such evidence. It is not error unless he gives wrong instructions—though the want of full instructions may, in some courts, have been considered ground for new trial. State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93.

125. How far the court will go in its charge, having laid down the ultimate doctrine of the law of the subject and case, in developing and amplifying it and indicating pertinent considerations bearing upon the application and results of it, in view of the evidence, is generally matter of discretion not revisable by the supreme court. Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95.

126. Contradictory instructions. Where contradictory instructions in a charge are given, one wrong and the other right, the judgment will be reversed; for, in such case, the jury would be left to take which statement they might choose, and might take the wrong one and so be led into error. Alexander v. Blodgett, 44 Vt. 476.

127. Several counts. If testimony be admitted generally in support of several counts in a declaration, which is legally admissible in support of part only, it is error, unless the jury are properly instructed to which count the testimony is applicable, and to which not. Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457.

128. Where a declaration contains several counts, setting out the cause of action in different ways to meet any differences that might arise on the proof, or different views of the language of a contract, and no objection is made to the admissibility of the evidence upon particular counts, and no question is made to the court as to the applicability of the evidence to each, no exception lies because the court does not voluntarily assume the duty of directing the attention of the jury, and confining the recovery, to such counts as the proof sustains. Brintnall v. Sar. & W. R. Co., 32 Vt. 665.

129. Error induced by concession of party. In an action of assumpsit, the defense was put upon the ground of fraudulent representations and concealment, and the charge of the court was correct upon that point. The defense might, upon the evidence, have been put upon the ground of a breach of an express warranty, but was not; and the charge would have been erroneous as applied to such defense. Held, that no exception lay. Richardson v. Concord, 40 Vt. 207.

130. By Barrett, J.: It has been often held, that the court ought to give correct instructions to the jury as to matters of law involved in the case, as tried, without special request; and if, without specific requests for a charge, the court gives incorrect instructions, it may be made the subject of exception. But, in the present case, we think the judge fully performed his duty when he correctly charged the jury as to the law in reference to the right and claim asserted by the plaintiff, and the defense asserted by the defendant, on the trial; and we do not regard it error for him to omit to charge as to a defense which was not made, even if it be thought that such defense might have been legitimately made; nor for him to give instructions that were correct as to the defense that was, in fact, made, but would not be correct as to a defense that might have been made on some other ground, but was not made. Id. 210.

131. Held, that where the plaintiff gives evidence tending to prove all the facts necessary to a recovery, it is not error for the court to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, although there was evidence for the defense tending to disprove some of such necessary facts, where the defendant declines to go to the jury upon such facts—this being virtually a concession of such facts, material to the right of action, as the evidence tends to establish. Mudgett v. Johnson, 42 Vt. 428.

132. After the close of the evidence, the plaintiff's counsel said they did not claim there was anything for the jury to try, and the county court thereupon decided that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The evidence tended to prove the fact upon which the court's decision rested. Held, that the finding of the court was conclusive. Davis v. St. Albans, 42 Vt. 585.

133. Comment on evidence. It is not usual in this State for the court to express an opinion to the jury upon the weight of evidence. Gordon v. Tabor, 5 Vt. 108; and the court is not obliged to express such opinion. Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97. Vincent v. Stinehour, 7 Vt. 62; but it is not error for the court so to do. Stevens v. Talcott, 11 Vt. 25. Gale v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 152. Yale v. Seely, 15 Vt. 231. Sawyer v. Phaley, 33 Vt. 69; and see Missisquoi Bank v. Everts, 45 Vt. 298.

134. Where the court below expressed to the jury their opinion that there was no sufficient evidence to charge two of the defendants, but that the jury would weigh the evidence and determine for themselves, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of said two defendants;—Held, that this was not cause for reversal of the judgment. Yale v. Seely.

135. It is not error in law for a judge in his charge to express his opinion as to the weight and tendency of the evidence, although this may have great influence upon the verdict, if he still distinctly leaves the evidence to the jury to weigh and to draw a different conclusion, and the language used is not likely to mislead the jury in this respect. Sawyer v. Phaley, 33 Vt. 69.

136. Where a question arises on that subject, the court may lawfully state to the jury his impressions and understanding as to how a witness meant to be understood in the testimony he had given, and may indicate how such impression and understanding were derived, especially when the court distinctly leaves to the jury to find the fact from the testimony. The idea that it is the duty of the court to leave the jury to such light as may be shed upon them by counsel in the argument of cases, without intimations as to the true light in which, under the law, the materials of evidence are to be considered and used, not only is not proper to be countenanced, but is counter to the practice of the best class of judges. Missisquoi Bank v. Everts, 45 Vt. 298.

137. The judge in charging the jury remarked that he recollected no evidence upon a certain point, unless it was certain evidence which he referred to. Held, that if this was a mistake of the judge, it was not a subject of error, where he left all the evidence to the jury, as they heard it. Dow v. School Dist. Walden, 46 Vt. 108.

138. So long as the county court does not withdraw evidence from the consideration of the jury, and states no erroneous principle of law to govern their consideration of it, the supreme court will not revise the charge, nor reverse the judgment. Sampson v. Warner, 48 Vt. 247.

139. In an action against a town for an injury received upon a highway, the defendant requested a charge that the jury should not allow any feeling of sympathy for the plaintiff to influence them in deciding the case. The court charged the jury that they would remember to lay aside their feelings in the case, but said to them: "Of course none of us can do away entirely with our sympathies; we all have more or less feeling of sympathy for a party who has been injured, and it is right we should have; but in making up your verdict in the case, you will lay aside your feelings of sympathy, as far as may be, and determine the issues upon the evidence given in court, forgetting, as far as may be, the parties and the consequences of your determination." Held, no substantial error; but that it would have been more satisfactory if the judge had been more decided and explicit in instructing the jury, that their feeling of sympathy for the plaintiff should have nothing to do with their verdict. Fulsome v. Concord, 48 Vt. 135.

140. Measure of proof. The defendant in a civil action requested the court to charge the jury, that if they doubted about the fact of his liability they must find for him. Held, that such charge would be error; that this rule prevails only in criminal cases. Spencer v. Daggett, 2 Vt. 92.

141. In a statute action, the first count of the declaration was for a penalty, the second for damages, and the third for both. Held, that a general charge that in order to a recovery the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, was, as to the second count, erroneous. Barnet v. Ray, 33 Vt. 205.

142. Exceptions—Waiver. When the plaintiff rests, the defendant may have judgment upon the case as it then stands, and that judgment is subject to exception. But if, by leave of court, further evidence is put in by the excepting party and the case varied, the original exception is waived. Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 124. Carr v. Manahan, 44 Vt. 246.

VI. THE VERDICT.

143. Correcting verdict. Where a jury by mistake return an erroneous verdict, it may be corrected by the court on inquiry of the jury in open court; or it may be committed to the jury again to correct the error, although (as in this case) there had been a brief and partial separation. Montgomery v. Maynard, 33 Vt. 450.

144. Harmless error. A verdict will not be set aside for a mistake which cannot prejudice the moving party; as where, in ejectment, the verdict was for nominal damages and, by mistake, included more land than the defendant (the moving party) claimed or was in possession of. Burnell v. Maloney, 39 Vt. 579.

145. Special verdict. It is always competent for a court to require the jury to find separately on each issue of fact presented by the evidence. When the verdict is thus rendered, the case will not be remanded for a new trial, unless there is error in some branch of the case with respect to which a different verdict would alter the general result. Spaulding v. Robbins, 42 Vt. 90.

146. A special verdict is authorized by G. S. c. 80, s. 85, and it is not matter of exception for the court to order it. Hogle v. Clark, 46 Vt. 418. Babcock v. Culver, 46 Vt. 715, 721.

147. Where a special verdict is taken, it is the duty of the court to render the proper judgment upon the facts found by it; and by such verdict an error in directing a general verdict, upon other grounds, was held cured. Ib.

148. The error in a charge upon one point may be cured, or become immaterial, by a special finding of the jury upon some other point. Davis v. Judge, 46 Vt. 655. Hodge v. Bennington, 43 Vt. 450.

149. When the issues in a case are divisible and distinct, and a special finding of the jury on one issue renders the other immaterial, then the error of the court in admitting improper evidence upon such other issue, and applicable only to that, becomes immaterial, and the judgment will not be reversed therefor. Hodge v. Bennington.

150. Immaterial issue—Repleader. A verdict set aside and a repleader awarded, because of the immateriality of the issue. Eddy v. Cochran, 1 Aik. 359.

151. Verdicto non obstante. The defendant pleaded in justification, as an officer, an execution returnable in 120 days. The plaintiff replied that the execution, as issued, was returnable in 60 days and was altered to 120 days after its return; and issue was joined. The court rejected evidence of the alteration, and rendered judgment for the defendant. Judgment affirmed;—for that the issue was immaterial, since the defendant was justified in either case, the process being regular on its face; and if the evidence had been admitted and the issue found for the plaintiff, it would have been the duty of the court, not to award a repleader, but at once to give judgment, non obstante verdicto, for the defendant. Gage v. Barnes, 11 Vt. 195.

152. In order to sustain a motion for judgment for the plaintiff, notwithstanding a verdict for the defendant upon his plea, the plea must not only be defective, but must have presented an immaterial issue. Where the plea presents an equitable defense, it will always be sustained after verdict. Chase v. Holton, 11 Vt. 347. Barney v. Bliss, 2 Aik. 60.

153. To a plea of payment after a debt fell due, and on a day named, there was a traverse of payment on that day, in the words of the plea. Held, after verdict, that the traverse did not form an immaterial issue, and was sufficient. Stearns v. Stearns, 32 Vt. 678.

154. Where a verdict passes for the plaintiff, though upon a defective declaration, the court cannot render a judgment for the defendant, verdicto non obstante. French v. Steele, 14 Vt. 479. 27 Vt. 31.

155. A judgment verdicto non obstante is never rendered for the defendant; and it is only rendered for the plaintiff upon the confession in a plea which is bad in substance. Where the issue joined upon an immaterial replication is found for the defendant, the court does not know for whom to render judgment, and either awards a repleader, or arrests the judgment upon proper motion. Stoughton v. Mott, 15 Vt. 162.

156. A motion for a judgment non obstante verdicto is necessarily founded on the record alone, and can never depend on any state of evidence not disclosed by the record. Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301. Cobb v. Conderly, 40 Vt. 27.

157. Motion in arrest. It is doubtful whether any motion in arrest can be sustained where the issue is tried by the court. Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252.

158. A motion in arrest cannot be sustained for such things as took place on the trial. Walker v. Sergeant, 11 Vt. 327.

159. A decision made upon demurrer stands as the law of that case upon a motion in arrest, though the pleadings have been changed. Ross v. Bank of Burlington, 1 Aik. 48. 27 Vt. 699.

VII. ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES.

160. After judgment by default or nil dicat, in an action against a sheriff for an escape on execution, the damages may be assessed by the clerk, on computation, after the term. Matter in mitigation of damages, as the poverty of the prisoner, is a subject for the jury on trial, or motion for a hearing in damages. Weeks v. Lawrence, 1 Vt. 433.

161. A and B were sued for a joint trespass. A suffered a default and judgment passed against B on trial, and damages were assessed against A equal to the damages recovered against B. On exceptions taken by B, held, that there was no error in the judgment. May v. Bliss, 22 Vt. 477.

162. A judgment against a defendant, without trial, stands as if judgment had been rendered upon a demurrer to the declaration, and every fact alleged in the declaration which it would have been necessary for the plaintiff to establish by proof to entitle him to a judgment, is regarded as established by the judgment. Bradley v. Chamberlain, 31 Vt. 468.

163. Where the facts thus alleged furnish of themselves a rule of damages, as in an action upon a note of hand, or any other contract which must be proved precisely as alleged, the plaintiff is prima facie entitled, upon a hearing for assessment of damages, to the amount of damages indicated by this rule. Ib.

164. A judgment against a defendant, though without trial, determines the plaintiff's right to recover some damages, at least nominal; but whether more or not, is a question fully open for trial and evidence on both sides upon the assessment of damages, as if such preliminary judgment had not been rendered. Ib. Chamberlin v. Murphy, 41 Vt. 110.

165. On the assessment of damages, after a preliminary judgment, evidence which goes only to the right of recovery is not admissible; but it is no objection, in such case, to evidence which is relevant to the question of damages, that it would also have been legitimate upon the main question if that had been tried, and would even have prevented a judgment. Chamberlin v. Murphy.

- IV. DEFENSE.

I. FOR WHAT THE ACTION LIES.

1. Generally. For all personal chattels.
2. Securities — Papers. Trover for a promissory note lies in favor of the maker against the payee where it is wrongfully withheld, or transferred after payment. Buck v. Kent, 3 Vt. 99. Pierce v. Gilson, 9 Vt. 216.
3. So, by two makers of a joint and several note, though one is surety for the other. Spencer v. Dearth, 43 Vt. 98.
4. So, also, for the plaintiff's note loaned to the defendant, which the defendant paid, and then claimed of the plaintiff. Park v. McDaniel, 37 Vt. 594.

5. The same law as to a mortgage deed; and it is no objection to the action that the fact of payment is disputed. Gleason v. Owen, 85 Vt. 590. Spencer v. Dearth, 43 Vt. 98—disapproving dicta in Pierce v. Gilson, 9 Vt. 221.

6. So, as to a bond. Bullock v. Rogers, 16 Vt. 294.

7. Trover lies for a check in behalf of him whose property it is, whether payable to him or indorsed to him, or not. Tilden v. Brown, 14 Vt. 164.

8. Also by a judgment creditor for a writ of execution which he had sued out, and which the defendant wrongfully detained, although the execution had expired before suit brought. Keeler v. Fassett, 21 Vt. 539.

II. THE PLAINTIFF'S TITLE.

9. In order to maintain trover (or trespass) the plaintiff must have had, at the time of the injury complained of, either the actual custody of the thing injured or taken, or a property in it, either general or special, with the right to immediate possession. Swift v. Moseley, 10 Vt. 208. 84 Vt. 169. Instance of trover by bailee against bailor. Hickok v. Buck, 22 Vt. 149.

10. Naked possession, whether rightful or obtained by force or fraud, is a sufficient title to sustain trover against a mere stranger. Knapp v. Winchester, 11 Vt. 351.

11. The plaintiff in trover cannot stand upon a possession which he has voluntarily surrendered, though under protest, but is remitted to his right of property. Ib.

12. The receptor of property attached, who has actual possession of it for safe keeping, may sustain trover for it against a third person who takes it out of his possession. Thayer v. Hutchinson, 13 Vt. 504. 17 Vt. 638.

13. Where the plaintiff bailed certain personal property for three years, but with a stipulation that he might take it back at any time "on his request";—Held, that he had such right to immediate possession as to sustain trover against the defendant, who, within the three years, attached the property as that of the bailee. Batchelder v. Warren, 19 Vt. 371. 23 Vt. 283.

14. The plaintiff owned certain wood which stood under an attachment by copy in the town clerk's office, but was not removed. The defendant without authority drew away and converted the wood. Held, that as general owner the plaintiff could maintain trover therefor; but the court ordered a stay of execution until the lien of the attachment should be ended. Mussey v. Perkins, 36 Vt. 690. See Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

See TRESPASS, III. POSSESSION.

III. WHAT IS A CONVERSION.

15. Definition. In the sense of the law of trover, a conversion consists either in the appropriation of the property to the party's own use and beneficial enjoyment, or in its destruction, or in exercising dominion over it in exclusion or defiance of the owner's right, or in the withholding the possession from the owner under a claim of title inconsistent with his. Kellogg, J., in Tinker v. Morrill, 39 Vt. 480.

16. A conversion, when applied to the action of trover, imports an unlawful act, and not a mere non-feasance. The action will not lie for mere neglect in keeping and taking suitable care of property attached, or bailed, whereby it becomes damaged, lost or destroyed. The remedy, in such case, is an action on the case for negligence, or upon the contract, if any. Ib. 477. Abbott v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 551. Nutt v. Wheeler, 30 Vt. 436.

17. Instances. The master employed to run a vessel which became wrecked, afterwards, without license of the owner, loaned to the defendant an anchor of the vessel, and it was used by him to its injury. Held, to be a conversion by each. Rice v. Clark, 8 Vt. 109.

18. Case of a conversion in trover, where the plaintiff might, at his election, have treated it as a sale and delivery. Holland v. Osgood, 8 Vt. 276.

19. The pledging of property in one's possession, which belongs to another, without authority of the owner, is a conversion by both the pledgor and pledgee, whether the pledgee was aware of the real state of the title or not. Thrall v. Lathrop, 30 Vt. 307.

20. In such case, or in case of a sale, a joint action of trover lies against both parties to the transaction. Grant v. King, 14 Vt. 367. Buckmaster v. Mower, 21 Vt. 204.

21. The plaintiff purchased of the defendant his mail contract and stage property, and it was stipulated that the postmaster at M should retain all the government checks or drafts to be sent to the defendant and should deliver them to the plaintiff; and the defendant so directed the postmaster at M. The defendant obtained one of such checks, afterwards issued, and converted it to his own use. Held (three judges to two), that the defendant was liable in trover therefor. Tilden v. Brown, 14 Vt. 164.

22. In an action of trover for a watch, the court charged that the defendant was liable, if the watch was disposed of by some other person than the defendant upon an understanding with the defendant that he was to share in the avails, and he did so. Held correct; and that the charge must be understood as connecting the understanding referred to with the disposition of the watch, as well as with the sharing in the avails. Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611.

23. Where the defendant shut up the plaintiff's turkeys with his own, and refused to let the flock at large so that the plaintiff's could be identified;—Held, that this was a conversion, although the defendant offered to deliver a certain number, such as the plaintiff might select, but a less number than the plaintiff claimed and in fact owned. Leonard v. Belknap, 47 Vt. 602.

24. Officer's receipt. If an officer attaches property, and bails it to a receptor who refuses to deliver it on request, trover lies against the receptor. Sibley v. Storey, 8 Vt. 15. Pettes v. Marsh, 15 Vt. 464. Brown v. Glead, 33 Vt. 147. Tinker v. Morrill, 39 Vt. 479.

25. Necessity of demand. Where one purchases personal property of a person in possession of it, but who is not the true owner and has no right to sell it, and the purchaser takes possession claiming title to it as owner and puts it to use, this is an actual conversion and makes him liable in trover to the owner, without any demand or notice, though he purchased in good faith of one whom he supposed to be the owner and entitled to sell it. Riford v. Montgomery, 7 Vt. 411. Grant v. King, 14 Vt. 367. Deering v. Austin, 34 Vt. 380. Bucklin v. Beale, 38 Vt. 653; and see Swift v. Moseley, 10 Vt. 208. Thrall v. Lathrop, 30 Vt. 307.

26. The purchaser of stolen goods who resells them, is liable in trover to the true owner without any previous demand and refusal, though he acted in good faith. Courtis v. Cane, 32 Vt. 232.

27. Demand and refusal. A demand and refusal is not a conversion, but only evidence of a conversion, and only evidence thereof when the party might have delivered the property if he would; but, under these circumstances, it is plenary evidence of the fact of a conversion having been committed, and, unexplained, is equivalent to a conversion. The fact that the property afterwards goes to the owner's use only goes in mitigation of damages. Irish v. Cloyes, 8 Vt. 80.

28. A demand and refusal is only evidence of a conversion, where the defendant was in such a condition that he might have delivered the property if he would. Kellogg, J., in Tinker v. Morrill, 39 Vt. 480.

29. A demand and refusal to deliver is not a conversion, nor evidence of a conversion, when the party upon whom the demand is made had not the article in his possession, or power to deliver. Buck v. Ashley, 37 Vt. 475. Rice v. Clark, 8 Vt. 109. Irish v. Cloyes, 8 Vt. 80. Knapp v. Winchester, 11 Vt. 351. Yale v. Saunders, 16 Vt. 243. Tinker v. Morrill, 39 Vt. 477.

30. In the action of trover, a rightful demand and a wrongful refusal are in law a conversion. Peck, J., in Gragg v. Hull, 41 Vt. 222.

31. Character of demand. Where one entitled to demand of the defendant certain articles or a certain amount of property, demands more than he is entitled to, the defendant is not justified in omitting to deliver that part of the property which is rightfully demanded; but where the demandant refuses to receive any part unless he can have the whole, and he is not entitled to the whole, the defendant is excused from tendering any part of it, as he is not bound to do a nugatory act. Gragg v. Hull, 41 Vt. 217.

32. A party is entitled to a reasonable time to deliver property after rightful demand, where there is no denial of the demandant's right and no refusal. What is such reasonable time would depend in a measure upon the distance of the property from the place of demand. Id.

33. A charge, in such case, leaving to the jury to say whether "they were satisfied that the defendant had sufficiently accounted for his neglect or refusal to deliver the property, &c.," was held too indefinite, and as leaving law and fact combined to the jury. Id.

34. What is not a conversion. Merely claiming title to property taken by an officer and advertised to be sold on execution and forbidding him to sell it, where the party had no control or possession, was held not to amount to a conversion; and that a previous actual appropriation of a part of it, did not vary the question as to the remainder. Loucry v. Walker, 4 Vt. 76.

35. The owner of property attached as the property of another, cannot maintain trover against the officer when he neither took actual custody and possession, nor any receipt, and where the owner was never disturbed in his possession, but used and appropriated the property to his own benefit. Amadon v. Myers, 6 Vt. 308. 18 Vt. 194. Hart v. Hyde, 5 Vt. 331.

36. A mere assertion of ownership of property, unless made in view of the property and in the presence of the owner and in order to deter him from exercising his just control over it, is not evidence of a conversion in trover, and should not go to the jury. Irish v. Cloyes, 8 Vt. 80.

37. Where the lessee of certain sheep sold them to the lessor and received payment therefor, the lessor knowing them to be the same sheep leased by him;—Held, that this was not a conversion for which the lessor could maintain trover. Downer v. Rowell, 24 Vt. 343.

38. W being the apparent but not the real owner of a cow in his possession, bargained with the defendant that he should keep the cow for W through the winter and should have the right then to purchase the cow by paying W

§20, unless W should at that time pay him $18 for the keeping. The cow went into the possession of the defendant, but W, who lived in the same house with the defendant, had the sole use and benefit of the cow. In an action of trover by the real owner of the cow,—Held, that there was no evidence of a conversion by the defendant. Deering v. Austin, 84 Vt. 330.

39. It is merely a breach of contract, and not a conversion of an article of property borrowed, to refuse to return it on demand, as agreed, to the place from which it was taken when borrowed—the borrower making no claim to it and not objecting to the owner's taking it. Farrar v. Rollins, 87 Vt. 295.

As to conversion by a bailee, see BAILMENT.

IV. DEFENSE.

40. The plaintiff had wrongfully got possession of the property of A, and detained it. A brought suit against him and attached the same property, which the attaching officer delivered to A, and A then discontinued his suit. In trover against the officer for a refusal thereafter to re-deliver the property to the plaintiff, on demand;—Held, in the absence of evidence that the defendant was privy to the purpose of A in bringing his suit merely to get possession of the property, and upon the assumption that the defendant acted in good faith in making the attachment, that the delivery of the property to A, the right owner, was a defense. Mullen v. Sherman, 87 Vt. 498.

41. Trover for a wagon. The defendant, as sheriff, had attached a wagon in the possession of R, as the property of R, but which was in fact the property of the plaintiff, and had removed the wagon, and the plaintiff had demanded it, and the defendant had refused to surrender it. Afterwards, the defendant asked the plaintiff what he claimed about the wagon; and the plaintiff replied that he wanted it returned to R where it was taken from—that was all he claimed about the wagon. The next morning the defendant, by direction of the attaching creditor, returned the wagon to R. Held, that it was a question for the jury, upon such evidence, whether it was the understanding between the parties that such return was to be a discharge of all claim for the taking and detention of the wagon, as well as for the wagon itself; and if the jury should so find, then such return was a full answer to the plaintiff's claim; that, upon such facts, the acceptance of the wagon by the plaintiff would be unnecessary, and an immaterial fact; and therefore the court below erred in their charge, that if the wagon was returned, and accepted by the plaintiff, that would diminish the damages to the extent of the value of the wagon—a double error. Spalding v. Stewart, 38 Vt. 78.

42. Plea. A special plea in trover which amounts, in legal effect, to a denial of the conversion, amounts to the general issue and is bad on special demurrer. Turner v. Waldo, 40 Vt. 51.

See DAMAGES.

TRUSTEE PROCESS.

I. IN WHAT CASES THE PROCESS LIES, AND WHAT MAY BE REACHED BY IT.

II. PROCEDURE.

I. IN WHAT CASES THE PROCESS LIES, AND WHAT MAY BE REACHED BY IT.

1. Plaintiff must be a creditor. A person claiming damages for a conversion of his property is not a creditor, in the meaning of the trustee act. Hutchinson v. Lamb, Brayt. 234.

2. Defendant an inhabitant. To bring a case within the statutes as to absconding and concealed debtors, as they existed in 1836, the debtor must have been an inhabitant of this State. Austin v. Palmer, 2 Vt. 489.

3. Where a single man, having a usual place of resort as a home in New Hampshire, came into this State under a contract to teach a school for three months, leaving his chest of clothes in New Hampshire and going there once or twice during his term to exchange them, and at the expiration of his term returned there;—Held, that he had not thereby become "an inhabitant" of this State within the meaning of the statute as to absconding or removing debtors. Boardman v. Bickford, 2 Aik. 345. 7 Vt. 410.

4. Trustee a resident. A person residing without this State, coming within it for a temporary purpose, is not liable to be summoned as trustee of an absconding or absent debtor. Baxter v. Vincent, 6 Vt. 614.

5. It is no objection to a trustee action that the plaintiff and defendant are citizens of another State, the trustee being a resident of this State. Chase v. Houghton, 16 Vt. 594. Ward v. Morrison, 25 Vt. 593.

6. Absconding, &c. The principal debtor may plead in abatement that he was not an absconding or concealed debtor. Austin v. Palmer, 2 Vt. 489—overruling Strong v. Allen, Brayt. 232; and Gaffield v. Enos, Brayt. 234.

7. One sued as trustee of an absconding or concealed debtor may plead in bar that the debtor is not an absconding or concealed debtor. Emerson v. Paine, 9 Vt. 271. 16 Vt. 463.

8. The trustee process cannot be sustained against a partnership as absconding or concealed debtors, unless all of the members have absconded, or kept concealed. Leach v. Cook, 10 Vt. 289.

9. Joinder. Several persons having distinct interests cannot be joined as trustees in the same trustee process. Atkinson v. Minor, 1 Tyl. 122. (Changed by statute.)

10. Town. A town cannot be held as trustee of an absconding or concealed debtor. Bradley v. Richmond, 6 Vt. 121. (Changed by statute.)

11. Partnership. If different trustees are summoned generally, they are liable as trustees for all their debts to the principal debtor, both joint and several; but not for partnership effects held by other partners, not named in the writ, unless such effects specifically described. Petites v. Spalding, 21 Vt. 66. 28 Vt. 741. 42 Vt. 172-4.

12. The debt due from a partnership, a part of whose members reside in this State and part in another, can be attached by trustee process in case the partnership was formed, and the business of the firm was transacted, and the partnership debt was payable, in this State. Peck v. Barnum, 24 Vt. 75.

13. Where one is summoned as a trustee individually, and not as a member of a firm, and where the other members of the firm are not named in the writ, nor summoned, he is not bound to disclose or answer as to the indebtedness of the firm of which he may be a member, nor will the process reach such debt of the firm. Knapp v. Lecanway, 27 Vt. 298. Lamson v. Bradley, 42 Vt. 165, 173.

14. Where persons summoned as trustees are summoned only as partners, the effects or credits in the hands of one of them individually are not attached, and cannot be held. Coverly v. Bragyard, 28 Vt. 738. 42 Vt. 174.

15. Co-partnership funds cannot be attached by trustee process for the separate debt of one of the partners, where the other part owner objects. Towne v. Leach, 32 Vt. 747.

16. The defendant contracted in his own name with the alleged trustee to build a bridge for him. W was in fact a partner with the defendant in the transaction, but the trustee had no knowledge of this. The defendant and W did the work together as partners. In a suit against the defendant alone for his sole indebtedness;—Held, that the trustee was not chargeable, for that his indebtedness was to the defendant and W jointly. Bartlett v. Woodward, 46 Vt. 100.

17. Where one partner assigned, in payment of his individual debt, a promissory note belonging to his firm;—Held, that the assignee was not liable for the note, or its proceeds, as trustee of the firm in a trustee action by the creditors of the firm. Huntoon v. Dow, 29 Vt. 215.

18. Joint debt. A joint debt due to two or more persons cannot be attached by trustee process in a suit against only one of them; and the trustee will in such case be discharged when knowledge of the fact is brought to the court, although by a claimant who has no title. Fairchild v. Lampson, 37 Vt. 407. Bartlett v. Woodward, 46 Vt. 100. Towne v. Leach, 32 Vt. 747.

19. Joint and several interests. Where two or more are summoned as trustees, following the statute form, with nothing in the writ added to indicate in what capacity they are required to disclose, whether as to their joint or their several liability, they are before the court in both capacities, and are chargeable for all their indebtedness to the principal debtor, joint as well as several, if all the joint debtors are before the court as trustees. Lamson v. Bradley, 42 Vt. 165.

20. On a default in such case, the court may render judgment against the trustees severally, or jointly, for the full amount of the recovery against the principal defendant. Id.

21. The defendant and the claimant, being joint equal owners of a quantity of cheese, put it in the hands of the trustee for sale, he to pay to each his share of the avails. Held, that the defendant's share of the avails could be held by the trustee process. Piper v. Hanley, 48 Vt. 479.

22. Specific chattels in common. Where specific chattels, owned in common by two persons, are in the hands of a third person, the interest of one part owner may be attached by trustee process in a suit against him. Bartlett v. Wood, 32 Vt. 372.

23. Officer. An officer having money in his hands collected on an execution, may be held as trustee of the execution creditor though the money has not been demanded. Hurlburt v. Hicks, 17 Vt. 193. Bullard v. Hicks. Id. 198.

24. So, for coin, bank bills or money attached on meane process and remaining in the attaching officer's hands after settlement of the suit, he may be held as trustee of the defendant. Lovejoy v. Lee, 35 Vt. 430.

25. Also, for a surplus in his hands arising from a sale on attachment or execution, where the attachment has been dissolved, or the execution satisfied. Id. Adams v. Lane, 38 Vt. 640.

26. An officer held bank bills attached by him in a suit which had been settled, the debtor having acquiesced in the attachment. Held, that the officer could not shield himself from liability as trustee of the debtor, by claiming that the attachment was effected by a trespass upon the person of the debtor. Lovejoy v. Lee, 35 Vt. 430.

27. A co-plaintiff may be summoned and held as trustee (G. S. c. 34, s. 2). Lyman v. Wood, 42 Vt. 113.

28. Ordinary attachment. Personal property of a debtor in the possession of a third person may be attached by the trustee process, although in all respects open to the ordinary process of attachment, and although the trustee has no claim to or lien upon the property. Brown v. Davis, 18 Vt. 211. 30 Vt. 189.

29. Nature of claim against trustee. It has been held sufficient under all our trustee statutes, that the claim upon the trustee was a legal debt by contract, that it belonged to the principal defendant, and that he had a right to have it enforced by an action at law, if necessary. The creditor cannot by this process pursue a mere equity claim against the trustee, and such as is enforceable only in a court of chancery; nor can such claim be asserted by the trustee against the defendant. Weller v. Weller, 18 Vt. 55 (1844.) Hoyt v. Swift, 13 Vt. 129.

30. It is sufficient to charge one as trustee, that the principal debtor has deposited property with him, or that he is indebted to the principal debtor, though something further—as, a demand—be requisite to constitute a right of action by the principal debtor. Corey v. Powers, 18 Vt. 587.

31. One is not necessarily chargeable as trustee because the principal debtor may have a cause of action against him in assumpsit, as, to recover for usury paid; or for money obtained by an oppressive agreement; or for a fraud practiced; or for failure to perform a duty as a professional man, mechanic, or common carrier. These are not "credits intrusted," &c. Barker v. Esty, 19 Vt. 131. Fish v. Field, 19 Vt. 141.

32. To charge a trustee, the principal debtor must have a cause of action against him. The attaching creditor takes the place of the principal debtor; and if there is no cause of action, there is no right to be attached. Kettle v. Harvey, 21 Vt. 301.

33. In order to hold one chargeable as trustee, there must be a debt, or fiduciary obligation on his part, and not a mere tort, or breach of duty. Held, that the liability of a constable to the execution creditor for breach of official duty in respect to the collection of the execution, he having received no money, cannot be so attached. Hemmenway v. Pratt, 23 Vt. 332.

34. Contingency. A contingency which affects the debt itself, will prevent its being held on trustee process; and this was so under the statute of 1797. Burke v. Whitcomb, 18 Vt. 421. 18 Vt. 44.

35. The maker of a note payable upon a contingency being summoned as trustee of the payee, it appeared that after service of the trustee process and while it rested in contingency, it was assigned to a third person and notice thereof given to the maker, but that it became absolute before disclosure. Held, that the maker was not chargeable as trustee. Ib.

36. This "contingency" must be such as to affect the debt itself, and not simply the liability of the trustee to have the effects or credits called out of his hands in a particular manner; or which affects only the mode and time of accounting. Downer v. Curtis, 25 Vt. 650. 40 Vt. 241.

37. If the liability is certain, and the debt uncertain only as to the amount, it is not contingent within the meaning of the statute. Downer v. Topliff, 19 Vt. 399.

38. Money deposited with one as security for becoming bail for the depositor, is not a "credit" or money due depending upon a contingency, under G. S. c. 34, s. 6; but is rather "effects" of the depositor in the hands of the depository, and is subject to trustee process, while so held on deposit, for the debts of the depositor; and the depository is chargeable as trustee when discharged from his liability as bail, deducting his claims for indemnity. Ellis v. Goodnow, 40 Vt. 237.

39. Where the trustee, as payment of his indebtedness to the principal debtor, had given orders upon his own debtor for payment to the trustee, and to charge the same to the trustee's account;—Held, that the liability of the trustee was only contingent upon reasonable demand of payment of the orders, refusal, and notice given back; and that before presentment of the orders he was not chargeable as trustee. Sibley v. Frost, 23 Vt. 352.

40. A promissory note with this condition: "I am at my option about paying the principal of this note while I pay the interest annually"—was held subject to be attached by trustee process. Fay v. Smith, 25 Vt. 610.

41. Defendant's title and right. In order to charge one as trustee, the goods, effects and credits of the principal defendant in the hands of the trustee must belong to the principal defendant in his own right. Boyden v. Ward, 38 Vt. 628.

42. The estate of an intestate was appraised by the committee at less than $300, and was assigned by the probate court to the defendant, widow of the intestate, and administratrix, under G. S. c. 53, s. 1. A debt due the intestate was not inventoried. No commissioners of claims were appointed. After the assignment and within three months after the granting of administration, a creditor of the estate brought this suit before a justice and summoned said debtor of the estate as trustee, and got judgment by default against the defendant, and a judgment against the trustee from which the trustee appealed. Held, that the trustee was not chargeable; 1st, That the proceedings in the probate court barred any proceedings in a common law court; 2nd, That the administratrix was not liable without an order for the payment of the debts, and that the judgment against her was not a judgment against the estate; 3d, That the debt of the trustee was not due to the defendant in her own right, but in trust, and therefore not attachable. Id.

43. The maker of a promissory note payable to a married woman, and given for her separate property, cannot be held as trustee of her husband. Parks v. Cushman, 9 Vt. 320.

44. Exemptions. Property exempt by law from attachment and execution cannot be attached by trustee process. Parks v. Cushman, 9 Vt. 320. 19 Vt. 544; and the trustee may set up this objection in his own name, though not raised by the principal debtor. Clark v. Averill, 31 Vt. 512.

45. The money of a pensioner in the hands of his agent or attorney, received and held as a pension for transmission to the pensioner, is not subject to the trustee process. Adams v. Newell, 8 Vt. 190. 19 Vt. 544.

46. Obligation to support. The obligation to support another is of a personal character and cannot be attached by trustee process; nor can the conveyed property which furnished the consideration for such obligation, be attached, where such consideration came from another party. Briggs v. Beach, 18 Vt. 115. 36 Vt. 432.

47. Where the principal debtor conveyed all his property in consideration of an agreement for future support for life, leaving nothing for payment of debts:—Held, that the grantee was chargeable as trustee for the specific articles conveyed. Crane v. Stickles, 15 Vt. 252. 18 Vt. 119. 36 Vt. 432.

48. Where a father conveyed all his property to his son as a consideration for future support, and, as part of the contract, the son agreed to pay the father's debt to A:—Held, in a suit by A against the father, summoning the son as trustee, that the son was chargeable. Corey v. Powers, 18 Vt. 587.

49. Lessee. A lessee was held as the trustee of the lessor for rents agreed to be paid by the payment of certain specified debts of the lessor, where the several creditors had not accepted this agreement, and the lessee had not agreed with them to pay them. Burt v. Hurlburt, 16 Vt. 292.

50. Agreement to indemnify. An engagement to indemnify constitutes an indebtedness which may be attached by trustee process, after a right of action has accrued upon it in consequence of actual damnification; as, where a judgment has been recovered against the party agreed to be indemnified. Downer v. Topliff, 19 Vt. 899. 22 Vt. 20.

51. Other instances. Where one sold and received payment for an article and failed to deliver it through defect of title;—Held, that he was chargeable for the purchase price as trustee of the vendor. Edson v. Trask, 22 Vt. 18.

52. A gave his note to B. B agreed with C to transfer the note to him for shingles which he agreed to make for B. C made part of the shingles only, when A was summoned as trustee of C, and thereupon C quit the job of making the shingles and B paid him for what he had done. The note had not been transferred or delivered to C. Held, that A was not indebted to C and was not liable as trustee. Wakefield v. Crossman, 25 Vt. 298.

53. Where property was taken from a trustee by an execution in the same suit, issued prematurely;—Held, that he was not chargeable as trustee therefor. Goddard v. Hapgood, 25 Vt. 351.

54. The assignee of a lease is not chargeable as trustee of the lessee for the rents accrued under the lease during his own occupation, and which he agreed with the lessee to pay to the lessor; for he is liable to the lessor directly as assignee of the term. Overman v. Sanborn, 27 Vt. 54.

55. The trustee purchased of the plaintiff a farm worth $1700, for the defendant to reside upon, and paid $1200 and took a warranty deed. There was a mortgage of $500 then existing upon the farm, given by the plaintiff to one S, which the defendant procured one B to agree to pay, and secured him therefor by turning out his, the defendant's, property—the plaintiff being present and knowing of the transaction. At the hearing, the mortgage had not become due and had not been paid. The suit was to recover for a debt which existed at the time of the purchase of the farm. Held, that the trustee was not chargeable. Jenks v. Silloway, 30 Vt. 687.

56. The plaintiff sued A, summoning B as trustee, and citing C as claimant. A had owed a debt to a third person for which C was surety; and to secure C, he, by arrangement between A, B and himself, had sold and executed a bill of sale of A's property to B, taking B's note therefor to himself to hold for his security. A's debt was afterward paid from C's property, and C thereafter, on settlement with A, retained the note as his own absolutely. B was willing to be adjudged trustee for the specific property. Held, nevertheless, that the title to the property vested in B by the sale and that he was not trustee of A therefor; and that C, although claiming only the proceeds, yet was entitled to a judgment discharging B as trustee, and for his own costs. Boutwell v. McClure, 33 Vt. 127.

57. Conveyance fraudulent. The grantee in a conveyance which is fraudulent and void as to the creditors of the grantor, cannot be held as his trustee, unless the grantee is indebted for the price stipulated. Barter v. Currier, 18 Vt. 615. Hunter v. Case, 20 Vt. 195. Stevens v. Kirk, 37 Vt. 207.

58. —in trust. One holding the title to land in trust for another, and for which he is not indebted to his cestui que trust, cannot be made chargeable by reason thereof in trustee process. Doane v. Doane, 46 Vt. 485.

59. —subject to mortgage. The grantee of land conveyed subject to a mortgage which he is to pay as part of the purchase price, does not thereby become personally liable to the holder of the mortgage note, so as to be chargeable as his trustee. Smith v. Hyde, 36 Vt. 808.

60. Securities. One is not chargeable as trustee on the ground of his having in his hands mere securities for money belonging to the principal debtor, though held in trust, but not collected. Sargeant v. Leland, 2 Vt. 277. Hitchcock v. Egerton, 8 Vt. 202. Denison v. Petrie, 18 Vt. 42. Scofield v. White, 39 Vt. 330. Van Amee v. Jackson, 35 Vt. 173. Stickney v. Crane, Id. 88. Edgerton v. Martin, Id. 120. Stevens v. Kirk, 37 Vt. 204.

61. This is so, although the trustee, acting as agent of the principal debtor, has taken the securities payable to himself, yet not so as to make himself a debtor. Fuller v. Jewett, 37 Vt. 473.

62. A conveyed to B certain lands, under an agreement that B should sell the same and apply the avails in payment of a debt which B had assumed for A, and pay A the balance. B sold the lands for more than the amount of said debt, receiving part cash and the balance in good notes running to himself secured by mortgage. On the report of a commissioner, finding as a fact that B held such notes "as his own property and not as agent of A";—Held, that B was chargeable presently as trustee of A for the amount of the sale above the said debt and certain expenditures upon the land, although B had not as yet received in cash as much as he had been obliged to pay out. Smith v. Wiley, 41 Vt. 19.

63. Where the trustee's promissory note is held by a third person in pledge or as collateral security for a debt of the payee of less amount, it may be attached by trustee process against the payee, and held for the excess. Fay v. Smith, 25 Vt. 610. Downer v. Tarbell, 32 Vt. 22.

64. This may be done, although notice of the transfer may have been duly given to the maker, by bringing into court for the assignee (claimant) the amount of his claim—under the equity of G. S. c. 33, s. 31. Perrin v. Russell, 33 Vt. 44.

65. Soldier's bounty. The statute exempting from trustee process money payable or received as a soldier's bounty, does not exempt a debt due from the trustee to the soldier on the purchase of his claim to a bounty, where the trustee has received the money and the soldier claims no immunity against the process. Yates v. Hurst, 41 Vt. 558.

66. Payment before due. The payment of a debt before it falls due, although done in order to avoid being trustee and to aid the other party to place the debt beyond the reach of his creditors, does not fall within the law which prohibits fraudulent and deceitful conveyances &c. (G. S. c. 113, s. 32), and the party so paying is not liable as trustee, where such payment is made before service of the process. Fletcher v. Pillsbury, 35 Vt. 16.

67. Note payable to third person. Where one to whom a debt is due has the debt made payable to another, or transfers it and makes it nominally payable to another instead of himself—as, by a note—in order to avoid a trustee process, such transfer is void as to the creditor, and the debt is still subject to the trustee process. Camp v. Scott, 14 Vt. 387. Marsh v. Davis, 24 Vt. 363. Seymour v. Cooper, 25 Vt. 141. Van Amee v. Jackson, 35 Vt. 173.

68. Support. Where the principal debtor had labored for the trustee under an agreement, that while he should be so laboring the trustee should support him and his family, and apply any excess of his earnings to the payment of his debts;—Held, that such an agreement was not fraudulent in fact, nor in law; and that the trustee, not being indebted under the agreement, was not chargeable. Worthington v. Jones, 23 Vt. 546.

69. Where, under a family arrangement, a father who was poor and destitute of a home went and lived with his son, and was supported by him, and labored for him whenever and as the father chose, neither expecting to charge the other;—Held, in the absence of proof of bad faith towards creditors of the father, that the son could not be held as his trustee, although the services were worth more to the son than the support furnished. Cobb v. Bishop, 27 Vt. 624.

70. A testator bequeathed a sum of money to his son "for the support of himself and family and for no other purpose;" which sum the executors paid over to the son's attorney. Held, that this money constituted a trust fund for the purposes named in the will, and could not be attached by trustee process for the son's debts; and, by Bennett, J., the result would be the same, if the bequest had been to the son for his support, and for no other purpose—not naming the family, or the son not having a family. White v. White, 30 Vt. 338.

71. Where a fund in the hands of a trustee was created by the voluntary bounty of a parent for the benefit of a child, to be ex-

pendent according to the judgment and discretion of such trustee;—Held, that it was not attachable by trustee process for the debt of such child. Van Amee v. Jackson, 85 Vt. 173; and see Roberts v. Hall. Ib. 28.

72. S conveyed his farm and personal property thereon to his son-in-law, reserving the occupancy and right of control during his life, and took back a mortgage conditioned for his support during life and for the payment on demand, after his decease, of $1000 to the defendant, his son; but there was no personal engagement to pay the $1000, and S was still living. Held, that the mortgagor was not liable as trustee of the defendant. Morey v. Sheltus, 47 Vt. 342.

73. Void assignment. Where an assignment was made by a debtor, void in law as to creditors but not fraudulent in fact, and a creditor, instead of directly attaching the property assigned, summoned the assignee as trustee;—Held, that the plaintiff had thereby ratified the assignment, as respects the disposition of any property under it down to the commencement of the suit. Bishop v. Hart, 28 Vt. 71.

74. In such case, held, that the assignee was not liable as trustee for money received on the sale of real estate assigned which had been attached by other creditors, since the title conveyed might be defeated by such attachments, and the assignee be made liable to his grantee. Ib.

75. Other instances. Where the mortgage of factory machinery, &c., was summoned as trustee of the mortgagor, and after the expiration of a decree of foreclosure of his mortgage he in good faith sold the property for less than the amount of his decree, and its fair market value did not exceed the amount of the decree;—Held, that he was not chargeable as trustee, although the property in the hands of a dealer in machinery, or a practical manufacturer (which he was not), would have been worth more than the decree. Hawks v. Sawyer, 88 Vt. 99.

76. C, at the request of the defendant, purchased of H his remaining interest in a threshing machine then in his possession, but which he had before sold conditionally to the defendant, and for which the defendant had paid in part, with the understanding that C would let the defendant have and use the machine, with a chance to pay for it. C took the machine into his own possession, refused to let the defendant have it, and denied that he had any interest in it. The defendant neither tendered the residue of the price, nor took any means to perfect his title. Held, that C was not chargeable as trustee of the defendant. Smith v. Sharpe, 45 Vt. 545.

77. F, the defendant, owed D, the claimant, and N owed F. F put his demand against N into D's hands to collect and to credit the avails in payment of his debt to D. D employed M, the trustee, to collect and remit to him the claim against N. M collected the money of N, but while it was in his hands he was sued as trustee of F. Held, that the money in the hands of M was the money of D, and that M was not liable as trustee of F. Hale v. Foley, 47 Vt. 260.

78. The arrangement between the defendant, trustee, claimant, and W, was, that the defendant should perform services in the employment of the trustee for the claimant, in the name of W, who should receive the pay therefor from the trustee, and pay the same to the claimant; in consideration whereof the claimant agreed to and did advance supplies to the defendant and his family to enable him to perform the service. Held, an original undertaking, and not an assignment of a present or prospective claim, and that the party sued as trustee was not chargeable as such. Carr v. Sevens, 47 Vt. 574.

79. Interest. One summoned and chargeable as trustee for money of the principal debtor in his hands, is not chargeable for interest thereon while the demand was locked up by that, or a previous trustee process, where the demand was not on interest when attached, and the trustee has received no interest on the fund. Lyman v. Orr, 26 Vt. 119. Isham, J., dissenting.

80. Effects received between service and disclosure. The trustee is chargeable for any goods, effects or credits of the principal defendant which have come into his hands before his disclosure, which had not passed out of his hands before service of the trustee process;—whether the same came to him before, or after, service of the process. Newell v. Ferris, 16 Vt. 185. Hurlburt v. Hicks, 17 Vt. 198. Spring v. Ayer, 23 Vt. 516. Seymour v. Cooper, 25 Vt. 141.

81. After service of a trustee process, the trustee bought land of the principal defendant, agreeing to pay therefor $125 in a horse and wagon, and $200 in money, and paid the horse and wagon at the time of the execution of the deed. Held, that, to this extent, it was an exchange of property, and the trustee was not chargeable for the $125, but was chargeable for the $200 unpaid. Seymour v. Cooper.

82. Before the statute of Nov., 1856, exempting from attachment the personal earnings of a debtor accruing after the service of the trustee writ;—Held, that if the trustee was not indebted in the sum of ten dollars when the writ was served, he would not be liable as trustee for future earnings, provided that at no time he became indebted to an amount exceeding ten dollars, although the mutual dealings afterwards would have increased the debt beyond the ten dollars, if there had been no payments. Carr v. Fairbanks, 28 Vt. 806. McDaniels v. Morton, 84 Vt. 101.

83. Other suit pending. It is no defense to the maintaining of a trustee process, that at the time of service a suit had been brought by the principal debtor against the trustee, and was then pending; but this may be pleaded as a temporary bar, and stay. Trombly v. Clark, 18 Vt. 118. 14 Vt. 140. (Now regulated by G. S. c. 84.)

84. —in chancery. Where one summoned as trustee disclosed that the principal debtor had brought a suit in chancery against him, calling for an account of all the same matters, which, before service of the trustee process, had been set down for hearing on the bill, answer and testimony, and, before filing the disclosure, had been heard by the chancellor but was not decided, in which suit he had denied his liability;—Held, that the proceedings in the court of chancery could not be thus arrested, and that the trustee process did not lie. Wadsworth v. Clark, 14 Vt. 139.

85. Annexation to freehold. A quarried, dressed, sold and delivered to B a quantity of granite, and laid it down in the earth for a permanent walk on B's premises. A got the stone without right from C's quarry, who, after the walk was laid, claimed the stone as his property. Held, in a trustee action, that the property in the stone after being laid into the walk was in B, the trustee, and that he became indebted to A therefor, and was liable as his trustee for at least the increased value thereof above their value in the quarry. Jackson v. Walton, 28 Vt. 43. See REAL PROPERTY.

86. Claimant. In order for a claimant in a trustee process to hold the funds as against the process, it is not enough that he has a right of action against the principal debtor, but he must show that the money or property in the hands of the trustee is his money or property, and that he has a present legal right to it. Sibley v. Johnson, 43 Vt. 67.

87. Assignment. The interest of an assignee of a note, not negotiable, will not be protected against an attachment by trustee process. (Sed quare.) Safford Co. v. Hull, Brayt. 281.

88. An oral assignment of a chose in action operates as an equitable transfer and, when followed by notice thereof from the assignee to the debtor, will be protected from subsequent attachment by trustee process against the assignor. Noyes v. Brown, 33 Vt. 431. Hutchins v. Watts, 35 Vt. 360. Spafford v. Page, 15 Vt. 490.

89. By the statute of 1832 a note payable to bearer was made subject to trustee process, like a note payable to order; and a judgment against the maker, as trustee, before notice of an assignment, was a defense to an action brought by the assignee. Boarts v. Gove, 10 Vt. 161.

90. Under the statute of 1836, the maker of a negotiable note while current could not be held therefor as the trustee of the payee, if indorsed to a bona fide holder before due, although no notice of the transfer had been given to the maker before service of the trustee process. Hinsdill v. Safford, 11 Vt. 309. Nor, if so transferred after service of the trustee process. Little v. Hale. Id. 482. Nor, if still remaining in the hands of the payee, but not yet due and subject to be negotiated. Hutchins v. Evans, 13 Vt. 541. (Changed by stat. 1841. G. S. c. 84, s. 47.)

91. A deposited with B notes against a third person to collect and pay proceeds to A, or his order. B being summoned as trustee of A, it appeared that after service of the process, but before disclosure, B had received payment of one of the notes. In fact, A had sold the notes to C before the institution of the suit, but B did not receive notice thereof until after the receipt of the money. Held, that the money so received was the money of C; that B was never the debtor of A, and was not chargeable as his trustee. Denison v. Petrie, 18 Vt. 42. (1843.)

92. Where one takes a note by assignment after it has been attached for the debt of the assignor, he takes it subject to the lien created by the attachment. Downer v. Tarbell, 32 Vt. 22.

93. An assignment of a promissory note for a valuable consideration, though fraudulent, puts it beyond the reach of trustee process. Hutchins v. Hawley, 9 Vt. 295. (Changed by subsequent statutes, and not now the law. Wheeler v. Winn, 38 Vt. 126.)

94. Where a note has been transferred with intent to avoid a debt or defeat an attachment, and the maker has received notice of the assignment before service upon him as trustee of the assignor, the want of consideration for the assignment and the existence of a trust in favor of the assignor will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, if such facts are necessary to charge the trustee. Lyman v. Tarbell, 30 Vt. 463. Wheeler v. Winn, 38 Vt. 122.

95. S in this State gave his negotiable promissory note to W in this State, payable on demand. W went into Massachusetts and there transferred the note to P, a citizen of Massachusetts, with intent to avoid his debt to this plaintiff, of which intent P was privy. P then applied to S, representing that he had purchased the note, and requested S to take it up and give one running directly to P. This S in good faith did, suspecting nothing wrong. Afterwards, this suit against W was brought and S was summoned therein as trustee, and S was then informed that the plaintiff claimed that the transfer from W to P was fraudulent. While this suit was pending, S, happening in Massachusetts, was there sued by P upon his note given to P, and before trial he settled that suit and paid P the note. Held, that although the payment to P of the original note, at the time the second note was given, would have been a good discharge, yet that the substituted note was but the same debt in a new form; that as the situs of the debt was in this State, a judgment in this suit would have been conclusive in Massachusetts in respect to the debt; that the payment of the substituted note, without asking of the Massachusetts court a delay of that suit for a determination of this, and before the Massachusetts court had had an opportunity to act upon the question, must be regarded as voluntary; and that S was chargeable as trustee. Wheeler v. Winn.

96. Conflicting assignments. The priority of title by assignment, as between different assignees of the principal debtor, claimants, cannot be determined in a trustee suit. Thus, where the plaintiff and another, as claimant, severally, claimed the funds in the hands of the trustee by assignment, the trustee was discharged;—in either case, the debtor had no interest in the matter sought to be attached. Shattuck v. Smith, 16 Vt. 132.

97. Notice—to whom. Where an indemnifying bond had been assigned,—Held, that notice thereof given to the surety on the bond only, he being insolvent, was not sufficient to protect the assignment against attachment by trustee process in a suit against the obligee. Downer v. Topliff, 19 Vt. 399.

98. Notice of the assignment of a promissory note, having sureties, given to the principal alone, is sufficient to protect it from trustee process for the debt of the assignor. Seward v. Garkin, 33 Vt. 533.

99. A joint and several negotiable promissory note was assigned before due for a valuable consideration, and notice thereof was given by the assignee to one of the two makers before the service of a trustee process against the payee. Held, that the note was protected to the assignee against the attachment. (G.S. c. 84, s. 47.) Ayott v. Smith, 40 Vt. 532. The same law, in case of notice to an accommodation indorser of a note. Hunt v. Miles, 42 Vt. 533.

100. The assignee of a claim against an intestate estate gave a written notice of the assignment to the widow and heirs of the deceased, and to the person who was afterwards appointed administrator. Held, that the notice being in the hands of the administrator at the time of his appointment, took effect from that time; and that he was not chargeable as trustee of the assignor upon a suit commenced after such appointment. Brown v. Millington, 25 Vt. 242.

101. Notice of the assignment of a town order, given either to the selectmen or to the town treasurer, is sufficient to prevent the attachment of it by trustee process for the debt of the assignor; and such notice may be given by an agent of the assignee to demand payment of the town treasurer. Thayer v. Lyman, 35 Vt. 646.

102. Where an order was drawn on the town treasurer by an overseer of the poor, and assigned, notice by the assignee to the overseer was held not sufficient. Thompson v. Downing, 48 Vt. 646.

103. —by whom. Notice of the transfer of a promissory note or of a chose in action, in order to protect it from attachment by trustee process against the assignor, must be given by the assignee, or by his procurement. Knowledge of the transfer is not sufficient, nor is notice from a stranger, or from the assignor, without the procurement of the assignee. Peck v. Walton, 25 Vt. 33. Webster v. Moranville, 30 Vt. 701, 745. Hutchins v. Watts, 35 Vt. 362. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Drury, 35 Vt. 469. Barron v. Porter, 44 Vt. 587.

104. But such notice given by one acting in behalf of the assignee—as, a son for his father—where the assumed agency was afterwards adopted and the act ratified by the assignee before the service of the trustee process, was held sufficient. Brickett v. Nichols, 30 Vt. 748.

105. Notice of the assignment of a claim given to the debtor by the assignor, but in the presence of the assignee and he assenting, was held sufficient to protect the claim from trustee process against the assignor. Downer v. Marsh, 28 Vt. 558. Hutchins v. Watts, 35 Vt. 360. 35 Vt. 471.

106. Notice of the assignment of a demand, such as to protect it from trustee process, need not be given personally by the assignee, nor personally by his agent. If given by procurement of the assignee, or of his agent, it is sufficient, when the debtor thus becomes informed of the fact of the assignment and of the fact of the notice by the assignee, or his agent. Barron v. Porter, 44 Vt. 587.

107. —given on Sunday. Such notice is not insufficient because given on Sunday. Crozier v. Shanta, 43 Vt. 478.

108. —actual. The notice of transfer of a promissory note required by the statute, in order to protect it against trustee process, must be actual personal notice. Notice by mere legal implication is not sufficient;—as, by a record in the town clerk's office of the assignment of a mortgage, and the note secured by it. Stearns v. Wrisley, 30 Vt. 661.

109. B bank received from M bank a note for collection. Held, that the cashier of B bank had thereby authority to notify the maker that M bank owned the note; but that a mere notice to the maker by such cashier that M bank had sent the note to B bank for collection, was not sufficient notice of claim by M bank to protect the note from trustee process in suit against the payee. Worden v. Nourse, 36 Vt. 756.

110. A gave his note to B in payment of a debt to B, but it was drawn payable to C, or bearer, C being a stranger to the transaction. C afterwards purchased the note of B, but gave no notice to A of the transfer. In suit against B, trusteeing A with C as claimant;—Held, that as the note was originally the property of B, A was chargeable as trustee, as against the claim of C, for lack of notice to A of the assignment. Williams v. Shepherd, 33 Vt. 184.

111. A promissory note given by a citizen of this State, may be held by trustee process against a foreign assignment for the benefit of creditors, unless notice of the assignment has been given by the assignee. [In this case, all the parties were resident citizens of New York, where the assignment was made, except the trustee.] Martin v. Potter, 34 Vt. 87. See Rice v. Curtis, 32 Vt. 460.

112 —by second assignee. Although notice of the assignment of a promissory note has been given to the maker by the first assignee, yet if the note is afterwards assigned and the subsequent assignee fails to give such notice, the note is subject to attachment by the trustee process by the creditors of his immediate assignor. Seward v. Garlin, 33 Vt. 583.

113. It was otherwise under the act of 1798 (Slades Stat. 144). Britton v. Preston, 9 Vt. 257.

114. Banks. A negotiable promissory note, made payable at a bank and indorsed to and discounted by such bank before due, was held attachable by trustee process against the payee, under the act of 1841, where the bank had failed to give notice of the transfer before service of the process. Kimball v. Gay, 16 Vt. 181. (Changed by G. S. c. 34, s. 47.)

115. It seems, that a bank cannot, under G. S. c. 34, s. 47, defeat a trustee process summoning the maker of negotiable paper as the trustee of the payee, by discounting such paper after it has received notice of the service of the trustee process, or knowledge of such facts respecting it as would put a reasonable man upon inquiry. Root v. Barnes, 27 Vt. 274.

116. Where the maker of a negotiable promissory note is summoned as trustee of the payee, the discount of such note by a bank will not prevent the trustee from being held chargeable, if the claim of the bank has been satisfied by the person for whom the discount was made. Id.

117. Negotiable paper held by a bank as collateral security, but not actually "discounted," or purchased, was held, under act of 1852, No. 4, to be attachable by trustee process, where no notice of the assignment had been given by the bank. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Drury, 35 Vt. 469. (Changed by G. S. c. 34, s. 47.)

118. A negotiable promissory note discounted before due, by a bank in good faith, and in the ordinary course of business, was held exempt from trustee process against the maker, under G. S. c. 34, s. 47, although such process had been served on the maker before the transfer to the bank, but of this the bank had no knowledge. Hall v. Bowker, 44 Vt. 77.

119. And so held, although judgment had been obtained against the maker as trustee of the payee, before the negotiation of the note to the bank. Bank of Newbury v. Webster, 47 Vt. 43.

120. Retainer by trustee. The trustee is allowed under the statute to deduct from the effects in his hands all his demands against the principal defendant founded on contract express or implied, although such demands may accrue during the pendency of the trustee process, unless they arise out of voluntary advances to the defendant after service of the process, or from other transactions intended to render the creditor's attachment less beneficial to him. Weller v. Weller, 18 Vt. 55.

121. In a trustee suit the plaintiff, as against the trustee, stands on the rights of the principal debtor, and subject to all legal offsets and counter-equities; but the assignee of a promissory note assigned before due, but subject to trustee process for lack of notice of the assignment, stands on the rights of the payee, not subject to such offsets and equities. Stearns v. Wrisley, 30 Vt. 661.

122. Where the trustee had, previous to the service of the process, become liable as a co-surety with the principal debtor, and, after such service but before disclosure, had paid such obligation;—Held, that he was entitled to deduct from the funds in his hands the sum for which the principal debtor was liable to him by way of contribution. Strong v. Mitchell, 19 Vt. 644. 27 Vt. 38. 28 Vt. 393.

123. Where the trustee has actually paid or assumed liabilities of the principal debtor before service of the process, having in hand, as security therefor, estate both real and personal of the principal debtor, he will not be compelled to look to the real estate for his security, unless he has been guilty of intentional misconduct, but may, where he has acted in good faith, apply the personal property in payment of his own debt and is not chargeable as trustee therefor [except for an excess]. Seo-field v. Sanders, 25 Vt. 181. Goddard v. Hapgood, 25 Vt. 351. 27 Vt. 38. 28 Vt. 75.

124. A factor, agent, attorney, or trustee, may retain compensation for his services, as such, out of the trust fund in his hands, and the plaintiff can recover only the balance, although there is no plea in set-off; and this, whether the compensation is given by express, or by implied, contract. Redfield, C. J., in Hubbard v. Fisher, 25 Vt. 539.

125. Where a school district was summoned as a trustee for the wages of a school teacher;—Held, that the district could set up and rely upon a payment made to the teacher by the prudential committee out of his own money, during the teacher's term of service, but before the service of the trustee process, although such payment was made without the knowledge or request of the district, but was afterwards adopted by it. Edson v. Sprout, 33 Vt. 77.

126. Where an assignee under an assignment void in law as to creditors, but not fraudulent in fact, was summoned as trustee of the assignor;—Held, that he should be allowed the amount of the assignor's indebtedness to him, his expenses under the assignment, and a reasonable compensation for his services, and be held as trustee for the balance only. Bishop v. Hart, 28 Vt. 71; and see Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150. Bradley v. Dow, Id. 158.

127. Where an assignee, under a trust assignment for creditors which was void as to the plaintiff, a creditor, by reason of the fraud of the assignor, but of which the assignee was ignorant, was summoned as trustee of the assignor;—Held, that he was chargeable only for such funds as were in his hands at the date of service of the process; and that the plaintiff could not complain of any previous payments under the assignment, as wrongful. Stickney v. Crane, 35 Vt. 88.

128. The trustee is not entitled to retain from the funds in his hands anything to satisfy his agreements which are within the statute of frauds, or not legally binding upon him. Hazeltine v. Page, 4 Vt. 49. Strong v. Mitchell, 19 Vt. 644.

129. Where several trustees are jointly indebted, there cannot be set off, or deducted, an indebtedness of the principal debtor to one of the trustees and a third person, partners. Wells v. Mace, 17 Vt. 503.

II. PROCEDURE.

130. Jurisdiction. A suit can be commenced by trustee process only in such cases as are provided for by the statute. If so commenced in a case not authorized, the court lacks jurisdiction, and the suit will be dismissed on plea, or motion, of either the principal defendant (Ferris v. Ferris, 25 Vt. 100. Boardman v. Bickford, 2 Aik. 345. Austin v. Grout, 2 Vt. 489. Hill v. Whitney, 16 Vt. 461. Tarbell v. Bradley, 27 Vt. 535); or of the trustee (Bradley v. Cooper, 6 Vt. 121. Emerson

v. Paine, 9 Vt. 271. Leach v. Cook, 10 Vt. 239); and either at or after the first term. Tarbell v. Bradley, 27 Vt. 535.

131. Nor can the suit, if so wrongly brought, proceed against the principal defendant by discharging the trustee, or by striking from the record the trustee part of the writ. Ferris v. Ferris. Hill v. Whitney, 16 Vt. 461.

132. The form of the action determines whether it may be brought by trustee process. Elcell v. Martin, 32 Vt. 217.

133. In an action ex delicto a trustee summons was added to the declaration, but the writ was served on the defendant as an ordinary writ of attachment, and was not served on the trustee named. Held, that this was not a suit "commenced by trustee process," since it was not served upon the trustee, and that the trustee summons should be treated as surplusage. Motion to dismiss for this cause overruled. Graves v. Severens, 37 Vt. 651.

134. But where, in like case, the writ was served upon the trustee, the suit was dismissed. Ferris v. Ferris, 25 Vt. 100.

135. Where the service of a trustee process upon the principal defendant is not such as to require him to appear in court, and he does not appear, so that no judgment can be legally rendered against him, the proceedings will be dismissed on motion of the trustee. Washburn v. N. Y., &c., Mining Co., 41 Vt. 50.

136. Subsequent attachments. The statute allowing subsequent attaching creditors to become parties to a suit, and to contest the validity of the debt or claim of a prior attaching creditor, applies to the case of attachments by trustee process. Harding v. Harding, 25 Vt. 487.

137. Venue. In trustee process the residence of the plaintiff, or of the principal debtor, determines where the suit is to be brought, and not the residence of the trustee. Trombly v. Clark, 13 Vt. 118.

138. Form. Trustee process issued under the revised statutes in the form required by the former statute, was held, as to the trustee, good. Sawyer v. Howard, 22 Vt. 538.

139. Alter, as to the principal debtor; it being as to him, defective in regard both to process and service. Park v. Williams, 14 Vt. 211.

140. Recognizance. In a trustee process, whether it be a summons or an attachment, two recognizances for costs must be entered; one to the defendant and one to the trustee. Grinwold v. Bell, 2 Aik. 355. (1827.)

141. The minute of the recognizance to the principal debtor, and to the trustee, blended both recognizances together, over one signature, but was distinctly expressed. Held well enough. Corey v. Gale, 13 Vt. 639.

142. A recognizance taken to each of two or more persons summoned as trustees, cannot be sued in the names of all jointly, although the clerk (erroneously) has entered a joint judgment of discharge and for their costs, taxed collectively. Page v. Baldwin, 29 Vt. 428.

143. Service. The mode prescribed by the statute for service upon an absconding or concealed debtor in a trustee process cannot be varied, or omitted, by reason of any circumstances of difficulty or impossibility. Huntington v. Bishop, 3 Vt. 515.

144. Under the statute of 1807, service of a trustee process upon an absconding debtor by leaving a copy at his last and usual place of abode, was held good, without the return stating that it was left with any person. Barlow v. Hunt, 10 Vt. 129.

145. Under the trustee act of 1835, the officer who made service on the trustee within his precinct could complete the service upon the principal debtor, although without his precinct. Corey v. Gale, 13 Vt. 639.

146. Held contra under C. S. c. 32, s. 10. (G. S. c. 34, s. 9.) Wires v. Grinwold, 26 Vt. 97.

147. Service upon the trustee by copy left at his house during his absence from the State, was held sufficient to charge him as trustee of the payee of his negotiable promissory note, which had been before assigned but of which he had not received notice until after such service; and although, having at the time of such notice no knowledge of such service, he had, but upon no new consideration, promised to pay the assignee. Barney v. Douglass, 19 Vt. 98. 25 Vt. 599.

148. Where a trustee process was served upon the trustee by the officer delivering him a copy of the writ, but without a copy of his return thereon;—Held, nevertheless, that the debtor's property in the hands of the trustee was attached by the writ, and that this was effectual against subsequent purchasers and attaching creditors;—herein differing from attachments made by copy left in the town clerk's office, where the return of the officer is all that constitutes the attachment. McKenzie v. Ransom, 22 Vt. 324. 28 Vt. 741.

149. The only mode of valid service of a trustee process upon the principal debtor, who is not a resident of the State, is that prescribed in G. S. c. 34, s. 10. Morse v. Nash, 30 Vt. 76.

150. Acceptance of service. A written acceptance of service of a trustee process by the trustee, is sufficient to protect the fund against a subsequent assignment by the principal debtor. Cahoon v. Morgan, 38 Vt. 234.

151. Trustee not served. One named as trustee in a writ, but not served with process, is not a party trustee in the suit, and the suit is not affected thereby. Lyman v. Wood, 42 Vt. 114.

152. Amendment of process. It is not competent for the county court to enlarge an attachment by an amendment of a trustee process while in court, by describing the trustee as member of a firm. Bennett, J., in Knapp v. Lecanway, 27 Vt. 298.

153. Successive attachments. Where goods in the hands of a third person are attached by trustee process, a further lien upon them, subject to all previous liens, may be acquired by like process; and it is questionable whether this is not the only mode of attaching the surplus, and whether the trustee may not, in such case, retain the custody against any attachment of the goods specifically. Bank of Middlebury v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 182.

154. Rights fixed by service. After service of successive trustee processes, the voluntary payment by the trustee of an earlier attachment before judgment, unless judgment shall be rendered against him in that suit, will not avail him as against the later attachments. Wilder v. Weatherhead, 32 Vt. 765.

155. After service of a trustee process, the trustee cannot make any new arrangement with the principal defendant varying their existing obligations, so as to lessen or subvert the legal or equitable rights of the plaintiff acquired by his attachment. Edgerton v. Martin, 35 Vt. 116.

156. Effect on other suit. The pendency of a trustee suit will not abate or bar a subsequent suit by the principal debtor in the first suit against the trustee, for the same cause of action; but the court will protect the defendant by stay of execution until he is released in the trustee suit. Morton v. Webb, 7 Vt. 123. Jones v. Wood, 30 Vt. 268.

157. It is no good reason for continuing the trial or hearing of a case, that the claim has been attached by trustee process, since the court has power to control the execution, so as to render the trustee process effectual. Wilson v. Fire Insurance Co., 19 Vt. 177.

158. The rights of the principal debtor for every purpose of making demand of his debtor, summoned as trustee, or of securing his claim against the trustee by attachment, or otherwise, remain unimpaired by the pendency of the trustee proceedings, but in subordination to the lien created by such proceedings. Hicks v. Gleason, 20 Vt. 139. 30 Vt. 270.

159. The defendant in a suit pending was summoned as trustee of the plaintiff, and was adjudged trustee for the full amount of the plaintiff's claim against him, but had not paid that judgment. Held, that this was no bar to a recovery by the plaintiff for the full amount of his claim; but the court ordered stay of execution until the plaintiff should cause the defendant to be released from the trustee judgment. Spicer v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 678. 30 Vt. 271.

160. Claimant. The claimant in a trustee suit cannot maintain a plea in abatement, or other dilatory plea, or any plea which does not go to the merits of the controversy between him and the attaching creditor. McKensie v. Ransom, 22 Vt. 824. 28 Vt. 507.

161. The assignee of a chose in action is concluded by a judgment against the assignor by which the debtor was adjudged trustee of the assignor, where such assignee was notified of the proceedings. Spafford v. Page, 15 Vt. 490.

162. The claimant may contest the validity of the plaintiff's demand, and show that it is prosecuted solely for the benefit of the defendant, although the claimant's title is by a conveyance from the defendant which is void as to bona fide creditors of the defendant—it being good as against him. Boutwell v. McClure, 80 Vt. 674.

163. —before commissioner. Under the trustee act of 1853, No. 15 (G. S. c. 34, s. 19 et seq.), semble, that the commissioner has no jurisdiction to try and determine the rights of a claimant. Ib.

164. Held, that on the appointment of a commissioner to take the disclosure of a trustee, if a claimant is cited in, or voluntarily appears before the commissioner and makes his claim, the commissioner has jurisdiction to determine whether the funds in the hands of the trustee belong to the claimant—that is, whether the person summoned as trustee, is trustee—although the claimant has filed no allegations; and the claimant cannot, on the coming in of the report, claim a jury trial, nor can the proceedings be objected to for such informality. Towne v. Leach, 32 Vt. 747. Russell v. Thayer, 30 Vt. 525.

165. As to whether the jurisdiction of the court may be affected by its appearing before a commissioner, under the trustee act, that there is or may be a claimant of the funds who has not entered or been cited in as a claimant in the cause—see Wheeler v. Winn, 38 Vt. 122.

166. Suit before a justice;—judgment against the principal defendant by default, and trustee adjudged chargeable;—claimant appealed. In the county court, the claimant filed no allegations, and a commissioner was appointed without objections. Held, so far a waiver by the plaintiff, that he could not object to the claimant's being heard before the commissioner because allegations were not filed; and, semble, that it is discretionary with the county court whether it will order allegations to be filed. Carr v. Seene, 47 Vt. 574.

167. Effect of judgment for claimant. A judgment in favor of the claimant does not determine, as against the trustee, what, if anything, is due the claimant, but only operates to discharge the trustee in that suit; and the claimant is left to pursue his remedy against the trustee the same as if no trustee suit had ever been brought, and the trustee has the same right to defend. Carpenter v. McClure, 37 Vt. 127.

168. Disclosure—Report. Where a commissioner is appointed under G. S. c. 34, s. 19, the whole case as to the liability of the trustee is referred, and the disclosure previously filed is but evidence before him; and where he professes to report the facts, and makes no reference to the disclosure as containing further facts, the court can take no notice of statements in the disclosure not embraced in the report. Lovejoy v. Lee, 35 Vt. 480.

169. Evidence. The declarations or acts of the principal debtor are not evidence against the trustee. Cahoon v. Ellis, 18 Vt. 500.

170. The disclosure of one trustee is not evidence against his co-trustee. Downer v. Topliff, 19 Vt. 399.

171. Death of defendant. In a trustee suit, the death of the principal defendant and the appointment of commissioners, after final judgment against him, do not discontinue the suit under G. S. c. 53, s. 16, so as to entitle the trustee to be discharged; but the cause may proceed for enforcing the lien created by the attachment, as against the trustee. Miller v. Williams, 80 Vt. 386.

172. Otherwise, where there was a default entered and the cause was continued without assessment of damages, and the principal defendant died and commissioners were appointed before assessment, where the case was one of open damages. Sheldon v. Sheldon, 37 Vt. 152.

173. A trustee suit commenced before a justice, wherein judgment passed against the principal defendant and trustee, was appealed by the claimant only, and was continued the first term without an affirmance of the judgment against the principal defendant. Before the next term the defendant died, and administration of his estate was granted and commissioners were appointed. Held, that the suit, under the statute, was discontinued. Dow v. Batchelder, 45 Vt. 60.

174. Confession of judgment. Before Stat. 1855, No. 9 (G. S. c. 125, s. 6), the principal debtor in a trustee suit brought to the county court, confessed judgment before a justice according to C. S. c. 115, s. 4 (G. S. c. 125, s. 4), but with the understanding of both parties, that the cause should be entered and proceeded with in the county court, for the purpose of charging the trustees. Held, nevertheless, that the confession of judgment was a merger of the original cause of action, and was a defense to the action in the county court. Barnes v. Lapham, 28 Vt. 307. 36 Vt. 664.

175. Judgment and execution. The judgments against the principal debtor and trustee are separate and distinct judgments, and cannot be embraced in the same execution. Rider v. Alexander, 1 D. Chip. 287. (1814.)

176. The case is not ended as to the principal debtor upon the rendition of a judgment against him, so long as it is not ended as to the trustees; but such judgment must lie until the determination of the whole case; and until then, an execution cannot regularly issue on such judgment. Jones v. Spear, 21 Vt. 426. 30 Vt. 389. Hapgood v. Goddard, 26 Vt. 401.

177. After judgment against the principal defendant and one of the trustees, and a continuance as to the other trustees, execution by leave of court was issued upon the judgment against the first trustee, and put in the hands of the sheriff for service. Held, that he was liable for neglecting to levy and return the same. Passumpsic Bank v. Beattie, 32 Vt. 315, citing 23 Vt. 516. 26 Vt. 401.

178. If the indebtedness of the trustee is, by his contract with the principal debtor, payable in labor or specific property on demand, and there has been no breach of the contract, the judgment must be that the sum ascertained to be due is so payable. Bartlett v. Wood, 32 Vt. 372.

179. Trustee refusing to answer. Whether judgment should be rendered against a trustee for his refusal to answer a question propounded, rests in the discretion of the county court and cannot be revised in the supreme court. Worthington v. Jones, 23 Vt. 546. 27 Vt. 308. But see Lamson v. Bradley, 42 Vt. 173.

180. Enforcement of judgment. Where one was adjudged trustee for a certain sum payable in leather, and no steps required by law to charge the trustee personally, or the property in his hands, had been taken, and no proper service had been made on the principal debtor;—Held, that a scire facias could not be maintained to revive the judgment against either. Rice v. Talmadge, 20 Vt. 378. 30 Vt. 512.

181. Under G. S. c. 34, an action of debt can be maintained on a judgment rendered against a trustee for a sum payable presently and in money. Chandler v. Warren, 30 Vt. 510. 31 Vt. 700.

182. Review. There was no review from a judgment for or against one sued as trustee of an absconding or concealed debtor. Huntington v. Bishop, 5 Vt. 186. Emerson v. Paine, 9 Vt. 271.

183. Appeal, &c. Before the act of 1842, one summoned as trustee before a justice had no right of appeal—he not being regarded as a party to the action. Earl v. Leland, 14 Vt. 328.

184. A trustee is party to an execution against him, in such sense that he may sustain audita querela to set it aside when void, or voidable. Wilson v. Fleming, 16 Vt. 649.

185. Where a trustee appeals from the adjudication of a justice of the peace, the law does not allow him to stay the progress of the appeal by confessing judgment before the justice twelve days before the next session of the county court; nor does it authorize the justice, thereupon, to affirm the judgment against the principal defendant. Sanford v. Huxley, 18 Vt. 170.

186. Under R. S. c. 33, s. 8, authorizing the defendant to bring a petition to vacate a judgment obtained through fraud, accident or mistake;—Held, that this did not authorize such petition by one summoned as a trustee. Denison v. True, 23 Vt. 42. 24 Vt. 358.

187. Under the statute allowing an appeal by "either party" from the judgment of a justice;—Held, that a claimant who was permitted to appear as such in a trustee suit, was, as respects his title to the effects in question, a party, and entitled to appeal. Hutchinson v. Bigelow, 23 Vt. 504.

188. The claimant can appeal, if at all, only in such cases as are appealable by the other parties. Cabot v. Burnham, 28 Vt. 694.

189. The plaintiff in a trustee suit before a justice may appeal from a judgment discharging the trustee, although the principal debtor suffered judgment by default. Van Buskirk v. Martin, 28 Vt. 726.

190. An appeal, whether by one of the principal parties or only by the trustee or claimant, brings the whole case into the county court as to all the parties. Dow v. Batchelder, 45 Vt. 60.

191. Where judgment is rendered against the principal defendant and a judgment discharging the trustee, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment discharging the trustee, the defendant may appear in the county court and make defense, as by filing a motion to dismiss. Bryant v. Pember, 43 Vt. 599.

192. Exceptions. The principal debtor may take and prosecute exceptions to an adjudication of the county court, that the trustee is chargeable. Hurlburt v. Hicks, 17 Vt. 193.

193. Stat. 1867. Under the act of 1867, No. 1, s. 1, attaching creditors by trustee process were entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds, though the first process was returnable to a justice and the other to the county court. Bird v. Taylor, 43 Vt. 584. Held, that the first attaching creditor's claim to participate was not defeated by his failing to file a copy of the record of his judgment with the clerk of the county court, under s. 6, in a case where the second attaching creditor had neglected to file his claim to participate, until it was too late for the first creditor to comply with the requirements of s. 6. Id.

194. Chancery. Settlement and marshaling of the claims of sundry attaching and trustee creditors, in aid of a trustee suit pending. Bank of Middlebury v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 182.

195. Protection of trustee. A trustee adjudged chargeable will be protected in his payment of the judgment, although no personal notice of the suit was given to the principal debtor, who was absent from the State, and although no recognizance for a writ of review was given by the plaintiff. Stearns v. Wrisley, 30 Vt. 661.

196. It is no defense to an action, that the defendant was adjudged trustee in another action and paid that judgment, if such judgment was rendered on his default, or without disclosure, where a true disclosure would have shown him not liable as trustee. Probate Court v. Niles, 32 Vt. 775. Allen v. Spafford, 42 Vt. 116.

197. If a trustee makes no disclosure, or but a partial disclosure which is not a full statement of all the facts, as well those which go to his discharge as those which charge him, a judgment against him as trustee, and payment thereof, will not protect him against the claim of any other party in interest not made a party to the proceedings. Seward v. Heftin, 20 Vt. 144. Marsh v. Davis, 24 Vt. 363. Allen v. Spafford.

198. It would seem to be otherwise, where he has fully disclosed according to his legal duty. Ib. Holmes v. Clark, 46 Vt. 22, 27.

199. Costs. Where several trustees personally attend, the travel and attendance of each may be taxed. Porter v. Russell, 1 Tyl. 35.

200. Held, that costs are taxable in behalf of trustees and claimants, respectively, for actual travel only, and not for travel at such times as they appeared only by attorney. Hunt v. Miles, 42 Vt. 533.

201. A trustee before a justice employed a person, not an attorney, to assist him. Held, that an allowance therefor as "counsel fees," in the taxation of costs for the trustee, was erroneous. Miller v. Williams, 30 Vt. 386.

202. A trustee disclosing funds of the principal debtor in his hands, for which he has already been adjudged chargeable in a former suit against the same debtor, should be adjudged chargeable in the second suit, subject to his liability in the first. In such case, the trustee's costs should not be deducted from the sum in his hands, but he is entitled to judgment therefor. Bullard v. Hicks, 17 Vt. 198.

203. Costs incurred in litigating the question of the liability of the trustee after judgment against the principal debtor, where the trustee was adjudged chargeable, were allowed to be taxed as costs of the suit, to be paid from the funds in the hands of the trustee. Jones v. Spear, 21 Vt. 426.

204. A trustee who excepted, but wholly failed upon his exceptions in the supreme court, was not allowed to retain out of the funds in his hands his costs in the supreme court; but costs were not taxed against him. Brown v. Davis, 19 Vt. 603.

205. Where a trustee removes the case into another court by exceptions, or appeal, he does it at his peril as respects costs. If he fails upon his exceptions, he cannot tax costs, but must pay costs to the plaintiff. But if upon the plaintiff's exceptions the judgment is modified, the trustee is still entitled to tax costs, he being passive and not an actor. Goddard v. Collins, 25 Vt. 712.

206. Where a trustee is discharged, for any cause, his claim for costs is a matter of absolute right, of which he cannot be deprived, except by his consent. Decker v. Fisher, 25 Vt. 533. (G. S. c. 34, s. 64.)

207. A sued B and trustee C, and B then sued C. C was afterwards adjudged trustee and paid his full debt to B upon the judgment against him as trustee. In the suit B v. C, the court below, after such payment, rendered judgment for the defendant C to recover his costs. Held erroneous; and that the plaintiff B was entitled to judgment for nominal damages, and reasonable costs; taxed, in this case, up to and including the first term of court, and all the clerk's fees. Wheeler v. Fuller, 39 Vt. 310.

208. Case in supreme court. In trustee cases in the supreme court the facts found must be stated upon the record, as in other cases, and the court cannot pass upon the evidence more than in any writ of error. Hazeltine v. Page, 4 Vt. 49.

209. The supreme court will not look into the disclosure of a trustee to ascertain facts not found by the commissioner or the county court. Scotfield v. White, 29 Vt. 330.

210. The statements of a trustee's disclosure were treated by the supreme court as facts found by the county court, where no evidence had been introduced in contradiction of it, and it evidently formed the basis of the county court's decision. Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150.

211. Where the judgment discharging a trustee was affirmed on exceptions, the supreme court, pro forma, affirmed the judgment against the principal debtor, but without costs. Wilder v. Eldridge, 17 Vt. 226.

TRUSTS.

I. HOW CREATED, EVIDENCED, AND LIMITED. II. THE TRUSTEE.

1. His rights at law.

2. Effect of his conveyance.

III. LIABILITY OF TRUST FUNDS TO CREDITORS.

IV. ACCOUNTABILITY OF TRUSTEE.

I. HOW CREATED, EVIDENCED, AND LIMITED.

1. By legal appointment. Letters of guardianship, or of administration, create a trust coupled with an interest. If one of two, or more, dies, resigns, or is removed, the trust remains to the others. Pepper v. Stone, 10 Vt. 427.

2. Express trusts. By our law an express trust, except in lands, may be created without writing. No prescribed form of words is necessary to create it. The intention of the party creating it affords the only sure test of its creation. In ascertaining this intention, the language used is not to be tortured by any technical constructions, but, as in the case of wills and devises, a liberal construction is to be adopted. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

3. The father of a married woman, who had three children, informed her and her husband in conversation that he should make her an advancement, and wished to have it invested for the benefit of herself and her children; and afterwards, in a letter to her husband he enclosed a check of $1000 payable to her, or bearer, and expressed in the letter that it was "for Fanny" (the daughter), and suggested a mode of investment, adding: "I leave that to you and her pleasure, what mode to adopt for her and heirs' mutual benefit." The court found that the intention of the father was to set apart this fund for the exclusive benefit of the daughter and her children, or heirs, and to place it under the control of her husband, as her trustee; and that such was the effect. Ib.

4. The acknowledgment, in an answer in chancery, of a trust under a deed absolute in form, is equivalent to a declaration of trust in the deed. Barron v. Barron, 24 Vt. 375.

5. So, also, is a deposition of the grantee in the deed, acknowledging the trust. Pinney v. Fellows, 15 Vt. 525. This denied in Dewey v. Dewey, 35 Vt. 560.

6. Uses. A covenant to stand seized to the use of another, and indeed all uses which the statute of uses of Henry VIII. executes, constitute trusts which a court of equity will always enforce. Sherman v. Dodge, 28 Vt. 26. Gorham v. Daniels, 23 Vt. 600.

7. This statute is not in force in this State. Resort may be had to a court of equity to carry out its purposes, in those rare cases where it might answer a good end in effecting the intent of a grant. Ib.

8. The intestate, for the expressed consideration of $1000, conveyed to his son by warranty deed certain lands and personal property "with the following condition, viz.: that I and my wife Mary shall have the use and possession of said real estate and personal property during our natural lives;—the said A P [the grantee] to have possession of said premises and personal property at our decease, and not until then." Held, that this was rather a grant upon condition subsequent, than an exception or reservation (as in Gorham v. Daniels), the spirit of the condition being that the grantee should suffer the grantor to enjoy the property during his life, and if his wife should survive him, then to suffer her to enjoy the use during her life, but leaving the legal title in the grantee;—uses which a court of equity will execute. Sherman v. Dodge.

9. Implied trusts. Trusts may be implied, or may result from certain facts and circumstances requiring their existence for purposes of equity. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

10. Husband and wife joined in the conveyance of the wife's land, and the husband invested the avails of the sale in other land of which he took a conveyance to his minor child, himself retaining the deed, unrecorded. Held, that such child had no claim against the father under such purchase and deed. Ward v. Morris, 1 D. Chip. 822.

11. There is an implied trust in favor of the party who advances the consideration, on the purchase of lands which are conveyed to another. Clark v. Clark, 43 Vt. 685.

12. Where one buys land in the name of another and pays the consideration money, the land will generally be held by the grantee in trust for the person who so pays the consideration. Barron v. Barron, 24 Vt. 375; and if he pays but part, the land will be charged with the trust pro tanto. Pinney v. Fellows, 15 Vt. 525.

13. The defendant was authorized by the orator, by a parol agreement, to purchase a farm in his own name in trust for the benefit of the orator, and to deed it to him thereafter, upon a future arrangement to be made between them, either upon principles then settled upon, or upon such as should be thereafter agreed upon. The defendant took the deed to himself, paid part of the consideration, and gave his notes for the balance. The orator afterwards paid some of these notes, but never had possession of the farm. On a bill to enforce a conveyance on the ground of a trust, and for general relief;—Held, (1), that as an express trust it was void by the statute; (2), that such subsequent payment did not create a resulting trust;—that to have that effect, the consideration, or some part of it, must have been furnished by the orator at the time of the purchase. But the court decreed payment of the sums paid by the orator, without costs to either party. Pinnock v. Clough, 16 Vt. 500. 35 Vt. 559.

14. In case of an implied trust, parol evidence as to the understanding and intention of the parties, is not excluded by the statute of frauds. Clark v. Clark, 43 Vt. 685.

15. A resulting trust in behalf of a person paying the consideration on the purchase of land, where the conveyance is made to another, may be established by parol, although the deed recites the consideration as received from the grantee. Pinney v. Fellows, 15 Vt. 525.

16. Where a deed is taken to the wife or child of one who pays the price, the prima facie implication is, that it was intended as a gift; but this implication may be rebutted by oral evidence, so as to create a resulting trust in favor of the paying party, which equity will enforce. Paige v. Morgan, 28 Vt. 565. Bent v. Bent, 44 Vt. 555.

17. Designation and appointment of trustee. In designating a trustee to take charge of a trust fund, no greater certainty or formality is requisite than in the creation of the fund itself; nor is it indispensable that a trustee should be designated in the instrument creating the trust fund, nor, indeed, by any simultaneous or subsequent instrument. If necessary, chancery will appoint a trustee. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

18. It is a settled rule in equity, that a trust shall not fail for want of a trustee. A town, which under its charter stood as trustee of certain public rights of land, having been abolished by act of the legislature, a new trustee was appointed by the chancellor. Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 12.

19. Cestui que trust. A church or society, unincorporated, is capable of receiving the use of property devised to trustees for their benefit; and if the trustees fail, or decline the trust, the heir will stand as trustee, or the court of chancery may appoint. Stone v. Griffin, 8 Vt. 400. 7 Vt. 305.

20. The law in relation to charitable uses, as well as to the jurisdiction of chancery over them, is not founded on the statute 43 Eliz., but existed at common law; and societies, or bodies of men unincorporated, have ever been considered capable of receiving gifts or legacies to be applied to charitable uses. Such also has been the invariable policy of this State, and seems sanctioned by section 41 of the constitution. Burr v. Smith, 7 Vt. 241.

21. Lands were conveyed to selectmen in trust for the town, "the annual rents and profits to go and be disposed of to and for the use and support of a gospel minister or ministers in the town, in proportion to the number of inhabitants attending or inclined to each respective meeting, excepting always the church of England, or society of that order," &c. On a bill of interpleader, the funds were ordered to be distributed among all the religious societies existing at the time of the distribution ordered, where there was a minister officiating, except the one expressly excepted, although some of these societies were of different Christian denominations from the one to which the grantor belonged, and were not in existence at the time of the grant. Gardner v. Rogers, 11 Vt. 384.

22. Charter of the town of Newbury from New Hampshire;—afterwards confirmed by charter from New York to Jacob Bayley and others in trust for the New Hampshire proprietors. Trust enforced. Johnson v. Bayley, 15 Vt. 595.

23. Where a deed of lands was executed to F in trust for the town of W, conditioned to be void if the grantor shall indemnify and save harmless said town from all expenses which may be incurred by reason of the grantor, or his family, becoming chargeable to said town, as paupers;—Held, that the conveyance was to F, at first, for the use of the grantor, implying a personal confidence in F to execute the trust for the benefit of the grantor, and then, conditionally, in trust for the benefit of the town, thus creating a use upon a use; and that the deed did not convey to the town such a title as that an action of ejectment, after breach of the condition, could lie in its name against the grantee of the grantor. Williston v. White, 11 Vt. 40. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

24. A devise of property was made to one in trust, to apply such sum as he should judge right and equitable, yearly, for the support of a certain insane pauper, provided the town of S, to which the pauper was chargeable, should pay a reasonable sum yearly for the same purpose. Held, that the town had no such interest under the will as to enable it to maintain a bill in equity against the trustee, to compel him to use the fund for the support of the pauper; that the pauper, and not the town, was the cestui que trust and the proper party to enforce the execution of the trust. Sharon v. Simons, 30 Vt. 458.

25. Held, also, on a bill to enforce this trust, that where the trustee had exercised his judgment honestly and without sinister motive, the court would not examine into the accuracy of the conclusion come to by the trustee in the application of the fund, and override the exercise of his discretion. Id.

II. THE TRUSTEE.

1. His rights at law.

26. Right to bring suits. Where lands are held in trust, the name of the trustee must be used in suits at law affecting the legal title; but in equity the cestui que trust is owner, and a court of law will protect him in an entry upon and occupation of the property, as against a stranger to the title. Oatman v. Barney, 46 Vt. 594.

27. A trustee may recover in ejectment against his cestui que trust. Beach v. Beach, 14 Vt. 28. 16 Vt. 414. 81 Vt. 606.

28. —to convey. Trustees under a bill, having the legal estate, may convey it to a third person so as to enable him to maintain ejectment against a stranger. Mitchell v. Stevens, 1 Aik. 16.

29. A trustee may convey the trust estate with the consent of the cestui que trust and the founder of the trust, or charity, in all cases; and this assent may be implied from circumstances, lapse of time, or from both. Pownal v. Myers, 16 Vt. 408.

30. A trustee having the legal estate may, at law, convey it to any one he sees fit. If the conveyance be in violation of the trust, and the grantee is ignorant of the trust, the entire title passes to him; but, if not ignorant of the trust, he takes the estate incumbered with the trust, and may be held to account, as trustee, to the cestui que trust; but only in equity. Redfield, J. Ib. Blaisdell v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 179.

2. Effect of his conveyance.

31. At law, the rights and interests of cestuis que trust, legally created and manifested in real estate, cannot be affected by a conveyance by the trustee without their assent, whether minors or of full age. Barrett, J., in Flint v. Steadman, 36 Vt. 218. See Redfield, J., in Pownal v. Myers, 16 Vt. 414.

32. A party receiving trust property, knowing it to be such, in payment of his own debts, is liable to account to the cestui que trust. Towle v. Mack, 2 Vt. 19.

33. A purchaser of trust property, having notice of the trust before the full price has been paid over beyond power of recall, is not an innocent bona fide purchaser. Abell v. Howe, 43 Vt. 408. See Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 109.

34. A party claiming lands as discharged from a trust of which he has notice—as, by the record of an earlier deed creating the trust—must show that, in point of fact, they have been so discharged in some way recognized by law; and the mere fact of a conveyance of the trustee by deed of warranty, has no tendency to prove that. Flint v. Steadman, 36 Vt. 210.

35. A conveyed his lands to B to be sold, and out of the proceeds to pay certain debts, and account for the surplus. After B had sold enough of the lands to satisfy those debts, the orator attached the remainder as the property of A and levied his execution thereon. After the attachment, but without knowledge thereof or of the trust, C purchased of B such remaining portion of the lands, in good faith, and took a conveyance from B. In a bill against A, B and C for relief;—Held, that the lands in the hands of C could not be charged; but B was decreed to pay the orator's debt out of the surplus in his hands. Waterman v. Cochran, 12 Vt. 699.

III. LIABILITY OF TRUST FUNDS TO CREDITORS.

36. Bank stock purchased by a trustee with trust funds, though held by him in his own name, is not subject to attachment and execution by his creditors who have notice of the trust. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

37. No privity exists, even in equity, between a creditor and the trust fund of his debtor, if the creditor, at the time of the credit given, had either actual or constructive notice of the trust, and gave credit to the trustee, and not to the trust fund, although the means procured by the credit went for the benefit of the trust. Townsend v. Barber, 27 Vt. 417.

38. In an action by a trustee to recover for property held by him in trust and attached by the defendant for the trustee's individual debt, created upon credit given to the trustee personally without fraud or mistake;—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to have deducted from the damages, such part of the defendant's claim as was for property bought by the trustee for, and applied to, the benefit and improvement of the trust fund, and for the benefit of the cestu que trust. Barber v. Chapin, 28 Vt. 413.

39. S devised a farm and the stock and tools thereon to the plaintiffs in trust for his grandson G, his wife and children, during the life of G and his wife, and at their decease to be equally divided between their children; giving authority to the plaintiffs to permit G to have the management and control of the trust property, at any time and so long as from his habits of industry, frugality, &c., they should think it safe and prudent to do so. The plaintiffs suffered G to live upon and carry on the farm, and to manage and take care of the stock to suit himself, and to appropriate the avails for the support of himself and family, without accounting, but under the general charge and supervision of the plaintiffs as to the disposal of the property, and preventing the disposal of it by G. Held, that the plaintiffs could maintain trover for cattle, the product of the original stock, attached as the property of G, although the value of the property had been enhanced by the labor of G—the plaintiffs not having parted with their legal title. Roberts v. Hall, 35 Vt. 28. Trask v. Donoghue, contra, 1 Aik. 370, overruled. Ib. 82.

40. The plaintiff put into the hands of his brother $1,500 to be held "in trust," and to be returned "on demand," with the duty to take care of it, invest, exchange and improve it; and the right to live and "enjoy the comforts of life," "only from day to day out of the profits or interest of said sum," as his pay. Held, the contract being bona fide, that the title of the property purchased by the brother with the fund, and of the increase, was in the plaintiff, and could not be attached for the brother's debts. Whitcomb v. Cardell, 45 Vt. 24.

41. Chancery will assist a judgment creditor, not only to discover, but to reach the property of the debtor in the hands of a trustee, which is beyond the reach of an execution at law. It is necessary, however, before resorting to chancery for relief, that he should first have taken out execution and caused it to be levied, or returned nulla bona, so as to show thereby that his remedy at law has failed. Waterman v. Cochran, 12 Vt. 699.

IV. ACCOUNTABILITY OF TRUSTEE.

42. An assignee in trust for creditors, who sells the trust property by way of barter, or exchange, or on credit, is chargeable for the cash value of the property at the time of the sale, and the interest. Page v. Olcott, 28 Vt. 465.

43. So, if the trustee fail to keep a full and fair account of the sales, so that they cannot be ascertained. Ib.

44. Where an executor appropriates or purchases in the estate, the heirs may treat him as purchaser or trustee at their election, making him account for profits. Haggood v. Jennison, 2 Vt. 294.

45. It is a principle of settled policy, that no administrator, or person standing in a like situation, shall become the purchaser of the estate for his own benefit, against the will of those for whose interest he is appointed to act. It is therefore a general rule, that a cestui que trust has an election to affirm or disaffirm such purchases by his trustee, and this without reference to whether the purchase was fair or not. Mead v. Byington, 10 Vt. 116.

46. What dealings by a party holding another's money, notes, &c., in trust, will make him accountable as for an appropriation to himself—"making it his own"—see Seaver v. Pierce, 42 Vt. 325.

47. It was verbally agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant who were co-trustees of the estate of a minor, that the plaintiff should be permitted to employ the trust fund in his trade for the term of three years, for which he would pay the interest thereon to the cestui que trust, and would also pay the defendant in goods $150 per year for three years. Under this agreement, the defendant took a part of the first year's payment in goods. In an action of book account to recover for the goods;—Held, (1), that the contract was within the statute of frauds; (2), that it was illegal and void, and in either case, so far as it was executory, it could not be enforced; but that, in either case, so far as the plaintiff had made payments under it, he could not recover them back. Foot v. Emerson, 10 Vt. 338.

48. Allowances. In holding an executor trustee for the heirs of lands sold and purchased in by him, where the whole was one purchase;—Held, that the account should be taken with reference to the value of what remained unsold, as well as the gains upon what he had re-sold. Haggood v. Jennison, 2 Vt. 294.

49. And he was allowed for those lands of which the title failed, and for the costs of trying the title. Ib.

50. A trustee was allowed his costs and expenses of suits and of an arbitration, where he had managed the concern as he would his own, and in good faith; but not for costs and expenses incurred after he had improperly refused to settle and surrender the trust. Towle v. Mack, 2 Vt. 19.

51. In a matter partaking of the character of a trust, where certain expenses, otherwise properly chargeable, were found to have been occasioned by the "carelessness" of the party;—Held, that they could not be allowed out of the fund. Missisquoi Bank v. Sabn, 48 Vt. 239.

52. It is usual to give costs to a trustee where there is a fund in his hands, notwithstanding the decree is against him; sometimes only common costs, but generally all necessary actual charges and expenses in addition. Pren-tiss, J., in Moore v. Jones. (U. S. D. C.), 23 Vt. 748.

53. Trustees have an inherent equitable right to be reimbursed all expenses which they reasonably incur in the execution of the trust; and it is immaterial that there is no provision for such expenses in the instrument of trust. All such expenses are a lien upon the trust property, and the trustee will not be compelled to part with it until they are paid. Held, in the case, that the trustees had not lost their lien. Rensselaer & Saratoga R. Co. v. Miller, 47 Vt. 146.

54. Statute of limitations. The statute of limitations does not apply, as between a trustee and his cestui que trust, to bar a trust claim—as, in case of an executor, or administrator, or guardian—so long as the trust subsists and is acknowledged on both sides, or is not denied and an adverse claim set up. Evarts v. Nason, 11 Vt. 122. Kimball v. Ives, 17 Vt. 430.

55. A mere servant. A mere servant, or agent acting under the direction and control of his master or principal, is not generally required, as in case of a trustee, to keep accounts on behalf his employer. Upon a bill in chancery, in such case, praying an account, it is sufficient that the defendant answer that what he received, he received as a servant, and paid it over to his master. A decree for an account was refused in such case. Rich v. Austin, 40 Vt. 416.

TURNPIKE AND PLANK ROADS.

1. Laid upon a highway. The legislature has power to authorize a turnpike corporation to lay a turnpike upon an existing highway without compensation to the town, and to sustain the same by means of tolls. Panton T. Co. v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 198. Searsburg T. Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 324. Barnet v. Passumpsic T. Co., 15 Vt. 757.

2. Where a turnpike is laid upon a public highway, the town has no claim against the turnpike company for compensation for having made the road, which can be enforced at law, or in equity. Barnet v. Passumpsic T. Co.

3. Where a turnpike was lawfully laid along a highway, and a toll gate erected across it;—Held, that although the inhabitants of the town might have acquired a prescriptive right to pass the gate, toll free, and although this right was denied to some or all of the inhabitants, yet this gave no right to the town to interfere, in its corporate capacity, and demolish the gate by way of abating a nuisance. Panton T. Co. v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 198.

4. Changing location of gates. A turnpike company, authorized by their charter to erect gates and receive tolls, may, from time to time, change the location of their gates, although done to intercept travel coming upon the turnpike by new roads, private or public; and the public acquires no right by lapse of time to have the gates remain in any particular place. Fowler v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 369.

5. Changing to highway. Proceedings for converting a turnpike into a public highway, under stat. 1898. (G. S. c. 27, ss. 18, 19, 20.) State v. Shrewsbury, 15 Vt. 288.

6. Substituted track. Where a railroad company appropriated part of a turnpike road, making a substitute therefor as their charter provided, and the turnpike company used the substitute as part of their road, repaired it, kept their gates closed and took toll;—Held, that this thereby became a portion of their road which they were bound to keep in repair. Mathews v. Winooski T. Co., 24 Vt. 480.

7. In an action against a turnpike company for an injury, the declaration alleged the injury to have occurred on a road laid out in 1803. The evidence was, that the injury occurred on a slight alteration made by the company from the original line. Held no variance, for that such alteration became incorporated with, and a component part of, the old road. Noyes v. White River T. Co., 11 Vt. 581.

8. Sufficiency, and liability for insufficiency. A turnpike company is bound to maintain its bridges of sufficient strength to bear up the heaviest loads that usually pass upon the road to and from market; but not more than this. Richardson v. Royallton & Woodstock T. Co., 5 Vt. 580.

9. Under the charter of a turnpike corporation making the company liable for "all damages" arising from want of repairs, &c.;—Held, that the company was liable only to the same extent as towns under the general statute; that is, for special damage, &c. S. C. 6 Vt. 496. Baxter v. Winooski T. Co., 22 Vt. 114.

10. A corporation created by the State of New Hampshire for building and maintaining a bridge across Connecticut River, and authorized to demand, and demanding and receiving, tolls of passengers, extended its bridge and approaches into this State. Held, by a majority, that the corporation was liable to a passenger over the bridge for an injury occasioned by the insufficiency of that part of the bridge and its approaches which was within this State. Stanton v. Proprietors of Haverhill Bridge, 47 Vt. 172.

11. A turnpike company, like a town, is primarily liable to the traveler for the insufficiency of its road, although such insufficiency is occasioned by the acts of others—as, a railroad company—leaving to the turnpike company, as to a town, a claim for indemnity. Mathews v. Winooski T. Co., 24 Vt. 480.

12. Pleading. In an action for an injury caused by the insufficiency of a turnpike, it is not necessary that the declaration should state the particular place upon the road where the injury happened, nor the manner in which the road was out of repair. Noyes v. White River T. Co., 11 Vt. 531.

13. In such action the declaration averred the injury as occasioned "by reason of the road being out of repair and the badness thereof." Held, that whether such "badness" was the result of an original insufficiency of the road, or of want of repairs from time to time, could make no difference; and that, in either case, there was no variance. Id.

14. Tolls, and exemptions. The act incorporating a turnpike company exempted from tolls, those who should be going "on the ordinary domestic business of family concerns." Held, that this did not exempt one who was transporting materials to repair buildings on his farm in another town, about six miles from his home. Green Mountain T. Co. v. Hemmingway, 2 Vt. 512.

15. Nor, to a physician going to visit his patients. Center T. Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 212.

16. But where the party, without fraud, claimed such exemption and was allowed to pass the gate, toll free;—Held, that assumption did not lie to recover the tolls. Ib.

17. Under a turnpike corporation act, all persons living within eight miles of the gate were exempted from toll. Held, that the privilege was personal to all such, and was not limited by the kind, or mode of travel, or business; that it allowed the driving by the parties servants of a mail coach with passengers, &c. Passumpsic T. Co. v. Langdon, 6 Vt. 546.

18. The charter of a turnpike company imposed the duty of keeping its road in repair, and made it liable for damages happening "to any person from whom toll is demandable," through want of repairs, &c. By another provision, toll was not demandable at any gate of any person living within eight miles of such gate. The plaintiff lived between two gates of the turnpike, five miles from one and fifteen from the other, and had paid a commutation for the year for passing the nearest gate, and was subject to toll at the other gate. Upon an excursion on the turnpike between the two gates, not intending to pass either, he sustained damage through a defect of the road. In an action therefor;—Held, (1), that, as toll was demandable of the plaintiff upon the road, he came within the words of the provision; (2), that the defendant, having demanded and received toll in the commutation, was estopped from denying that the plaintiff had a claim to recover damages under the charter. Brown v. Winooski T. Co., 23 Vt. 104.

19. Toll board. A turnpike company was required by its charter to "keep exposed to view a sign, or board, with the rate of tolls fairly written thereon in large letters." Held, that being posted up in the entry-way of the toll house was not a full compliance with the requisitions of the statute; but that the company was not thereby precluded from demanding tolls, no such limitation being in the charter. Center T. Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 212.

20. Forcibly passing, or avoiding gate. A turnpike act imposed a penalty upon any person who should "attempt forcibly to pass any gate without having paid the legal toll at said gate." Held, that the penalty did not attach to one not liable to pay toll, although he neglected or refused to make known his exemption. Green Mountain T. Co. v. Hemmingway, 2 Vt. 512. Pingrey v. Washburn, 1 Aik. 264.

21. A traveler upon a turnpike turned off upon a public highway before coming to the gate, and passed on beyond the gate upon such highway, without entering again upon the turnpike; and did this, with intent to evade the payment of toll at the gate. Held, that he was not thereby subject to the penalty of the act, which provided that "if any person shall pass any of said gates, and again enter said road, with intent to evade the legal toll, &c., or shall otherwise, without force, pass such gate without paying such toll, and with intent to defraud said company of said toll, &c., he shall forfeit, &c." Center T. Co. v. Vandusen, 10 Vt. 197.

22. Plank-road company. Plank-road companies which derive a revenue, in the way of tolls, from the use of their road by travelers, are, like turnpike and railroad corporations, liable on common law principles for injuries to the traveler occasioned by want of repair of the road; herein differing from the case of towns, whose duty in respect to their highways is altogether statutory. Davis v. Lamotte Co. P. R. Co., 27 Vt. 602.

23. Where a plank-road corporation, under the provisions of its charter and an arrangement with the town in which a highway was situate, constructed its road along the highway, thus superseding it;—Held, that such corporation, and not the town, was liable for an injury caused by the insufficiency of the road. Ib.

24. Forfeiture of grant—Scire facias. The neglect of a turnpike company, for any considerable period, to keep its road in repair, and the maintaining of its toll-gate where it has no right to place it, are each cause of forfeiture of the grant, upon scire facias. State v. Passumpsic T. Co., 3 Vt. 178.

25. In scire facias for the forfeiture of the charter of a turnpike corporation, alleging a long continued and willful neglect to keep the turnpike in repair, the court rejected the defendant's evidence that "for a large part of the time mentioned in the writ" the road had been kept in good repair. Held erroneous; for not every neglect would subject the defendant to forfeiture, but the neglect must be for a "considerable period." State v. Roylton & Woodstock T. Co., 11 Vt. 481. (G. S. c. 44.)

UNITED STATES.

- I. COURTS.
- II. CUSTOMS LAWS.
- III. MILITARY MATTERS.
- IV. INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS.

I. COURTS.

1. Jurisdiction. Where the jurisdiction of the U. S. circuit court has once attached, no subsequent change in the relation or condition of the parties in the progress of the cause, or after judgment, will deprive the court of jurisdiction over the cause, or over any proceeding touching the execution of the judgment. Thus, where the plaintiff dies, it does not affect the jurisdiction that his administrator, prosecuting the suit, is a resident and citizen of the same State with the defendant. Hatfield v. Bushnell (U. S. C. C.), 22 Vt. 659.

2. An action of ejectment pending in the U. S. circuit court, following the local law of Vermont, does not abate by the death of the plaintiff, but survives, and may be prosecuted by his administrator. Ib.

3. Where a cause is removed from a State court into the circuit court of the United States under the act of Congress of March 2, 1833, the assigned reason for removal being that the suit was against an officer of the United States, &c., for an act done under the revenue laws of the United States, &c.;—Held, that whether the case fell within the act was matter of fact involved in the merits of the case upon hearing, and could not be raised or determined on motion to dismiss. Such case is removable from a justice of the peace, and irrespective of the amount in controversy. Wood v. Matthews (U. S. C. C.), 28 Vt. 735.

4. Where one of the plaintiffs was a citizen of New Hampshire and the other a citizen of Vermont, and the defendant was a corporation created, established and performing its corporate functions in New York;—Held, that the case was not removable to the U. S. circuit court. Hubbard v. Northern R. Co. (U. S. C. C.), 25 Vt. 715.

5. Decisions. In suits in courts of the United States, the true interpretation and effect of contracts and other instruments of a commercial nature are to be sought, not in the decisions of the local tribunals, but in the general principles and doctrines of commercial jurisprudence. Bank of U. S. v. Lyman (U. S. C. C.), 20 Vt. 666, 676. 23 Vt. 732, following Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1.

6. In cases of a character which may pass to the supreme court of the United States, the decisions of that court are binding in authority upon the State court. Townsend v. Jennison, 44 Vt. 815.

II. CUSTOMS LAWS.

7. The attempt to transport property in violation of the U. S. customs laws works its forfeiture, and immediately divests the property. Bulkly v. Orms, Brayt. 124.

8. The moiety of the proceeds of goods illegally imported was held to belong to the customs collector of the district where imported, though actually seized in another district, but by the officers of the first. Buel v. Enos, Brayt. 56.

9. The collector of customs at the time a seizure is made is entitled to share the proceeds, and not the collector in office at the time the money is paid. Buel v. Van Ness, Brayt. 59.

10. An inspector of customs may justify breaking and entering a store under a warrant from a justice, directed to him as inspector and describing the goods as "several bales of dry goods, calicoes, chintzes, &c., and other goods, wares and merchandise." Steel v. Fisk, Brayt. 230.

11. The United States collector of a port is not required to exhibit his commission in court to justify a seizure; but his deputy, making a seizure, must show his commission. Jacques v. Griswold, 2 Tyl. 335.

12. A deputy collector of customs, performing services as such at the request of the collector, and upon the collector's express agreement personally to pay him therefor, was held entitled to recover therefor in an action against the collector. Fuller v. Briggs, 22 Vt. 80.

13. Under the act of congress of 1821, a horse brought in from Canada, not as "merchandise," but as a mere instrument of conveyance in the prosecution of a temporary journey on business, or a visit, is not subject to the requirement of a manifest delivered at the office of the collector of customs. U. S. v. One Sorrel Horse (U. S. D. C.), 22 Vt. 655.

14. Reasonable cause, such as to justify a seizure under the U. S. revenue laws, means probable cause. It imports a seizure made under circumstances which warrant suspicion. Ib. 7 Cranch, 839.

15. A vessel not enrolled and licensed, but engaged exclusively in the foreign trade, does not become forfeit by having foreign goods on board. U. S. v. The Margaret Yates (U. S. D. C.), 22 Vt. 663.

16. An allegation in an information against a vessel and cargo, that the master neither did nor would deliver a true manifest of the merchandise, but on the contrary delivered a false and fraudulent invoice of the merchandise with a view to evade the revenue laws and defraud the United States, does not present a case within the act of congress of 1821. Ib.

17. Such an allegation presents a case within the 67th and 106th sections of the act of 1799; and where the offense proved under such allegation consists in the omission to insert in the manifest a part of the merchandise, and it appears that this proceeded altogether from mistake and was wholly unintentional, the alleged fraudulent intent is disproved, and a sufficient defense established. Ib.

18. It would seem to be a principle of the revenue code, applicable at least to all importations in vessels, if not to importations in general, that a penalty, or forfeiture, is not to be incurred for a mere mistake in the manifest, report, or entry, either in the quantity or value of the goods imported, without fraud, misconduct, or culpable negligence. Ib.

III. MILITARY MATTERS.

19. A military officer, stationed on the lines of the territory in time of war, seized the plaintiff while transporting property towards the enemy's province under circumstances creating a reasonable suspicion that he was about to transport the same to the enemy, and immediately delivered the plaintiff over to his superior officer. Held, that the officer was justified. Clow v. Wright, Brayt. 118.

20. An officer enlisting a minor without consent of his parents in writing, and commanding him in the army, is not liable therefor for false imprisonment, where the minor has not been discharged by habeas corpus. Boutwell v. Thompson, Brayt. 119.

21. An officer belonging to a military force ordered out by the President of the United States under the neutrality act of 1838, section 8, "to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of the act," and instructed by his commanding general to execute that purpose, apprehended a vessel on Lake Champlain, which was not itself intended to pass the frontier, but which was laden with arms and munitions of war intended to be transported across the frontier to insurgents in Canada, then in arms near the line, against Great Britain. Having so taken the vessel, it was wrecked by a storm, without the officer's fault. In an action of trover against him for the vessel,—Held, that admitting that the power of seizure, strictly speaking, was only given to certain civil officers named in the act, as collector, marshal, &c., yet the defendant might, as a precautionary measure to prevent an intended violation of the act, take and detain the property until an officer, having the power to seize and hold it to be proceeded with under the act, might be procured to act in the matter; that if the vessel was not liable to seizure, the arms and munitions aboard were, and could not be seized and secured without taking possession of the vessel, and this justified the taking of the vessel; and that the defendant was not liable. Stoughton v. Dimick (U. S. C. C.), 29 Vt. 535.

22. The word "frontier," as used in the act of congress of 1838, known as the neutrality act, which authorized the seizure of vessels having arms, &c., on board, and about to pass the frontier for a place within a foreign State, or colony, means something more than the boundary line; it means a tract of country contiguous to that line; and to justify a seizure under the act it is not necessary that such vessel should actually be about to pass the boundary line. Stoughton v. Mott, 15 Vt. 162. S. C., 18 Vt. 175; and 25 Vt. 668.

IV. INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS.

23. License. The act of congress of July 1, 1862, prohibiting certain occupations [the dealing in liquors], without first obtaining a license therefor, was held, though prohibitory in terms, to be strictly a revenue law, designed to raise money and not to diminish, restrain, control or regulate business, but to operate upon the person; and therefore does not render such dealing illegal, as between seller and purchaser, though done without license; but subjects the dealer to a penalty. Aiken v. Blaisdell, 41 Vt. 655. See observations of Redfield, J., contra, in Territt v. Bartlett, 21 Vt. 188.

24. Stamps. Under the act of congress of June 30, 1864, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue," &c., the instrument required to be stamped is not rendered invalid for want of the proper stamp, unless the omission to stamp it was "with intent to evade the provisions of the act." And held, that a motion to dismiss a suit because the writ was not duly stamped was ill in substance, for want of an averment of such intent. Hitchcock v. Sawyer, 39 Vt. 412. Atkins v. Plympton, 44 Vt. 21.

25. The neglect to cancel a revenue stamp attached to a writ does not, under the U. S. stamp act, make the instrument void. Chaplin v. Horton, 36 Vt. 684.

26. The omission of a stamp, where the parties to the agreement believed in good faith that none was required by the stamp act, was held to be an "inadvertence" under sec. 158, which made it lawful for the collector to affix the proper stamp and remit the penalty. Green Mountain Institute v. Britain, 44 Vt. 18.

27. The certificate of the justices to the copy of an order of removal and notice issued to be served, is part of the "process," and requires no stamp as a "certificate," under the internal revenue act. East Haven v. Derby, 88 Vt. 258.

28. The internal revenue law requiring written contracts to be stamped, does not apply to agreements contained in or evidenced by letters that pass between parties in regular course of business. Atkins v. Plympton, 44 Vt. 21.

29. Nor, to an award of arbitrators. Celley v. Gray, 87 Vt. 136.

30. A revenue stamp of five cents on each sheet of a subscription paper payable to a chartered educational institution, was held sufficient. Green Mountain Institute v. Britain, 44 Vt. 18.

31. The payee of a promissory note, unstamped, may recover upon the original consideration. Wilson v. Carey, 40 Vt. 179.

UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT.

1. Taxes. Held, in 1843, that section 2 of the act of Nov. 10, 1802, exempting from taxation the property of the president and professors of the University of Vermont to the value of $1000 to each, was in force, not repealed. Wheeler v. Lane, 15 Vt. 26.

2. By the union of the University of Vermont and the Vermont Agricultural College, under the Act of 1865, No. 83, until then independent corporations, a new corporation was created taking the name of the "University of Vermont and State Agricultural College," and the property of the University, in its most extensive sense, passed to and vested in the new corporation; and such transfer, being by act of law, conveyed to the new corporation, without express words to that effect, the right to sue in its own name upon contracts previously made with the University. University, &c., v. Baxter, 42 Vt. 99. 48 Vt. 645.

See CORPORATION, 72.

USURY.

1. What is and what is not usury. The taking of interest in advance by banks by way of discount, according to banking customs, is not usurious. Bank of Burlington v. Durkee, 1 Vt. 399.

2. The computation of interest at six per cent according to Rowlet's tables, by days, reckoning parts of a year as of 30 days to a month, was held to be more than at the rate of six per cent per annum, and erroneous, but not necessarily usurious. Ib. Bank of St. Albans v. Scott, 1 Vt. 426. Bank of St. Albans v. Stearns, 1 Vt. 430.

3. The taking of extra interest must be by corrupt bargain, in order to constitute usury so as to avoid the security; and as evidence of innocent intent, the fact that the interest was computed according to recognized tables, long in use, though not correct, may be proved—the question of intent being for the jury. Ib.

4. In order to constitute usury, there must be an intention knowingly to contract for, or to take, usurious interest. If neither party intends it, but they act bona fide and innocently, the law will not infer a corrupt agreement. Farmers' Bank v. Burchard, 83 Vt. 346.

5. To avoid a note for usury, it must be proved that there was a corrupt agreement to pay more than legal interest at the time when the loan was made. Mere proof that usurious interest has been paid upon a note reserving only legal interest, does not establish the fact of an original agreement for usury. Hammond v. Smith, 17 Vt. 231.

6. A payment, to constitute usury, must be in pursuance of a previous corrupt agreement, and must be a voluntary payment; not one enforced at law. Steward v. Downer, 8 Vt. 320.

7. Where money is paid and received as interest beyond the legal rate, the excess is usurious, and may be recovered back, notwithstanding there was no previous agreement to pay usury. Stevens v. Fisher, 23 Vt. 272.

8. Under the Vermont statute, usury may exist where a money debt is created and borne by the agreement of the parties, even though there may be in such case no loan of money; as, a debt created by the purchase of property. Jackson v. Kirby, 37 Vt. 448.

9. So, where extra interest is promised or paid for the forbearance of an antecedent debt. Carlis v. McLaughlin, 1 D. Chip. 111.

10. The letting of sheep or cattle to multiply at a greater rate than six per cent, agreeably to the usage among farmers, is not, under the statute, usurious, though risk of the lives of the animals be upon the hirer, if such is the usage; but the transaction must be actual, not fictitious. Whipple v. Powers, 7 Vt. 457.

11. Where the return of money advanced is made dependent upon the event of that amount being realized in a contemplated joint adventure, over and above losses and expenses, the contract is not usurious, although, in addition to regular interest, the party advancing the money is entitled to share in the profits of the adventure. Brigham v. Dana, 29 Vt. 1.

12. An agreement with a commission merchant to allow him a specific per cent commission on sales, legal interest for money advanced on consignments until sales, and five per cent for the money so advanced, was held, as to the five per cent, to be usurious. Burton v. Blin, 23 Vt. 151. 29 Vt. 7.

13. A contract made in New York for the payment of one and a half per cent as a commission, in addition to interest, upon advances made by a commission merchant in the supply of stock for a manufacturer, was held not to be usurious by the law of New York. Corkie v. Estes, 31 Vt. 658.

14. It was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant corporation, that if he would accept the office of treasurer and provide and advance money to carry on the defendant's business, he should be paid a certain yearly salary, and one per cent a month for money advanced. Held, that the contract as to interest was usurious. Wait v. Windham Co. Mining Co., 37 Vt. 608.

15. The sale of mortgage securities at a premium above the amount due, is not usurious. Culver v. Bigelow, 43 Vt. 249.

16. Although courts rarely, if ever, as between debtor and creditor, enforce an executory contract for the payment of compound interest, yet the payment of it is not necessarily in a legal sense the payment of usury; and if a debtor knowingly, understandingly and unconditionally pays it under no peculiar circumstances of oppression, it cannot be recovered back. Id.

17. Where one having but a special and limited agency to settle a debt due to an estate, took a note to the administrator for the principal sum due, and one to himself for usurious interest, but without the consent or knowledge of the administrator;—Held, that the first note was not avoided thereby. Baxter v. Buck, 10 Vt. 548. 28 Vt. 133.

18. Where property is taken by the borrower in lieu of money, and for the purpose of effecting a loan, the transaction is usurious, unless the property is not only fairly worth the sum at which it was estimated, but would be easily made available in the borrower's hands for raising that sum by re-sale. Isham, J., in Austin v. Harrington, 28 Vt. 133. Instances—Id. 130. Low v. Prichard, 36 Vt. 133.

19. On this subject of usury, the law disregards all pretence and sham and deals with the reality; and, wherever one has usury in his pocket, the law will reach it, by whatsoever name it may be called. Poland, C. J., in Wilkins v. Wilder, 37 Vt. 613.

20. The plaintiff purchased of the defendant and his wife certain real estate for the price of $250, and executed to the wife his note for that sum payable on or before ten years from date without interest, and also ten other notes each for $20 payable yearly during that period without interest, taking from the defendant and his wife a sealed agreement that they would convey the land to the plaintiff when he should pay the $250 note; and that they would then give up all of the ten $20 notes which were then unpaid—the writing expressing that the consideration of the $250 note was the sum which the plaintiff was to pay for the farm. The plaintiff took and remained in possession of the farm, paying up one of the $20 notes yearly for six years, and between the sixth and seventh year paid the $250 note and so much of the seventh $20 note as was in proportion to the year it was covering; and thereupon the defendant and his wife conveyed to the plaintiff the farm and gave up the residue of the notes. In an action to recovery usury paid,—Held, that usury was not exposed on the face of the instrument; but that it might be proved by extrinsic evidence that the $20 notes were in fact given for the yearly interest on the purchase money; as, by proving that the bargain was that the plaintiff should pay eight per cent interest on the purchase, and that the notes were given for yearly interest, and that there was no other consideration; and held, upon the facts appearing, that the action was rightly brought against the defendant alone. Jackson v. Kirby, 37 Vt. 448.

21. Blending of securities. The taking up of one usurious security and giving another is not such an extinguishment of the first as that the statute of limitations will apply to a declaration for the usury, counting upon the first security, where the usury was paid on the last, and within the limitation. The whole is considered as one entire contract. Collins v. Roberts, Erayt. 235.

22. A valid contract surrendered and merged in one void for usury, is not so lost and destroyed but that an action will lie upon it. Edgell v. Staniford, 6 Vt. 551. 8 Vt. 88. 10 Vt. 85. 29 Vt. 415.

23. A promissory note containing an usurious excess of interest was executed while the usury act of 1797 was in force. After the act of 1821 came in operation, that note was given up and another taken for the amount, without any new agreement respecting interest. Held, that the last note was not wholly void, but subject to apportionment, on the principle of the former statute. Dunbar v. Wood, 6 Vt. 658.

24. The maker of a note containing usury, promised, in consideration that the holder would cancel or discharge that note, to give a new note, less the usurious excess of the true debt. Held, that such promise could be enforced by action. McClure v. Williams, 7 Vt. 210.

25. Action to recover back. Where one for a consideration furnished by the maker of notes, which are usurious, agrees to and does pay them, he cannot maintain an action to recover back the usury paid, but only the maker of the notes can; but if the agreement was only to indemnify the maker against the notes, and no consideration was received for the payment of them, and the party under an arrangement with the holder agrees to pay the same usury, and takes up the first notes by substituting his own of equal amount, the substituted notes are equally usurious with the first, and he can recover back the usury paid thereon. Hasard v. Smith, 21 Vt. 128.

26. Laws against usury are for the protection of the borrower only, and he alone can take advantage of the law. Austin v. Chittenden, 33 Vt. 553.

27. In an action against a surety, he cannot set up, or have applied, usury paid by the principal, which was not included in the security and was not paid as part of the debt, but as usury, eo nomine. Such claim is personal to the party paying, and he alone can enforce it. Ward v. Whitney, 32 Vt. 89. Churchill v. Cole, 32 Vt. 93; and see Barker v. Esty, 19 Vt. 131.

28. A surety is not released by an agreement made by the principal at the time of executing the contract, without the knowledge of the surety, to pay usurious interest, and by the payment of such extra. Richmond v. Standclift, 14 Vt. 258. Bank of Middlebury v. Bingham, 33 Vt. 621. Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 503.

29. The right to sue and recover back usury paid, is a right of redress for a wrong inflicted, and is personal to the party injured. Low v. Prichard, 36 Vt. 191.

30. Such right does not pass to an assignee under the U. S. bankrupt act of 1841. Nichols v. Bellows, 22 Vt. 581. (Moore v. Jones, 23 Vt. 739, in U. S. Dist. Ct., an earlier decision, contra, 27 Vt. 398.)

31. Nor can it be attached by trustee process. Barker v. Esty, 19 Vt. 131.

32. A claim for usury paid survives against the estate of the party taking it. Roberts v. Burton, 27 Vt. 396.

33. The deceased gave the defendant a note for cash borrowed, including usury, and procured a policy of insurance upon his own life, payable to the defendant, as security for the note. On his death, the defendant collected the policy of the insurers. In an action of general assumpsit by the administrator,—Held, that the defendant could not interpose the objection that the insurers had paid him more than they were obliged to pay; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the excess above the amount legally due upon the note. Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6.

34. Without the aid of a statute, assumpsit lies to recover back money paid as interest beyond the legal rate. In such case, the parties are not regarded as in pari delicto. Davis v. Hoy, 2 Aik. 303.

35. Usury paid may be pleaded to any action on contract, in set-off. Ewing v. Griswold, 43 Vt. 400.

36. An action brought by the party paying usury to recover it back (G. S. c. 79, s. 4), is a remedial, and not a penal action. Wheatley v. Waldo, 36 Vt. 237. Hubbell v. Gale, 3 Vt. 266.

37. An action for money had and received, brought under the statute to recover usury paid to the defendant by a person other than the plaintiff, is a penal action, and as such requires a minute of the day, &c., when the writ was exhibited. Hubbell v. Gale; and that full proof be made, as in criminal cases. White v. Comstock, 6 Vt. 405.

38. The plaintiff gave the defendant his notes including usury and secured the same by mortgage, and afterwards sold and conveyed the mortgaged premises, subject to the mortgage to be paid by the grantee as part of the purchase price. The grantee paid the notes. Held, that the plaintiff could recover back the usury included in the notes. Nelson v. Cooley, 20 Vt. 201. Low v. Prichard, 36 Vt. 183; and so, semble, whenever the usury is paid from his own money or means. Ib.

39. The discontinuance of a suit, where no attachment of property was made, and a further extension of the time of payment of a debt upon the payment of usury, afford no consideration for a release by the debtor of his claim for past usury paid. Collamer v. Goodrich, 30 Vt. 628.

40. Although parties mutually intend that the payment of a balance found due on settlement shall settle everything between them, yet it will not have that effect as to usurious interest previously paid, but not reckoned in the settlement, nor adjusted by an accord and satisfaction. Rowell v. Marcy, 47 Vt. 627.

41. Usury paid upon one note, cannot be urged as payment upon another. Ewing v. Griswold, 43 Vt. 400.

42. Act of 1836. In this State, since the statute of 1836, a contract affected with usury is valid to every intent, except as to the excess above legal interest. Farmers' Bank v. Burdard, 33 Vt. 346. Richmond v. Standclift, 14 Vt. 258. 33 Vt. 621.

43. How used in defence. Where usury is included in the note or security, this is matter of defense to an action upon the security, to the extent of the usury; and where such note or security has passed into judgment, the judgment is conclusive, both at law and in equity, against the right to recover back any sum included in it, as being usury. Day v. Cummings, 19 Vt. 496. Grow v. Albee, Ib. 540.

44. Where usury, not included in the security, has been paid, the party paying has his election to sue and recover it back, whether the lawful debt has been paid, or not, or to have the usury applied as an equitable set-off as against the security. Day v. Cummings. Grow v. Albee. Ward v. Whitney, 32 Vt. 89. Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 503.

45. It is now settled by repeated decisions that where usury is included in a note or other security, and, when paid, is indorsed upon the note, it is to be considered as a payment upon the note itself, and no action can be maintained to recover back the usury paid so long as there remains due any part of the principal and lawful interest; but where the security is only for the principal and legal interest, and the unlawful interest is either put into a separate obligation, or rests in a verbal agreement, so that when paid it is not indorsed upon the note, but is paid as usury, eo nomine, it is otherwise; and a right of action accrues immediately to sue and recover it back, though the lawful debt is still unpaid. Poland, C. J., in Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 507. Grow v. Albee. Day v. Cummings. Nelson v. Cooley, 20 Vt. 201. Nichols v. Bellows, 22 Vt. 581. Ward v. Whitney, 32 Vt. 89. Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115.

46. Limitations. Where usury, not included in the security, has been paid as extra, and not as payment upon the debt, the statute of limitations applies, whether claim for repayment is made by suit, or as an allowance upon the debt as an equitable set-off. Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 503. Boynton v. Nash cited, Ib. 508.

47. Cases in equity. A plea of usury to a bill to foreclose will not be admitted, if filed out of time, unless accompanied with a waiver of forfeiture. Shed v. Garfield, 5 Vt. 39.

48. A demurrer lies to a discovery of usury charged in a bill, unless the orator waives the forfeiture and seeks relief only against the usurious part of the contract. Ib.

49. Where usury is set up as a defense in a court of equity to avoid a contract entirely, it must be fully and substantially proved; and the evidence to prove it is not aided by the defendant's answer, unless in the bill he is particularly called on to disclose. A gratuitous answer in such case is to be regarded as only equivalent to a plea of the statute of usury. McDaniels v. Barnum, 5 Vt. 279. S. C. 6 Vt. 177.

50. The defense of usury to a bill of foreclosure must be by way of plea, and, if insisted on in the answer, must be proved, not by the answer, but by evidence aliunde; and when such defense operates as a forfeiture of the debt, it is the duty of the court to require clear, explicit and satisfactory evidence. Dyer v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 300.

51. On a bill to foreclose a mortgage, the mortgagor appeared and consented to a decree pro confesso, and, before the master, procured to be expunged from the debt what he claimed or proved to be usurious, and a decree of foreclosure was made for the residue. He failed to redeem and the mortgagee went into possession. Held, that he could not afterwards maintain ejectment against the mortgagee, on the ground that the mortgage was void for usury, but that he was concluded by the decree. Rublee v. Chaffee, 8 Vt. 111.

52. A decree of foreclosure of a mortgage, either in chancery or by the action of ejectment under the statute, purges the debt of usury, if any, and its validity cannot again be contested. Steward v. Downer, 8 Vt. 320.

53. The defendant borrowed money of the oratrix, through her general agent, and gave her his note therefor and a mortgage. For the purpose of procuring the loan, he purchased at the same time of the agent, but without the personal knowledge of the oratrix, a span of horses belonging to the agent, for $400, being $175 more than they were worth, and gave his note therefor running to the agent, and afterwards paid the $400 note. On a bill to foreclose, held, that the contract was usurious, and that the defendant was entitled to a deduction of $175 from the mortgage debt. Austin v. Harrington, 28 Vt. 130.

54. Payments made in pursuance of an usurious contract, to an amount within the debt and legal interest, are to be regarded as payments, generally; and, in a bill to foreclose a mortgage founded on such contract, may be insisted on by way of answer. Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115. This doctrine is limited to cases where the usury is included in the security, or, if not included in the security, where, if a suit were brought to recover for the usury paid, it would not be barred by the statute of limitations. Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 503.

55. Where a surety gave a mortgage to secure the debt of his principal and a bill to foreclose was brought against the surety alone, and the principal appeared at the accounting and claimed application upon the debt of usury paid by him, which was not included in the security;—Held, that such claim and allowance would bar the principal in an action to recover the usury paid, and the allowance was therefore made in behalf of the surety. Ib.

56. Otherwise, where the principal made no such claim, but had released it, though without consideration. Churchill v. Cole, 32 Vt. 93.

V.

VARIANCE.

- I. WHAT IS; AND INSTANCES.
 II. HOW TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF.

I. WHAT IS; AND INSTANCES.

1. What is. Variance means material difference. It is no variance that the proof does not show all the points in a declaration. There may be a defect of proof, without a variance. Skinner v. Grant, 12 Vt. 456.

2. Matter of description must be proved precisely, perhaps literally, as set forth, and it cannot be rejected as surplusage, though its insertion was unnecessary. But where the evidence conforms to an unnecessary averment as far as that averment goes, it is no variance that it does not go further and insert more unnecessary matter. Allen v. Goff, 18 Vt. 148.

3. A variance cannot be predicated of the description of a contract, which, though partial and defective, is yet true as far as it goes. Everts v. Bostwick, 4 Vt. 349.

4. A defect of allegation is never a variance, unless the part omitted is a qualification of the averment made. Allen v. Lyman, 27 Vt. 20.

5. Cases of immaterial variance. CRIMES, 64, 76.

6. Contract and record to be proved as laid. Where the cause of action, as set forth, originates in a contract, the contract must be proved as laid, whether the action is in form ex contractu, or ex delicto. Otherwise, there is a fatal variance. Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457. Wright v. Geer, 6 Vt. 151. Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 339.

7. A written contract declared upon may be read in evidence, if it substantially comports with the declaration. Farnum v. Barnum, 1 Tyl. 72.

8. Instances. Where the declaration counted upon a warranty that a horse was not over seven years old, and the proof was of a warranty that the horse would be seven years old the next spring;—Held, there was no variance. Henry v. Henry, 1 D. Chip. 265.

9. The declaration counted upon a contract to deliver cloth to the plaintiff; the contract offered in evidence was to deliver cloth at the defendant's factory. Held a variance. Clark v. Todd, 1 D. Chip. 213.

10. A declaration counting upon a note as payable in "fulled cloth at its cash price" is supported by a note payable in "woolen fulled cloth at its cash value." Wead v. Marsh, 14 Vt. 80.

11. In scire facias against bail on mesne process, the nature of the liability must be truly set forth, if attempted. Wright v. Brownell, 2 Vt. 117.

12. An averment that the plaintiff bought of the defendant a barrel of rum for $50 is not sustained by evidence that he bought a barrel of rum at $1.06 per gallon. Allen v. Lansing, 10 Vt. 114.

13. Date. It is only where record proof is vouched as proof that a fact happened on a particular day, that the day alleged becomes descriptive of the record, and a variance fatal. Thus, where the declaration averred that the plaintiff was committed to jail on a certain day, and the return of the officer showed a commitment on a different day;—Held no variance, the date of the return not having been averred. Henry v. Tilson, 17 Vt. 479.

14. The defendant, in his plea justifying a trespass as collector of a school district, averred that he was appointed such collector at a date named, "as by the record of his appointment would appear;" but the record showed that his appointment was made on a different day. Held, that as he had vouched the record, though perhaps unnecessarily, the time named became descriptive of the record, and that the record did not satisfy the allegation. McDaniels v. Bucklin, 13 Vt. 279.

15. Where the declaration averred that the defendant on the 24th day of a certain month sued and commenced an action against the plaintiff, and the record produced was of a writ dated the 25th of the same month;—Held, that here was no variance, the time laid not being descriptive of the date of the writ, and the day being immaterial. Steele v. Bates, 2 Aik. 338.

16. In an action for libel, the declaration averred a publication on a certain day. The proof was of a publication on a different day. Held no variance, the averment not being descriptive. Gates v. Bowker, 18 Vt. 23.

17. Signature. Declaration as indorsee of a promissory note payable to the order of "A and B," and by them indorsed, "their own proper hand-writing being to such indorsement subscribed," without averring that A and B were partners or were acting under the firm name of "A and B;"—Held, that the declaration was not sustained by proof that A and B were in fact partners under the firm name of

"A and B." but that the indorsement in the firm name, "A and B," was made by one of the partners only. Fullerton v. Seymour, 5 Vt. 249.

18. Three defendants were partners under the name of S. & W. Downer & Co., and were sued as such upon a promissory note signed "Downer & Dana,"—the declaration averring that the defendants so signed the note by mistake, though it ought to have been signed S. & W. Downer & Co., and was intended to have been so signed, as the note was given for the benefit of said company and for property which went to the use of said company. The note produced was signed, "Downer & Dana." Held, that whether this was intended to have been S. & W. Downer and Co. was matter of evidence for the jury, and did not present a question of variance. Held, also, that such declaration was good on motion in arrest. Miner v. Downer, 20 Vt. 461. S. C. 19 Vt. 14.

19. In an action against a single defendant, declaring upon a written contract as executed by the defendant, it is not a variance, nor matter of objection, that the contract produced was signed by others, also, but promising "jointly and severally." Maxfield v. Scott, 17 Vt. 634.

20. Substantive effect. The declaration set forth that the defendant contracted to give "a promissory note of about the sum of $24.00." The agreement proved was, to give a note for $24.00 payable in 3000 feet of floor plank. Held a variance; that a note payable in lumber is not the same thing as if payable in cash, as was the legal intentment of the declaration. Gorry v. Ward, 25 Vt. 217.

21. A note made payable in 90 days, conditioned that if one-half should be paid at that time the remainder might be postponed for 90 days longer on payment of the interest thereon in advance, was declared upon as payable in 90 days from date. Held, that this condition qualified the contract, and that there was a variance. Woodstock Bank v. Downer, 27 Vt. 482.

22. The contract, as set up in the declaration, was, that the plaintiff was entitled to one-third of the proceeds of a certain business till he had received $300, and after that, to one-sixth. The contract, as proved, was, that the plaintiff was not so entitled until certain other parties had received of the proceeds $150. Held a variance. Gottlieb v. Leach, 40 Vt. 278.

23. Where the declaration is upon an express covenant in a lease, a recovery cannot be had upon some other covenant implied—an objection for the variance having been made after the evidence was in. Merritt v. Closson, 36 Vt. 172.

24. A declaration in case against a railroad company, as common carriers, was held not sustained by proof of a special contract for transportation which limited the liability of the defendants to the point of reasonable care and diligence. This is a fatal variance. The action should be upon the special contract, or for a breach of duty arising out of it. Kimball v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 26 Vt. 247.

25. In an action against a railway company setting up a special contract to transport goods with unusual dispatch—as, "by express through freight trains"—"by the earliest and quickest freight trains," &c.—and the evidence did not tend to prove such a contract, but that the goods were to be transported in the ordinary way;—Held, that there was a fatal variance. Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 326.

26. In a qui tam action, under the statute, for being a party to certain fraudulent notes, and that the defendant justified the same as bona fide, the declaration misdescribed the notes as actually made, but truly as they were justified by the defendant according to his description of them in his suit upon them, in which suit he obtained a judgment by confession. Held sufficient, the gravamen of the charge being the justification of the notes as bona fide. Goodnow v. Houghton, 16 Vt. 404.

27. In a declaration upon a promissory note, it was described as payable "three from the date of said note," and averred that "the said three months from the date of said note had long since elapsed, &c." The note was in fact made payable three months from date. Held, that the note was sufficiently described. Pasumpsic Bank v. Goss, 31 Vt. 315.

28. The declaration alleged, that in consideration that the plaintiff would negotiate a loan for the defendants of $100,000, the defendants promised to pay him a certain commission upon such amount as he should negotiate a loan for. The contract proved was for the negotiation of a loan for that sum, for a commission on that sum. Held no variance. Durkee v. Vt. Central R. Co., 29 Vt. 127.

29. If a party proceeds with reasonable dispatch in the performance of his part of a contract, and has done something towards it, and is then met by a peremptory refusal of the other party to complete the contract, it is not necessary to a recovery for the first party to show full readiness on his part; and an averment in the declaration of full readiness of the plaintiff and refusal by the defendant to complete the contract, with proof of part readiness and that his authority to proceed was countermanded, does not show a case of variance, but only of an averment beyond the proof but in the same direction; and, in such case, he may may recover to the extent of the proof. Id.

30. The plaintiff averred in his declaration, that he delivered a quantity of wool to the defendants to be by them properly sorted and manufactured into cloth. &c., and that the defendants accepted the wool for the purpose of properly sorting and manufacturing it into cloth, and then to deliver to the plaintiff all the cloth which said wool would properly make, &c. It appeared on trial, that both parties expected that the defendants were not to keep said wool separate and manufacture it by itself, but were to mingle it with other wools of like grade and quality, and give the plaintiff his fair share of the cloth, and of the fair and average quality from all the wools so mingled in the process of manufacture; and that such was the custom in all woolen manufactories. Held, that there was no substantial variance. Bruce v. Greenbanks, 38 Vt. 226.

31. Proof of a variation in the manufacture of machines from the stipulations of a written contract, which variation was by direction of the defendant and was but slight, not affecting the character, value or utility of the machines, and which was treated by the parties, not as altering the contract, but as a mode of performing it, was held (with hesitation), not to present a variance from an averment in the declaration that the machines were made according to the stipulations of the contract. Allen v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 711.

32. Record. The plaintiff, suing in his personal capacity, declared upon a judgment as recovered by him. The judgment proved was recovered by him as administrator, &c. Held no variance. Allen v. Lyman, 27 Vt. 20.

33. In assumpsit, the declaration, by way of recital and inducement to the statement of the consideration and the defendant's promise, averred that the plaintiff, before that time, had instituted a certain suit in his name. The proof was, that the suit was in the name of himself and another, his former partner, but that he was the sole owner of the demand. Held, that these words, in his own name, were unnecessary, and that there was not a fatal variance. Cross v. Richardson, 30 Vt. 641.

34. An averment in a declaration upon a recognizance, that the court in the principal case taxed the plaintiff's costs at a sum named, was held not to be descriptive of the record so as to occasion a variance, where the record produced showed no taxation; but was only an averment of a fact, and a failure of proof of it. Blood v. Morrill, 17 Vt. 598.

35. To an action and declaration upon a judgment for 573 dollars and 47 cents, the defendant pleaded in abatement the pendency of a former action on a judgment for 523 dollars and 47 cents, and averred that it was the same identical judgment now declared upon. Held, that it would have been sufficient to aver merely that both suits were for the same cause of action; but that the plea was falsified by a comparison of the judgments, as described, and was ill. Lincoln v. Thrall, 34 Vt. 110.

36. Sale—Deceit—Warranty. In case for deceit in the sale of a horse, where the declaration alleges an absolute representation of soundness and a scienter of its falsity, and the proof is of a representation of soundness "so far as the defendant knew," and that he in fact knew the horse to be unsound, here is no variance, and a recovery may be had since the defendant is equally liable, and to the same extent, on both or either of the representations. West v. Emery, 17 Vt. 583.

37. It is the same in an action for a false warranty laid with a scienter, where the plaintiff relies only upon proof of false and fraudulent representations. Wheeler v. Wheelock, 33 Vt. 144.

38. Aliter in assumpsit upon an absolute warranty, or for a false warranty, where the plaintiff relies upon proof of an absolute warranty and alleges merely, as a breach, that the fact warranted did not exist. Redfield, J., in West v. Emery, 17 Vt. 583.

39. In an action on the case for fraudulent representations and concealment in a sale, the price paid was set forth in the declaration less than as proved. Held not to be a variance. Mallory v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156.

40. Mill-dam. Under a declaration in case for unlawfully maintaining a dam across a stream, whereby the water was set back upon the plaintiff's land;—Held, that the declaration was sustained by proof that the defendant kept the sluices or gates in his dam shut at times when he was bound to keep them open, whereby the water was set back, &c. Hutchinson v. Granger, 13 Vt. 386. Williams, C. J., dissenting.

41. Execution. A declaration for not levying, collecting and returning an execution is not sustained by proof of a levy and collection of the execution, but a neglect to pay over to the plaintiff the money so collected. Barber v. Benson, 9 Vt. 171.

42. Highway. In an indictment against a town for not keeping in repair a highway, the highway was described as entering the town from F, near the dwelling house of a person named, passing by two houses of individuals named, and passing southerly through the town to and across the north line of the town of C. The description was in all these respects as proved, except that the line through which the road entered C was more nearly a west than a north line of that town—no line of C being truly a north line of the town. Held, that there was here no fatal repugnancy; that the more controlling and certain parts of the description should prevail over that which was less so; and as the supposed variance did not apply to that part of the road which was affected by the prosecution, it was not substantial or important. State v. Fletcher, 18 Vt. 124.

43. Number of lot—Reputation. The number of a lot, where it is given by way of description merely and is not a matter of identity, may be proved by reputation; as, that it was so called and treated. Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178.

44. In trespass qua. clau. describing the close as lot No. 171, it appeared that the trespass was committed south of the true line of 171, and upon lot No. 172 according to the true line, but that the several owners of these two lots had for more than 15 years acquiesced in another line, as being the true divisional line between them, which would include the place of the trespass in lot 171. Held, that the declaration well described the locus as part of lot No. 171; that it had become such by acquiescence. Burton v. Lazell, 16 Vt. 158.

II. HOW TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF.

45. A variance between a bond and the declaration upon it cannot be reached by demurrer, unless the bond is spread upon the record in the declaration, or upon oyer. Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40.

46. A variance cannot, as matter of law, be predicated of a contradiction of the facts alleged in the declaration, by the testimony of the defendant. Curtis v. Burdick, 48 Vt. 166.

47. No objection on the ground of variance, not raised in the county court and which might there have been obviated by amendment, should be sustained in the supreme court, unless the variance is both apparent upon the record, and of such a character that the judgment, if affirmed, would fail to protect the parties in reference to the matter actually litigated. Peck v. Thompson, 15 Vt. 648. Morrill v. Derby, 84 Vt. 450. Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 87. Brintnall v. Sar. & W. R. Co., 32 Vt. 665.

48. Where a paper is objected to for variance, it should be specified in what the variance consists. Under a general objection for variance, it is no part of the duty of the court to hunt for the particulars. Hills v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 648.

49. In a trial by the court, a paper was offered in evidence and was objected to by the defendant on the ground of variance from the declaration, without specifying wherein, as is required by the rules of practice. The paper was received by the court, "subject to the objection, pro forma, to which the defendant excepted"; but the matter was not afterwards brought to the attention of the court. Held, that the question of variance was not so made and decided below as to be properly before the supreme court;—that receiving the paper subject to objection, was reserving to the defendant at a future stage of the trial to point out his objection, if he should see fit, and have the question passed upon; and that, by not doing this, he had waived his objection, or rather the objection was not made, nor decided. Id.

VILLAGE.

1. Boundaries. Under a statute authorizing selectmen "to lay out and establish the limits and bounds of a village";—Held, that a description by naming persons only was insufficient; that a description of territory, a tract, a certain superficies with distinct boundaries, was necessary. Cutting v. Stone, 7 Vt. 471.

2. A statute for establishing a village required the selectmen to define "its limits and bounds." In attempting this, they bounded it N by the town line, E by Connecticut river (which were definite and certain lines), S by the south line of lands of A, and W by the west line of lands of B. These two last lines, as given, were too short to connect with each other, and the west line too short to connect with the town line; and it was objected that the lines given did not inclose the territory to compose the village. Held sufficient; for that by protracting the S and W lines, as given, until they intersected, and the W line until it intersected the town line, the S W and the N W corners could be ascertained. Williams v. Willard, 23 Vt. 369.

HIGHWAYS, 25, 26.

VOTES AND VOTING.

1. Votes printed were held to answer the constitutional requirement of votes "fairly written." Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 585.

2. Quære, whether an action lies against a constable, or other officer presiding at a free-man's meeting, for refusing to receive a legal vote, where this is not malicious, but only an error of judgment on a point considered doubtful. Id.

3. G. S. c. 1, s. 70, enacts: "If any person shall on the same day vote in more towns than one for the same officers, he shall forfeit, &c." One having voted in one town for representative to the General Assembly from that town, afterwards, on the same day, voted in another town for representative from this last town. Held, that his second vote was illegal, whether the first was or not; and that he was liable under the statute whether his action was attributable to corruption, or only to ignorance. State v. Perkins, 42 Vt. 399.

W.

WAGER.

1. At common law, as adopted in this State, all wagers are held to be illegal; and no money can be had upon a wager or contract of betting. Collamer v. Day, 2 Vt. 144. 22 Vt. 298. 27 Vt. 428. Danforth v. Evans, 16 Vt. 588. Tarleton v. Baker, 18 Vt. 9. West v. Holmes, 26 Vt. 580.

2. Where the event which is to determine the wager has transpired, and the wager has been paid, it cannot, independent of a statute, be recovered back. Danforth v. Evans.

3. As between the parties to a wager, the wager is revocable at any time before the event happens; and a revocation places the party revoking in statu quo, and entitles him to a return of the deposit. As against the stakeholder, the loser may demand of him a return of the deposit, until, with the loser's express or implied assent, it has been paid over to the winner. If the stakeholder pays over the deposit to the winner after demand made by the loser, he is liable to the loser, or the loser may pursue the money in the winner's hands. Tarleton v. Baker, 18 Vt. 9. West v. Holmes, 26 Vt. 580.

4. Where two resident citizens of Vermont went into Canada for the purpose of making a wager on the result of a presidential election, and there concluded such wager;—Held, that the wager was illegal, the same as if made in Vermont. Tarleton v. Baker.

5. The plaintiff sold the defendant a horse worth $25, and took the defendant's note therefor for $50, payable "on the day that Martin Van Buren is re-elected President of the United States, with interest annually," and delivered the horse to the defendant. Held, that this was a wagering contract and was void; that the plaintiff could not recover upon the note; nor for the horse, as sold, since he did not revoke before the determination of the wager. Danforth v. Evans, 16 Vt. 588.

6. That is not a wager, where one merely hazards a loss of something without the expectation, in any event, of having more in return than he ventures; as where he performs a service for which he is entitled to compensation, but which he agrees to relinquish upon the happening of some future event—like a "no cure no pay" contract—which is not illegal, as being a wager. Edson v. Pauley, 22 Vt. 291.

7. Money lost upon an ordinary wager, and not at some game or play, either of skill or chance, does not come within G. S. c. 119, s. 18, as money lost at a "game or sport." West v. Holmes, 26 Vt. 580.

8. Stock-jobbing. A contract for the sale and transfer of railroad stock at a future day for a specified price, where an actual transfer is intended and not a recovery of differences, and where the seller owns the shares at the time of the promised delivery, is not a stock-jobbing or wagering contract, and is valid. Noyes v. Spaulding, 27 Vt. 420.

9. Lex loci. In general assumpsit to recover for money lost at play in the State of New York, it was agreed, upon a case stated, that by the laws of New York a recovery could be had therefor in a suit there brought. Held, that such stipulation is not to be understood as referring to any statutory right to sue for a penalty, which would be local, but that, by the laws of New York, the money is treated as the plaintiff's money in the hands of the defendant held to the plaintiff's use; that this right of action is transitory, and may be enforced here, whatever may be the Vermont statute or the rule of decision as applied to wagers made in this State. Flanagan v. Packard, 41 Vt. 561.

WASTE.

The law considers everything to be waste which does a permanent injury to the inheritance. But, owing to the different state of many parts of this country, the English rule as to what acts constitute waste does not obtain in our courts. Thus, it is not in this State waste to cut down wood or timber so as to fit the land for cultivation, provided this would not damage the inheritance and would be according to the rules of good husbandry, taking into view the location and situation of the whole farm; and this, although the wood or timber so cut may have been sold, or consumed off the farm. Keeler v. Eastman, 11 Vt. 298.

As to remedies for WASTE, see MORTGAGE, II.

WATER COURSE, AND WATER RIGHTS.

1. Right as owner of the land. The common law as to the use of running streams, is not applicable to our circumstances, and is not adopted. Martin v. Bigelow, 2 Aik. 184. (This distinction repudiated. See infra.)

2. Every owner of land over which a stream flows has the right to the natural flow of that stream;—a right peculiar to himself as owner of the land, not derived from occupancy or appropriation; and he can never be deprived of this right except by grant, actual or presumptive. Whenever this right is encroached upon by obstructions or perversions, above or below, and actual injury ensues to any material amount, an action accrues for such injury, however valuable or convenient the use of such obstructions may be to him who erected them. Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178. Johns v. Stevens, 3 Vt. 308. Adams v. Barney, 25 Vt. 225.

3. Mere prior occupancy does not give an exclusive right to the use of the water of a stream; and it is not necessary for an owner to appropriate the water of a stream to some special use before he can maintain an action for its diversion. Adams v. Barney.

4. Relative rights. A servient proprietor of land cannot complain of any use which the dominant proprietor may make of the water of a stream, so long as he is not sensibly affected by that use. No prescription begins to run until a right of action accrues; and no right of action accrues until injury is inflicted. Norton v. Valentine, 14 Vt. 289. Hurlbut v. Leonard, Brayt. 202. See 12, infra.

5. A mill owner having a subordinate right to the use of the water of a stream must take notice, for himself, when he is infringing upon the right of his superior, and not reduce the water so low as to interfere with that right. The owner of the superior right is entitled to have the water at the proper height, at all times when he may need to use it; and is not obliged to wait for the water to accumulate, even for one minute. Rood v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 64.

6. Where the plaintiff had the prior right to use the water of a stream for the use of his mill in low water;—Held, that he could insist on this right, notwithstanding a change in the bed of the stream by the formation of a sandbar in front of his flume, so long as he interposed no hindrance to the removal of it by the defendant, who owned a subordinate right to the water. Ib.

7. Conveyance. Where land is conveyed upon which there is a stream of water, the grantor may reserve the use of the water to himself; or, he may convey the use of all or of a portion of the water, as a mere incorporeal hereditament, retaining the fee of the land in himself. Ib. Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt. 416.

8. Diversion on one's own land. The owner of land through which a stream flows may, on his own land, obstruct the natural channel, change its course, divert it, and restore it again to its natural channel at any time, and to any extent, if he does not thereby, in any material degree, diminish the beneficial use to other proprietors, either above or below. Norton v. Valentine, 14 Vt. 289. Ford v. Whitlock, 27 Vt. 265.

9. Where the diversion of a stream upon one's own land affects those above or below unfavorably, it requires fifteen years to give the right to continue the stream in its new channel. Ib.

10. Where the diversion of a stream upon one's own land, by his own act, affects other proprietors favorably, and he acquiesces in the stream running in the new channel for so long a time that new rights have in fact accrued, or may be presumed to have accrued, in faith of the new state of the stream, the owner is bound by such acquiescence, as being of the character of a public dedication; and he cannot return the stream to its former channel. Ford v. Whitlock, 27 Vt. 265.

11. So held, where the change was effected by a sudden and unusual flood, and for ten years the stream had flowed in its new channel. Woodbury v. Short, 17 Vt. 387.

12. Where one is entitled to have a stream of water flow in a particular place, or manner, he may recover for a wrongful diversion of it, without proof of actual damage. The law implies damage in such case, and the party is entitled to, at least, nominal damages. So held, where the diversion was occasioned by acts done wholly on the defendant's own land. Chatfield v. Wilson, 27 Vt. 670.

13. —on another's land. The owner of land inundated by a stream breaking away in a freshet from its accustomed channel, may lawfully turn it back into its old channel upon the land of another; but cannot, to prevent injury to his own land, turn it so that it shall flow upon such other person's land elsewhere than in its old channel. Tuthill v. Scott, 48 Vt. 525. See Redfield, J., 26 Vt. 72.

14. Opposite owners. Where the proprietors on opposite sides of a stream own each to the centre of the stream, neither has a right to extend a dam, past the centre, upon the land of the other, for the purpose of diverting one-half the water of the stream for his use, although such diversion causes no appreciable injury to the other's present use of the water; and, in such case, the party upon whose land the dam is so wrongfully built may lawfully remove such part of the dam. Adams v. Barney, 25 Vt. 225.

15. Where the centre of a running stream is the line between two proprietors, each has the right to have the stream flow in its natural and accustomed channel; and neither has the right to interrupt or alter such natural and accustomed flow, without the consent and to the injury of the other. In such case, either may use the water, in any reasonable and proper way, for ordinary culinary purposes, and for drink and the watering of cattle, not depriving the other of an equal enjoyment of the same right; and he may facilitate the enjoyment of this right by ordinary and appropriate means—as, in this case, by a tub near the brook receiving water therefrom, and an aqueduct thence to his house and barn. Chatfield v. Wilson, 81 358. (S. C. 28 Vt. 49.)

16. Where the channel of a river is the boundary between lands, the sudden changing of such channel, though by artificial means, has no effect to change the boundary. This established principle is applicable as well to public as to private rights; as, where the river forms the boundary between States. State v. Young, 46 Vt. 565.

17. Right in common. Where there is a right to use in common the water of a stream, the use of the whole water by one party, when the other has no machinery or provision for its use, will be presumed to be with the consent and for the benefit of all, and is not tortious. Howe Scale Co. v. Terry, 47 Vt. 109.

18. Waste from mills. In an action for the obstruction of the plaintiff's water-wheel by tan-bark discharged at the defendant's tannery in the stream above and suffered to float down to the plaintiff's mill, the case being free of any question of grant or prescription;—Held, that it was error to exclude evidence that it had been the uniform custom of the country to discharge the spent bark of tanneries into the streams on which they were situated; that this practice had been submitted to by the dam owners below, and that tanneries could not be conducted at any profit without such means of disposing of the spent bark. Snow v. Parsons, 28 Vt. 459.

19. The reasonableness of such use of a stream determines the right; and this depends upon the extent of the detriment to the riparian proprietors below. If it essentially impairs the use below, then it is unreasonable and unlawful, unless it is a thing altogether indispensable to any beneficial use at every point of the stream. This question of the reasonableness of the use, when in its nature doubtful and not settled by custom, is one of fact;—a question of care and prudence in the use—and is to be determined by the tribunal trying the facts. Ib. Redfield, C. J.

20. Held, that one in the use of his shingle mill, in a reasonable manner, has the right to discharge the sawdust, shavings and waste from it into the stream in the ordinary course of using such mills, and that he is not bound, as matter of law, to prevent them from going into the stream and have them accumulate, or to draw them off and deposit them so that they cannot get into the stream. On the other hand, he has not a right to wantonly and needlessly, and out of the ordinary course in such cases, and not in the service of his substantial interest and benefit in the use of his mill in a reasonable manner, to throw or permit them to go into the stream, when, by so doing, injury will be caused to the mill owner below. Jacobs v. Allard, 42 Vt. 303.

21. Such use of the upper mill not being unreasonable or unlawful, it is suggested that the proprietor below should change his works to conform to the altered circumstances of the stream. Ib. 305. 28 Vt. 463.

22. Current changed by lawful structure. Where a railroad corporation has right-fully and without negligence, want of care or skill, turned a river, it is not obliged thereafter to observe the action of the water, and take timely measures to prevent its encroachment upon neighboring lands. Norris v. Vt. Central R. Co., 28 Vt. 99.

23. A riparian proprietor whose land has been gradually washed away by a change in the course of the current of the stream, occasioned by necessary erections made above his land in the stream by a railway company under its charter, has no right of action against the company therefor. The same is the law as to individuals. Such is not a cause of injury whose operation can, in the nature of things, be guarded against, nor which inevitably produces such effects; and the damage is too remote and uncertain a consequence to furnish the basis of an action. Henry v. Vt. Central R. Co., 30 Vt. 638.

24. Underground streams. There are no correlative rights between adjoining proprietors of lands in the use of percolating underground streams, or of water under the surface. No action lies for digging upon one's own land, so as to cut off an underground supply to the adjoining land. Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49. S. C. 31 Vt. 358; nor for sinking or constructing upon one's own land a barrier to the underground flow from the adjoining land. Harwood v. Benton, 32 Vt. 724.

25. Corner in a stream—Alluvion. Where adjoining proprietors of land on the same side of a stream were each bounded on the stream, and the corner between them was indicated as a tree upon the bank of the stream;—Held, that the true corner was at that point in the centre of the stream nearest the tree;—and held (Redfield, J., dissenting), that this was not a fixed corner, but was movable with the changes of the stream, being that point in the centre of the stream nearest the tree at the time being, though not in the direction of the alluvion formed in front; and following this theory, where alluvion had formed along the west shore and in front of the two parcels, and the course of the stream passing the tree had changed from a north course, curving about to a west course and passing north of the tree, the court, instead of giving to each proprietor that portion of the alluvion which was formed upon his portion of the shore, gave it all to one. Newton v. Eddy, 23 Vt. 319.

26. Liability of dam owner. The owner of a mill dam upon a stream is bound to use ordinary care and diligence in making repairs to the dam, or in drawing off the water from the pond, to prevent injury to the property of others situate below, by the breaking away of the water; but he is not liable for inevitable accidents. Lapham v. Curtis, 5 Vt. 371.

27. Use as evidence of right. In order to restrict a grant of water by proof of use, to a point below the fair construction of the terms of the grant, the grant must be so far general as to be wholly undefined upon its face; thus evidently looking to the use, as the grantee's own construction of the grant. Adams v. Warner, 23 Vt. 395.

28. The defendants had, for more than thirty years, discharged the water of a stream from their mills by a race-way along and in a highway, using the mills but little in the winter, and that in warm times. They then rebuilt, raised and tightened their mill-dam, and afterwards ran their mills during the cold weather of winter, and for a longer time in winters than before, whereby anchor-ice formed in the race which caused the water to flow over the highway to its injury. In an action by the town for such injury, the county court charged that if the defendants had, for the term of 15 years before the rebuilding of the dam, used the water in the same channel, and that their use as to time was and had been limited only by the interest or convenience of the occupants, they were not liable for such damage by anchor-ice, or other natural causes, although they had used the water a greater length of time in each year since the rebuilding of the dam than before. Held erroneous, and that, as to both quantity and times of use, the right was limited to the former use. Shrewsbury v. Brown, 25 Vt. 197.

29. The owner of a spring of water agreed that the grantor of the plaintiff might always, or forever, draw water from the spring for the use of his house, by bearing a certain part of the expense of an aqueduct for conveying the water to the respective houses of the plaintiff and the owner of the spring. Under this agreement, the plaintiff and his grantors so took and used the water of the spring for more than 15 years without interruption, bearing their agreed share of the expense. Held, that the plaintiff had thereby acquired a prescriptive right, according to the agreement. Arbuckle v. Ward, 29 Vt. 43.

30. Construction of grant, or reservation. There is an inclination in courts to construe grants of water liberally, so as to impose no unnecessary restriction upon its use; and where words used will admit of one construction which would limit the use to a particular purpose, and another which would allow the use specified to be merely a measure of the quantity to be used, the latter construction is adopted. Rogers v. Bancroft, 20 Vt. 257. Rood v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 64.

31. Such will be the construction, unless the terms of the deed seem very clearly to indicate the contrary, and the use has been uniformly consistent with the more limited construction. Adams v. Warner, 23 Vt. 395.

32. Reservations are fully as much entitled to be considered a measure of quantity, as grants. Adams v. Warner. Rood v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 64. Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt. 416.

33. Where a grantor conveyed certain land and a saw-mill, "with the privilege of drawing water to carry said mill, except in times of low water when it is wanted for the carding and cloth dressing, and for the grist-mill" of the grantor;—Held, that this was a reservation, or exception, from the grant, of so much water as was wanted to operate successfully the carding and cloth dressing business, and the grist-mill; that this was a reservation of a certain measure of water, rather than water for a particular use, and that the use might be changed or assigned, or both. Rood v. Johnson; and see Miller v. Lapham.

34. Where a deed conveyed certain mills and water privileges, except "the privilege of one-half of the bark-mill owned by" certain third persons;—Held, that this exception did not necessarily include water sufficient for the use of the bark-mill, nor imply that it was not a subordinate right; but that the extent of such privilege was to be measured by such title to the bark-mill as such third persons in fact had. Rogers v. Bancroft, 20 Vt. 250.

35. A and B, tenants in common of land embracing a stream, with a dam across it and a saw-mill on the north side and a bark-mill on the south side, both mills carried by water from that dam, executed to each other partition deeds of the same date—A to B, of all the land on the north side with the mill and mill privilege, without other reservation expressed; B to A, of all the land on the south side, "and also the tan-yard and bark-mill, with a privilege of water for said bark-mill when I, the said B, my heirs or assigns, do not want the water for the use of the works now standing on said dam, or any others to be erected hereafter that draw no more water than those now standing." Held, that both deeds were to be taken as one instrument; and that by them B took a paramount right to the use of the water for his saw-mill, or other works drawing no more water; but that this right was confined to works supplied with water from the dam then standing, or one substituted for it in case of its destruction; and that B or his assigns could not claim that a quantity of water sufficient to carry the saw-mill should be allowed to pass over that dam, and be collected in a pond created by a dam afterwards built below, to be there used. Ib.

36. The grantor in a deed, expressed to be made "for the purpose of having the business of a clothier carried on where I now live, and in consideration of five shillings," conveyed the privilege of drawing "from the mill pond on which my grist-mill now stands * * water sufficient for carrying one fulling mill and shears for one clothier's shop, reserving always, in a scarcity of water, sufficient to carry my own grist-mill." The habendum was to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, "so long as he or they shall carry on the clothier's business at or near said place, and shall be at one-sixth part of the expense of making and keeping in repair the dam," &c. Held, that this deed did not make the parties tenants in common of the water; that it did not restrict the grantor to the use of the water for the purposes of a grist-mill; but that it did restrict the grantee to the use of the quantity of water specified, for the purposes of his clothier's works only; and that the water could not be used for the purposes of a carding machine; and that the right to use the water terminated when the clothier's business ceased. Shed v. Leslie, 22 Vt. 498.

37. Construction of special provisions and reservations of grants of water privileges. See Adams v. Warner, 28 Vt. 395.

38. Where the grant of a water power is by quantity—as, such "quantity of water as is necessary for the use of two runs of stones in the grist-mill"—this is to be understood as of the date of the grant, and the water to be used a sufficient portion of the time to do all the business then done in the grist-mill, or which might reasonably be then expected to be done without essential addition to the machinery, and in no event using more than sufficient to carry two runs of stones in constant use. Ib.

39. In such case, the grantee may apply the water to any use he desires, with this qualification, that while he continues the grist-mill in operation, with the same machinery or an equal amount with that used at the time of the grant [or reservation], it ought to be presumed, as matter of fact, that this exhausts the right: and if he claims to run other machinery during the intervals of the use of the grist-mill, the onus is upon him to show very clearly that, in the whole, he does not exceed his rightful use. So, too, if he elects at any time to put the water power to a totally different use, he assumes the onus of showing that he does not exceed his rightful quantity. Ib.

40. Where one mill is entitled as against another to a certain quantity of water for running it, the owner will not be allowed to take more than this measure some portions of the day, and excuse himself by showing that he used improved wheels and machinery, and thereby accomplished in half the time the work which would otherwise have required the full day, so that during a day he used no more of the water than he had a right to use in that time, if used continuously; for thus a steady flow of water, yielding a constant power, and valuable to the other mill, may be interrupted. Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt. 416.

41. The owner of an entire water privilege and the land on both sides of a stream, with a paper-mill situate on the south side of the stream and a grist-mill and saw-mill on the north side, having a common dam supplying all the mills, conveyed, in 1804, the land on the south side to the centre of the stream, "together with the paper-mill standing thereon, with all the privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging, with all the rights and privileges on the falls where the paper-mill stands, reserving to myself the grist and saw-mill thereon standing, with all the privileges thereunto belonging." Such title to the paper-mill passed to the plaintiffs, and such reserved title to the grist-mill passed to the defendants. Held, (1), that this was a conveyance of all the water power at that point on the stream except what the grantor reserved; (2), that the reservation was out of the whole water power, and not out of the one-half, or of that portion not included within the boundaries of the deed, (Rood v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 64); (3) that this reservation was of enough of the whole water power to answer to the privileges of the grist-mill and saw-mill, whatever those privileges might be, whether half or more than half of the water flowing at any given time in the stream, and included sufficient water to operate them, in low water as well as in high water, as they were then (1804) constructed—having reference to the depth at which the water was then taken from the dam, the wheel or wheels then in use, and the amount of machinery driven. (Adams v. Warner, 28 Vt. 395.) Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt. 416. S. C. 46 Vt. 525.

42. By deeds apportioning the water of a stream among different mill owners, the plaintiff was entitled to use for his mill, as it was in 1804, what was left of the water after supplying the defendant's mill, as it was in 1804; and it was provided, that in certain hours of the day the defendant's mill should not take the water from the plaintiff's mill, so as to injure it in its motion. In an action for such use of the water as to impede the motion of the plaintiff's mill, the defendant claimed that the plaintiff had changed and elevated his wheels in such way as to destroy the gauge and measure of his restrictive right against the defendant's mill. Held, that the plaintiff had the right to change his wheels and manner of using the water, provided he used no more water than in 1804; and, though this destroyed the ready and easy means of determining the quantity used in 1804, the plaintiff did not thereby lose his right, but could establish it by such evidence as could now be had; as he might do if the wheels and manner of taking the water had been destroyed by time or floods. S. C. 46 Vt. 525.

43. By an indenture regulating the water rights at a dam it was provided, that "in case there is not at any time a full supply of water for the simultaneous operations of the works connected with the dam, the grist-mill shall draw its requisite quantity of water, exclusive of all other works." Held, that this grist-mill right was not merely a right to use the water exclusively in the manner and for the time it was then accustomed to be used, but a right to use the water in quantity as was then used, and for such length of time, during the season of scarcity, as the custom and business of the mill might require; and if the work done by a substituted wheel in six hours was as much as the old wheel would do in twenty-four hours, and with the use of less water, there would seem to be no infraction of the indenture, provided the business done was the same in character as was being done at its date. Hove Scale Co. v. Terry, 47 Vt. 109.

44. A conveyed to B a factory and water privilege with the first right to draw water from the mill pond, reserving to himself the right to draw water from the same pond for the use of certain other works, but not to the damage of the privilege conveyed, when there should be a scarcity of water. B afterwards raised the dam, as he had a right to do, and thereby raised the water in the pond; after which, when the stream was low, A drew water from it, not leaving sufficient for B's works. Held, that he was liable therefor; and that the restriction upon A's use contained in the deed applied as well to the water accumulated by the raising of the dam, as to the water collected by the original dam; and that B had the first right therein. Wilders v. Bennett, 30 Vt. 670.

45. The defendant had exclusive right to the water of a stream for his grist-mill after the water was reduced to a certain low-water mark fixed in the pond, and a right to the water when above that mark, but subject, in this last case, to a reservation to the plaintiff of a right to draw water from the dam or flume for his own use, "not to interfere with the grist-mill privileges," until the water should be drawn down to such mark. The plaintiff, for the purposes of his saw-mill, inserted a gate in the flume at a lower level than such mark, and then drew the water. The defendant shut off the water from the flume by a head-gate whenever the plaintiff attempted so to draw the water, although the water in the pond was all the time above such mark. Held, that the plaintiff had the right so to draw the water, and the defendant had no right to prevent him, unless such mode of taking it did interfere with the privileges of the grist-mill when reasonably exercised; and whether or not it did so interfere the law could not determine, but this was a question of fact for the jury. Douglass v. Whittemore, 32 Vt. 685.

46. W, owning three parcels of land, Nos. 1, 2 and 8, laid a water-pipe from a spring or well situate on No. 1 across No. 1 to a barn on No. 2, thence to a dwelling house on No. 8, and thence back to a dwelling house on No. 1, which pipe supplied these several places with water from the spring. Under these circumstances, W sold and conveyed No. 1: "Reserving only the right now occupied by me of drawing the water from the well on said land, and of digging to repair or relay water-pipes from said well—it being mutually agreed and understood, that the water shall never be diverted from its present channel, but shall first pass to the barn of said W on his homestead [No. 2], and thence to the dwelling of K and H [No. 8], and thence across the road to the dwelling house on the lot above deeded, where the surplus water shall be freely suffered to run." Held, that W thereby reserved the right to draw through the aqueduct all the water flowing from the well to his barn on No. 2, and there to use as much of the water as he was then using and was accustomed to use; that what remained was to pass to No. 8, and there as much might be used as was then used and accustomed to be used; and that the rest was to pass as surplus water to the house on the premises then conveyed [No. 1]; and that the grantee of No. 1 had no right to the water until it had thus become surplus water; that he had no right to take the water by a branch pipe inserted above No. 2, nor directly from the well. Chase v. Dix, 46 Vt. 642.

47. A deed conveyed to the plaintiff "the right to take water at our cistern, at or near where it now is, when there is water in said cistern." At that time the cistern was supplied through pipes laid to a certain spring. The cistern was afterwards removed from the back room of the defendant's house a little to the outside, and the plaintiff took water as before. Afterwards the defendant brought water from another spring into a new cistern, occupying the place where the other first stood. Held, that the deed did not entitle the plaintiff to take water from the new cistern, although, by reason of the freezing up of the pipes, no water came into the old cistern. Hoisington v. Grimshaw, 48 Vt. 515.

48. —as to appurtenances. Where a deed of land was general, without condition or reservation, it was held to convey the land, with all the privileges of drawing water from other portions of the grantor's land which were then in use as appurtenant to the land conveyed; and that an action lies for the disturbance of such use by the grantor—as, by a diversion of the flow of the water in its accustomed artificial channel [a wooden aqueduct], though done on the grantor's own land, and though the water came from a spring on his own land:—nor can the grantor say in defense, that the plaintiff did not desire to use the water, and that he has suffered no detriment. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Hills, 23 Vt. 681.

49. S originally owned a mill and an ancient artificial mill-pond, and the lands surrounding it. A parcel of this land, not extending to the pond but separated from it by a road, he conveyed by metes and bounds, "with the appurtenances," to the plaintiff's grantor, covenanting against incumbrances, and making no express reservation in reference to the mill privilege. He afterwards conveyed to the defendant's grantor the mill and water privilege. In an action for causing the water to flow upon the plaintiff's land by means of the dam;—Held, that the defendant had the right to maintain the dam at its ancient height; that the deed of S conveyed the land in its then condition as affected by the dam as it then was; and that the dam and the use of it were parcel of the entire estate, and not an easement, nor an "incumbrance," and were not embraced in his covenant. Harwood v. Benton, 32 Vt. 724.

50. Under the grant of a "mill," held, that there passed, as an incident, an easement acquired by adverse enjoyment to maintain a dam at the outlet of a natural pond three-fourths of a mile distant from the mill, which dam had been always used in connection with the running of the mill, and was necessary to its beneficial enjoyment. Perrin v. Garfield, 37 Vt. 304.

51. Deed as a license. A conveyed to B in fee the undivided half of certain premises, "with the right to said B [not saying heirs and assigns] to put in a mechanic's shop and planing-mill between the saw-mill and grist-mill, and to take water from the flume for the same so as not to interfere with the use of the water for the saw and grist-mill, &c." Held, that this last was merely a license to erect and exclusively use the shop and planing-mill while they should last, and that the right would expire with the decay of the structure. Baldwin v. Aldrich, 34 Vt. 526.

52. —as evidence. The deed of an upper mill privilege excepted and reserved "the right to draw water from said privilege for the use of the grist-mill" standing below. The grantor had no interest in the grist-mill privilege. Held, that this did not create any right in, nor convey any right to, the owners of the grist-mill, but was evidence, not conclusive but tending to show, that such right had been acquired and then existed in the owners of the grist-mill. Kimball v. Ladd, 42 Vt. 747.

53. Remedy in chancery. P agreed by parol that A might dig and forever maintain a ditch across P's land for the purpose of conducting the water from A's factory, upon condition that A would build a good and substantial wall along the ditch, so as to secure P from damage from the water. A accordingly sank his wheel pit, lowered his wheel, dug the ditch, and built the wall, but not in all respects as it should have been built, yet in good faith and without gross negligence, meaning to comply fully with the condition. After the ditch had been used for some time, P obstructed it because of injury from the water. A removed the obstruction, and P sued him in trespass therefor. On a bill by A for relief, held, that he was entitled to a decree for specific performance, and an injunction of the trespass suit, upon payment of the damages assessed by the master which P had sustained. Adams v. Patrick, 30 Vt. 516.

54. Where the invasion of one's right in a water-course is threatened, which is necessarily to be continuing and to operate prospectively and indefinitely, and the extent of the injurious consequences is contingent and doubtful, or impossible of estimation, such injury is irreparable in the legal sense, and an injunction is the appropriate remedy. Lyon v. McLaughlin, 32 Vt. 423.

55. Where the defendant, having the right to take water from the orator's mill-pond by an existing flume, claimed and was threatening to exercise the right of inserting a new flume into the orator's dam, and the question as to the right was simply one of construction of certain deeds, and the court regarded the threatened injury as irreparable, the court of chancery took jurisdiction and settled the right by injunction. Id.

56. The orator's bill stated that he was owner of an extensive water privilege, and had conveyed a part to the defendant for special uses and the defendant was putting it to other uses, and prayed for an injunction and damages. Held, on demurrer, that the bill could not be sustained to settle the legal rights of the parties, nor for an injunction, until the right was settled at law—the water privilege being in no danger of being destroyed. Prentiss v. Larnard, 11 Vt. 135; and see Fairhaven Marble Co. v. Adams, 46 Vt. 496.

57. Taxing water power. A water power when applied to a mill or factory, should be taxed, to the extent that it is thus applied, with and as a part of the mill or factory; and, when unimproved, should be taxed with the land to which it belongs, if its existence adds to the value of the property. Bellows Falls Canal Co. v. Rockingham, 37 Vt. 622.

58. Passumpsic river. The owner of a mill-dam across Passumpsic river in the town of Burke, which was injured by the floating of timber over it by the defendant, Hall, was held not deprived of his common law action for the injury, either by G. S. c. 101, or by s. 2, of No. 146, of the acts of 1852, giving said Hall certain powers of improvement of said river. Coe v. Hall, 41 Vt. 325.

WILLS.

- I. POWER TO MAKE A WILL.
- II. EXECUTION; REVOCATION.
- III. PROBATE OF WILLS—PROOF; IMPEACHMENT.
- IV. VALIDITY; CONSTRUCTION; EFFECT.

I. POWER TO MAKE A WILL.

1. Infant. Under the statute empowering "every person of full age and of sound mind" to make a will, an infant is incapable of making a valid will under any circumstances. He cannot make a "soldier's will." Goodell v. Pike, 40 Vt. 319.

2. Party under guardianship. An adjudication by the probate court that a party is insane, and the appointment of a guardian over him on such adjudication, are not a bar to the allowance of a will made by the ward while under such guardianship. Robinson v. Robinson, 39 Vt. 267.

3. Mental capacity. Less mind is ordinarily requisite to make a will than a contract of sale, understandingly; but in making any contract understandingly (as, a will), one must have something more than mere passive memory remaining. The testator must undoubtedly retain sufficient active memory to collect in his mind, without prompting, particulars or elements of the business to be transacted, and to hold them in his mind a sufficient length of time to perceive, at least, their more obvious relations to each other, and to form some rational judgment in relation to them. The elements of such a judgment should be, the number of his children, their deserts, with reference to conduct and capacity, as well as need, and what he had before done for them, relatively to each other, and the amount and condition of his property, with some other things, perhaps. Redfield, J., in Converse v. Converse, 21 Vt. 168.

4. The contestant requested a charge that if the memory and mind of the testator were so impaired by age and disease, that he could not act upon important business with reason and judgment, he was incapable of making a will. But the court charged, that to give the will effect the testator must have been of sound disposing mind; but that this did not in any way imply that the powers of his mind must not have been weakened, or impaired, by disease or old age; that it would not be sufficient that he might be able to comprehend and understand a question put to him and answer it in a rational manner, nor was it necessary that he should have such capacity of mind as would justify his engaging in complex and intricate business; but that the jury must be satisfied, in order to justify them in establishing the will, that the testator, when he made it, was capable of knowing and understanding the nature of the business he was engaged in, and the elements of which the will was composed, and the disposition of his property as therein provided for, both as to the property he meant to dispose of, and the persons to whom he meant to convey it, and the manner in which it was to be distributed between them. Held, that the rule so laid down was sensible and judicious, and there was no error therein. Id.

5. That a legacy was made which would not have been thought of but for the suggestion of another, does not necessarily prove incapacity of the testator. Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 123.

6. Soldier's will. Under the excepting clause of the statute of wills (G. S. c. 49, s. 9), embracing the case of "any soldier in actual military service;"—Held, that the words "actual military service," are to be understood as restricted to the exercise of military functions in the enemy's country in time of war, or in the soldier's own State or country in case of insurrection or invasion; and that they do not embrace the case of a soldier who had enlisted into a Massachusetts regiment and had been mustered into the United States service, and was then in camp in Massachusetts, subject to military orders, with his regiment which had not yet been mustered into service, nor ordered into the enemy's country. Van Deusen v. Gordon, 39 Vt. 111.

7. It is not necessary in order to make a valid soldier's will, that the soldier should be in extremis. When he is in the enemy's country performing military service, whether in camp, campaign or in battle, such service is actual military service within the letter and spirit of the statute; as, where a member of a Massachusetts regiment was with his regiment in 1862 in North Carolina, in military service. Id.

8. A soldier, before being ordered into the enemy's country, made a paper intended as, and in substance, a will, but not executed with the requisite formalities of an ordinary will. Afterwards, while in the enemy's country and in "actual military service," he wrote a letter to the custodian of the paper, in which letter he referred to the paper as his will, and explained a particular bequest in it. Held (Barrett, J., dissenting), that the paper and the letter should be considered and treated as one instrument—the letter as giving a testamentary operation to the paper, and as together constituting a valid soldier's will. Ib.

9. A soldier of the army of the Potomac, moving from Virginia to Maryland to protect Washington and Baltimore from an expected invasion of the enemy, fell sick on the march near Washington and was ordered to fall out and to come on when he got rested; and, continuing sick, he was ordered into a temporary hospital, where he died. Held, that he was "a soldier in actual military service," and was on an expedition; and when, in such case, being in extremis from sickness, he told a comrade, animo testandi, how he wanted his personal estate disposed of, — held, that this was a good soldier's will." Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498.

10. A "soldier's will" may be established by the testimony of a single witness. Ib.

II. EXECUTION: REVOCATION.

11. Signing. A will commenced, "I, Samuel Adams," &c., "do hereby make this my last will and testament." The testimonium clause was: "In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand," "and publish and declare," &c. Then followed: "Signed, sealed, published and declared by the said Samuel Adams as his last will and testament," &c. The whole was in the handwriting of the testator, except the signature of the witnesses, but was written by parts, or portions, with different pens and ink, and at different times, and the name of the testator was not subscribed, or written at the foot of the will. It was objected that the will was not "signed by the testator," as required by the statute. But, it appearing that the testator produced the instrument to the three subscribing witnesses, and declared it to be his will in their presence, and requested them to witness the same as his will, and that they did duly subscribe it as such witnesses;—Held, that the signing of the will in the beginning of it was a sufficient signing to satisfy the statute, if so intended; and that such publishing of the will to the witnesses was, to all intents and purposes, an adoption of such signature as was then affixed to the will, and the will then became complete, and posseessed finality. Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256, 41 Vt. 98.

12. A will need not be signed in the presence of the attesting witnesses; but if signed, and the testator declares the instrument to be his will before the three witnesses, this is equivalent to signing it before them, and satisfies the statute in respect to signing. Ib. So, if, in such case, he declares it to be "his will, or his instrument." Roberts v. Welsh, 46 Vt. 164.

13. Publication. A formal publication of a will is not necessary. Writing and signing the will is a sufficient publication; indeed, any act of the testator, by which he designates that he means to give effect to the paper as his will, is a publication. Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746.

14. Witness and witnessing. The person named as executor in a will, but who takes no benefit under it, is a "credible" attesting witness, and competent to prove its execution. Richardson v. Richardson, 35 Vt. 238.

15. A person to become an attesting witness to a will must be aware of the character of the act he is called upon to perform, and must subscribe his name animo testandi. Where the witness did not know that the testator had signed the will, and did not know what the paper was that he was attesting, nor for what purpose he was attesting it;—Held, that this was not a legal attestation. Roberts v. Welsh, 46 Vt. 164.

16. It is not necessary to the due execution of a will, that all the attesting witnesses should actually see each other sign it. If the situation of the parties—as, where they were all in the same room—was such as that the testator might have seen the attestation, and each of the witnesses might have seen the attestation of his associates, this is sufficient as an attestation "in the presence of the testator and of each other." Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62.

17. A will, after being signed, was duly attested and subscribed by two witnesses, when another person was brought in from without, to serve as a third witness. The testator acknowledged to him his signature and requested him to sign as a witness, and the other two witnesses also acknowledged to him their signatures; whereupon he added his name as a third witness. Held, that the will was not "attested and subscribed by three or more credible witnesses, in the presence of the testator, and of each other," so as to satisfy the statute. John Pope's Will. Orleans Co., General Term, 1864. Opinion by Aldis, J.

18. Revocation. In this State, under our statute, no will can be revoked, in whole or in part, except in the way pointed out by the statute, unless by implication from the necessity of the case. Where the testator has aliened the devised estate and there is nothing for the will to operate upon, so far it is revoked; if the whole devised estate be aliened, the will is wholly revoked; if a part only, it is revoked pro tanto; but no alteration in the circumstances of the testator will amount to a revocation: as, the purchase of other lands, &c. Graves v. Sheldon, 2 D. Chip. 71. Blandin v. Blandin, 9 Vt. 210. Parkhill v. Parkhill, Brayt. 239.

19. A disposition in the codicil of a will, inconsistent with the former bequest, operates pro tanto as a revocation implied, and the property will pass as last appointed. (See case for illustration.) Larrabee v. Larrabee, 28 Vt. 274.

20. The rule that the marriage of a woman revoked her will before made, rested for its reason on the fact that, by virtue of the husband's marital rights the woman, becoming covert, became thereby disabled to dispose of the property named in the will, and so the will ceased to be ambulatory. In this case, as considerable of the property disposed of by the will remained in the testatrix, unaffected upon her death by any marital rights of the husband;—Held, that the will was entitled to probate. (The point whether such marriage in any case would operate as a revocation was not decided.) Morton v. Onion, 45 Vt. 145. See Carey's Estate, 49 Vt. 236.

21. If a testator executes his will and it is not found after his decease, such absence of the will amounts, prima facie, to proof of revocation. But this is but a presumption of fact, and may be rebutted and the will established;—as, in this case, by "a paper found to be a true form and representation of the will," or a copy. Minkler v. Minkler, 14 Vt. 125. Dudley v. Wardner, 41 Vt. 59.

22. Revocation prevented by fraud. An intent or attempt to revoke a will, although prevented by fraud, does not operate as a revocation. By Bennett, J.: In such case, it may be quite probable that a court of equity would interfere to prevent the guilty person from taking advantage of his own fraud, and to restore the fund to the channel from which it was diverted by the fraud. Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62.

23. Cancelling. One made his will in his own handwriting in 1857, writing it upon a sheet of foolscap paper and covering the first page and about one-third of the second page. The paper, when produced, had, upon the last half of the second page, the following words in the handwriting of the testator: "This will is hereby cancelled and annulled. In full this 15th day of March, in the year 1859:" and several lines lower down upon the same page were the following words, erased: "In testimony whereof I here I have." Held (Kellogg, J., dissenting), that the act of the testator being done, not only upon the paper on which the will was written but upon such a part of it as always to go with that part of the will which contained the disposition of the property, not indeed on the face, but on the back of such disposition, was an act of cancelling, under the statute, and the intent of the act was decisively manifested by the terms of the writing, and that the will was thereby revoked. Warner v. Warner, 37 Vt. 858.

24. Republication. A will revoked, as by cancelling, cannot be restored to its original vitality and force by mere words, under a claim of republication. In such cases we have no wills at, or by force of, common or ecclesiastical law, but only by statute. Ib.

III. PROBATE OF WILLS—PROOF; IMPEACHMENT.

25. Attestation clause informal. The due execution and attestation of a will may be proved, although the attestation clause be informal, or wholly omitted. Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746.

26. Witness deceased. Where a subscribing witness to a will has deceased, his handwriting may be proved as evidence of his attestation. Ib.

27. Copy. A will may be proved by a copy, the original being lost or destroyed. Dudley v. Wardner, 41 Vt. 59. Minkler v. Minkler, 14 Vt. 125.

28. Measure of proof. A fair balance of testimony is all that is necessary to prove the due execution of a will. Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746. Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122.

29. Proponent must produce and examine all the attesting witnesses. Where the establishment of a will is contested, the proponent must not only produce but must examine all the three competent attesting witnesses, if within reach of process and obtainable, as to the fact of execution. This is the rule of the English court of chancery when a will is sought to be established, and is founded upon reasons of policy and caution, and is adopted here, instead of the rule of the English common law and ecclesiastical courts. Ib.

30. This rule has no reference to the measure of proof necessary to establish a will, which is a measure no greater than is usually required to establish a fact: and although a will cannot be established without the evidence of the attesting witnesses, if obtainable, it may be established against the combined testimony of them all, by proof from others. Ib. Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256.

31. May impeach them. The rule that a party shall not impeach his own witness, does not apply to the case of instrumental witnesses whom the law obliges the party to call and examine—as, the attesting witnesses of a will; and such witness may be impeached by the proponent calling him, by proving his previous declarations inconsistent with his present testimony. Thornton v. Thornton.

32. There is no weight given by law to the testimony of an attesting witness to a will, apart from or beyond what it would be entitled to under those considerations which usually govern the value of testimony—as, his opportunity for observation, his skill and care in observing, his intelligence and powers of discernment and memory. It has no fictitious official weight. Ib.

33. Burden of proof. The burden is upon the proponent of a will to establish all those facts which the statute requires in order to impress upon the instrument a testamentary character. Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 164.

34. Dictum. That a testator was of sound and disposing mind is a legal presumption. It is for those who object to the will to show incapacity if it exists. Isham, J., in Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746. Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 45. Held contra, infra, 35.

35. The burden is on the proponent of a will to prove its due execution and the capacity of the testator, and such capacity is not to be presumed from the fact of execution. Williams v. Robinson. 42 Vt. 658. 46 Vt. 168.

36. A charge that the burden of proof of the incompetency of the testator rested upon the contestant, was held erroneous, and judgment reversed. Ib.

37. There is no presumption in favor of a will; and the burden of proving everything essential to its validity rests upon the proponent, whether any one appears to contest the probate of the will or not, and, if contested, whatever the special issues formed by the pleadings; for the judgment is conclusive upon all the world, and the rights of persons not appearing upon the record, cannot be conceded away by the parties of record. Ib.

38. Plea. A plea that "said instrument ought not to be admitted to probate because the same is not entitled to probate as the last will," &c., states no fact, but only a conclusion, opinion or inference. Held bad on demurrer. Dudley v. Wardner, 41 Vt. 59.

39. Question of capacity. The capacity of a testator, as also fraud or circumvention in procuring the will, may be tried by issue to the jury. Minard v. Minard, Brayt. 231.

40. Evidence. In calling for the opinion of a witness as to the mental capacity of a testator, the question should be so framed as to require him to state the measure of the testator's capacity in his own language, and by such ordinary terms or forms of expression as will best convey his own ideas of the matter—to state it "in the best way he can." Held, that the question whether the testator possessed sufficient mental capacity "to transact business," was objectionable. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

41. On the question of the mental capacity of a testator, the opinion of a physician accustomed to attend upon such cases to their termination is admissible, as to whether and to what extent "pulmonary disease, nervous derangement and general debility" would, in the progress of the disease as indicated by other physical facts, stated hypothetically, impair the mental powers at two hours before death [the time of executing the will.] Ib.

42. The declarations of a testator, made after the execution of the will, that he was induced to make it by undue influence, are not admissible to prove such fact. Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 38. Richardson v. Richardson, 35 Vt. 238.

43. But declarations of this character made about the time of the execution of the will, either before or after, which tend to show the state of mind of the testator at the time of the execution, are evidence for that purpose. Robinson v. Hutchinson.

44. On the question of the mental capacity of a testatrix and undue influence;—Held, that it was competent for the contestants to show that she had brothers and sisters not provided for in the will, who were known to her to be poor and for whom she cherished affection; also that the sole legatee, her brother, was known to her to be intemperate. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

45. Where the probate of a will was contested on the ground of incapacity and undue influence;—Held, that drafts of previous wills made by direction of the testator, though not executed, were evidence of previous intentions to be considered, and threw "very considerable light" upon the question of the testator's intentions as to the will on trial. Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122.

46. Where the probate of a will was contested on the ground of the mental incapacity of the testatrix, and of undue influence by the person named as executor, who was also a legatee in the will, though not the sole legatee, and was seeking to establish it;—Held, that his declarations, made four years before the execution of the will, to the effect that the testatrix was of unsound mind, were admissible in behalf of the contestants, both on the ground that he was a party of record and in interest, and because he was charged with the exercise of undue influence; and this, although he had a greater interest in defeating the will than in sustaining it. Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 448.

47. Where a will was contested on the ground of incapacity, and undue influence employed by the sole legatee;—Held, that his statements, known by him to be false, as to the execution and contents of the will, were admissible for the contestants. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

48. Foreign will. A will made and approved in another State, devising lands in this State, cannot be read as evidence of title in the courts of this State, unless a copy of such will and probate has been filed and recorded in the probate court of this State; or, unless originally probated in this State. (G. S. c. 49, ss. 20, 21.) Ives v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 589.

49. But, as the title vests from the death of the deviser, the will may be read in evidence, if so filed and recorded at any time before the trial. S. C. 13 Vt. 629.

50. The jurisdiction of a foreign court in admitting a will to probate will be presumed, until the contrary appears, where the will and foreign probate have been allowed by the probate court in this State. Townsend v. Downer, 82 Vt. 183.

51. The decree of the probate court allowing a foreign will, proved abroad, cannot be collaterally impeached by objections to the authentication of the foreign probate. Such objection must be taken in the probate court. Id.

52. Ancient will. Where both parties claimed under the same devisee in a will, and possession had been had under such devisee, and the will was ancient [made in 1774, and the trial in 1842], the court said: "We see no objection to the reception of the will as evidence, whether duly proved or not." Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344.

IV. VALIDITY; CONSTRUCTION; EFFECT.

53. Chancery jurisdiction. Probate of the will of an infant, procured by the willful suppression of the fact of infancy and other fraud of the legatee, was set aside in chancery on bill brought by the heir at law—the bill praying and the case requiring an injunction. Goodell v. Pike, 40 Vt. 319.

54. In the case of Mead v. Heirs of Langdon, decided in Washington County in 1834, and never reported, this court [in chancery] set up and decreed the payment of legacies given in a will never proved in the probate court, but which had been suppressed by those interested in the estate, and administration had been obtained without regard to the will. Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 59.

55. Bequest to voluntary association. A voluntary association or society for religious purposes may, under the constitution and laws of this State, receive and hold a legacy. Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511.

56. A bequest to an unincorporated religious society, "the interest thereof to be annually paid to their minister forever," is a bequest to the society. Id.

57. A bequest "to the treasurer for the time being of the American Bible Society formed in New York in the year 1816, for the use and purposes of said society," and sundry like bequests to charitable societies, not incorporated, were (by a majority) held good, and were enforced against the heirs in chancery. Burr v. Smith, 7 Vt. 241.

58. — to devisee by description. A devisee, whether a corporation or a natural person, may be designated by description, as well as by name. It is only necessary that the description of the devisee be by words that are sufficient to denote the person meant by the testator, and to distinguish him from all other persons. Button v. Am. Tract Soc'y, 23 Vt. 336. McAllister v. McAllister, 46 Vt. 272.

59. Evidence to identify devisee, &c. The devisee in a will was named as "The American home mission tract society for our western mission." There was no society of that name, but there were two charitable societies, one well known by the name of the American Tract Society, the other by the name of the American Home Missionary Society. In order to determine the devisee intended, evidence was received that the testator was acquainted with the objects and operations of the American Tract Society; that those operations were mainly confined to the western States and were there conducted through the agency of colporteurs, or missionaries; that the testator took a lively interest in that society, contributed to its funds in his lifetime, and expressed his preference for it over other charitable institutions; and upon such evidence, considered in connection with the terms used in the will;—Held, that the American Tract Society was intended. Button v. Am. Tract Soc'y.

60. After making certain bequests, the testator devised the residue of his property to "The Methodist Episcopal Mission at Bombay." No person, corporation, or society, known by that specific name, ever existed; and no such mission was located at Bombay. The testator, who had never been able, from defective eyesight, to read or write, had for a long time been a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and, as such, had been acquainted with, interested in, and a contributor to, the work of missions as carried on by that church in foreign lands, and especially in India. That church distributed its contributions for missions, domestic and foreign, through a regularly incorporated society denominated, "The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church." That society, several years before the making of that bequest, had established a mission in India, which was among the largest and most prosperous of its foreign missions. The missionaries sent out by the society to this field of labor landed at Bombay, and in returning home sailed from Bombay, though the center of the operations of this mission was established at Lucknow, whence the missionaries went forth itinerating over a vast area peopled by millions of inhabitants. Held, that the legatee was sufficiently indicated by the description given: that the gift was to said Missionary society to be expended in carrying on the work of that society in India, through their mission located, according to the testator's understanding, at Bombay, but which in fact was located at Lucknow. McAllister v. McAllister, 46 Vt. 272.

61. Uncertainty. A court never construes a devise void for uncertainty, unless it is so absolutely dark that they cannot find out the testator's meaning. Button v. Am. Tract Soc'y., 23 Vt. 336.

62. A will contained this clause: "I give and grant to my beloved son, John Nason, all my property after the decease of my beloved wife, or marriage, he paying the legacies herein mentioned; also to my daughter, Peggy Nason $200 to be paid as above mentioned, the horse I now own," (describing it), "and to live and remain, so long as she is unmarried, in my house, and have and enjoy the same privileges as she now does, and also one good cow." Held, (1), that here was a direct devise to Peggy of a right to all the privileges of the house that she had before enjoyed; (2), that parol evidence was admissible to show the extent of the privilege which she had enjoyed in the house before her father's death; (3), that this devise was not void for uncertainty, but a certain measure of the right was given, viz.: the extent of her previous enjoyment, to be ascertained by the proof; and it appearing by the evidence that she had before and after her father's death occupied a particular room in the house as her sleeping room and as under her special control;—Held, that she was entitled to the exclusive possession of it as against the plaintiff claiming under John Nason; (4), that as this right was a personal one and might be waived, evidence of her occupation of the room after the death of her father was admissible. Maeck v. Nason, 21 Vt. 115.

63. The testator bequeathed the sum of $1000 "to be paid by my executor hereinafter named, for the education of the freedmen of this nation, as soon after my decease as it can reasonably be collected and appropriated to that end—his best judgment and discretion to be exercised in said appropriation." Held, that said bequest was not void for uncertainty; and that the executor named was the proper person to appropriate the fund to the object of the bequest, and not the Freedman's Bureau created by act of congress. McAllister v. McAllister, 46 Vt. 272.

64. Evidence to explain. In the case of an imperfect designation of the devisee in a will, where the description was partly applicable to either one of two, testimony of the scrivener who drew the will, as to the instructions and description given him by the testator, was held not admissible to prove the devisee intended. Button v. Am. Tract Soc'y., 23 Vt. 336.

65. The declarations of a testator made subsequent to the making of his will, that said will did not vary from a former will which he had made, are inadmissible to vary the provisions of the last will. Wells v. Wells, 37 Vt. 483.

66. Repugnancy. The rule that of two inconsistent bequests, or clauses of a will, the latter supersedes and abrogates the former, is to be applied only in cases of absolute repugnancy. If by any rational construction the several parts can be made to harmonize, and to consist with the obvious general intent of the maker, no part should be rejected, or denied its legitimate effect. Hibbard v. Hurlburt, 10 Vt. 173.

76. Construction on face of the instrument—Instances. A testator by his will and a codicil thereto, after sundry specific bequests, bequeathed "the residue and remainder of the estate to be disposed of in accordance with the laws of this State." By a subsequent codicil he bequeathed to certain grandchildren, who would have been entitled to share in such residuum under the former provision, $25 each, "to be in full of all, and for all other provisions by me made for them in any will or codicil by me made, hereby revoking all other provisions by me heretofore made for said children." Held, that such grandchildren were entitled only to the sums named in the last codicil, and did not share in the residuum. Hayes v. Davenport, 25 Vt. 109.

68. A testator devised his Jackson farm to "The American Home Mission Tract Society for our western mission—twelve hundred dollars;" and, in the next clause, devised $600 in the same farm to his niece, the interest to be paid her yearly during her natural life, "and then to go to the above-named tract society for their use." There was a society well known as the "American Tract Society," and another well known as the "American Home Missionary Society." Held, that by reference to the general scope of the will and to every clause of it, it was fairly to be inferred from the language of the will that the testator intended the bequest for the American Tract Society. Button v. Am. Tract Soc'y., 23 Vt. 336.

69. Precatory words—how construed. Van Amee v. Jackson, 35 Vt. 173.

70. Construction of the words of a will—

"my other legatees, &c." Putnam v. Am. Bible Soc'y, 37 Vt. 271.

71. The testator, among other specific bequests, gave $50 each to the male children of Dan Mather, and $50 each to the male children of Isaac Bishop; and then (9th), certain bank stock and the use of the home farm, with stock, tools, furniture, &c., to Francis D. Prouty (a stepson), for the life of the testator's daughter Polly, in trust for the maintenance of said Polly; and (10th): "It is my will, and I do hereby order, that my executors, administrators and assigns, upon the decease of my daughter Polly, in the division of the above named property left for her comfortable maintenance, both real and personal, do allow the said Francis D. Prouty an equal share with the male children of my daughter Tirzah, wife of Isaac Bishop, and the male children of my late daughter Almira, the late wife of Dan Mather. The same I do give and bequeath unto the said Francis:" (11th).—A bequest of the residue. Held, that the intent of the testator was, not to limit the bequest to Prouty to the amount ($50) before given to each of the male children of Mather and of Bishop; but that it was to make a complete and final disposition of all that part of his estate which he had so left in trust, by directing a division of it between Prouty and said male children, he and they taking the whole in equal proportions according to the whole number, his share being equal to that of one and each of the others. Prouty v. Bishop, 37 Vt. 634.

72. A testator devised certain land to his daughter for her life, and the will then proceeded: "After the decease of my said daughter I do give said land to my male heirs at law, who may then live in South Hero, aforesaid." At her death there was one nephew, and several grand-nephews of the testator living in South Hero. Held, that the nephew was entitled to the whole estate under the will. Keeler v. Keeler, 39 Vt. 550.

73. What estate created. A bequest to three sisters, named, of plate, pictures, paintings, musical instruments, and household furniture, was held to create a joint tenancy; and where two of the legatees died in the life of the testatrix, held, that the legacy survived to the other legatee, and did not pass to the residuary legatee under a codicil made after the death of the two legatees, under the denomination of all lapsed legacies. Gilbert v. Richards, 7 Vt. 203.

74. A bequest of one thousand dollars to "the children of" A B, was held to create a joint tenancy; and, where some of the legatees died after the decease of the testator but before the recovery of the legacy, that the whole vested in the survivors. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

75. The language of a will was (in substance): "I give and bequeath to my son John the use of $475 during his natural life, and after his decease to his sons George and Leander." Directions were given to a trustee named in the will to pay the interest on the same yearly to said John during his natural life, and "at the decease of the said John to pay the $475 to the said George and the said Leander." Held, that there was nothing in the language of the legacy, or in its relation to other provisions of the will to indicate an intention to give to the sons in severalty, and that they took jointly; and one having deceased during the life of the father, that the other took the whole by right of survivorship. Decamp v. Hall, 42 Vt. 483.

76. A devise to one to "have, use and possess" certain land during the life of the devisee, "he paying the rents and taxes on said land," was held to create an estate for life which the devisee might assign and convey. Nason v. Blaindell, 17 Vt. 216.

77. A devise was as follows: "I give to my beloved wife one-third part of all my real and personal estate, and in addition to that, I give her one cow, ten sheep and one hundred dollars in money, to have at her disposal during her natural life, or as long as she shall remain my widow; and it is my will that the remainder of my property be divided among my children," &c. A referee, under a general reference, having decided that the one third of the personal estate and the ten sheep were given to the widow absolutely, the court allowed the report to stand, the judges being equally divided in opinion as to the real intention of the testator. White v. White, 21 Vt. 250.

78. Under the same will, held, that under the first clause, the widow took a fee in the real estate, and under the last, "in addition," a life estate in the articles specified, with a power of sale. Hart v. White, 26 Vt. 260.

79. A testator willed that all his estate be equally divided, and that his two daughters should each have a life estate in a moiety thereof; remainder to their heirs forever. Held, (1), that the heirs of each took a remainder in a moiety in fee; (2), that the division contemplated was such as the law provided for, unless made between themselves by the respective successive owners; (3), that the life tenants could not make a division binding upon those entitled in remainder. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

80. The words of a will were: "I also give the use of the other two-thirds of my estate, both real and personal, to Louisa Clark, the wife of my son Tully A. Clark, so long as she shall remain his wife or widow, and, when she shall cease to remain his wife or widow, to the lawful heirs of the said Tully A. Clark." Held, that the use so devised was to her sole and separate use, to the exclusion of the marital rights of her husband; and that it, and the products of the premises and other estate bought therewith by her, could not be taken for the debts of the husband. Clark v. Peck, 41 Vt. 145.

81. Quære—as to the reasonableness of the rule requiring that the rights of the wife, as against the claims of the husband, should be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Ib. Pierpoint, C. J.

82. Conditional devise. Where land was devised to children "upon their paying" a certain sum to the testator's widow;—Held, that the executors owed no duty to the widow in respect to the devise, but that the sum named was a lien upon the land, which the widow could enforce in chancery. Dunbar v. Dunbar, 3 Vt. 472.

83. Where a farm was devised to the defendant "by her paying into the testator's estate $3,500," of which farm the defendant was then in possession and so remained, and the defendant paid from time to time to the executor, as demanded, that sum;—Held, that the residuary legatees could not maintain ejectment for non-payment of interest on the sum; and that their claim, if any, was against the executor on an accounting in the probate court. Ashley v. Barrell, 48 Vt. 488.

84. W devised all his estate to his wife for life and then to his adopted son George, an infant apprenticed to him, on condition that he should continue a faithful son during the lives of the testator and his said wife. George continued to live with the testator during his life and then with the widow until she broke up housekeeping, when, by an arrangement between her and George's father, George went to live with his father and the articles of apprenticeship were cancelled; and George continued to live with his father for several years, and until after death of the widow. George was very young, and merely acquiesced in these arrangements between the widow and his father. Held, that the condition of the devise was not violated by these facts. Wells v. Wells, 37 Vt. 483.

85. The will of the testator gave a certain sum to his wife, and the residue of his estate to his son upon condition, as follows: "That if I should not return alive from the journey that I contemplate making this summer with my wife, there is to be paid out from that part of my estate that is here given to my son * * * to H the mortgage I hold against L H. * * * But should I return, and during my life make over said mortgage to H, my son's share is to be relieved from the payment of said legacy" to H. The testator returned from said journey, but did not make over said mortgage to H. The whole estate, including the mortgage, was not sufficient to pay the legacy to the wife.

Held, that the mortgage belonged to the wife, and that the son took nothing, there being no residuum. Han. v. Lathe, 45 Vt. 343.

86. Remote limitation. A will of real and personal estate was as follows: "I give, devise and bequeath the same to my son Frederick Zelotes Dickinson, to have and to hold the same to him, the said Frederick Zelotes, his lineal heirs and assigns forever: provided, however, if the said Frederick Zelotes shall die without lineal heirs, or upon the failure of his and my lineal heirs," that it be appropriated to the establishment and support of an industrial school in the village of Brattleboro, &c. Held, that the words of the will import an indefinite failure of heirs, and that the limitation over was too remote, and was void as to both the real and personal property. Village of Brattleboro v. Mead, 43 Vt. 556.

87. Legacy vested. Where there was a bequest to B chargeable upon a devise to C, to be paid by C in twelve months, and B died within the twelve months;—Held, that this was a vested legacy in B and passed by his will. Lyman v. Vanderpiegle, 1 Aik. 275.

88. —subject to debts. Where a testator left to his wife all his personal estate, making no provision for his debts;—Held, that his debts were a lien primarily upon such estate notwithstanding, and that the import of the legacy was what should remain of the personal estate after paying all debts. Dunbar v. Dunbar, 3 Vt. 472.

89. The income of devised real estate, for the year allowed by law for settlement of the estate, but no longer, was held to have been properly accounted for to the legatee of all the personal estate, after payment of debts. Ib.

90. —as a satisfaction of a debt. A bequest to a creditor which was much less than the debt, and was expressed to be "a token of friendship," was held to be no satisfaction of the debt. Newell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214.

91. Whether a bequest to one to whom the testator was indebted was intended to be a satisfaction of the debt, and was so accepted and received by the legatee, may be shown by extraneous parol evidence. Fitch v. Peckham, 16 Vt. 150.

92. —as a release. The orator upon borrowing about $3,000 of his nephew H, gave his note therefor, and for security conveyed his farm to H by absolute deed, taking back a bond for reconveyance on payment of the note, and in the mean time the orator was to occupy without rent. H was a bachelor, and died leaving an estate of $75,000, and a will, by which he devised to the orator in fee said farm, with a provision that if the orator should not survive him, then the devise was to the orator's "heirs forever." If H had died intestate, the orator would have been entitled as an heir to an amount larger than said note. The will made no mention of the debt, or any release of it. Held, that upon the face of the will, in connection with the surrounding circumstances, the devise of the farm carried the debt and was a release of it. Holmes v. Holmes, 36 Vt. 525.

93. Interest on legacy. The general rule is, that a legacy to be paid at a future day does not carry interest till due; and this rule applies to infants as well as adults. The exception to this rule in behalf of an infant child of the testator, was held not to apply to a grand-child, where the legacy was made payable on his arriving at the age of twenty-one, especially where it did not appear that such grand-child was dependent upon the grand-parent for support, and needed the interest for that purpose. Smith v. Moore, 25 Vt. 127.

94. Lapsed legacy. The general rule is well settled, that where a legatee dies before the testator, the legacy will lapse. The case of a child or other relation of the testator, as legatee, forms no exception to the rule under G. S. c. 49, s. 28, unless such legatee leaves issue. Coldburn v. Hadley, 46 Vt. 71.

95. Remedy to recover legacy. The appropriate remedy for the recovery of a legacy is only in chancery. The neglect to present it before commissioners is therefore no bar. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

96. Devise to wife. The right of a widow to waive the provision made for her by the will of her husband in lieu of dower, must be exercised within eight months after the will is proved, or it is lost; and this, whether or not the executor declines to act, and irrespective of the time of granting administration. Smith v. Smith, 20 Vt. 270. (By Stat. 1864, No. 66, such time may be extended.)

97. A legacy and annuity were bequeathed to the oratrix by her husband's will. From the probate of the will she appealed, and the will was afterwards established by consent. During the pendency of the appeal, the probate court made sundry allowances to her from the estate for her support under G. S. c. 49, s. 29, being absolute and unconditional orders. In the absence of proof of bad faith in taking the appeal, and thereby prolonging the settlement of the estate;—Held, that the payment of such allowances could not be applied towards the bequests in the will. Meech v. Weston, 38 Vt. 561.

98. Election. A testator devised to his wife for life four acres of land which included the family mansion and grounds. Then a larger tract, comprising the four acres within its boundaries, was devised in fee to his son Ezra, "excepting, from the lands herein devised to Ezra, the life estate which I have given to my wife in about four acres thereof, and the house and buildings standing on the four acres."

The lands devised to Ezra were charged by the will with the payment of part of an annuity to the wife. The house on the four acres was the family homestead. The above devise to the wife and other bequests made were expressed to be "in lieu of dower." Held, that the intent of the will was, that the provisions made for the wife should be in lieu of homestead also; and that having elected to take under the will, she was not entitled to have a homestead set out. Meech v. Meech, 37 Vt. 414.

WITNESSES.

I. COMPETENCY.

1. At common law.
2. As affected by statutes of 1852 and 1853 (G. S. c. 36, s. 24).

II. PRIVILEGE AS TO TESTIFYING.

III. CREDIBILITY—IMPEACHMENT; CORROBORATION.

IV. SUBPOENA; ATTENDANCE; FEES.

I. COMPETENCY.

1. At common law.

1. Atheist. One who does not believe in the existence of a Supreme Being, an atheist, is incompetent as a witness, being incapable of being sworn. Arnold v. Arnold, 13 Vt. 363. Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 535. (Changed by G. S. c. 36, s. 29—Stat. of 1851—under which, no question can be raised as to a witness's "opinions on matters of religious belief.")

2. Walton v. Shelley. The doctrine of Walton v. Shelley (1 T. R. 296), that upon principles of public policy, a party who has signed a note, deed, or other paper, shall be excluded from giving testimony to invalidate the instrument—repudiated. Nichols v. Holgate, 2 Aik. 188. 2 Vt. 198. Seymour v. Beach, 4 Vt. 498. Pecker v. Sawyer, 24 Vt. 459. State v. Phelps, 11 Vt. 118.

3. Mental capacity. To exclude a witness of mature age [14 years] from testifying, by reason of want of mental capacity, the fact should not be proved by the witness himself on a preliminary examination before the court; the inquiries upon this point should be upon the cross-examination, and for the jury. Perhaps the court may exercise a discretion in allowing such preliminary examination, but it is not error to refuse it. Robinson v. Danu, 16 Vt. 474.

4. Interest. It is only a direct interest in the event of the suit which goes to the competency of a witness. A remote and contingent interest does not disqualify him. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

5. That a witness has a suit pending for a similar claim is no objection to his competency. Mathews v. Felch, 25 Vt. 536.

6. In an action upon a receipt for property attached, a deputy sheriff to whom the execution was delivered, is a competent witness to prove that he made a seasonable demand of the property of the attaching officer and of the receptor. Allen v. Carty, 19 Vt. 65. Ferris v. Smith, 24 Vt. 27.

7. Where an attaching creditor gave the officer a bond to indemnify him from all costs, losses and damages in consequence of his selling the attached property under the statute, and the officer was sued by the debtor for such sale;—Held, that the creditor was a competent witness for the officer; for the officer could not claim that such general indemnity extended to the extra expense of a mere groundless prosecution, and, if construed to be an indemnity against his own neglects, it would be void. Abbott v. Kimball, 23 Vt. 542.

8. If a witness considers himself interested, but he is not, and is so informed by the court, he shall be sworn and testify, and the jury shall allow for any possible bias in his mind in weighing his credibility. State v. Clark, 2 Tyl. 277.

9. A party has his election to show the interest of a witness, either by putting him upon the voir dire oath, or by other proof; but he cannot avail himself of both modes on the same trial. Dorr v. Osgood, 2 Tyl. 28.

10. Waiver. If the testimony of a witness, known at the time to be incompetent, is received without objection, the objection is waived, and cannot be urged in a subsequent stage of the case. White v. Dow, 23 Vt. 300.

11. Where a witness, interested against the party calling him, is sworn in chief and examined, although upon a question to the court touching the interest of another witness, such party cannot object to the witness being afterwards examined by the opposite party upon the merits of the cause to the jury. By calling the witness, he has waived his objection. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

12. Release. The discharge of the interest of a witness, whether by his assigning his interest or by a release from the party, renders him competent, although such assignment or release was made for the purpose of rendering him competent. Moore v. Rich, 12 Vt. 563. Bank of Woodstock v. Clark, 25 Vt. 308. Fletcher v. Cole, 26 Vt. 170.

13. A witness was interested in the event of a suit by reason of a mortgage to his wife, and also by having an assignment of the suit. Held, that an assignment by himself and wife of the mortgage, and his reassignment of his interest in the suit, restored his competency. Hough v. Patrick, 26 Vt. 435.

14. One of several defendants, or one of several plaintiffs, who is released of his interest, is a competent witness for the opposite party, notwithstanding any objection made by his associates. Miner v. Downer, 20 Vt. 461. Wills v. Judd, 26 Vt. 617.

15. A plaintiff on the record cannot, by any act of his own, as by a deposit of money in court, remove his interest so as to become a witness, against the consent of the defendant. Loomis v. Loomis, 26 Vt. 198.

16. Statute of 1852. Note. The statute of 1852 (G. S. c. 36, s. 24), removing the disqualification of interest in a witness, and like statutes in most of the States of the Union, and in England, have happily rendered obsolete the nice learning of the law of this subject. The author has therefore omitted to digest most of the cases touching this question, and simply refers to them by name, as below:

2. As affected by the statutes of 1852 and 1853.
(G. S. c. 36, s. 24.)

17. The main object of G. S. c. 36, s. 24, providing that no person shall be disqualified as a witness in civil suits, by reason of interest as a party, or otherwise, was to remove, not to create disqualifications; and the proviso, that where one party is dead or insane, the other shall not testify in his own favor, was intended mainly as a limitation or exception to the enabling clause, and applies only to parties, and does not exclude persons interested in the event of the suit, unless they are "parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial." An agent in the making of a contract is in no legal sense a party to it. Lytle v. Bond, 40 Vt. 618.

18. A party in an action on book has all the privileges as a witness which belong to parties in other actions under the first proviso of that section; and has in addition, under the second proviso, the privilege of testifying in whose handwriting his charges are, and when made, but no further. Thrall v. Seward, 37 Vt. 578. Johnson v. Dexter. Ib. 641. Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 359; and this does not depend upon the form of the action, if "the matter at issue and on trial is proper matter of book account." Woodbury v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 94.

19. This statute excluding the surviving party from being a witness "where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, &c.," extends only to such contract or cause of action as is to be enforced by the proceeding, and where such deceased party is represented by an executor or administrator, and the determination may affect the estate of the deceased party. It does not extend to a collateral contract. Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311. 46 Vt. 677. Manufacturers' Bank v. Scofield, 39 Vt. 590. Thrall v. Seward, 37 Vt. 578. Morse v. Low, 44 Vt. 561.

20. Thus, in an action to recover upon a promise to pay the debt of a deceased person, the plaintiff is a witness to establish the indebtedness of such deceased person. Cole v. Shurtleff.

21. So, where the defense to a note was, that the plaintiff had assured the defendant that the note was paid by one F, and so the plaintiff was estopped;—Held, that the defendant might testify that F (now deceased) had agreed and was bound to pay the note. Manufacturers' Bank v. Scofield.

22. The phrase, "where one of the parties to such action had deceased," as used in the witness act of 1853, was held to mean parties to such cause of action, and to mean the technical party; the administrator. Kimball v. Baxter, 27 Vt. 628.

23. Where the plaintiff's suit was discontinued under the statute by the death of the defendant and the appointment of commissioners on his estate, and the claim was then presented to the commissioners;—Held, on the question whether the plaintiff was a witness, that the suit before the commissioners was in substance the same as that commenced in the decedent's lifetime, with simply a change of the forum, and was "a suit then pending," at the time of the death, within the proviso of the act of 1852. Pierce v. Paine, 32 Vt. 229. Post, 41.

24. The exclusion, as a witness, of a surviving party, by G. S. c. 36, s. 24, applies as well to a defendant as a plaintiff; and the statute applies to actions pending at its passage. Johnson v. Dexter, 37 Vt. 641.

25. Held, that the words "contract in issue," as used in this statute, mean the same as contract in dispute or in question, and relate as well to the substantial issues made by the evidence, as to the mere formal issues made by the pleadings. Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403. Merrill v. Pinney, 43 Vt. 605. Davis v. Windsor Savings Bank, 43 Vt. 532.

26. The plaintiff's cause of action was all matter of contract with the intestate, and that was in issue. The defendant introduced a paper writing signed by the deceased and given to the plaintiff showing a settlement. Held, that the plaintiff was not a competent witness to state what was said and done on the occasion, and to explain the writing. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 94.

27. In trover by an administrator to recover the value of a promissory note payable to the intestate, or bearer, where the defense was, a bona fide purchase by the defendant of A who had possession of the note and claimed to be the owner thereof;—Held, that this was not “a contract or cause of action in issue” to which the intestate was a party, and that A was not excluded as a witness for the defendant. Benior v. Poquin, 40 Vt. 199.

28. Where both the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial, are living, it is no objection to the admissibility of either party as a witness, that the agent of one of the parties with whom the contract was made, or the transaction was had, is dead. Cheney v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 515. 46 Vt. 677. Poquet v. North Hero, 44 Vt. 91.

29. The heirs of an intestate, before the appointment of an administrator, quit-claimed certain lands to H, while the defendant was in adverse possession. H, for his own benefit, took administration and brought ejectment as administrator. On the question whether the defendant had recognized the intestate's title during his life;—Held, that the defendant was not a witness, although the estate had no interest in the result of the suit. Hollister v. Young, 41 Vt. 156.

30. In a suit by an administrator, the defendant cannot make himself a witness by putting in evidence the testimony given by the intestate on a former trial. Walker v. Taylor, 48 Vt. 612.

31. In trover, where both parties claimed the property by purchase from a former owner deceased;—Held, that the plaintiff was not excluded by the statute from testifying to his contract of purchase. Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674; or to payments upon it. Taylor v. Finley, 48 Vt. 78.

32. The question being solely as to the distribution of an estate between the heirs at law and the widow;—Held, that she was a competent witness to her marriage. Stevens v. Joyal, 48 Vt. 291.

33. In ejectment, the defendant justified his possession under a contract (as he claimed) made with the deceased owner. The widow and executrix (plaintiff) testified to an admission of the defendant, inconsistent with the alleged contract, made to her after the testator's death and before the probate of the will. Held, that the defendant, by the proviso of G. S. c. 36, s. 24, was incompetent as a witness to contradict this testimony of the plaintiff. Ford v. Cheney, 40 Vt. 153.

34. In trover by the administrator of the wife against the husband, for certain mortgage notes, the plaintiff put in evidence that the defendant had at some time stated that the notes and mortgage belonged to the intestate. The defendant offered himself as a witness to contradict such evidence, and as a witness generally. The court excluded him, ruling that he could not testify upon any point, except as to matters that had transpired since the appointment of the administrator. Held correct. Roberts v. Lund, 45 Vt. 82. See Merrill v. Pinney, 43 Vt. 605.

35. In an action against the survivor of two signers of a promissory note, the plaintiff is a witness as to what occurred between him and the defendant on the occasion of making a demand, though the other signer, now deceased, was present. The transaction was “with a person who is living and competent to testify.” Read v. Sturtevant, 40 Vt. 521.

36. In a suit upon a cause of action running to two jointly, where one has deceased, the defendant is not excluded as a witness. It is only the death of a sole party to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial, or the death of all the individuals constituting the one party, that excludes the adverse party as a witness; and this was applied to a case, where the matter to be testified to was a transaction had between the witness and the deceased person alone; as, an accord and satisfaction of the joint claim. Dawson v. Wait, 41 Vt. 626. Bradish & Goodenough v. Belknap, 46 Vt. 1.

37. The defendant, being administrator of a deceased woman, carried away certain articles as belonging to her estate. The plaintiff, claiming the articles as husband of the deceased, brought trespass. Held, that under the statute, the plaintiff was not a competent witness to prove his marriage to the deceased. Fitzsimmons v. Southwick, 38 Vt. 509. 45 Vt. 86.

38. In an action by a surviving husband to recover for the use and occupation of lands held by his deceased wife in dower, and occupied by the defendant, where the plaintiff had given the defendant authority to pay the rents to the deceased “as they could agree”;—Held, that the defendant was a competent witness to prove such payments to the deceased, and their agreements in respect thereto. Cheney v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 515. 44 Vt. 96. 46 Vt. 677.

39. In audita querela to set aside a judgment as fraudulent, the judgment creditor being dead;—Held, that the judgment debtor was not a competent witness; and that such exclusion did not depend upon the character of his testimony. Godfrey v. Downer, 47 Vt. 653.

40. In an action by one claiming as a widow for damages under Stat. 1869, No. 4;—Held, that she was a competent witness to prove by parol her own marriage in England, where her marriage certificate was lost. Stanton v. Simpson, 48 Vt. 628.

41. Stat. 1864, No. 31. In 1860, A brought assumpsit in the common counts against B and C. Pending the suit, in 1863, B died, and the suit as to him passed by statute to commissioners on his estate, and an appeal was taken from their decision to the county court, and, in 1865, was referred. At the same time the suit as to C was referred to the same referees. The referees found against the estate of B for its separate debt and against C for his separate debt, and reported that there were no joint claims. The county court rendered judgment according to the several reports. Held, that this proceeding against the estate of B was the same suit originally commenced against B and C, and having been commenced before Aug. 1, 1868, A was a competent witness before the referees under Stat. 1864, No. 81. Graham v. Chandler, 38 Vt. 559.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE, VII.

II. PRIVILEGE AS TO TESTIFYING.

42. The real party, although not the party of record, cannot be compelled to testify. White v. Everest, 1 Vt. 181. Flint v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 615. (Changed by stat.)

43. One may be compelled to testify as a witness, although against his interest, where he is not a party of record, or the real party in the suit. Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115. Stevens v. Whitcomb, 16 Vt. 121.

44. A party testifying in his own behalf to his claim must answer all questions in relation thereto, or his whole testimony must be disregarded; and this, although he might have declined to testify at all on the ground that such testimony would criminate himself. Mattocks v. Owen, 5 Vt. 42.

45. A witness is not bound to answer any question, the answer to which might tend to criminate him—i. e., expose him to a prosecution for crime, or penalty. But this privilege must be claimed by the witness, which may be upon suggestion of counsel, or of the court; and if he begins, he is then bound to make a full disclosure. If he inform the court, upon oath, that he cannot testify without criminating himself, the court cannot compel him to testify, unless they are fully satisfied such is not the fact, that is, that the witness is either mistaken or acts in bad faith—in either of which cases, the court should compel the witness to testify. Chamberlain v. Willson, 12 Vt. 491.

46. A party, although offering himself as a witness under the statute, cannot be compelled to disclose any consultation he may have had with his counsel in relation to the cause. The rule of privilege should be the same as in case of the counsel, if he had been called. Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. 701.

47. It is the duty of the jurors, the attorney for the State, and witnesses, not to divulge what passes in the grand jury room, unless required so to do in a court of justice. They cannot then be excused from making such disclosures. Note, by Redfield, J.: I apprehend that the true doctrine, in regard to requiring a witness to disclose State secrets, is, that the court will exercise its discretion in each particular case. Clark v. Field, 12 Vt. 485.

III. CREDIBILITY—IMPEACHMENT; CORROBORATION.

48. It is a general, but not inflexible rule, that a party is estopped from impeaching his own witness, even though the impeachment is as to new matter introduced in cross-examination. Steele, J., in Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 151.

49. The testimony of a witness in chancery was treated as discredited, where he appeared before the master with a prepared deposition, and partly copied from a paper drawn up by the party, &c. McDaniels v. Barnum, 5 Vt. 279; and see Hickok v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 35 Vt. 476.

50. General impeachment. Where witnesses in their depositions testified as to "the character for truth, &c.," and the "general character for truth, &c.," of another witness [instead of reputation];—Held, that such testimony was admissible, for that in the sense as here used, character, general character, and general report or reputation, are the same. Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 270.

51. Where one is called to impeach the character of a witness for truth, the rule in this State does not allow the question, either on the direct or cross-examination, whether he would believe such witness on oath. The proper inquiry is, what is his general reputation for truth and veracity. Willard v. Goodenough, 30 Vt. 393.

52. As a distinct proposition, disconnected from the examination of an impeaching witness as to the present character of the witness sought to be impeached, it is not proper to show that his character for truth was bad at some particular prior period. Willard v. Goodenough.

53. Held, that evidence to impeach the general character of a witness for truth is admissible, though based upon reports which have arisen since the controversy in question arose; but (by Peck, J.) this goes far to detract from the weight and damaging effect of such testimony, and should be guarded by proper instructions to the jury as to the force and weight to be given to it. Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80.

54. Evidence that a witness is a common prostitute, is not admissible by way of impeachment of character for truth and veracity. Morse v. Pineo, 4 Vt. 281. State v. Smith, 7 Vt. 141. Spears v. Forrest, 15 Vt. 485; nor that the witness has "the notorious reputation of being a counterfeiter and of making and passing counterfeit money." Crane v. Thayer, 18 Vt. 162.

55. Nor that he acted fraudulently or dishonestly in other independent transactions. Bishop v. Wheeler, 46 Vt. 409.

56. Special impeachment. Evidence that a witness has testified to material facts which he omitted to relate upon a former trial, is admissible as tending to discredit him. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

57. Where a witness had testified that property attached as his belonged to the plaintiff;—Held, that it was admissible to prove, as affecting his credit, that the witness being present at the attachment, then said nothing upon that subject. Cady v. Owen, 34 Vt. 598.

58. A party against whom a witness has testified may prove that there has been a quarrel, lawsuit, or difficulty between them, without questioning the witness on cross-examination about it. Pierce v. Gilson, 9 Vt. 216. 19 Vt. 120. Ellsworth v. Potter, 41 Vt. 685.

59. And although so questioned, his testimony may be contradicted with a view to discredit him. It is not a collateral matter, but a substantive fact, like relationship, or interest in the suit. Hutchinson v. Wheeler, 35 Vt. 330. Steele, J., in Ellsworth v. Potter.

60. Where a witness on cross-examination has denied having difficulty with the party against whom he testifies, it is competent to contradict him, not only in general terms, but, under the direction of the court, to go enough into detail to indicate the extent or degree of the difficulty and consequent ill-feeling; and this must be left, to a considerable extent, to the discretion of the judge conducting the trial, to get the matter fairly before the jury. Ib.

61. The plaintiff had testified to a certain contract with the defendant made in presence of the defendant's attorney. The attorney as witness for the defendant then testified that he knew of no such contract. On cross-examination he was inquired of, whether he did not afterwards, at a time and place named, make a certain declaration (which amounted to an admission of the contract); to which question he replied that he had no recollection of it. Held, that in reply the plaintiff might prove such declaration. Holbrook v. Holbrook, 30 Vt. 432.

62. That a witness has given contradictory relations, may be proved by proof of the admissions of the party calling him, and in whose behalf he has testified. Allen v. Harrison, 30 Vt. 219.

63. It is an established rule of practice in this State, that testimony of previous declarations of a witness produced upon the stand, cannot be received to impeach him, unless an opportunity be first afforded him to explain or qualify the imputed declarations. This rule is carried so far in England, and it is adopted in this State, as to admit of no exception in cases where, when the cross-examination was closed, the party wishing to impeach had no knowledge of the variant declarations, or inconsistent conduct, and the witness had departed from court and could not be recalled. Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 388.

64. A witness having testified to facts and his opinion as to the sanity of a testator;—Held, that, as tending to show an infirmity of his memory and judgment, it was admissible to prove that the witness, a year previous, had a severe disease of the brain, which had affected his mind. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

65. On the trial of an action for an injury upon a highway, the plaintiff's attending physician testified for the plaintiff fully and particularly as to the nature and extent of the injury, and his testimony [as inferred by the supreme court] "represented an injury calling for much more than $100, as damages." Held, that as having a tendency to affect the credit and weight of his testimony with the jury, he might be inquired of on cross-examination, whether he did not on one occasion tell the plaintiff, that if he could get $100 he had better settle; and the exclusion of this question was held to be error. Watts v. Waterbury, 42 Vt. 201.

66. Contradiction of a witness as to the time and place named when and where he lays the principal transaction, merely impeaches him as to the principal statement. Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 270. Campbell v. Hyde, 1 D. Chip. 71.

67. Where a witness testified to certain admissions of a party, as made at a certain time and place named, and such party put in evidence that he was not present at the time and place named;—Held, that the party was not entitled to a charge, that if the time and place were disproved the evidence as to the admissions should be laid out of the case; and that it was not error to charge, that such proof only tended to impeach the witness, and that the extent of the credit to be given to him was matter for the jury;—that they might find the admissions proved, if they believed the witness was mistaken only as to the time and place, or they might reject his testimony altogether, as unworthy of credit. Powers v. Leach.

68. The plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that the defendant agreed, if the plaintiff would take and pay for certain stock in a certain oil company, to repurchase it of him upon certain considerations and conditions. The defendant denied such agreement, and testified, without objection, that he had no interest in said company at the time named, except as owner of a certain amount of stock. On cross-examination, the defendant was asked if he had such an interest in procuring the stock of the company to be taken as to induce him to offer to any person to buy and take his stock off his hands in case he would subscribe and pay for it. Held, that the question was inadmissible; (1), as hypothetical; (2), as calling for immaterial testimony. Bishop v. Wheeler, 46 Vt. 409.

69. Husband and wife. The intestate's widow had testified that on a certain occasion her husband surrendered, to be cancelled, a receipt for an advancement to a son. To impeach her testimony, there was an offer to show that the intestate afterwards said certain things to a third person, in her presence and hearing, tending to show that he had not surrendered the receipt. Held not admissible. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 47 Vt. 637.

70. Manner of offer. It is not error to exclude testimony which is admissible for purposes of impeachment only, if offered as testimony in chief, and it will be taken to have been so offered, unless the contrary appear in the exceptions. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29.

71. Corroboration. The sayings of a witness out of court are not admissible to corroborate his testimony in court, or to sustain his credit. Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346.

72. Whenever the character of a witness for truth is attacked in any way, whether by showing that he has given contradictory accounts of the matter out of court and different from that sworn to, or by cross-examination, or by general evidence of want of character for truth, it is competent for the party calling him to give general evidence in support of the good character of the witness. Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554. State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93. Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 23.

73. Where a witness, on his cross-examination, admitted that on a former hearing he had omitted a portion of his present testimony, and, on inquiry by the party calling him for the reason of this omission, stated that he had been threatened and was afraid of personal injury;—Held, that evidence was admissible to sustain his general character for truth. State v. Roe.

74. Collateral matter. It is competent to put almost any question, on cross-examination, which the party may consider important to test the accuracy or veracity of the witness. But if the question is as to a fact collateral to the issue, he must be content with the answer of the witness, and cannot contradict him by independent proof. Redfield, J., in Stevens v. Beach, 12 Vt. 585.

75. If, in such case, testimony has been given without objection contradicting the witness as to such collateral fact, it is not competent for the party calling him to corroborate him by further evidence. The witness can neither be impeached nor supported, as to such collateral fact. Ib.

76. As a rule, a witness cannot be contradicted upon a matter wholly collateral to the main issue. A judge may, in his discretion, allow a departure from the rule, but is not obliged to do so. This is sometimes done in important criminal cases, depending upon circumstantial evidence. Redfield, C. J., in Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 277.

77. The answer given by a witness, on cross-examination, to a question upon an immaterial or collateral matter, cannot be contradicted by the party putting the question, for the purpose of impeachment or otherwise. Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80. State v. Hoffman, 46 Vt. 176. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

78. So, if in answer to such question the witness volunteers an irrelevant and collateral statement, it is not error to refuse to receive testimony in contradiction, offered by the party cross-examining. State v. Thibault, 30 Vt. 100.

79. Nor, is it necessarily error to admit it. The court may do so, under peculiar circumstances, in their discretion; as, where the witness, going beyond the question, charged the party with a theft, the party was allowed to contradict it and give his version of the transaction. Ellsworth v. Potter, 41 Vt. 685.

80. Party a witness. Where a party, being a witness, volunteers a narrative, on his cross-examination, for purposes of his own and outside any purpose of the other party as indicated by the question, and testifies incorrectly or falsely, he may be contradicted for the purpose of affecting his credit as a witness upon the main issue. In this respect [collateral matters], a party as a witness holds a position differing in many respects from that of a witness not a party. Batchelder v. Kinney, 44 Vt. 150.

81. Instance of an offer by the defendant, after he had put in the testimony of the plaintiff on a former trial (the plaintiff not being a witness at the present trial), to contradict him upon an immaterial matter testified to by him on cross-examination. Held properly rejected. Wright v. Williams, 47 Vt. 222.

82. Cross-examination on new subject. Where a question is put to a witness, on cross-examination, upon a new subject of inquiry not connected with any matter for which his testimony was introduced, he becomes a witness for the cross-examining party, and cannot be impeached by such party by showing that the witness has given a contradictory relation. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

83. Effect of impeachment. The court charged the jury, that if they should find that the witness, who was a party, had knowingly testified falsely in one material particular, that fact would so far impair the quality of his testimony as to all other matters, that it would not be sufficient, alone, to find any fact from it. Held erroneous; and that, notwithstanding such impeachment, the testimony was still in the case to be weighed and considered, and might, from the manner in which it was given, from its own inherent probability, or from its consistency, be convincing. Riford v. Rochester, 46 Vt. 738.

IV. SUBPŒNA; ATTENDANCE; FEES.

84. Subpœna. A subpœna for a witness, issued by a justice, may be directed to and served by "any indifferent person," without naming him, and without any authorization indorsed upon the subpœna; and for such service full fees are taxable. Smith v. Wilbur, 85 Vt. 138. West v. Wakeorth, 33 Vt. 167.

85. But this is not such legal service as to subject the person summoned to the statute penalty for non-attendance. Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 498.

86. Where a witness attends in different causes between the same parties, usually not more than one full taxation is allowed, and one day in the other causes; but if summoned in more than one cause, he might be entitled to recover his fees in all. House v. Barber, 10 Vt. 158.

87. To secure the continued attendance at court of a subpœnaed witness, the party must either pay or tender his fees in advance for the term, or, at least, at the end of each day pay or tender the fees for attendance for the succeeding day; and such payment or tender would be equivalent to the service of a fresh subpœna. Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 498.

88. Witnesses are entitled to fees for travel from their place of abode to the place of trial, whether they reside within this State or not. Albany v. Derby, 30 Vt. 718. (Changed by G. S. c. 126, s. 38, limiting the fees to travel "within this State.")
